

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PUBLIC

See Due the Public.

See, also, Private.

"Public" means of or belonging to the people at large, relating to or affecting the whole people of a state, nation or community, not limited to any particular class of the community, and means more than the limited class defined by the relation of landlord and tenant, or by nearness of location, as neighbors. Cawker v. Meyer, 133 N. W. 157, 159, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510.

To render the use of a corporation, organized to furnish power, a "public use," it is not necessary that the company's services be available to the whole population of the state; the word "public" meaning all those who require power and are willing to pay reasonable rates therefor to the full extent of the capacity of the enterprise. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 862, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

The word "public" in the expression "the road is open to public use" means "all those who have occasion to use" the road. Gillespie v. Duling, 83 N. E. 728, 730, 41 Ind. App. 217.

The supervisors of a county granted to a street railway company a franchise to operate a railroad on all of the highways of the county. The company built a branch along a public road, and thereafter the supervisors granted to the commissioners of the Vicksburg National Military Park authority to control the county roads in the park without interfering with the use of the roads by "the public." Held, that the words "the public" meant the general public at large, and not the street railway company, and the commissioners could forbid the company from laying its line over a road into the park. Vicksburg Traction Co. v. Warren County, 56 South. 607, 609, 100 Miss. 442.

Common synonyms

The word "public" in its common acceptance and use has all the significance of and is synonymous with the word "common." People ex rel. Clark v. Keeper of New York State Reformatory for Women at Bedford, 68 N. E. 884, 887, 176 N. Y. 465 (dissenting opinion).

As the people or state

A dedication by the state to the "people of New Orleans for public use for a public park or amusement park purposes," of a parcel of land lying beneath the waters of Lake Pontchartrain, is none the less a dedication to the public because the words "people of New Orleans" are used, since those who are not so may become people of New Orleans; or may avail themselves of the dedication without becoming people of New Orleans. Saucier v. City of New Orleans, 43 South. 999, 1002, 119 La. 179.

Corporation as part of public

An application for a writ of quo warranto challenging the right of a railroad company to purchase water from a water company in a territory within which such company is authorized to supply water to the public will be dismissed; the railroad company being a part of the public. Commonwealth v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 81 Atl. 196, 198, 232 Pa. 183.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION

See Place of Public Accommodation.

PUBLIC ACKNOWLEDGMENT

The words "publicly acknowledging," as used in Civ. Code, § 230, providing for legitimation of a bastard by the father "publicly acknowledging" that he is the child's father, must be taken in their ordinary sense. In re Gird's Estate, 108 Pac. 499, 503, 157 Cal. 534, 187 Am. St. Rep. 131.

PUBLIC ACT

See, also, General Law.

Charter

The charter of a village is a "public act," of which the court will take notice in considering pleadings. Atherton v. Village of Essex Junction, 74 Atl. 1118, 1119, 83 Vt. 218, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 339.

PUBLIC AGENCY

Office as, see Office.

Political committee

County boards and board of election commissioners are "public agencies," within the rule that it is not in the power of the Legislature to abdicate its functions or to subject citizens and their interests to the interference of any but lawful public agencies, but county central committees of political parties, where they exist as the representatives of purely voluntary organizations, cannot be said to be "public agencies," as they represent, not the state or any political division or department thereof, but a political party, which may be composed of only an inconsiderable portion of the people. Rouse v. Thompson, 81 N. E. 1109, 1114, 228 Ill. 522.

Schoolbook publisher

A foreign corporation engaged in the publication of schoolbooks, having obtained a contract from the state text-book commission to furnish all the schoolbooks of the state, as provided by Acts 1899, p. 423, c. 205, and having contracted with a dealer within the state to establish depots for the sale of schoolbooks in the state, was not a public agency of the state, endowed with governmental or public functions, and was, therefore, not exempt from taxation, under Acts 1903, p. 632, c. 258, § 2, exempting all property of the state, etc., used exclusively for public purposes. American Book Co. v. Shelton, 100 S. W. 725, 726, 117 Tenn. 745.

PUBLIC ALLEY*Cul-de-sac

That a portion of an alley is a cul-de-sac does not preclude it from being a "public alley." Johnston v. Lonstorf, 107 N. W. 459, 461, 128 Wis. 17.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENT

See Place of Public Amusement.

Any such place of, see Any.

Other amusement, see Other.

See, also, Public Diversion.

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 199, punishing one opening on Sunday his place of public amusement, and declaring that the term "public amusement" means theaters, etc., for which an admission fee is charged, the opening on Sunday of a place of amusement is not prohibited, unless an admission fee is charged. Ex parte Jacobson, 115 S. W. 1193, 1194, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 237.

PUBLIC BEACH

"A 'public beach' is one left by the state, or those claiming under it, open to the common use of the public, and which the unorganized public and each of its members have a right to use, while it remains such." Dawson v. Town of Orange, 61 Atl. 101, 109, 78 Conn. 96.

PUBLIC BENEFIT

"Public use" is not synonymous with "public benefit." Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 862, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

PUBLIC BRIDGE

As highway, see Highway.

"A bridge which constitutes a portion of the public road is necessarily a 'public bridge.'" Early County v. Fain, 58 S. E. 528, 529, 2 Ga. App. 288 (quoting and adopting Tattnall County v. Newton, 38 S. E. 48, 112 Ga. 780; Howington v. Madison County, 55 S. E. 942, 126 Ga. 700).

PUBLIC BUILDING

Any building, see Any.

As public road, see Public Road.

Camp meeting building

In St. 1877, p. 470, c. 98, creating a corporation for the purpose of holding personal and real property where a wharf, hotel, and other "public buildings" might be erected, and expressly empowering the corporation to erect and hold "public buildings," the term "public buildings" was used in such a sense as to include camp meeting buildings. Nye v. Whittemore, 79 N. E. 253, 256, 193 Mass. 208.

High school building

Under White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 504, declaring it an offense to injure public property pertaining to any public building as defined in article 500, which states that the term "public building" embraces certain enumerated buildings, and all other buildings "held for public use" by any department or branch of government, an indictment charging injury to property pertaining to a public building, to wit, "the Colorado High School Building," should allege that such building was held for public use; it not being one of those enumerated in the statute. Hughes v. State, 128 S. W. 904, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 360.

Schoolhouse

A schoolhouse is a "public building," within Pen. Code, art. 500, defining the term "public building," with reference to the article prohibiting the injuring or defacing of a public building, as any building held for public use by any department of the government, state, county, or municipal. Thurston v. State, 125 S. W. 31, 32, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 308.

PUBLIC BUSINESS*Telephone

See, also, Public Interest; Public Service.

"A franchise to operate a telephone is a privilege to operate a 'public business.'" Lowther v. Bridgeman, 50 S. E. 410, 411, 57 W. Va. 306.

Water supply

The term "public business," as used in Rev. Laws 1905, § 2842, authorizing the classes of corporations specified in section 2841 to condemn such private property as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of the public business for which they were formed, includes the construction of works for supplying the public with water. Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Pratt, 112 N. W. 395, 397, 101 Minn. 197, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105.

PUBLIC CALLING*Water supply

Where defendant contracted with a city to furnish water for fire and other purposes, it did not thereby enter into a "public calling" in any sense different from the public duty to supply the city with water with which it could combat fire; nor was the water company's business a "dangerous calling," so as to impose upon it a duty to property owners within the city to furnish proper fire pressure so that for mere nonfeasance property owners damaged could recover against it in tort. German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Home Water Supply Co., 174 Fed. 764, 769, 99 C. C. A. 258, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005.

PUBLIC CAPACITY

A borough which undertakes to supply water to its inhabitants acts in a private and not a "public capacity." Carlisle Gas & Water Co. v. Carlisle Borough, 67 Atl. 844, 845, 218 Pa. 554 (citing Jolly v. Monaca Borough, 65 Atl. 809, 216 Pa. 345; Baily v. City of Philadelphia, 39 Atl. 494, 184 Pa. 594, 39 L. R. A. 837, 63 Am. St. Rep. 812).

"A public service corporation is to be considered in two aspects. It has duties which it owes to the public and which it must perform. It has other duties not of a public nature which are incidental to those of a public character, in the performance of which it stands upon the footing of a private corporation." A public service corporation in the performance of duties not of a public nature, though incidental to those of a public character, stands on the same footing as a private corporation. Thus where a railroad company maintained tracks in its round-house yard on which it stored, blew out, cleaned, and fired engines while not in use and in the open air, which constituted a nuisance to adjoining property, the railroad's acts were committed in its private and not in its "public capacity," so that it was liable to the adjoining property owners for the damage sustained, without reference to whether its conduct was negligent or not. Terrell v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 66 S. E. 55, 57, 110 Va. 340, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 371 (quoting Townsend v. Norfolk Ry. & Light Co., 52 S. E. 970, 105 Va. 22, 4 L. R. A. [N. S.] 87, 115 Am. St. Rep. 842, 8 Ann. Cas. 558).

PUBLIC CARRIER

A "public common carrier" of passengers is distinguished from private carriers by the franchises conferred upon it, and the obligations, restrictions, and liabilities with which it is charged, all flowing from considerations of public policy. It must carry all alike and for a reasonable compensation, furnish reasonable accommodations, must continually operate its line and submit to reasonable regulations. It is justly held to the highest degree of care and skill. Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Lawson, 143 Fed. 834, 837, 74 C. C. A. 630, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 721, 6 Ann. Cas. 666.

PUBLIC CHARGE*Prisoner

The provision of the statute for the deportation of aliens "likely to become a public charge" is not limited to likelihood to become a pauper, but extends to likelihood to become periodically inmates of prisons as a result of crime. United States ex rel. Freeman v. Williams, 175 Fed. 274, 275.

PUBLIC CHARITY

See Buildings Used for Public Charity; Purely Public Charity.

See, also, Charity.

"A 'public charity,' whether incorporated or not, is but a trustee, and is bound to apply its funds in the furtherance of the charity and not otherwise." And so a student, injured by leaping from a burning dormitory, cannot maintain a cause of action against the educational institution of which the building was a part, on the ground of its negligence in failing to supply fire escapes, where all the property belonging to the institution was placed with it in trust for public charity. Abston v. Waldon Academy, 102 S. W. 351, 354, 118 Tenn. 24, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1179 (quoting and adopting definition in Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 15 Atl. 553, 120 Pa. 624, 1 L. R. A. 417, 6 Am. St. Rep. 745).

The character of an institution as a "public charity" is not affected by charging those able to pay for use of its rooms. Jensen v. Maine Eye & Ear Infirmary, 78 Atl. 898, 899, 107 Me. 408, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 141.

A gift to a town toward the erection of a building for the sick and poor, those without homes, constituted a "public charity." Bowden v. Brown, 86 N. E. 351, 352, 200 Mass. 269, 128 Am. St. Rep. 419 (citing and adopting Richardson v. Mullery, 86 N. E. 319, 200 Mass. 247).

Where the main, if not exclusive, purpose is to relieve persons interested in the fund of a volunteer fire department, a "public charity" is not created. The distinctive characteristics of a public charity are that its funds are derived from gifts and devises, and not from fees, dues, and assessments, and that it is not confined to privileged individuals but is open to the indefinite public. Hopkins v. Crossley, 101 N. W. 822, 823, 138 Mich. 561 (citing Bangor v. Rising Virtue Lodge No. 10, Free and Accepted Masons, 73 Me. 428, 40 Am. Rep. 369).

Church

Congregational and Baptist Churches are public charitable societies within Laws 1895, c. 66, which exempts from taxation property of such societies devoted to public charity. Carter v. Eaton, 78 Atl. 643, 645, 75 N. H. 560.

"Public charity" is a gift to be applied consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their minds or hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves in life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burden of government. A religious corporation, incorporated under the act providing for the incorporation of Methodist Episcopal Churches and administering a charitable trust not created by the grantor of its property, is liable for the negligence of its agents. Bruce v. Central Methodist Episcopal Church, 110 N. W. 951, 147 Mich. 230, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74, 11 Ann. Cas. 150.

Education

A will devised a house to the trustee, and provided that it should be kept open, free of charge, to visitors wishing to see the collection of household antiquities, though no public meetings or large crowds should be admitted therein, and that the garden attached should be used for cultivating flowers, etc., useful in the study of botany, and the ground should be kept open for use by the public and by students of botany in public or private schools. The will also provided for the employment of an instructor in botany, to encourage its study in the town, and that the lectures therein should be free, subject to certain necessary conditions. The house is a good example of the architecture of the Revolutionary period, and would be valuable and interesting as a museum, and the grounds could be used as a small public park. Held, that the gift of the house and grounds was for educational purposes, so as to constitute a "public charity," notwithstanding the motive in making it was to establish a perpetual memorial to testator's family. Richardson

v. Essex Institute, 94 N. E. 262, 263, 208 Mass. 311, 21 Ann. Cas. 1158.

A gift for educational purposes does not cease to become a "public charity," because its benefits are enjoyed only by the residents of the town in which the charity is situated. Richardson v. Essex Institute, 94 N. E. 262, 263, 208 Mass. 311, 21 Ann. Cas. 1158.

Gifts for educational purposes are "public charities." A bequest to the pastor of a certain church, to be used by the pastor for the purpose of helping to establish a school for the education of Catholic boys and for helping to educate young men of the parish for the priesthood, and a gift to a corporation for the purpose of helping to educate poor Catholic children, are gifts to a "public charity," and are not invalid as too indefinite in the designation of beneficiaries. McDonald v. Shaw, 98 S. W. 952, 955, 81 Ark. 235.

As defined in Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home & Industrial School Ass'n, 71 Pac. 286, 66 Kan. 1, "a 'public charity' is a gift to a public object which the state itself, with public resources, should, or lawfully might, foster." "But it cannot be said that the court intended to decide that every public charity must be such as the state may maintain by public taxation. The real point decided was that in the trust there being considered the beneficiaries were limited to such an extent that the gift could not be regarded as a public charity." A bequest in trust to the trustees of an educational institution, to be held by them as a permanent fund for the higher education of young men, to be selected by such trustees, for the Christian ministry, creates an educational trust, which is a "public charity." Trustees of Washburn College v. O'Hara, 90 Pac. 234, 236, 75 Kan. 700.

Fire insurance patrol

The Fire Insurance Patrol of the City of New Orleans is not a public charitable association and is responsible in damages for the negligence of its servants in driving its wagon into a truck of the fire department, though both may have the same rights of way in the streets. Rady v. Fire Ins. Patrol of New Orleans, 52 South. 491, 492, 126 La. 273, 139 Am. St. Rep. 511.

Home

A corporation was incorporated under Pub. St. 1882, c. 115, to provide a home for working girls at moderate cost. Its officers serve without compensation, and the funds to buy an equity in real estate, to equip a hospital, and to furnish parlors were the gifts of friends. Working girls are furnished a homelike place in which to live at prices for board, washing, and lodging, as cheap as or cheaper than could be elsewhere obtained by them under similar surroundings as to respectability and incentives to the proper conduct of life. A matron and resident nurse, paid by the corporation, are in constant attendance, while free medical attendance is furnished by physicians serving on the hospital staff without pay. A library, with weekly entertainments and lectures during the winter, are provided. Held, that the corporation is a "public charity." Thornton v. Franklin Square House, 86 N. E. 909, 910, 200 Mass. 465, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486.

Hospital

A hospital is not the less of a public character within Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 261, c. 23, making it lawful for a county to contribute to the support of any public nonsectarian hospital located within its limits, by the fact that those patients received by it who are able to pay are required to do so, or that it receives contributions from outside sources, so long as all the money it receives is devoted to the general purposes of charity, and none of it goes to the benefit of any private individual or corporation organized for profit. Fordham v. Thompson, 144 Ill. App. 342, 347.

A corporation conducted a hospital, and its only source of income was from donations and receipts from patients who were able to pay for treatment received. It received all patients who applied, and gave free accommodations to all patients unable to pay, and the treatment of free cases was the same as that of pay patients, except that the free cases were accommodated in wards instead of in private rooms. Any regular medical practitioner was privileged to send patients to the hospital and treat them there, and the institution made no profits. Held, that the institution was within Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120, § 2, exempting from taxation "all property of institutions of public charity." German Hospital of Chicago v. Board of Review of Cook County, 84 N. E. 215, 216, 233 Ill. 246.

A corporation maintaining a hospital and dispensary, a school of medicine and training school for nurses, which charges no tuition fee except for the postgraduate course in medicine, and then only sufficient in amount to pay the cost of maintenance, and which receives all persons within its capacity presenting themselves for treatment, regardless of whether they are able to pay the cost of their keeping and treatment, and charging those only who are able to pay, is an "institution of public charity," within the statute exempting the property of such institutions from taxation. Board of Review of Cook County v. Chicago Polyclinic, 84 N. E. 220, 221, 233 Ill. 268.

Within the statute exempting from taxation all property of institutions of public charity, when actually and exclusively used for such charitable purposes, and not used with a view to profit, is a hospital of an order of Sisters organized not for pecuniary profit, but for conducting hospitals and training schools for nurses—the women who become members of the corporation conveying all their property to it, and binding themselves to engage in caring for sick and injured patients in its hospitals for the remainder of their lives, for which they receive nothing but their board, clothing, and a room in which to live; the corporation and hospital being controlled by a board selected from among the Sisters; all sick or injured, not having contagious diseases, who seek admission to the hospital, being received and cared for, without reference to creed, race, or financial condition, except that those able to pay have the more desirable rooms; all money received from every source being used in maintaining, extending, and improving the hospital; and those admitted to the training school being given only their support for their services; and this, though only a small per cent. of the patients received are charity patients, all such who apply being received, and though only physicians who subscribe to and are governed by the principles of medical ethics promulgated by the American Medical Association are permitted to practice in the hospital, it not being conducted for the purpose of benefiting the physicians of that class. Sisters of Third Order of St. Francis v. Board of Review of Peoria County, 83 N. E. 272-274, 231 Ill. 317.

Mass

A testamentary gift for masses for the repose of the souls of persons named and of the testator, to be said according to directions as to time and place of persons named, is not a "private trust" within St. 1898, § 2081, defining the purposes for which trusts may be created but is a "public charity." In re Kavanaugh's Estate, 126 N. W. 672, 674, 143 Wis. 90, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470.

Orphan asylum

A testamentary trust to establish and maintain an orphan's asylum for the maintenance and education of the orphan children under 17 years of age of members of a secret society is a "public charity," and valid, within Ky. St. § 317 (Russell's St. § 2300), relating to gifts to charity. Green's Adm'rs v. Fidelity Trust Co. of Louisville, 120 S. W. 283, 285, 134 Ky. 311, 20 Ann. Cas. 861.

Public park

A gift of a public park constitutes a "public charity." Richardson v. Essex Institute, 94 N. E. 262, 264, 208 Mass. 311, 21 Ann. Cas. 1158.

PUBLIC CONCERN

The term "matters of public concern," within Rev. Code 1905, § 6751, declaring that the Supreme Court shall exercise its original jurisdiction only in cases of strictly public concern, as involves questions affecting the sovereign rights of the state or its franchises or privileges, is not a matter capable of an exact definition, but each case must be governed by its own facts. A question involving the construction of a law to determine whether the Governor shall appoint or the people elect a judicial officer involves the question whether a law of a public nature, and necessarily affecting the state at large, is properly construed as contemplating immediate action by the Governor in making an appointment or a delay in filling an office until an election is had and the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on a private relator's appeal to it. State v. Burr, 113 N. W. 705, 707, 16 N. D. 581.

PUBLIC CONVENIENCE

See, also, Public Service Facilities and Conveniences.

A clause in the Constitution and an act passed by the First Legislature after adoption of the Constitution relating to the same subject, like statutes in pari materia, are to be construed together, and Act May 20, 1908 (Laws 1908, c. 18), impliedly construing public "facilities" or public "conveniences," as used in Const. art. 9, § 18, giving the Corporation Commission power to prescribe and enforce rules requiring transportation companies to establish such public facilities and conveniences as may be reasonable and just, to include a union passenger depot, is entitled to great weight. Missouri, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. State, 119 Pac. 117, 119, 29 Okl. 640.

PUBLIC CONVEYANCE

Automobile

A clause in an accident insurance policy, giving double indemnity if injuries are received while riding as a passenger in a "public conveyance" propelled by gasoline, covers injuries received while riding in an automobile hired from a taximeter cab company, engaged in hiring automobiles for public use, and driven by a chauffeur of the company. Primrose v. Casualty Co. of America, 81 Atl. 212, 213, 232 Pa. 210, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 618.

Street car

Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, provides that whenever any person shall die from the negligence of any officer, agent, or employé whilst running or managing any locomotive, "car," or train of cars, etc., or of any driver of any "public conveyance" whilst in charge of the same as driver, the master, or he who owns such railroad, locomotive, car, or other public conveyance at the time, shall forfeit for every person or passenger so dying the sum of $5,000. This was amended by the act of 1905, which specifically mentioned street cars. Held that, irrespective of the act of 1905, said section applied to street railroads. The "public conveyance" mentioned in the statute may be composed of steam engines and cars. The cars may be propelled by horse power, by electricity, or by steam.

The conveyance may be a coach, propelled by horse power, or it may be an automobile. The words of the statute, "whilst running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, 'car,' or train of cars," are to be construed as though the statute read "whilst running, conducting, or managing any car," or "whilst running, conducting, or managing any train of cars." This construction of the statute makes it obvious that a street car is included in the term "public conveyance." Higgins v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 95 S. W. 863, 865, 197 Mo. 300.

PUBLIC CORPORATION

See Public Improvement Corporation; Public Quasi Corporation; Public Service Corporation; Quasi Public Corporation.

As municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporation.

A "public corporation" is one created for political purposes, with political powers, to be exercised for purposes connected with the public good, in the administration of civil government, and is an instrument of the government, subject to control of the Legislature, the term being synonymous with "municipal corporation" or "political corporation." Phillips v. City of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 902, 905, 110 Md. 431, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5781).

A "public corporation" is one having for its object the administration of a portion of the powers of government, delegated to it for that purpose. Such are municipal corporations. Hammond v. Clark, 71 S. E. 479, 487, 136 Ga. 313, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77.

"Public corporations" are synonymous with "municipal corporations." Phillips v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 72 Atl. 902, 905, 110 Md. 431, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5781).

"Public corporations" are created for public purposes, and the property controlled by them is devoted to the objects for which they are created. The corporations have no private beneficial interest either in the franchises granted or the property controlled. Trustees of Carrick Academy v. Clark, 80 S. W. 64, 67, 112 Tenn. 483.

Every county is a body corporate or "public corporation" created by the state as a means of exercising a portion of the state's political power by local administration, on which are imposed a part of the sovereign authority and duty to insure domestic tranquility and promote the general welfare within the territorial limit to which they are assigned. They are bodies corporate and may sue and be sued in courts of record. Chambers County v. Lee County, 55 Ala. 534, 537.

Legislative control

"Public corporations" are but parts of the machinery employed in carrying on the affairs of the state, and they are subject to be changed, modified, or destroyed, as the exigencies of the public may demand. * * * The Legislature has supreme power over them, and may divide, alter, enlarge, or abolish them, as, in the legislative judgment, the public welfare may require," subject to the provisions of the national and state Constitutions. Charlstran v. Board of Education of Township High School Dist. No. 13, 91 N. E. 712, 714, 244 Ill. 470; City of Columbus v. Union Pac. R. Co., 137 Fed. 869, 873, 70 C. C. A. 207.

Counties are "public corporations" or quasi corporations created by the state as a means of exercising its political power with the aid of local administrations, so as to insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare. They are subject to the control and direction of the Legislature in which chiefly the sovereignty of the state is represented and exercised. Marengo County v. Coleman, 55 Ala. 605, 607.

Public purpose

The class of corporations denominated "public" is founded for public purposes and generally has for its object the government of a portion of the state and is, therefore, endowed with a portion of political powers. Rhodes v. Love, 69 S. E. 436, 437, 153 N. C. 468.

As person

See Person.

Agricultural society

An agricultural association, incorporated under St. 1880, p. 62, c. 69, dividing the state into agricultural districts, authorizing a certain number of persons within such a district to organize such an association, its real estate to be used for the purpose of holding exhibitions of the live stock and products of the district, with the view to the improvement of all industries in the same, providing for a district board of agriculture, to be appointed by the Governor, and to qualify by oath, and declaring such an association, when formed, to be a state institution, and that such board shall have exclusive control and management of the association for and in the name of the state, is a "public corporation" created for the local administration of a part of the affairs of the state. People ex rel. Post v. San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Ass'n, 91 Pac. 740, 744, 151 Cal. 797.

Armory

Civ. Code, § 2856, defines "public corporations" as those formed or organized for the government of a portion of the state. A corporation incorporated for the purpose of erecting an armory building is not a public corporation. Arrison v. Company D, North Dakota National Guard, 98 N. W. 83, 84, 12 N. D. 554, 1 Ann. Cas. 368.

Bank

The state bank and its branches, being the exclusive property of the state, are "public corporations." Branch Bank of State at Mobile v. Collins, 7 Ala. 95, 101 (citing Aug. & A. Corp. 23; Trustees of University of Alabama v. Winston [Ala.] 5 Stew. & P. 17).

Drainage district

A drainage district is a "public corporation." The Attorney General may file an information, on behalf of the people, questioning the exercise of corporate powers by a drainage district. Lapse of time does not bar a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto by the Attorney General to question the exercise of corporated powers by a drainage district, as the public are not barred either by the laches or acquiescence of individuals, unless it appears that the proceeding is solely in the interest of the relators. People ex rel. Cullen v. Anderson, 87 N. E. 1019, 1021, 239 Ill. 266 (citing Payson v. People ex rel. Parsons, 51 N. E. 588, 175 Ill. 267; People v. Gary, 196 Ill. 310, 63 N. E. 745; People ex rel. Misner v. Harker, 64 N. E. 253, 197 Ill. 409; People v. Burns, 72 N. E. 374, 212 Ill. 227; Soule v. People, 69 N. E. 22, 205 Ill. 618).

While drainage districts are not strictly municipal corporations, they are "public corporations" organized for a special and limited purpose, and the rules of law governing the dissolution of municipal corporations must be held to apply to them. People ex rel. Gauven v. Niebruegge, 91 N. E. 115, 117, 244 Ill. 82.

A drainage district is a "public corporation," and not a private one, and the county court administers its entire affairs. State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 913, 224 Mo. 393; State ex rel. Compton v. Chariton Drainage Dist. No. 1, 90 S. W. 722, 724, 192 Mo. 517.

A drainage district is a "public corporation," being a political subdivision of the state, which exercises prescribed governmental functions. Squaw Creek Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Turney, 138 S. W. 12, 15, 235 Mo. 80.

Fire insurance company

Fire insurance companies are not "public or quasi public bodies." McCarter v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 61 Atl. 705, 706, 70 N. J. Eq. 291.

Hospital

A "public hospital" may be defined in general as an institution owned by the public and devoted chiefly to public uses and purposes. A hospital created and endowed by the government for general charity is a "public corporation." Hogan v. Hospital Co., 59 S. E. 944, 945, 63 W. Va. 84.

Railroad company

A railroad company as a common carrier is a "public institution" only in a qualified sense. Atlanta Terminal Co. v. American Baggage & Transfer Co., 54 S. E. 711, 714, 125 Ga. 677. See, also, Mannington v. Hocking Val. R. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 135.

Reclamation district

A reclamation district is a public, as distinguished from a private, corporation, acting as a state agency invested with limited powers, but it is not a municipal corporation possessing in any degree general powers of government, though, within the limits of the authority granted to it, it exercises public functions. Metcalf v. Merritt, 111 Pac. 505, 14 Cal. App. 244.

University or college

The colleges or universities founded and incorporated by the state to take and expend the aid of the national government to instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts have usually been considered "public corporations"; and the same is true, as a rule, of state universities or other institutions of learning established by the state and controlled by it. Hence the Wyoming Agricultural College, created and incorporated by Act Jan. 10, 1891 (Acts 1890-91, p. 373, c. 92), making the same subject to state visitation, was a public corporation, whose charter did not constitute a charter which the state was prohibited from impairing by a subsequent act repealing the statute under which it was organized. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90-102, 14 Wyo. 318.

"The Regents of the University of Idaho," created a corporation by the laws of the territory and the Constitution of the state, is a "public corporation" and an agency of the state, and as such is not subject to garnishment in the absence of a statute clearly evincing the purpose of the Legislature to subject public corporations to such process; and the general provision that any "person" may be garnished is not sufficient for that purpose, although the word "person" is expressly defined by the statutes as including a corporation; such provisions being generally construed as restricted to private or business corporations. Moscow Hardware Co. v. Colson, 158 Fed. 199-201.

Water district

The Augusta water district created a body politic and corporate by Private and Special Laws 1903, c. 334, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the district and of enumerated towns and cities with water, is a "public municipal corporation," and by virtue of Rev. St. c. 9, § 6, its property appropriated to public use is exempt from municipal taxation. Augusta v. Augusta Water Dist., 63 Atl. 663, 664, 101 Me. 148.

PUBLIC DANCING ACADEMY

Laws 1909, c. 400, defining a "public dancing academy" as any room in which dancing is taught for compensation, and requiring public dancing academies to be licensed, is general in its terms, and affects adults and minors, and is invalid because it arbitrarily selects places where dancing is taught and classifies them, but leaves unaffected rooms where public dancing is indulged in without the aid of an instructor, and it cannot be sustained on the ground that it protects minors instructed at dancing academies. People ex rel. Duryea v. Wilber, 90 N. E. 1140, 1142, 198 N. Y. 1, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 357, 19 Ann. Cas. 626.

PUBLIC DECENCY

See Openly Outrage Public Decency.

PUBLIC DETECTIVE

A special agent of the state department to detect violations of the liquor tax law is a "public and official detective," as distinguished from a private detective. The court should not direct the jury that special agents must not in any sense be treated as detectives, nor that, as a matter of law, the testimony of special agents is entitled to the same weight as that of other disinterested witnesses. The relation of the special agents to the case and their interest therein, if any, should be left for the consideration of the jury. Cullinan v. Furthman, 79 N. E. 989, 990, 187 N. Y. 160.

PUBLIC DIVERSION

See, also, Public Amusement.

The term "public diversion," as used in Gen. St. 1902, § 1370, making it a penal offense to be present at any concert of music, dancing, or other public diversion on Sunday, includes shows or entertainments. State v. Ryan, 69 Atl. 536, 537, 80 Conn. 582.

PUBLIC DIVISION

As ward, see Ward.

PUBLIC DOCUMENT

See, also, Public Record.

Pamphlets issued by the Department of Agriculture, published under the direction of Congress, provided for by Appropriation Act April 23, 1904, c. 1486, 33 Stat. 294, and by Joint Resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives, April 27, 1904, 33 Stat. 590, relating to drainage investigations by federal officers and applying to a system of drainage in question, and printed by the government printing office, in 1905, under authority of the Office of Experiment Stations of Irrigation and Drainage Investigations, were admissible as "public documents," under Code Civ. Proc. § 528, defining public documents to be all those publications and maps printed by order of the legislative assembly or Congress, or either house thereof, and declaring that all such documents shall be admissible in evidence.

In re Yankton-Clay County Drainage Ditch, 137 N. W. 608, 611, 30 S. D. 79.

Under Rev. Laws, § 1795, providing for the deposit of ballots and election returns in the office of the clerk of county commissioners, and declaring that ballots so deposited shall not be subject to the inspection of any one except in cases of contested elections, and then only by the judge or body before whom the election is contested, ballots and election returns duly deposited are public documents within section 5409, providing that a public document in the custody of a public officer may be admitted in evidence by the certificate of the custodian thereof that it is genuine and authentic. State ex rel. Springmeyer v. Baker, 126 Pac. 345, 347, 35 Nev. 1.

Under V. S. 305, providing that the State Auditor shall require all bills presented to him for allowance to be fully itemized and accompanied as far as possible with vouchers which shall be kept in his office, bills against the state and vouchers accompanying the same, on being filed in the auditor's office, become "documents of a public nature," and may be proved by copy without production of the original. Clement v. Graham, 63 Atl. 146, 152, 78 Vt. 290.

Letter

A letter of the commissioner of the General Land Office with reference to lands within the limits of a railroad grant is a "public document," of which the courts will take judicial notice. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Lipman, 83 Pac. 445, 450, 148 Cal. 480.

Prescription

Prescriptions of physicians under which a druggist sold intoxicating liquor, which he is required to preserve by statute, are quasi public documents, and the constitutional privilege is not violated by compelling a druggist, indicted for unlawfully selling liquor, to produce them in court to be used as evidence against him. State v. Davis, 69 S. E. 639, 68 W. Va. 142, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 996.

Report

Under Ky. St. §§ 2725, 2739, requiring the inspector of mines to keep a record of inspections, and that a certified copy shall be admissible in evidence in any court, etc., reports of the inspection of mines are official "public documents," and a properly certified copy thereof is admissible in evidence. Henderson Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Nicholson (Ky.) 126 S. W. 139, 141.

PUBLIC DOMAIN

See, also, Public Land.

"Public domain" is defined by Webster to be the territory belonging to a state or general government; public lands. This is the general signification of the words according to the approved usage of the language. The idea of "public domain" excludes that of private ownership. State v. Cunningham, 90 Pac. 755, 756, 35 Mont. 547.

"The term 'public domain,' in its broadest sense, comprehends all lands and waters in the possession or ownership of the United States, and including lands owned by the several states, as distinguished from lands possessed by private individuals or corporations." Winters v. United States, 143 Fed. 740, 748, 74 C. C. A. 666 (quoting Kinney, Irrigation, § 124).

PUBLIC DUTY

See, also, Public Service.

The furnishing of electric light and energy to private consumers is not a "public duty or function," within the meaning of such term as used in a city ordinance prescribing the formalities for the adoption of ordinances providing for the lighting of streets or public places, etc., the construction and operation of street railroads, etc., or purporting to award a contract covering the performance or discharge of any public duty or function. Such a business may properly be called private as contradistinguished from a municipal or public duty or function, and also in the sense that it is conducted for private gain. Strohmeier v. Consumers' Electric Co., 35 South. 723, 724, 111 La. 506.

A driver of a city cart, engaged in hauling trash and dirt for the city, is not engaged in a "public or governmental duty," which is a duty given by the state to a city as a part of the state's sovereignty, to be exercised by the city for the benefit of the public living within and without the corporate limits, but is engaged in a "private or corporate duty," and for his negligence the city is liable. City of Pass Christian v. Fernandez, 56 South. 329, 100 Miss. 76, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649.

PUBLIC ELECTION

Primary election

A primary election for nomination of county officers is a "public election," and any conduct on the part of the managers thereof which interferes with the freedom or purity thereof is punishable at common law. State v. Cole, 72 S. E. 221, 223, 156 N. C. 618.

PUBLIC ELEVATOR

An elevator in which the grain of different owners is kept entirely separate, but in which the grain of the same owner delivered at different times is mixed together, except where he directs otherwise, is not a "public elevator," within the meaning of a statute providing "that all elevators or warehouses located in this state in which grain is stored in bulk, and in which the grain of different owners is mixed together, or in which the grain is stored in such a manner that the identity of different lots or parcels cannot be accurately preserved, and doing business for a compensation, are hereby declared public warehouses." State ex rel. Dawson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 125 P. 98, 101, 87 Kan. 348.

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

See Quasi Public Employment.

PUBLIC ENEMY

"The common-law liability of a common carrier, as an insurer of goods carried, did not extend to losses caused by the acts of 'public enemies'; and the term 'enemies' was understood to mean the public enemies of the country of the carrier, and not of the owner of the goods, and did not include thieves, robbers, or those engaged in mobs, riots, or insurrections." Hutchinson v. United States Exp. Co., 59 S. E. 949, 951, 63 W. Va. 128, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393 (quoting Moore, Com. Carr. 225).

The term "public enemy," under the rule that a carrier is liable for the loss of goods except by act of God or the public enemy, means enemy of the country, and does not include mobs. Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 89 N. E. 1022, 1025, 242 Ill. 178, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 358, 134 Am. St. Rep. 316.

PUBLIC EXHIBITION

See, also, Public Show.

An entertainment provided by the management of a restaurant, consisting in dancing, singing, etc., does not constitute a "public exhibition," within Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, c. 378) §§ 1472, 1473, 1474, which make it a misdemeanor to conduct a public exhibition without a license, where the entertainment constitutes a gratuitous contribution by the management to the guests' entertainment. People v. Martin, 137 N. Y. Supp. 677, 678.

An exhibition or an amusement is public when the public are invited and admitted to it upon complying with the terms of admission. The most usual condition is the payment of a small sum of money, but the imposition of other terms not prohibitive, but reasonable in themselves, and appropriate to the peculiar kind of exhibition, does not necessarily annul the public feature. Under Rev. Laws, c. 102, § 172, providing for the licensing of public amusements and exhibitions, a "public exhibition" is one where the public generally are admitted for the purpose of witnessing the exhibition in the same manner as to theater or other places of public amusement; and the fact that persons buying tickets were compelled to sign applications to become members of an alleged club giving the exhibition is immaterial. McCabe v. Whitman, 73 N. E. 534, 535, 187 Mass. 484.

PUBLIC FACILITIES

See, also, Public Service Facilities and Conveniences.

A clause in the Constitution and an act passed by the First Legislature after adoption of the Constitution relating to the same subject, like statutes in pari materia, are to be construed together, and Act May 20, 1908 (Laws 1908, c. 18), impliedly construing public "facilities" or public "conveniences," as used in Const. art. 9, § 18, giving the Corporation Commission power to prescribe and enforce rules requiring transportation companies to establish such public facilities and conveniences as may be reasonable and just, to include a union passenger depot, is entitled to great weight. Missouri, O. & G. Ry. Co. v. State, 119 Pac. 117, 119, 29 Okl. 640.

PUBLIC FRANCHISE

Street

A public street is a "public franchise," and is not such property as a corporation may take for its own use under the general power of eminent domain. It is a franchise which cannot be violated, except by express legislative authority. In re South Western State Normal School, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 99, 104.

PUBLIC FUNDS

See, also, Money of the City; Public Money.

The power of a city to grade streets or lay sewers or water pipes at the cost of abutting property is not strictly a governmental function, and in the exercise of the power it acts in its proprietary character, and the money collected from the abutting property owners is not "money of the city" within its charter, for it is only money raised by the operation of a general law that becomes money of the city, or "public funds," and subject to the charter provision as to the deposit thereof. City of Seattle v. Stirrat, 104 Pac. 834, 836, 55 Wash. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1275.

Kirby's Dig. § 1990, makes it unlawful for any county officer having custody or possession of public funds, by virtue of his office, to use such funds for his own purpose or to lend them to a third person, etc. Section 1994 provides that in prosecutions under the act it shall not be necessary for the indictment to describe particularly the kind or denomination, date or number of the funds, but it may describe them generally. Section 1993 defines "public funds," as used in the act, to mean "all lawful money of the United States, and all state, county, city, town or school warrants or bonds, or other paper, having a money value, belonging to the state, or to any county, city, incorporated town or school district therein." Held, that an indictment under the act for embezzlement, charging that, by virtue of his office as county treasurer, accused had in his possession a stated amount in gold, silver, and United States currency, a more particular description to the grand jury unknown, such money being the property of A. county, and that, having in his possession such money and public funds, he embezzled and converted a certain amount thereof to his own use, and in a second count charging accused with being, by virtue of his office, a receiver of public funds of the county, and with having in his possession the aforesaid sum of money, personal property of A. county, describing it as in the first count, and designating it as public funds of the county of A., and that, having resigned as treasurer and the county court having stated his account and directed him to pay to his successor in office a specified sum, found due on his settlement, feloniously and fraudulently converted such amount to his own use and benefit, sufficiently described the public funds alleged to have been embezzled. Ireland v. State, 136 S. W. 947, 951, 99 Ark. 32.

PUBLIC GARAGE

A person conducting a public automobile repair shop, and also storing the automobiles of his customers without charge, but with the expectation of doing their repair work when needed, is liable to the tax imposed by Laws 1910, c. 96, on each "public garage," since he is the owner of a depot for the storage and repairing of automobiles for the use of the public, and it is immaterial whether the garage is run in connection with, and forms a part of, the repair shop, or whether the repair shop is an incident to the garage. Lawrence v. Middleton (Miss.) 60 South. 130, 131.

PUBLIC GATHERING

A barbecue on the 4th of July, at which people are assembled to the number of 400 or 500, is a "public gathering," within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, § 342, which declares it to be a misdemeanor for one not an arresting officer in the discharge of his duties, or a member of his posse, to carry about his person a deadly weapon to any public gathering, except at militia muster grounds. Wynne v. State, 51 S. E. 636, 637, 123 Ga. 566.

PUBLIC GOOD

In Roseburg City Charter, c. 5, § 34, authorizing the city "to license and regulate all such callings, trades and employments as the public good may require," the words "public good" are sufficiently broad to include the raising of revenue if, in the judgment of the city council, revenue is needed. Abraham v. City of Roseburg, 105 Pac. 401, 402, 55 Or. 359, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 597.

PUBLIC GRANT

"A grant conferring state title to land has a technical meaning, under Virginia and West Virginia law. A 'public grant,' not a private one, means an instrument by which the state, as sovereign, passes to an individual title to land before vested in the state. 'A public grant is the mode and act of creating in an individual title to land which had previously belonged to the government.' A tax deed is not a 'grant,' under the second classification of persons entitled to transfer of state title in article 13, § 3, of the Constitution." State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 833, 57 W. Va. 447 (citing 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 721; 2 Minor, Inst. 985).

PUBLIC GROUNDS

The words "public ground," when used upon a plat of ground, establishes an unrestricted dedication of public use. Morrow v. Highland Grove Traction Co., 69 Atl. 41, 43, 219 Pa. 619, 123 Am. St. Rep. 677 (quoting Commonwealth v. Connellsville Borough, 50 Atl. 825, 201 Pa. 154).

School lands

Laws 1873, p. 398, provides for the formation of corporations, and authorizes corporations organized to operate railroads, etc., to condemn land and appropriate portions of public highways or "public grounds." Held, that a corporation had no authority to condemn state school lands; they not being "public grounds," within the meaning of the statute. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Superior Court of Chelan County, 78 Pac. 1011, 1012, 36 Wash. 381.

PUBLIC HATRED

A publication charging that plaintiff's daughter attempted to become the master of her household, and that this quality was inherited from plaintiff, who had her husband in abject subjection, was actionable under the statute defining libel as a defamation in writing tending to expose one to public hatred, "public hatred" being public or general dislike or antipathy, and "hatred" meaning to have little regard for or to despise, and the conduct attributed to plaintiff is such as to bring a woman into general disrepute and ridicule. McDavid v. Houston Chronicle Printing Co. (Tex.) 146 S. W. 252, 259.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY

See Highway.

PUBLIC HOSPITAL

As public charity, see Public Charity.

As public corporation, see Public Corporation.

PUBLIC HOTEL

Defendant was the keeper of a house for the entertainment of transient lodgers. In the due and regular course of his business, he let rooms to any one who applied and paid therefor certain stipulated prices, without special contract, for a single night or such longer period as they might desire, and the persons so hiring the rooms customarily inscribed their names and addresses in a register kept in the office for that purpose, which office was in the charge of clerks and open at all hours of the day and night for the reception of guests. There was not maintained at or in connection with the house any facilities for supplying guests with food. Held, that the house was a "public hotel," rendering defendant liable as keeper thereof, for money stolen from a guest while in his room. Nelson v. Johnson, 116 N. W. 828, 829, 104 Minn. 440, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1259.

PUBLIC HOUSE

Boarding house

The word "public," in the phrase "public boarding house," does not expand the term "boarding house" so as to make it nominative of a class of buildings not used as dwellings. In a boarding house the guest is under an express contract at a fixed rate for a certain period of time. Where a municipal water contract provided specified rates for service to dwellings, and defendant water company refused to furnish certain boarding houses at such rates, a plea alleging that such houses were "public boarding houses" did not show that they were the less boarding houses, nor exclude them from the class of buildings known as dwellings within the contract. Mayor, etc., of City of Birmingham v. Birmingham Waterworks Co., 44 So. 581, 582, 152 Ala. 306.

A "public house" is for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and who pay regularly. It is not the same as a boarding house, which is for the accommodation only of those accepted as guests by the proprietor, and therefore is as much a private house as if there were no boarders. Huffman v. State, 92 S. W. 419, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 319 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Cuncannon [Pa.] 3 Brewst. 347).

Jail

A jail house, in the sense that it is built and owned by the public, is a "public house," but this is not the sense which determines its character as to whether it is within Code 1896, § 4792, prohibiting gaming at a public house and specifying certain houses as public. Though a house may be built and owned by the public, it may nevertheless be private. A "public house" is one which is commonly open to the public, either for business, pleasure, religious worship, the gratification of curiosity, or the like. A jail, when subjected to this test, is not generally a "public house." Under Code 1896, § 4792, prohibiting gaming at a "public house," and specifying certain houses as public, any other houses except those specifically named are not per se "public houses," but may become such by force of circumstances, and whether they are public or not in a given instance is for the jury. Lewis v. State, 37 South. 99, 100, 140 Ala. 123.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT

See Pertaining to Public Improvements. See, also, Local Improvement; Public Work; Street Improvement.

The construction and maintenance of bridges is a "public improvement" within Priv. Laws 1909, c. 204, requiring the submission to a popular vote of the question of the issuance of bonds by the town of Warsaw for sewerage and drainage systems and other public improvements. Town of Warsaw v. Malone, 75 S. E. 1011, 1012, 159 N. C. 573.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT CORPORATION

Waterworks company

A corporation furnishing water to the inhabitants of a town, and to the town for municipal purposes, including service to fire plugs, and occupying the streets of the town with its conduits, though the corporation has not been given the right of eminent domain, or any other right usually accorded to quasi public corporations, is a "corporation for public improvement," within the statute providing that the act authorizing the appointment of a receiver of an insolvent corporation shall not apply to a corporation for public improvement. Thoroughgood v. Georgetown Water Co., 77 Atl. 720, 722, 9 Del. Ch. 84.

PUBLIC INDECENCY

See Notorious Public Indecency.

PUBLIC INSTITUTION

See, also, Public Corporation.

"Public institutions" are those which are created and exist by law or public authority, while "private institutions" are those which are created or established by private individuals for their own private purposes. Some public benefits or rights may result from the institutions of private individuals or associations. So, also, some private or individual rights may arise from public institutions. The only sensible distinction between public and private institutions is to be found in the authority by which, and the purpose for which, they are created and exist. Because, therefore, a corporation may fall under the denomination of private corporations, in the artificial distinction between public and private corporations, it is none the less a public or political institution. Mannington v. Hocking Val. Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 153 (quoting Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 623, 643).

Medical college

The Medical College of Georgia is not a "public institution" of the state because designated by law as a branch of the University of Georgia, and hence is liable for the unlawful and unauthorized mutilation of the remains of a patient who died at the hospital conducted by it, whether compensation for the board and treatment of such patient was received or not. Medical College of Georgia v. Rushing, 57 S. E. 1083, 1084, 1085, 1 Ga. App. 468.

PUBLIC INTEREST

See, also, Public Use (In Eminent Domain).

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 925, which provides that, in condemnation proceedings, whether the use is a public one, and whether the public interest requires the prosecution of the enterprise and what lands are necessary therefor are matters for the determination of the court, it cannot be objected to a proposed condemnation for power plant purposes that another plan would produce more power, where the proposed plan would produce an adequate supply, as "public interest" is measured by the "public use," in the absence of the presentation of any issue between the two plans by a proposal to adopt the more effective one. State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co. v. Superior Court for Snohomish County, 127 Pac. 591, 593, 71 Wash. 84.

A business is "affected with a public interest," where the one engaged in it is acting under a franchise, or has a virtual monopoly in it, or where from the nature of the business the one carrying it on is necessarily intrusted with the property or money of his customers, or where the business has been conducted in such manner that the public have adapted their business to the methods used; but the fact that a license is required does not make the business a public employment. People v. Steele, 83 N. E. 236, 238, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321; City of Chicago v. Powers, 83 N. E. 240, 231 Ill. 560.

The words "public land" have long had a settled meaning in the legislation of Congress, and, when a different intention is not clearly expressed, are used to designate such land as is subject to sale or other disposal under general laws, but not such as is reserved by competent authority for any purpose or in any manner, although no exception of it is made. Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 139 Fed. 614, 617, 71 C. C. A. 598 (citing Bardon v. Northern Pacific R. Co.,

A. 48; Winters v. United States, 143 Fed. 740, 748, 74 C. C. A. 666 (quoting Kinney, Irrigation, § 124); Scott v. Carew, 25 Sup. Ct. 193, 197, 196 U. S. 100, 49 L. Ed. 403 (quoting and adopting the definition in Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769); Morrow v. Warner Valley Stock Co., 101 Pac. 171, 182, 56 Or. 312 (quoting Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769); United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 148 Fed. 884, 893 (quoting Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769).

The words "public lands," used in connection with entries in the land offices of the United States, if nothing be said to the contrary, relate to lands of the United States which are subject to disposition in some form under the public land laws, and not to those which are set apart and used for some special public purpose, such as post office sites, military reservations, and the like. Stearns v. United States, 152 Fed. 900, 903, 82 C. C. A. 48 (citing Barker v. Harvey, 21 Sup. Ct. 690, 181 U. S. 481, 490, 45 L. Ed. 963; Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 71 C. C. A. 598, 139 Fed. 614).

The rule that the words "public lands" mean such land as is subject to sale or disposition under general laws, and not such as is reserved for any purpose, though no exception thereof is made, does not conflict with the doctrine that, where it clearly appears from the statute that the term is intended to include lands theretofore reserved for a specific purpose, such intention will prevail, under the rule that a statute is to be interpreted according to the plain intention of the Legislature. Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Karges, 169 Fed. 459, 462.

The words "public land" do not include land which are held under a live homestead entry; consequently a grant of public lands to a railroad company cannot embrace lands held under any such entry, though the entry was relinquished prior to the filing of the map of definite location and survey. United States v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 143 Fed. 765, 771, 75 C. C. A. 66. See, also, Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 91 Pac. 68, 69, 76 Kan. 255 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5793; Burlington, K. & S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 16 Pac. 125, 38 Kan. 142, 150; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 10 Sup. Ct. 112, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. Ed. 363; United States v. Union P. Ry. Co., 61 Fed. 149; United States v. Turner, 54 Fed. 228; Whitney v. Taylor, 15 Sup. Ct. 793, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. Ed. 906; Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien, 27 Sup. Ct. 249, 204 U. S. 190, 51 L. Ed. 438, affirming the same case in 139 Fed. 614, 71 C. C. A. 598).

The term "public lands," as used in Act Cong. July 1, 1862, § 2, 12 Stat. 489, c. 120, giving to certain railroad companies a right of way through the public lands, does not include a tract of land owned by the United States, but lawfully occupied by a settler who filed a declaratory statement claiming the right to it, under the pre-emption law. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 91 Pac. 68, 70, 76 Kan. 25; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 30 Sup. Ct. 138, 139, 215 U. S. 386, 54 L. Ed. 246.

The words "public lands" describe "such lands belonging to the United States as are subject to sale or disposal under general laws." Where an indictment for conspiracy to deprive the government of land by reason of a fraudulent homestead entry alleged that the lands sought to be acquired were public lands, and that defendants had conspired to defraud the United States out of a portion of such land, it was not demurrable for failure to alleged other facts showing that the land was in fact public land or subject to homestead entry. United States v. McKinley, 126 Fed. 242 (citing Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769).

The words "public lands" are not always used in the same sense. Their true meaning and effect are to be determined by the context in which they are used, and it is the duty of the court not to give such a meaning to the words as would destroy the object and purpose of the law or lead to absurd results. United States v. Blendaur, 128 Fed. 910, 913, 63 C. C. A. 636.

The term "public lands," when used in a grant, is to be regarded as excluding land included within prior grants. Brandon v. Ard, 87 Pac. 366, 370, 74 Kan. 424, 118 Am. St. Rep. 321.

An embankment built out in a lake, with earth from the bottom of the lake, to serve as a public levee, and still serving as such, is not subject to entry and sale as public land, though the bed of the lake belongs to the state. State ex rel. Turner v. Blanchard, 41 South. 363, 364, 117 La. 91.

Lands owned by the province of Quebec and known as "crown lands" correspond to what is known in this country as "public lands." Myers v. United States, 140 Fed. 648, 649.

Reserved land

The words "public lands" are habitually used in our legislation to describe such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws. Congressional grants of public lands are confined to those; the title of which is complete in the United States. The mere selection and filing of lists of land selected by agents of the state as swamp lands, under the swamp land grant of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. 519, c. 84), which had been made and filed in the Interior Department for approval subsequent to the passage of Act March 3, 1857, c. 117, 11 Stat. 251, which approved all such selections previously made, did not operate to segregate such lands from the public lands of the United States nor prevent their passing under the railroad grant, as within an exception of "lands reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever." United States v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 148 Fed. 884, 895 (citing Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 23 L. Ed. 634; Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769).

By Act June 8, 1872, c. 354, 17 Stat. 339, as amended by Act March 3, 1877, c. 126, 19 Stat. 405, defendant the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company was granted right of way over the public lands, and the right to take timber, stone, etc., from such lands adjacent to its several projected lines one of which extended through the then existing Ute Indian reservation, which covered a tract 125 by 200 miles in extent in southwest Colorado, and had been set apart by treaty for the exclusive use of the Indians, but with a reservation of the right by proclamation of the President to appropriate right of way for the construction through the reservation of any railroad authorized by law. Such a proclamation was issued on behalf of the defendant in 1880, and it thereafter constructed its lines through the reservation. Prior to such construction Congress had also ratified an agreement with the Indians by which their rights in the reservation were extinguished, except as to allotments in severalty. Held, that the words "public lands," as used in the grant, must be construed as including lands within the reservation, and that the act gave defendant the right to take the timber and other materials from such lands.

United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 190 Fed. 825, 847.

Lands in the Delaware Diminished Indian Reservation which had been assigned in severalty under the treaty of May 30, 1860, must be deemed included in the term "public lands," as used in the act of July 1, 1862, granting a right of way to the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company through the public lands, in view of the provision of that act that the United States should extinguish as rapidly as might be the Indian titles to all lands required for the right of way, and of the action of the Land Department in so interpreting the statute. Kindred v. Union Pac. R. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 780, 781, 225 U. S. 582, 56 L. Ed. 1216.

Lands in an Indian reservation are not "public lands," within Rev. St. § 2448, providing that, where patents for public lands are issued pursuant to any law of the United States to a person who dies before the date of the patent, the title shall become vested in his heirs; nor are patents issued to Indian allottees of reservation lands issued pursuant to a law of the United States within such section. Meeker v. Kaelin, 173 Fed. 216, 220.

Public lands withdrawn from entry under Reclamation Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093, § 3, 32 Stat. 388, as lands susceptible of irrigation from the contemplated works, but which remain subject to homestead entry under specified conditions, and upon which such entries have been made by entrymen who are in possession but have not yet fulfilled the conditions to entitle them to patents, are still "public lands" within the meaning of Act March 3, 1875, c. 152, 18 Stat. 482, granting to railroads right of way through public lands of the United States, and a railroad company by complying with the terms of that act may acquire right of way through such lands subject to the possessory rights of the entrymen, which rights in the right of way it must also acquire by contract under Rev. St. § 2288, as amended by Act March 3, 1891, c. 561, 26 Stat. 1097, and Act March 3, 1905, c. 1424, 33 Stat. 991, which authorizes any homestead settler to transfer right of way through his claim by warranty against his own acts, or by condemnation. United States v. Minidoka & S. W. R. Co., 190 Fed. 491, 494, 111 C. C. A. 323. See, also, United States v. Minidoka & S. W. R. Co., 176 Fed. 762, 766.

Lands withdrawn under Act Cong. June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act (Act June 17, 1902, c. 1093), for purposes of irrigation under an irrigation system constructed by the government, which lands are subject to homestead entry under act of Congress, are public lands within Act Cong. March 3, 1875, known as the railroad right of way act (Act March 3, 1875, c. 152), giving railroads, which have complied with certain conditions, rights of way over the public lands of the United States, and such lands withdrawn are subject to railroad rights of way of any railroad company complying with the act of 1875. Minidoka & S. W. R. Co. v. Weymouth, 113 Pac. 455, 456, 19 Idaho, 234.

Tideland

Rev. St. 1895, arts. 3498a, 3498j, declaring that "public school, university, asylum and public lands" shall be open to purchase by any person having the right to purchase, etc., do not give any one the right to purchase lands under water at ordinary high tide and uncovered at low tide. The words "public lands," though meaning different lands from the school, university, or asylum lands, did not include soil lying below the line of ordinary high tide. De Meritt v. Robison, 116 S. W. 796, 797, 102 Tex. 358.

PUBLIC LANDING

A "public landing" is a place on a river or other navigable water for loading or unloading goods or for the reception and delivery of passengers. State ex rel. Roland v. Dreyer, 129 S. W. 904, 912, 229 Mo. 201.

"A 'public landing' is dedicated to the public use and is held in trust for the public the same as a street. It cannot be devoted to any use inconsistent with the use of the public." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Dalley, 78 N. E. 790, 793, 222 Ill. 427.

PUBLIC LETTING

Of contract

To constitute a public letting of a contract to do certain work, it is sufficient that it be open to all—notorious; that reasonable public notice be given; and that the public have the equal privilege of bidding and becoming contractors. It is not necessary that the publicity shall be of that nature which attends sales at public outcry. Eppes v. Mississippi, G. & T. R. Co., 35 Ala. 33, 61.

PUBLIC MERCHANT

Married woman

A married woman "is a 'public merchant' if she carries on a public trade," but she is not a public merchant merely because she passively permits her brothers to operate a store, under the name of "Estate of E. Barousse," in which she has inherited an interest, and is therefore not separately bound for the debts incurred in the operation of this store. Horton v. Haralson, 58 South. 858, 860, 130 La. 1003.

PUBLIC MILL

Gen. St. 1901, §§ 4085-4092, relating to "public mills," and providing for the regulation of the same, does not apply to mills used merely for the purpose of manufacturing flour and feed for sale, and such mills are not made public mills by that act. Howard Mills Co. v. Schwartz Lumber & Coal Co., 95 Pac. 559, 561, 77 Kan. 599, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 356.

PUBLIC MONEY

See Appropriation of Public Money; Embezzlement of Public Moneys; Gift of Public Money.

See, also, Public Funds.

The term "public money," in the federal statutes relating to the embezzlement of public money, or money or property of the United States does not include fees and emoluments received by the clerk of a federal district court, and the duty of such clerk to pay over to the United States the surplus fees and emoluments of his office, which his half-yearly return or the audit thereof shows to exist over and above the compensation and allowances authorized by law to be retained by him, is not governed by the statute. United States v. Mason, 31 Sup. Ct. 28, 34, 218 U. S. 517, 54 L. Ed. 1133.

By "public money," as used in Const. art. 3, § 51, depriving the Legislature of power to make or authorize any grant of public money to any municipal corporation, the framers of the Constitution most probably meant moneys received by officers of the state, and belonging to the state, derived in the ordinary processes of taxation, and in other ways permissible under the Constitution. It seems that the provision of the fee bill, requiring the officer collecting fees to pay part thereof, in a certain contingency only, to the county treasurer, can in no reasonable sense be said to be a grant of public money to a municipal corporation. Tarrant County v. Butler, 80 S. W. 656, 659, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 421.

Code Civ. Proc. § 572, provides that, when it appears by a pleading or the examination of a party that he holds money or other property which is the subject of the litigation as trustee for another party, the court may order the same, upon motion, to be deposited in court upon such conditions as may be just. Section 573 provides that, whenever money is paid into court, the same must be delivered to the clerk, who shall deposit the same with the county treasurer to be held in a distinct fund, subject to the order of the court, and for the safe-keeping of the same the treasurer shall be liable on his official bond. Held that, where money was paid to the clerk of the court without a preliminary order of the court directing such deposit, such money when paid to the county treasurer became public money within Pen. Code, § 426, where the court thereafter found that a deposit had been made, and adjudged that the party for whose benefit it was made was entitled thereto, and hence the county treasurer was liable on his official bond for the amount of such deposit. Agoure v. Peck, 121 Pac. 706, 708, 17 Cal. App. 759.

Laws 1905, p. 2059, c. 729, § 307, providing that; after receiving mortgage tax moneys from the recording officers of the counties, the county treasurers shall transmit one half to the State Treasurer, and hold the other half subject to the order of the board of supervisors, though appropriating half of such tax money to the counties, does so before it reaches the state treasury, so as to bear the impress of state money, and so is not within Const. art. 3, § 20, requiring the assent of two-thirds of each branch of the Legislature to a bill appropriating "public money" for local purposes. People ex rel. Eisman v. Ronner, 95 N. Y. Supp. 518, 519, 48 Misc. Rep. 436.

Moneys paid into the county treasury in proceedings for the location of a county ditch in conformity with Rev. St. § 4447 et seq., are not "funds of the county" nor "public moneys in the hands of the county treasurer belonging to the county" within Rev. St. § 1277, and where one has contracted for the construction of a county ditch and has been fully paid by county warrants issued by the county auditor when the work was but partially performed, the prosecuting attorney is not authorized by section 1277 to recover back such public moneys from the contractor which were received by him in excess of the work actually performed. Loe v. State ex rel. Platt, 91 N. E. 982, 984, 82 Ohio St. 73.

The word "necessity," in connection with condemnation proceedings, does not mean an absolute, but only a reasonable, necessity such as would combine the greatest benefit to the public with the least inconvenience and expense to the condemning party and property owner consistent with such benefit, although it does not include the taking of land which may merely render the employment of the improvement more convenient or less expensive or for a necessity which is merely colorable. The word "necessity," in such instance, must be construed to mean expedient, reasonably convenient, or useful to the public, and cannot be limited to the absolute physical necessity. Warden v. Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co., 108 S. W. 880, 881, 128 Ky. 563 (quoting 15 Cyc. p. 632; Aurora & G. Ry. Co. v. Harvey, 53 N. E. 331, 178 Ill. 477). See, also, Charleston Natural Gas Co. v. Low, 44 S. E. 410, 412, 52 W. Va. 662

(citing McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. [17 U. S.] 414, 4 L. Ed. 579).

Under the rule that property may be taken for the public "necessity," the word "necessity" is not to be used in too limited a sense; it means a want, an exigency, an expediency, for the interest or safety of the state. Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, 250.

Acts 1899, pp. 250-252, c. 142, §§ 1-7, authorizing taxing districts and cities to condemn land beyond their corporate limits for parks and parkways, is not invalid as authorizing condemnation of land for a mere public convenience, as distinguished from a "public necessity" or "public use." City of Memphis v. Hastings, 86 S. W. 609, 612, 113 Tenn. 142, 69 L. R. A. 750.

Where an operator of a mine maintaining a spur track from the mine to a railroad needed the land of another to reduce grades and curves in the track, and thereby eliminate dangers to operatives, and also needed the land of another for terminal facilities to avoid an extraordinary outlay, a "necessity" existed within Ky. St. 1909, § 815 (Russell's St. § 5352), authorizing the condemnation of such land as may be necessary for the spur tracks; a "necessity" within the statute being a convenience substantially advancing the public interest by making the road safer or better. Greasy Creek Mineral Co. v. Ely Jellico Coal Co., 116 S. W. 1189-1191, 132 Ky. 692.

PUBLIC OR COMMON NUISANCE

A "common nuisance" is a "public nuisance." Palestine Bldg. Ass'n v. Minor (Ky.) 86 S. W. 695, 696; State ex rel. Thompson v. Coler, 89 Pac. 693, 694, 75 Kan. 424.

"A 'common nuisance' (that is, a 'public nuisance') in its nature is continuing. It is an encroachment on the rights of the public. The acts constituting it may or may not in themselves be offenses under the law of the land, or they may be such that they are partly offenses and partly are not, and yet such as to be impossible of segregation." Where a private park, in a residence portion, was a rendezvous for boisterous, dissolute, and drunken people who disturbed the sleep of neighboring residents, it was a common nuisance. Palestine Bldg. Ass'n v. Minor (Ky.) 86 S. W. 695, 696.

"Common 'nuisances' are a species of offense against the public order and economical regimen of the state." State v. De Wolfe, 93 N. W. 746, 67 Neb. 321 (quoting and adopting the definition in 3 Greenl. Ev. 184).

A common or "public nuisance" is one that affects the people at large, and is a violation of a public right, either by a direct encroachment on the public property or by doing some act which tends to the common injury, or by omitting to do, in the discharge of a legal duty, that which the common good requires. City of Owensboro v. Hope (Ky.) 110 S. W. 272, 274.

"A 'public nuisance' is such an inconvenience or troublesome offense as annoys the whole community in general and not merely some particular person. It produces no special injury to one more than to another of the people." State ex rel. Thompson v. Coler, 89 Pac. 693, 694, 75 Kan. 424 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict.).

Anything which is an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life and property by an entire community or neighborhood or any considerable number of persons, is a "public nuisance." Acme Fertilizer Co. v. State, 72 N. E. 1037, 1038, 34 Ind. App. 346, 107 Am. St. Rep. 190 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Ohio Oil Co., 49 N. E. 809, 150 Ind. 21, 37, 47 L. R. A. 627).

A "public nuisance," strictly speaking, arises out of the violation of public rights, and as a general rule results in no more special injury to one person than to another. Such a nuisance always arises from unlawful acts. Consequently that which is lawful cannot be regarded as a "public nuisance." Therefore, if the Legislature, by a statute which it is competent for that body to pass, authorizes an act which, in the absence of the statute, would otherwise constitute a public nuisance, such act is thereby made lawful and cannot be considered in a legal sense as a nuisance, so far as the public is concerned. Sopher v. State, 81 N. E. 913, 915, 169 Ind. 177, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 27 (citing Wood, Nuis. § 1; Leigh v. Westervelt [N. Y.] 2 Duer, 618; Williams v. New York Cent. R. Co. [N. Y.] 18 Barb. 222; Neaderhouser v. State, 28 Ind. 257).

A "public or common nuisance" is that which affects the public and constitutes an annoyance to all; a thing which in its nature or its consequences is a nuisance, an injury or a damage to all persons who come within the sphere of its operation, though in greater or less degree. It is public when it affects the rights enjoyed by citizens as a part of the public, as the right of navigating a river, or traveling on a public highway, etc. People v. Transit Development Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301, 131 App. Div. 174.

A "nuisance" may be both "public" and private in its character. In so far as it is public, the person who suffers a peculiar damage therefrom has a right of action. There are three things which one who sued on account of a public nuisance must show, in addition to the existence thereof, before he can recover: (1) A particular, or, more exactly speaking, a peculiar, injury to himself beyond that which is suffered by the rest of the public. (2) The injury to him must, according to some courts, be direct, and not merely consequential. (3) It must be of a substantial character, not fleeting or evanescent. One who has sustained damage peculiar to himself from a common nuisance has a cause of action against the person creating or maintaining it, although a like injury has been sustained by numerous other persons. Czarnecki v. Bolen-Darnall Coal Co., 120 S. W. 376, 377, 91 Ark. 58 (quoting and adopting definition in 3 Joyce, Dam. § 2151).

A "public nuisance" is an offense against the public order and economy of the state, by unlawfully doing any act or omitting to perform any duty which the common good, public decency or morals, or the public right to life, health, and the use of property, requires, and which at the same time annoys, injures, renders insecure, or obstructs the rights or property of the whole community, or any considerable number of persons. Weeks-Thorn Paper Co. v. Glenside Woolen Mills, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1027, 1031, 64 Misc. Rep. 205.

The doctrine that a private citizen can only recover damages by reason of a public nuisance by showing some injury peculiar to himself, and differing in kind and degree from that suffered by the public generally, applies only to that class of nuisances which are, in strictness, public nuisances, without more; i. e., an unlawful interference with a public right, a right enjoyed by the general public, as in case of user of a public highway. But the doctrine does not obtain where the nuisance, though public from its extent and placing, by its very existence involves the invasion of the personal and private rights of individuals. McManus v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. E. 766, 768, 150 N. C. 655.

A common or public nuisance is that which affects the people and is a violation of a public right, either by a direct encroachment on public property, by the doing of some act which tends to a common injury, or by the omission of that which it is the duty of a person to do; such nuisances being founded upon wrongs arising from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use of property, or from improper, indecent, or unlawful conduct, working an obstruction or injury to the public, and producing material annoyance, inconvenience, or discomfort founded upon a wrong. Incorporated Town of Lonoke v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 123 S. W. 395, 398, 92 Ark. 546 (quoting and adopting Bohan v. Port Jervis Gas Light Co., 25 N. E. 246, 122 N. Y. 18-32, 9 L. R. A. 711).

At common law acts done in violation of law, or which are against good morals, constitute public nuisances. A nuisance is public if it affects the community at large, or if it affects a place where the public have a right to and do go, such as a park, street, or alley, and which nuisance necessarily annoys, offends, or injures those who come within the scope of its influence. State v.

"A 'public or common nuisance' is an offense against the public order and economy of the state by unlawfully doing any act or by omitting to perform any duty which the common good, public decency, or morals, or the public right to life, health, and the use of property requires, and which at the same time annoys, injures, endangers, renders insecure, interferes with, or obstructs the rights or property of the whole community, or neighborhood, or of any considerable number of persons, even though the extent of the annoyance, injury, or damage may be unequal or may vary in its effect upon individuals. Another factor in defining a nuisance is that consideration should be given to the places where the public have the legal right to go or congregate, or where they are likely to come within the sphere of its influence." Within such definition, an arena erected for the purpose of conducting a bullfight, and in which one is carried on, is a "public nuisance." State ex rel. Attorney General v. Canty, 105 S. W. 1078, 1080, 207 Mo. 439 (quoting Joyce, Nuis. § 5, and citing 1 Wood, Nuis. § 68; Reaves v. Territory, 74 Pac. 951, 13 Okl. 396; Commonwealth v. McGovern, 75 S. W. 261, 116 Ky. 212, 66 L. R. A. 280).

A "public nuisance" may arise in two classes of cases. Where the right invaded by the offender is a common and public right, one which belongs to every citizen, such, for instance, as the right to use a highway or park or navigable waters, the plaintiff must show that he had received an injury distinct in kind from that received by the rest of the public. The private injury in this class of cases is said to be merged in the common nuisance and injury to all citizens, and the right is to be vindicated and the wrong punished by a public prosecution. Where the public nuisance consists of the use of private property so as to annoy a large number of persons in the enjoyment of their health and property, the injury to each is special and actionable. Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. v. Doyle, 64 Atl. 156, 157, 158, 73 N. J. Law, 521.

Dancing and drinking, accompanied by swearing, drunkenness, making loud noises, and otherwise misbehaving, constitute a "common nuisance," indictable as a public offense. Commonwealth v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 112 S. W. 613, 614, 139 Ky. 429, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 427.

"Lotteries for money are, by statute (Crimes Act, Rev. § 51), 'common and public nuisances.' * * *" State v. Lovell, 39 N. J. Law, 463, 464.

"Any place of public resort, in which illegal practices are habitually carried on, is a 'public nuisance,'" including a place kept in order that the public may resort thereto and engage in the unlawful practice of betting on horse races. State v. Dimant, 62 Atl. 286, 287, 73 N. J. Law, 131.

As regards the offense of maintaining a public nuisance, a place kept and held out as one for women to resort to have unlawful abortions committed is such a nuisance within Pen. Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1530, defining the same. People v. Curtis, 136 N. Y. Supp. 582, 583, 152 App. Div. 372.

The injury or damage resulting to one landowner from one unauthorized or illegal assertion by another landowner of a right to the exclusive possession of public lands is an injury suffered in common with all members of the public, whose stock graze in the vicinity of such public lands, and, if a nuisance, is a "public nuisance," which cannot be enjoined by the individual landowner, unless he shows some special injury peculiar to himself, differing in kind, and not merely in extent and degree, from the general injury to the public. Anthony Wilkinson Live Stock Co. v. McIlquham, 83 Pac. 364, 367, 14 Wyo. 209, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733.

Where it is alleged that certain parties, in violation of Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. c. 83, had entered into a pool and combination to create a monopoly in the business of buying and selling lumber, grain, etc., and were thereby enabled to and were charging unjust and exorbitant prices for such commodities, such acts constitute a "public nuisance," and the parties thereto may be restrained as provided by Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4440, at the suit of the county attorney. Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 99 Pac. 911, 917, 22 Okl. 890.

A city's discharge of sewage into a river, so that the sewage was carried undiluted and deposited on plaintiff's riparian land, two miles below, producing noxious and unhealthy gases, constituted, not only a "public nuisance," but an actionable wrong, for which such riparian owner was entitled to recover. Platt Bros. & Co. v. City of Waterbury, 67 Atl. 508, 509, 80 Conn. 179, 125 Am. St. Rep. 111 (citing Nolan v. City of New Britain, 38 Atl. 703, 69 Conn. 668, 678).

A house of ill fame, or bawdyhouse, is a "public nuisance." Where the nuisance, though public, produces a special or particular injury to an individual, he may proceed in a court of equity for an injunction, and also for damages. Tedescki v. Berger, 43 South. 960, 961, 150 Ala. 649, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060 (citing Wood, Nuis. [3d Ed.] p. 49, § 29; Ex parte Birchfield, 52 Ala. 377; 1 Wood, Nuis. p. 50, § 30; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 4 Mo. App. 499, 503, 505; Id., 72 Mo. 129; Marsan v. French, 61 Tex. 173, 48 Am. Rep. 272; Ahern v. Steele, 22 N. E. 193, 115 N. Y. 203, 5 L. R. A. 449, 450, 12 Am. St. Rep. 773; Cahn v. State, 20 South. 380, 110 Ala. 56, 59; 1 High., Inj. [3d Ed.] § 782; 2 Progress Electric Light & Motor Co.*, 10 South. 134, 95 Ala. 264; Hundley v. Harrison et al., 26 South. 294, 123 Ala. 292, 298; Ogletree v. McQuaggs et al., 67 Ala. 580, 585, 42 Am. Rep. 112).

Keeping a house for the purpose of practicing there the vocation of an abortionist constitutes a "public nuisance," defined by Pen. Code, § 385, to be a crime against the order and economy of the state, consisting of unlawfully doing an act which (1) annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of any considerable number of persons, or (2) offends public decency; section 294 making abortion a crime of a higher character. People v. Hoffman, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1000, 1002, 118 App. Div. 862.

The repeated and persistent sale and delivery of intoxicating liquors on the streets and alleys of a city is a common nuisance which may be enjoined under Code Civ. Proc. § 265 (Gen. St. 1909, § 5859), authorizing an injunction in the name of the state against the keeping and maintaining of a common nuisance. State v. Rabinowitz, 118 Pac. 1040, 1043, 85 Kan. 841, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187.

Neither the sale of intoxicating liquor nor the keeping of a place where such liquors were sold as a beverage, if conducted in an orderly manner, constituted a "public nuisance" at common law, and therefore the offense of keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold cannot be prosecuted under the statute against public nuisances. Sopher v. State, 81 N. E. 913, 915, 169 Ind. 177, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 27 (citing Commonwealth v. McDonough, 13 Allen [95 Mass.] 581; Welsh v. State, 25 N. E. 883, 126 Ind. 71, 9 L. R. A. 664; State v. Bertheol [Ind.] 6 Blackf. 474, 39 Am. Dec. 442; State v. Mullikin [Ind.] 8 Blackf. 260; 1 Hawk. P. C. [Curw. Ed.] p. 714; 2 Cooley, Bl. Comm. [4th Ed.] p. 168; 1 Bish. Cr. Law [7th Ed.] § 505; Bish. St. Crimes [3d Ed.] §§ 984, 985). The illegal sale of intoxicating liquors is a "public nuisance," affecting the whole community, and may be abated by process issued in the name of the state. Dispensary Com'rs of Lee County v. Hooper, 56 S. E. 997, 998, 128 Ga. 99. But the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors does not per se constitute the place where such liquors are sold a "public nuisance." The character of the place must depend upon the special facts, which must be specifically averred and proved. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 146, 19 Okl. 149. See, also, State v. Tabler, 72 N. E. 1039, 1040, 34 Ind. App. 393, 107 Am. St. Rep. 256.

Under 1 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3085, making it a "public nuisance" to maintain a place where intoxicating liquors are unlawfully kept for sale, a complaint alleging that defendant was occupying a building as a place in which intoxicating liquors were kept for the purpose of selling contrary to law, and that such use of the premises constituted a nuisance which it sought to abate, is not demurrable on the ground that it does not allege that the place is not maintained by defendant as a druggist, as that is a defensive matter. Kirkland v. Ferry, 88 Pac. 1123, 1124, 45 Wash. 663.

Under Gen. St. Kan. c. 101, § 39, providing that "all places where intoxicating liquors are manufactured, sold, bartered, or given away in violation of any provisions of this act, or where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale, barter, or delivery, in violation of this act, are hereby declared to be 'common nuisances,'" it is not necessary under a nuisance count, to prove any sales, but it is sufficient to show a mere keeping of intoxicating liquors for sale or a keeping of a place where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquors. State v. Lord, 55 Pac. 503, 504, 505, 8 Kan. App. 257.

By Rev. St. c. 22, § 1, providing that "all places used * * * for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors, and all houses, shops or places where intoxicating liquors are sold for tippling purposes, and all places of resort where intoxicating liquors are kept, sold, given away, drunk or dispensed in any manner not provided for by law, are 'common nuisances,'" the Legislature obviously intended to declare all places "common nuisances" whenever they should commonly and habitually be used for the illegal sale or keeping of intoxicating liquors, and also whenever commonly and habitually used as places of resort where such liquors are "given away, drunk or dispensed in any manner not provided for by law." State v. Kaplesky, 73 Atl. 830, 832, 105 Me. 127, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737 (citing State v. McIntosh, 57 Atl. 83, 98 Me. 397; State v. Stanley, 24 Atl. 983, 84 Me. 555).

An information charging that defendant corporation unlawfully erected and maintains a public nuisance, to the injury of the citizens, by erecting near the dwelling houses of divers citizens in a specified county a certain rendering plant, and that it did wrongfully create and suffer to escape therefrom divers noisome and poisonous smells, so that the air for a great distance was impregnated thereby, to the injury to the health and property of many persons residing in the neighborhood, sufficiently charged a "public nuisance," as defined by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2154. And where the information charged the erection and maintenance of a rendering plant, and the carrying on of the business of manufacturing products from the bodies of dead animals, it sufficiently charged that the building was used or maintained "for the exercise of a trade, employment, or business," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2154, defining a "public nuisance." The facts so alleged were sufficient to charge a public nuisance at common law. Acme Fertilizer Co. v. State, 72 N. E. 1037, 1038, 34 Ind. App. 346, 107 Am. St. Rep. 190.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2154, providing that whoever unlawfully diverts any stream of water from its natural course or state, to the injury of others, shall be fined, etc., persons who maintain paper factories on the banks of a creek, and discharge chemicals into the creek, destroying the fish in it, polluting it and connecting streams, and rendering their water unfit for stock, are guilty of maintaining a "public nuisance." West Muncie Strawboard Co. v. Slack, 72 N. E. 879, 880, 164 Ind. 21.

The term "public nuisance," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2440, prescribing punishment for maintaining such places, has a well-defined legal meaning and sufficiently designates the class of prohibited acts; and a nuisance is public if it annoys such part of the public as necessarily comes in contact with it. Keefer v. State, 92 N. E. 656, 657, 174 Ind. 588; State v. Tabler, 72 N. E. 1039, 1040, 34 Ind. App. 393, 107 Am. St. Rep. 256. In a prosecution under this statute, it is necessary to look to the common law to determine whether the act complained of is a "public nuisance." Sopher v. State, 81 N. E. 913, 915, 169 Ind. 177, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 172, 14 Ann. Cas. 27.

Wilson's St. 1903, § 2340, declares that "public nuisance" is a crime against the order and economy of the territory, and consists in unlawfully doing any act or omitting to perform any duty required by the public good, which act or omission either: First, annoys or injures the comfort, repose, health or safety of any considerable number of persons; or, second, offends public decency." Reaves v. Territory, 74 Pac. 951, 952, 13 Okl. 396.

Acts become criminal within Penal Law, § 1530, defining a "public nuisance" as the unlawful doing of an act which annoys, injures, or endangers the comfort, repose, health, or safety of any considerable number of persons, when a considerable number of persons are "annoyed" by them. People v. Bink, 135 N. Y. Supp. 733, 734, 151 App. Div. 271.

Penal Law, § 1530, providing that a "public nuisance" consists in unlawfully doing an act or omitting to perform a duty, which act or omission annoys, injures, or endangers any considerable number of persons, refers to duties such as are directed by statute. People v. Harris, 134 N. Y. Supp. 409, 415, 74 Misc. Rep. 353.

Under Civ. Code, § 3480, defining a "public nuisance" as one affecting an entire community or neighborhood, etc., although the extent of damage inflicted on individuals may be unequal, and section 3493, authorizing a private person to sue for a public nuisance, if it is specially injurious to him, a private person cannot sue for damages sustained by a public nuisance, unless he suffers, not only a special injury, but one different in kind, and not simply in degree, from that suffered by the public in general. Donahue v. Stockton Gas & Electric Co., 92 Pac. 196, 198, 6 Cal. App. 276.

"Public nuisance" is defined by Civ. Code, § 3479, as one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the nuisance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal; thus construction of a street railroad track away from the center of the street, and on one side thereof, so as to be within about four feet of the sidewalk, in violation of the railroad company's franchise, was a public nuisance which an abutting property owner could not have abated, in the absence of proof that his injury was different in kind from that suffered by the public at large. Reynolds v. Presidio & F. R. Co., 81 Pac. 1118, 1 Cal. App. 229.

Number of persons affected

Under Revised Code (section 3657), "A 'public nuisance' is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal." Stricker v. Hillis, 99 Pac. 831, 832, 15 Idaho, 709.

A "public nuisance" is that which annoys such part of the public as necessarily come in contact with it; such as result from the violation of public rights and producing no especial injury to one more than another of the public. Russell v. State, 69 N. E. 482, 484, 32 Ind. App. 243.

"A 'public nuisance' is one that injures the citizens generally, who may be so circumstanced as to come within its influence. The test as to whether a nuisance is a 'public nuisance' or not is not the number of persons annoyed, but the possibility of annoyance to the public by the invasion of its rights." State ex rel. Thompson v. Coler, 89 Pac. 693, 694, 75 Kan. 424 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5804).

As applied to "public nuisances," the term "public" does not mean all the people, nor most of the people, nor very many of the people of a place, but so many of them as contradistinguishes them from a few. United States v. Luce, 141 Fed. 385, 392.

One threatening to commit repeated trespasses and to use offensive language addressed to another does not threaten to create a nuisance within Civ. Code, § 3480, defining a "public nuisance" as one affecting at the same time an entire community or a neighborhood or any considerable number of persons, etc. Randall v. Freed, 97 Pac. 669, 671, 154 Cal. 299.

A "public nuisance" is one which affects at the same time any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the nuisance or injury inflicted upon the individuals may be unequal. Civ. Code, § 2394. Town of Colton v. South Dakota Cent. Land Co., 126 N. W. 507, 508, 25 S. D. 309, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 122.

Obstruction or encroachment on highway

A permanent obstruction in a street or highway, interfering with the convenience of the public, or imperiling the safety of the traveler, is within the definition of a "public nuisance." Frank v. Village of Warsaw, 101 N. Y. Supp. 938, 943, 116 App. Div. 618.

Though streets and alleys of a city are public highways and an encroachment on them substantially interfering with the public use is a "public nuisance," to constitute a public nuisance, there must be a substantial interference with or obstruction of the public right. Leitchfield Mercantile Co. v. Commonwealth, 136 S. W. 639, 641, 143 Ky. 162.

The obstruction of a public street is a "public nuisance." Robbins v. White, 42 South. 841, 844, 52 Fla. 613.

The occupation of a portion of a main street by a platform and shed 60 feet long, 35 feet wide, and 20 feet high, on which platform are large farm scales, a cornsheller operated by steam, and other machinery, which machinery raises dust and is noisy when operated, and annoys the public, and is likely to frighten horses, is a "public nuisance." State ex rel. Detienne v. City of Vandalla, 94 S. W. 1009, 1011, 119 Mo. App. 406.

Any encroachment on a street or an obstruction therein, on or above the surface, of a permanent nature, not including ornamental or shade trees in the sidewalk of streets devoted chiefly to residences, or the structures of public service companies when the latter are authorized by proper authorities, which endangers or interferes with the use of the street by the public, constitutes a "public nuisance." McHarge v. M. M. Newcomer & Co., 100 S. W. 700, 703, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298 (citing Elliott, Roads & St. §§ 613, 690, 693, 695; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 586, 587, 730, 1032; Wood v. Mears, 12 Ind. 515, 74 Am. Dec. 222; Van O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. [38 Mass.] 292, 32 Am. Dec. 261; Raymond v. Kiseberg, 54 N. W. 612, 84 Wis. 302, 19 L. R. A. 643; Sikes v. Town of Manchester, 12 N. W. 755, 59 Iowa, 65; City of Ft. Wayne v. De Witt, 47 Ind. 391; Welsh v. Wilson, 4 N. E. 633, 101 N. Y. 254, 54 Am. Rep. 698; Callanan v. Gilman, 14 N. E. 264, 107 N. Y. 360, 1 Am. St. Rep. 831; State v. Edens, 85 N. C. 526; State v. Stroud [Tenn.] 52 S. W. 697).

By the express provisions of the California Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, and Pen. Code, § 370, anything unlawfully obstructing the free passage or use in the customary manner of a public highway is a "public nuisance." People v. McCue, 88 Pac. 899, 900, 150 Cal. 195; Brown v. Rea, 88 Pac. 713, 714, 150 Cal. 171 (citing Aram v. Schallenberger, 41 Cal. 449; Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 403; Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co., 11 Pac. 876, 71 Cal. 87).

By the express provisions of Rev. Code, § 3657, a "public nuisance" is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal, and by section 3656 any unlawful obstruction of the clear passage or use, in the customary manner, of a highway is a nuisance. To authorize a private person to bring a suit to abate a public nuisance, he must allege and show that he will be specially injured in a different way from the general public, or deprived of the free use of his own property. Stricker v. Hillis, 99 Pac. 831, 832, 15 Idaho, 709.

Rev. Laws 1905, § 4987, defining a "public nuisance" as a crime as against the order and economy of the state, and making it consist in unlawfully doing an act or omitting to perform a duty which "shall unlawfully interfere with, obstruct, or tend to obstruct, or render dangerous for passengers, a lake, navigable river, bay, stream, canal, or basin," discloses, in connection with other legislation, an intention to keep the navigable waters of the state free from obstruction, whenever possible. Minnesota Canal & Power Co. v. Pratt, 112 N. W. 395, 400, 101 Minn. 197, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105.

Whether an automobile speed contest on a public highway authorized by the municipality was as conducted a nuisance within Pen. Code, § 385, subsec. 4, defining a "public nuisance" as the doing of an act which in any way renders a considerable number of persons insecure in life, etc., held under the facts for the jury. Johnson v. City of New York, 78 N. E. 715, 719, 186 N. Y. 139, 116 Am. St. Rep. 545, 9 Ann. Cas. 824; Johnson v. City of New York, 96 N. Y. Supp. 754, 756, 109 App. Div. 821.

Private nuisance distinguished

See Private Nuisance.

PUBLIC OFFENSE

Any act which is denounced as unlawful and made punishable by fine is a "public offense." Under Cr. Code Prac. § 36, which authorizes a peace officer to make an arrest without a warrant, where a public offense is committed in his presence, a peace officer coming within the designation of section 26, designating, as peace officers, sheriffs, constables, etc., has the right to make an arrest without a warrant for a violation of Ky. St. 1903, § 1303, prohibiting the sale of liquors on Sunday, committed in his presence. Commonwealth ex rel. Barth v. McCann, 94 S. W. 645, 646, 123 Ky. 247.

Laws 1907, p. 196, c. 131, to define and prohibit unfair competition and discrimination, etc., provides (section 3) "that any person, firm or corporation violating the provisions of section 1 of the act, shall upon conviction thereof be fined." Held, that it sufficiently prohibits the acts set out in section 1 to state an offense under Pen. Code, § 3, providing that a "crime" or "public offense" is an act or omission forbidden by law, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, a fine, though the law nowhere expressly "forbids" the act. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 508, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

PUBLIC OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS

There is no practical difference in the meaning of "public official proceedings" and "proceedings authorized by law" as applied to privileged communications, and an investigation by a Senate committee of charges against one, appointed to office by the President and whose appointment has been sent to the Senate for confirmation, falls within the meaning of the latter term as used in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2239. Tuohy v. Halsell, 128 Pac. 126, 127, 35 Okl. 61, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323.

PUBLIC PARK

As public charity, see Public Charity.

As public place, see Public Place.

As public utility, see Public Utility.

See, also, Public Square.

A "public park" has been defined as a piece of ground inclosed for purposes of pleasure, exercise, amusement, or ornament. Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 759, 763, 58 Misc. Rep. 401, (quoting definition in Tompkins v. Pallas, 95 N. Y. Supp. 875, 47 Misc. Rep. 309).

PUBLIC PIER

A "public pier" is subject to the ordinary uses of a public way, which in populous towns is a street. Borough of Seabright v. Allgor, 56 Atl. 287, 288, 69 N. J. Law, 641.

PUBLIC PLACE

Place of public accommodation or amusement, see Other.

See, also, Public Resort.

"Any place which for the time is made public by the assemblage of people is a 'public place' within the meaning of the act against gaming." Ferrell v. City of Opelika, 39 South. 249, 251, 144 Ala. 135 (citing Campbell v. State, 17 Ala. 369; Smith v. State, 52 Ala. 384; Jacobson v. State, 55 Ala. 151).

The term "public place," as used in the statutes relating to gambling, as a general rule includes any place which for the time being is made public by the assemblage of people who go there with or without invitation and without restraint. Roberts v. State, 60 S. E. 1082, 1085, 4 Ga. App. 207.

In Act Gen. Assem. March 26, 1909 (25 Del. Laws, c. 247), prohibiting disorderly conduct in public places, held that the term "public place" was not limited to places where people publicly congregated, but included all places not within a city or town which were not private. Lofland v. State (Del.) 83 Atl. 1033, 1034.

The phrase "public place," as used in the general prohibition law (Laws 1907, p. 81), forbidding the keeping or furnishing of intoxicating liquor at any public place, includes any place which from its public character members of the general public frequent, or where they may be expected to congregate at any time as a matter of common right, or a place at which, even though privately owned or controlled, a number of persons have assembled through common usage or by general or indiscriminate invitation, express or implied. It excludes those places which, though publicly owned, are devoted to a private use and are not open to the public; also those places privately owned or controlled from which the indiscriminate public is generally excluded, notwithstanding that at a particular time a number of persons may have congregated there, if the congregation is the result of special invitation for that occasion alone. Tooke v. State, 61 S. E. 917, 922, 4 Ga. App. 495.

The term "public place," as used in St. 1898, § 1130, providing for the posting of tax sale notices in at least four public places in the county, was used in its ordinary common sense to designate a place where the public resorts, so that the exposure of the document was likely to give notice. Bauchier v. Hammer, 123 N. W. 132, 134, 140 Wis. 648.

"Public places," as applied to the requirements of posting notices, in highway proceedings, at public places, are those places that afford the most publicity, without regard to the title of the owner of the property. Whittingham v. Hopkins, 54 Atl. 250, 69 N. J. Law, 189 (citing State v. Schanck, 9 N. J. Law, 107).

"A public place" under the express provision of Pen. Code 1895, art. 335, within the meaning of preceding articles, is any public road, street, or alley of a town or city or an inn, tavern, store, grocery, or workshop or place at which people are assembled or commonly resort for the purpose of business, amusement, or recreation or other lawful purpose. King v. Brown, 94 S. W. 328, 329, 100 Tex. 109.

As in view of public

On a prosecution for playing at a game of cards at a "public place," it was error to charge that, if the place was within 75 yards from a certain public road and could be seen therefrom, it was a "public place"; the question being whether the parties, who were playing, could be seen from the highway. Brannon v. State (Ala.) 39 South. 983.

Boarding house

A boarding house is not an inn and is not per se a "public place." Therefore, where a building had ceased to be used as a boarding house and was used as a private residence or lodging place at the time that certain games in question were played therein, it was not per se a public place within Code 1896, § 4792, prohibiting gaming at a public place. Winston v. State, 41 South. 174, 145 Ala. 91 (citing Foster v. State, 4 South. 833, 84 Ala. 51).

A boarding house is not per se a "public place," and, not being named as such in a statute punishing the use of obscene, vulgar, and indecent language in public places, an information charging the use of such language, "in a public place, to wit, in a boarding house," does not charge an offense, but the facts making it a public place must be alleged. Huffman v. State, 92 S. W. 419, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 319.

Rev. Codes, § 3396, providing that special assessments for municipal improvements shall be paid by the entire improvement district, each lot or parcel of land within the district to be assessed for that part of the whole cost which its area bears to the area of the district exclusive of the streets, alleys, and public places, does not exclude property, such as school property, devoted exclusively to the public use; for, under the principle of ejusdem generis, the words "public places" mean such public places as alleys and streets. City of Kalispell v. School Dist. No. 5 of Flathead County, 122 Pac. 742, 745, 45 Mont. 221, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1101.

That one who displayed a pistol in a road dedicated to public use owned the fee in the road did not prevent his conviction under Pen. Code 1895, art. 334, imposing a fine upon one who goes into or near a public place and rudely displays any pistol or deadly weapon in a manner calculated to disturb the inhabitants, and section 335, providing that a "public place," within the meaning of the preceding article, is any public road, street, or alley, etc., or place in which people are assembled. Jones v. State, 130 S. W. 1001, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 56.

A turnpike is a "public place" within P. L. 1906, p. 644, providing for taxation of franchises of street railway corporations occupying public places. A trolley line upon land which has been dedicated as a street, but which dedication has not been accepted by the public authorities, is not upon a "public place," within P. L. 1906, p. 644, providing for taxation of franchises of street railway corporations occupying public places. Atlantic & S. Ry. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 77 Atl. 609, 80 N. J. Law, 83.

Same—Street corner

Street corners are not necessarily "public places," within Rev. St. 1898, § 1130, which requires the county or city treasurer, four weeks prior to the sale of land for taxes, to post copies of a notice of sale and statement of the lands in at least four public places in such county. "It is a matter of common knowledge that a conspicuous place at many street corners in cities are comparatively obscure and secret places, and to post a notice of tax sale in a conspicuous place at such corners would most likely fail to attract observation and meet the public view." Shepherd v. Kahle, 97 N. W. 506, 507, 120 Wis. 57.

Jury room

A reply by accused to the district attorney, while testifying before a grand jury, "It is none of your damn business," etc., did not constitute swearing and cursing in a "public place." Morrison v. State, 118 S. W. 541, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 20.

Mill

A gristmill was a "public place" within St. 1834, c. 129, § 14, requiring that notices of school district meetings be posted on the district schoolhouse and one other public place within the limits of said district. Fletcher v. Inhabitants of Lincolnville, 20 Me. 439, 442.

Office

An office, which is used as a public office for the transaction of business with the general public and according to the custom of the business is kept open during business hours, such as an insurance office, cannot at the option of the proprietor be temporarily closed during business hours for the purpose of engaging in a game of cards and so cease to be a "public place" or house and become a private office. Gomprecht v. State, 37 S. W. 734, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 434, 436.

Private dwelling

Pen. Code 1895, art. 333, provides for the punishment of persons who fight together in a public place, and article 335 defines a "public place" as "any public road, street or alley of a town or city, or any inn, tavern, store, grocery or workshop, or place at which people are assembled, or to which people commonly resort for purposes of business, amusement, recreation or other lawful purpose." Held, that a private residence may become a "public place," within the statute, by throwing it open to the public generally for a single entertainment, and persons who engage in a fight during such entertainment may be prosecuted under the statute. Austin v. State, 124 S. W. 639, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 611.

A mere gathering of invited guests at an entertainment at a private residence would not make it a "public place," within the gaming laws. Where those who were at an entertainment at a private residence, where accused was claimed to have been drunk, were there by invitation of the owner, who had had only two such entertainments within eight months, the place was not a "public place," so as to sustain a conviction for being drunk in a public place. Pugh v. State, 117 S. W. 817, 818, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 462, 131 Am. St. Rep. 822.

Public library

The erection by a city on a square dedicated by it as "a public place forever for the enjoyment of the community in general," of a public library for the use of the same public, is not only not inconsistent with the purpose for which the park was dedicated, but is in aid and furtherance of its enjoyment by the public, but the building can be used for strictly library purposes only; so that, while rooms therein may be provided as a meeting place for the board of library directors, they cannot be provided for the board of education. Spire v. City of Los Angeles, 87 Pac. 1026, 1028, 150 Cal. 64, 11 Ann. Cas. 465.

Public park

The Condemnation Law (Laws 1890, p. 266, c. 95), prescribing the manner of proceeding in condemnation proceedings, and repealing prior acts in reference thereto, except such "acts * * * as prescribe a method of procedure for the condemnation of real property for public use as a highway or street, avenue or public place in an incorporated city," does not repeal the provisions of Laws 1888, p. 256, c. 193, authorizing the city of Rochester to acquire by condemnation land for public parks, which prescribe the method of procedure in such cases, a park being a "public place" within the meaning of the exception in the repealing clause. In re City of Rochester, 92 N. Y. Supp. 405, 408, 102 App. Div. 181.

Where a statute creating a public park declared that the tracts of land taken for park purposes should be "public places," an addition to the park afterwards made was also a public place, and hence an agreement of retainer whereby an attorney was engaged to take all lawful proceedings to obtain compensation for lands, etc., proposed to be taken for the opening of streets, avenues, and "public places," embraced proceedings to condemn land for an addition to the park. In re Robbins, 82 N. E. 501, 502, 189 N. Y. 422.

Room

The private operating room of a practicing dentist prima facie is not a public place of business, within the general prohibition law (Laws 1907, p. 81), making it unlawful to sell, etc., at any place of business, or keep at any other public place, intoxicants; the term "place of business" meaning a place where the public generally are expressly or impliedly invited for the purpose of transacting business with the owner, and the term "public place" including a place which for the time being is made public by the attending of people who go there with or without invitation and without restraint. Cantrell v. State, 70 S. E. 96, 97, 8 Ga. App. 725.

A private bedroom may become a "public place," within the gaming statute, prohibiting gaming at a public place, if it is open to different persons at different times indiscriminately, who may resort to it for gaming without special invitation from the owner. Thrasher v. State, 53 South. 256, 257, 168 Ala. 130.

Schoolhouse

A schoolhouse, where people are assembled for religious worship, is a "public place," within Pen. Code 1911, art. 204, punishing any person found in a state of intoxication in any public place. January v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 555, 557.

Store

On a trial for indecent exposure, where the exposure was made in the store of accused, in the presence of a 15 year old girl, and in the front part of the store there were plate glass windows about three feet above the sidewalk, and double doors made largely of glass opening from the store into the street, the store was as a matter of law a "public place." State v. Goldstein, 62 Atl. 1006, 1007, 72 N. J. Law, 336.

Tent

A tent into which any and all persons could come whenever they desired, and did come, without invitation or knocking, day or night, was a "public place," within the statute against gaming. Tatum v. State, 47 South. 339, 156 Ala. 144.

Tree

An elm tree near a schoolhouse in a county, previously designated as one of the "public places" for posting notices by a prior town meeting, and used for some time prior to the posting of the notice in question, and covered with notices, is a "public place" in the usual acceptance of the term. Lutgen v. Board of Com'rs of Stearns County, 110 N. W. 1, 99 Minn. 499.

Yard

A place in a private yard, completely shut out of view from the public highway, was not a "public place," within the law relating to gaming in public places. That the place at which a game of cards was played was in the yard of a boarding house, in the absence of evidence that any other game had ever been played there, did not make it a public one. Walker v. State, 41 South. 176, 147 Ala. 699 (citing Graham v. State, 16 South. 934, 105 Ala. 130; Foster v. State, 4 South. 833, 84 Ala. 451; 5 Mayfield's Dig. p. 481, § 23).

PUBLIC POLICY

"Public policy" means the public good, everything that tends clearly to undermine that sense of security for individual rights, whether of personal liberty or private property, which any citizen ought to feel, is against "public policy." Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 63 Atl. 70, 79, 102 Md. 608 (quoting Goodyear v. Brown, 26 Atl. 665, 155 Pa. 514, 20 L. R. A. 838, 35 Am. St. Rep. 903).

"Public policy," with respect to the administration of the law, is that rule of law which declares that no one can lawfully do that which tends to injure the public or is detrimental to the public good. Russell v. Courier Printing & Publishing Co., 95 Pac. 936, 938, 43 Colo. 321; Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc., Aged Women's & Aged Men's Homes, v. Pierce, 60 Atl. 277, 279, 100 Md. 520, 70 L. R. A. 485 (quoting and adopting the definition in Boston & A. R. Co. v. Mercantile Trust & Deposit Co., 34 Atl. 778, 785, 82 Md. 535).

"The very meaning of 'public policy' is the interest of others than the parties, and that interest is not to be at the mercy of the defendant alone." Beasley v. Texas & P. R. Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 164, 166, 191 U. S. 492, 498, 48 L. Ed. 274.

The "public policy" of the government is not limited to such matters as are universally considered as injurious to the public interests, but any acts reasonably tending to have that effect may be prohibited by statute, and thereupon they are against public policy. United States v. Musgrave, 160 Fed. 700, 702.

"Public policy" is a variable quality, but the principles to be applied have always remained unchanged and unchangeable, and public policy is one variable in so far as the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public have become varied and complex. Public policy often changes as the laws change, and therefore new applications of old principles are required. Whatever tends to injustice or oppression, restraint of liberty, restraint of legal right, whatever tends to the obstruction of justice, a violation of a statute, or the obstruction or perversion of the administration of the law as to executive, legislative, or other official action, whenever embodied in and made the subject of a contract, the contract is void as against public policy. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 83 S. W. 615, 617, 119 Ky. 261, 69 L. R. A. 264, 7 Ann. Cas. 913 (quoting and adopting definition in Brooks v. Cooper, 26 Atl. 978, 50 N. J. Eq. 761, 21 L. R. A. 617, 35 Am. St. Rep. 793).

"Public policy" is that principle of the law which holds that no subject or citizen can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public, or against the public good. Contracts are said to be against public policy when they tend to injure the state or the public. Lawson v. Cobban, 99 P. 128, 129, 38 Mont. 138.

"Public policy" is a vague expression. Story in his work on Contracts says: "It has never been defined by the courts, but has been left free of definition in the same manner as fraud. It may be safely said, however, that wherever any contract conflicts with the morals of the times and contravenes any established interests of society, it is void as being against 'public policy.'" McGuffin v. Coyles & Guss, 85 Pac. 954, 961, 16 Okl. 648, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524 (quoting and adopting definition in Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177). See, also, Victor v. Louise Cotton Mills, 61 S. E. 648, 651, 148 N. C. 107, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020, 16 Ann. Cas. 291; Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 83 S. W. 615, 617, 119 Ky. 261, 6 L. R. A. 264, 7 Ann. Cas. 913; Wenninger v. Mitchell, 122 S. W. 1130, 1133, 139 Mo. App. 420.

"Public policy" is in its nature so uncertain and fluctuating, varying with the habits and fashions of the day, with the growth of commerce and the usages of trade, that it is difficult to determine its limits with any degree of exactness. It has never been defined by the courts, but has been left loose and free of definition in the same manner as fraud. This rule may, however, be safely laid down: That whenever any contract conflicts with the morals of the time, and contravenes any established interest of society, it is void as being against "public policy." In a contract whereby attorneys were to receive in compensation for services in litigation for the recovery of land one-half the land, a provision whereby the client agreed not to compromise without the consent of her attorneys was not void as contrary to "public policy." Lipscomb v. Adams, 91 S. W. 1046, 1048, 193 Mo. 530, 112 Am. St. Rep. 500 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Cont. § 546).

"There is no precise definition of 'public policy,' and consequently no absolute rule by which a contract can be measured or tested to determine whether or not it is contrary to public policy. Each case, as it arises, must be judged and determined according to its own peculiar circumstances.

The policy of the state or of the nation is to be found in its constitution and its statutes, and, when cases arise concerning matters upon which they are silent, then in its judicial decisions and the constant practice of the government officials courts will not look to other sources to determine the public policy of a state." A contract binding a physician to furnish medical attention to a patient for life for a specified consideration is not void as contrary to public policy as furnishing an incentive to the commission of crime. Zelgler v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 91 N. E. 1041, 1045, 245 Ill. 180, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112, 19 Ann. Cas. 127.

That "public policy" which will render a contract mala in se for its opposition thereto embraces all acts or contracts which tend clearly to endanger the public health, the public morals, confidence in the purity or the administration of the law, or to undermine that sense of security for individual rights, whether of personal liberty or private property, which every citizen has a right to feel. A contract between a layman and a lawyer, by which the former undertakes and agrees, in consideration of a division of the fees received by the latter, to hunt up and bring to the attorney persons having causes of action against railroad companies for personal injuries, is contrary to public policy and void. Holland v. Sheehan, 122 N. W. 1, 2, 3, 108 Minn. 362, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510, 17 Ann. Cas. 687.

"Lord Brougham defined 'public policy' as that principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good, which may be termed the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law." Lord Chief Justice Wilmot said: "It is the duty of all courts of justice to keep their eye steadily upon the interests of the public, even in the administration of commutative justice, and when they find an action is founded upon a claim injurious to the public, and which has a bad tendency, to give it no countenance or assistance in foro civili." Thus, where plaintiff contracted with defendants to procure legislative action for the sole purpose of depreciating the market value of the securities of a certain corporation, with a provision that any profit arising from speculating in such securities by selling them short and covering at an anticipated decline should be divided between the parties, such contract is void as against public policy. Veazey v. Allen, 86 N. E. 103, 105, 173 N. Y. 359, 62 L. R. A. 362.

A contract is not void as against public policy unless it is injurious to the interests of the public, or contravenes some established interest of society, and the public policy of a state or nation should be determined by its Constitution, laws, and judicial proceedings, and courts should hold themselves bound to the observance of extreme caution when called upon to declare a transaction void on the ground of public policy and prejudice to the public interest. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 45 South. 761, 785, 788, 54 Fla. 311. See, also, Warren v. Bouvier, 124 N. Y. Supp. 641, 644, 68 Misc. Rep. 159.

"Public policy" * * * is an uncertain, indefinite term, and when judges come to apply the doctrine they must take care that they do not trespass upon the right to make contracts as parties see proper, so long as they do not violate some principle or policy of law." A contract executed on entrance into an old men's home, whereby any property which the inmate may receive in the future is to become the property of the home, is unenforceable, as against "public policy." Baltimore Humane Impartial Soc. & Aged Women's & Aged Men's Homes v. Pierce, 60 Atl. 277, 279, 100 Md. 520, 70 L. R. A. 485.

The public policy of this state is necessarily confined to the regulation of its own affairs and transactions occurring within its sovereignty. No state can be said to have a public policy as to the administration of justice, or as to the service of quasi public agencies, or as to contracts made with respect thereto, transpiring wholly abroad. The public policy of a state can no more have extraterritorial effect than can a statute of the state. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Druien, 80 S. W. 778, 780, 118 Ky. 237, 66 L. R. A. 275, 4 Ann. Cas. 1102.

As governed by Constitution, laws, or judicial decisions

By "public policy" is intended the policy of the state, as evidenced by its Constitution and statutes, and the provisions of the common law as evidenced by the decisions of its courts. Glover v. Baker, 83 Atl. 916, 932, 76 N. H. 393.

"The 'public policy' of the government is to be found in the Constitution and the laws, and the course of administration and decision." St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. v. Montana Min. Co., 19 Sup. Ct. 61, 63, 171 U. S. 650, 655, 43 L. Ed. 320.

"It must not be forgotten that the right of private contract is no small part of the liberty of the citizen, and that the usual and most important function of courts of justice is rather to maintain and enforce contracts, than to enable parties thereto to escape from their obligation on the pretext of 'public policy,' unless it clearly appear that they contravene public right or the public welfare." Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 387, 176 U. S. 498, 505, 44 L. Ed. 560.

The "public policy" of the state is to be determined in large measure from its Constitution, legislation, judicial decisions, and the practice of the executive department, and, when the Legislature has acted on a subject on which it has power to legislate, public policy is what the statute indicates. People ex rel. Healy v. Shedd, 89 N. E. 332, 334, 241 Ill. 155; Moorshead v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 96 S. W. 261, 271, 203 Mo. 121.

The "public policy" of a state is to be found in its statutes, and, when they have not directly spoken, then in the decisions of the courts and in the constant practice of government officials. Perry v. United States School Furniture Co., 83 N. E. 444, 447, 232 Ill. 101 (quoting Harding v. American Glucose Co., 55 N. E. 577, 599, 182 Ill. 551, 616, 64 L. R. A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189).

"The 'public policy' of the nation or state must be determined by its Constitution, laws, and judicial decisions." Southern Ry. Co. v. Blunt & Ward, 155 Fed. 496, 497 (citing U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 58 Fed. 69, 7 C. C. A. 15, 24 L. R. A. 73; Swann v. Swann, 21 Fed. 299; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 70 Fed. 201, 17 C. C. A. 62, 30 L. R. A. 193; s. c., 20 Sup. Ct. 33, 175 U. S. 91, 44 L. Ed. 84).

"Public Policy" is that principle or policy of the law which prevents one from doing that which is injurious to the public or against the public good, and is a question of law, and not of fact, the public interest, and not the interest of individuals alone, being considered in determining what is public policy, and when the question is not controlled by the federal Constitution or laws, or by general principle of law, it is determined by the Constitution and statutes of the several states or the declarations of their highest courts. McClanahan v. Breeding, 88 N. E. 695, 697, 172 Ind. 457.

"Public policy" on a given subject is determined either by the Constitution itself or by statutes passed within constitutional limitations, and in the absence of such constitutional or statutory determination by decisions of the courts; and hence a constitutional statute cannot be contrary to public policy, since it is public policy. Borgnis v. Falk Co., 133 N. W. 209, 216, 147 Wis. 327, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489.

"By 'public policy' is intended the policy of the state as evidenced by its laws. When the issue is its policy in respect to any question, the only matters which can be considered are its Constitution and statutes and the provisions of the common law as evidenced by the decisions of the courts, for the common law, modified by the Constitution and the statutes of the state, is the law of the state." Spead v. Tomlinson, 59 Atl.

376, 397, 73 N. H. 46, 68 L. R. A. 432 (citing Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 127, 197, 11 L. Ed. 205; People v. Hawkins, 51 N. E. 257, 157 N. Y. 1, 12, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736; Consumers' Oil Co. v. Nunnemaker, 41 N. E. 1048, 142 Ind. 564, 51 Am. St. Rep. 193, 196).

The "public policy" of a state which renders contracts void is found in its statutes and in the decisions of its courts and in the constant practice of government officials; but the court may not declare a contract void as contrary to public policy, except in cases free from doubt, since contracts between parties capable of contracting are presumptively legal and enforceable unless the contract itself discloses its illegality. Burley Tobacco Society v. Gillaspay (Ind.) 100 N. E. 89, 92.

The term "public policy" is not limited to matters which are expressly forbidden by statute for reasons of public policy, but extends to matters, though not expressly stated, which are within the reason declared by the statute. People v. Collins, 99 Pac. 1109, 1110, 9 Cal. App. 622.

The "public policy" of New Jersey is the creature not of the courts but of the legislature; the courts have nothing to do with forming it, and can only recognize it like any other matter of public law. Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co., 71 Atl. 153, 174, 74 N. J. Eq. 457.

A statute not repugnant to the Constitution cannot be held void by the courts as contrary to "public policy." What is and what is not "public policy" must be determined by the written and the unwritten law, giving precedence to the former where the two are in conflict. While contracts may be void as being contrary to the policy of the law, statutes are never said to be contrary to "public policy" in any other sense than contrary to constitutional policy. As was said by Baron Parke, in Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 122, 123: "It is the province of the statesman and not of the lawyer to discuss, and of the Legislature to determine, what is best for the public good, and to provide for it by proper enactments. It is the province of the judge to expound the law, to declare public policy as he finds it in the unwritten and written law. Public policy is a proper ground for a decision only in the sense of the policy of the law, not in the sense of mere judicial notions as to what is best for the public good. An act [speaking of an act inter partes] is properly said to be illegal when it is contrary to the principles of established law." Julien v. Model Building, Loan & Invest. Co., 92 N. W. 561, 565, 116 Wis. 79, 61 L. R. A. 668.

The "public policy" of a state varies from time to time, and is not to be measured by the private convictions or notions of the individual judge, but by referring to legislative enactments and, in their absence, to the decisions of the courts. Picket Pub. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Carbon County, 92 Pac. 524, 525, 36 Mont. 188, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 122 Am. St. Rep. 352, 12 Ann. Cas. 986.

The "public policy" of a state is to be gathered from its public history, the trend of its laws, and the conduct and practice of its public officials, in the administration of its laws and the transaction of its public business. Pike v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 113 Pac. 447, 453, 19 Idaho, 268, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1344.

The public policy the court is concerned with in determining whether a contract is void is that evidenced by the Constitution, the statutes, or definite principles of customary law, developed by the course of judicial decision, and the court should not declare a contract void on such a ground, except in a case free from doubt. Couch v. Hutchinson, 57 South. 75, 76, 2 Ala. App. 444.

The "public policy" of a state is the law of that state as found in its Constitution, its statutory enactments, and its judicial records. And when such policy, touching a particular subject, has been declared by statute, it is limited by such statute, and the courts have no authority to say that the Legislature should have made it of wider application. Thus where the Legislature has provided, in plain and peremptory language, that a husband shall inherit from his deceased wife, the court, on the ground of public policy, cannot disinherit him because he feloniously killed his wife to acquire her property. McAllister v. Fair, 84 Pac. 112, 114, 72 Kan. 533, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973.

A provision in a life policy to the effect that no suit shall be maintained thereon, unless begun within one year from the death of the insured, is void, as in contravention of "public policy"; the statute prescribing a period of 15 years for actions on such contracts. The "public policy" of the state means the law of the state, whether found in the Constitution or statutes, or the judicial records. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 83 S. W. 615, 617, 119 Ky. 261, 69 L. R. A. 264, 7 Ann. Cas. 913 (quoting People v. Hawkins, 51 N. E. 257, 157 N. Y. 12, 42 L. R. A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736).

The courts must look to the Constitution and the statutes to determine the public policy of the state on a given subject, hence the words "public policy," as used in section 1 of the Anti-Trust Act of June 10, 1908 (Laws 1907-08, c. 83, art. 1), are interpreted to mean the law of the state whether found in the Constitution or the statutes. A constitutional statute cannot be contrary to public policy, since it is public policy. State v. Coyle, 122 Pac. 243, 254, 7 Okl. Cr. 50.

The "public policy" of the government is to be found in its statutes, and, when they have not directly spoken, then in the decisions of the courts and the constant practice of the government officials; but, when the lawmaking power speaks upon a particular subject over which it has constitutional power to legislate, "public policy" in such a case is what the statute enacts. If the law prohibit any contract or combination in restraint of trade or commerce, a contract or combination made in violation of such law is void, whatever may have been theretofore decided by the courts to have been the "public policy" of the country on that subject. Logan & Bryan v. Postal Telegraph & Cable Co., 157 Fed. 570, 587 (quoting and adopting the definition in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 166 U. S. 290, 340, 41 L. Ed. 1007).

Acts 1904, p. 870, c. 508, providing for the holding of primary elections and requiring the candidates to pay a fee, to be used in defraying the expenses of holding the election, is not void as contrary to public policy, because public policy, without having its foundation in the Constitution, cannot restrain the legislative authority of the General Assembly. Kenneweg v. Alleghany County Com'rs, 62 Atl. 249, 251, 102 Md. 119.

PUBLIC POWER

The powers delegated to a municipal corporation by the Legislature, authorizing it to regulate wharves, and to charge and collect wharfage for their use, are "public or legislative powers" and incapable of delegation or of surrender by the municipality. A municipality cannot therefore surrender the powers by leasing the exclusive use and control of its wharves for any period of time, without express statutory authority so to do. Oliver v. Inhabitants of City of Burlington, 67 Atl. 43, 75 N. J. Law, 227.

Municipalities have two classes of powers, the one political, public, in exercise of which they govern their people and act as delegates of the state, the other private, in exercise of which they act for advantage of their inhabitants and themselves. City of Winona v. Botzet, 169 Fed. 321, 322, 94 C. C. A. 563, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 204.

PUBLIC PROPERTY

"Public property" may be defined as that which is dedicated to the public use and over which the state exercises control and dominion. Hartman v. Tresise, 84 Pac. 685, 690, 36 Colo. 146, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

"Public property" is what belongs to the government—federal, state, or municipal. State ex rel. Louisiana Imp. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 36 South. 91, 97, 111 La. 982.

The words "public property," as used in Pol. Code 1895, § 762, which exempts from taxation all public property, includes a building and a stock of liquors owned by a municipal corporation and operated by it as a dispensary; and this is so though the town had no legal authority to maintain and operate a dispensary. Walden v. Town of Whigham, 48 S. E. 159, 120 Ga. 646.

The phrase "public property used for public purposes," as used in a constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to exempt public property used for public purposes from taxation, authorizes the exemption of property owned by a city necessary to the exercise of governmental duties; but not property held and used by a city for mere money-making purposes, or for the comfort of its citizens. Bonds of a lighting company given to the city in consideration for the sale of its lighting plant to the company, the income of which is used by the city for the lighting of its streets, are not such public property. Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1008, 1009.

Roads and bridges do not constitute "public property" owned by the county within the meaning of a statute providing for the adjustment of liabilities on division. The cost and not the actual value of the public property remaining in original county must be accounted for without taking into consideration any depreciation or appreciation in the value of such property. The record books remaining in the various county offices of the original county are "public property" owned by it, and the cost thereof is properly debited to such county. State v. Amundson, 135 N. W. 1117, 1118, 1119, 23 N. D. 238.

Clothing furnished to a soldier by the United States under a clothing allowance does not become his private property which he has a right to dispose of while in the service, but is "public property" within section 35 of the Penal Code (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321, 35 Stat. 1095), which makes it a criminal offense to knowingly purchase or receive in pledge from any soldier "any arms, equipments, ammunition, clothes, military stores, or other public property, whether furnished to the soldier * * * under a clothing allowance or otherwise, such soldier * * * not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same." Ontai v. United States, 188 Fed. 310, 311, 110 C. C. A. 288.

A levee constructed by the trustees of a reclamation district on a right of way procured for that purpose is a part of the works which the trustees of the district are authorized to take materials for and construct for the purpose of reclaiming and keeping reclaimed the land within the district, under Pol. Code, § 3454, and is "public property acquired by the agents of the state for state purposes." Reclamation Dist. No. 551 v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, 90 Pac. 545, 546, 151 Cal. 263.

A city waterworks system is of a governmental and public nature, and is exempt from taxation under Const. § 170, providing that there shall be exempt from taxation "public property" used for public purposes. Commonwealth v. City of Covington, 107 S. W. 231, 128 Ky. 36, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1214. See, also, Bell v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 106 S. W. 862.

PUBLIC PROSECUTION

Const. art. 4, § 1, created the office of Attorney General requiring him to perform such duties as should be prescribed by the Constitution and by law, and by Rev. St. 1908, § 6168, he was required to appear for the state, prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal, in which the state should be a party or interested, when required to do so by the Governor or General Assembly. By Laws 1891, pp. 240-242, the courts were invested with the same power and jurisdiction to try prosecutions on information as they had been authorized to do by indictment, section 2 providing that all informations should be filed in term time in the court having jurisdiction of the offense by the district attorney of the proper county as informant, and his name should be subscribed thereto either by himself or by his deputy. Section 4 prescribed a form of information in which the district attorney appeared as the charging officer, and section 5 declares that all provisions of law applicable to prosecutions on indictments, to writs and process therein, and the issuing of service thereof, to motions, pleadings, trials, and punishments, or to the passing or execution of any sentence, and to all proceedings in cases of indictment, whether in court of original or appellate jurisdiction, shall apply to informations and to all prosecutions and proceedings thereon. Held, that the words "district attorney," as used in such act, should be construed as synonymous with "public prosecutor," and hence the Attorney General has authority to charge by information in the name of the people the commission of a felony and to prosecute the proceedings in the district court. People v. Gibson, 125 Pac. 531, 535, 53 Colo. 231.

PUBLIC PURPOSE

The phrase "used for public purposes," in a constitutional provision empowering the Legislature to exempt public property used for public purposes from taxation, means the same as the words "used for governmental purposes." Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 1008, 1009.

Where nonnegotiable bonds, acquired by a city as a part of the consideration for the sale of a gas plant, are held by the city solely for the purpose of devoting the income to paying the expenses of lighting the streets, they are used for "public purposes," within Const. §§ 170, 171, providing that public property used for "public purposes" shall be exempt from taxation and that taxes shall be levied and collected for "public purposes." Board of Councilmen of City of Frankfort v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 94 S. W. 648, 650.

A statute, enacted for the declared purpose of promoting the public welfare by a gratuity of $125 to each veteran of the Civil War, to be paid to every person not a conscript or a substitute, and who has not received a bounty from the commonwealth, or any city or town therein, who served in the army or navy to the credit of the commonwealth, and who was honorably discharged from such service, with the declared intention that the gift shall not be a bounty or payment for services rendered, but a testimonial for meritorious service, is within the taxing power of the Legislature, as the appropriation of money for a "public purpose." In re Opinion of the Justices, 98 N. E. 338, 339, 211 Mass. 608.

A tax levied by the Legislature is for a public purpose, so as to render it constitutional, where it is for the support of government, or for any of the recognized objects of government, or if its proceeds will directly promote the welfare of the community in equal measure. Beach v. Bradstreet, 82 Atl. 1030, 1032, 85 Conn. 344, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 946.

The issuance of county bonds to aid in the establishment of a training school for teachers in accordance with the provisions of chapter 820, p. 1165, Acts 1907, and carried out by Acts 1907, p. 733, c. 493, is for a "public purpose," and not violative of the Constitution, as not within the scope and purpose of a municipal corporation. Cox v. Commissioners of Pitt County, 60 S. E. 516, 517, 146 N. C. 584, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 253.

Tax levied to raise a fund to provide industrial insurance and benefits to injured employes engaged in the extrahazardous occupation of coal mining is for a "public purpose," notwithstanding the act operates to the direct benefit of the injured employe or his dependents, and not directly to the public generally. Cunningham v. Northwestern Imp. Co., 119 Pac. 554, 562, 44 Mont. 180.

Under Const. pt. 2, c. 1, § 1, art. 4, providing that the taxes imposed by the general court are to be disposed of for the public service in the defense of the government of the commonwealth and the protection of its subjects, and chapter 2, § 1, arts. 7, 10, and articles 4, 5, of the amendments, providing for the control and organization of the mi-militia, and in view of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, giving Congress power to raise money to maintain the militia, the maintenance of the militia is a "public purpose," for which taxes may be imposed. Hodgdon v. City of Haverhill, 79 N. E. 830, 831, 193 Mass. 406 (citing City of Lowell v. Oliver, 8 Allen [90 Mass.] 247).

The appropriation under the act of February 20, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 33, c. 7), of $15,000 annually to a private corporation organized under the laws of the state for purely charitable purposes, and conducted solely to seek out destitute children and provide for them homes, and where they will be under supervision of the institution during their minority, is for a "public purpose," within Const. § 171, providing that taxes shall be levied for public purposes only. Hager v. Kentucky Children's Home Soc., 83 S. W. 605, 607, 119 Ky. 235, 67 L. R. A. 815.

Under the revised tax law of 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 395, § 3, par. 2), which exempts "the property of the United States and of the state of New Jersey, and of the respective counties, school districts and taxing districts when used for 'public purposes,'" property used by a city for the purpose of maintaining and operating a public water supply system established under statutory authority is exempt from taxation. Perth Amboy v. Barker, 65 Atl. 201, 202, 74 N. J. Law, 127.

Where the rents received by a city for its wharf property leased to various persons for operation of such business establishments as receive materials and ship manufactured products by boat are turned into the sinking fund for payment of interest and principal of the bonded indebtedness, after policing, lighting, and repairing the property, the property is used for public purposes within Const. § 170. Commonwealth v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 119 S. W. 161.

A strip of land owned, though never used, by a railroad company, but leased by it to, and occupied by the loading platforms of, a mill company, is not devoted to a "public purpose," so as to be exempt from condemnation for the track of another railroad company, though it adds to the convenience of the mill company in loading its products on the cars of the railroad company owning the strip when switched onto the track of the mill company; it being the use to which the property is applied, and not its ownership, which marks the use as public or private, and the test of whether the use is public being whether the property is impressed with a trust in favor of the public, so that its use is not of grace, but of right, which cannot be defeated at the owner's will. State ex rel. Milwaukee Terminal R. Co. v. Superior Court for King County, 103 Pac. 469, 473, 54 Wash. 365.

PUBLIC QUASI CORPORATION

See, also, Quasi Public Corporation.

"'Public quasi corporations' are defined as subdivisions of the state's territory, such as counties, townships, school districts and the like, which are created by the Legislature for public purposes and without regard to the wishes of the inhabitants." They are, in essence, local branches of the state government, though clothed in a corporate form in order that they may better perform the duties imposed upon them. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 527, 141 N. C. 143, 8 Ann. Cas. 529 (quoting and adopting Abbott on Municipal Corporations, § 8; and citing and adopting Smith, Mod. Law Mun. Corp. §§ 8, 9; Beach, Pub. Corp. § 3; Dillon, Mun. Corp. §§ 23, 24, 25).

PUBLIC RECORD

As property, see Property.

See, also, Public Document.

A "public record" is one required by law to be kept, or necessary to be kept in the discharge of a duty imposed by law, or directed by law to serve as a memorial and evidence of something written, said, or done. Robison v. Fishback, 93 N. E. 666, 669, 175 Ind. 132, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1271.

A record of a hospital made by a junior assistant surgeon, connected with the hospital, showing that at a time specified therein a doctor removed to the hospital a person whose name and address were entered in the record, is not a "public record" kept by a public officer in the discharge of his duties. Kemp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 88 N. Y. Supp. 1, 2, 94 App. Div. 322.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 9590, provides that the advisory board of a township shall keep a record of its proceedings in a separate book to be furnished by the township trustee, and kept as a part of the records of the township, and remain in the custody of the chairman of the board; that the board shall elect one of its members secretary, who shall record the proceedings thereof at any meeting in full, under the direction of the board, which shall be signed before the board adjourns. Held, that the record of such board is a public record in which the proceedings of the board are required to be fully recorded, and is open to inspection to all persons doing business with the township. First Nat. Bank of Loogootee v. Van Buren School Tp. of Daviess County, 93 N. E. 863, 865, 47 Ind. App. 79.

The charter of the city and county of San Francisco, which requires the treasurer to keep the account belonging to each fund separate, and which requires the bond and warrant clerk of the police court to account for and pay to the treasurer all moneys received as bail, requires the treasurer to re-celve, and, on proper order pay out, ball money, and he must keep a separate and distinct account of such receipts and disbursements, and, where the accounts are kept in a ledger, the ledger is a "public record" within Pen. Code, §§ 113, 114, and falsification of an entry in the ledger is an offense under the statute. People v. Tomalty, 111 Pac. 513, 516, 14 Cal. App. 224.

A mechanics' lien claim sufficiently signed to entitle it to be filed, and filed, is admissible in evidence as a "public record" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1894. D. I. Nofziger Lumber Co. v. Solomon, 110 Pac. 474, 476, 13 Cal. App. 621.

Where a statute requiring pawnbrokers to furnish weekly records of their transactions makes no provision for the filing of the records, such records are not papers received for filing within the general statute providing that "public records" shall mean any paper, etc., which any officer or employé of a city, etc., has received or is required to receive for filing. Round v. Police Com'r for City of Boston, 83 N. E. 412, 197 Mass. 218.

There being no statute requiring a county treasurer to keep a record of certificates of redemption of land from tax sales, such records, kept by the treasurer at his own volition, though at public expense, were not "public records," open to inspection of the public as a matter of right. State ex rel. Cook v. Reed, 79 Pac. 306, 307, 36 Wash. 638.

Rev. Laws, c. 35, § 5, providing that, in construing the provisions of that chapter and other statutes, the words "public records" shall mean any written or printed book, any map or plan of any city, etc., does not make the documents therein described public documents, and a note book in the office of the city engineer of a city, made by an assistant in the office, and showing the placing of a stone fixing the center of a street, is not a public document, and is not admissible in evidence as a public document. Allen v. Kidd, 84 N. E. 122, 123, 197 Mass. 256.

PUBLIC RESORT

See, also, Public Place.

A private house may become a "place of public resort" when frequented by many persons under suspicious circumstances. State v. Pratt, 34 Vt. 323, 325.

Where intoxicating liquors are kept in a dwelling house and sales are made therein, it may properly be regarded as a shop or place of public resort within Laws 1907, p. 363, c. 173, § 8, providing that no warrant shall be issued to search a private residence occupied as such unless it or some part of it is used as a store, shop, hotel, or boarding house, or unless such residence is a place of public resort. State v. Madison, 122 N. W. 647, 650, 23 S. D. 584.

PUBLIC REVENUE

As revenue, see Revenue.

PUBLIC ROAD

See Traveled Public Road.

The test as to whether or not a road is a public road is not simply how many people actually use it, but how many may have a free and unrestricted right in common to use it. If it is free and common to all citizens, then, no matter whether it is or is not of great length, or whether it leads to or from a village, city, or hamlet, or whether it is much or little used, it is a "public road." Heninger v. Peery, 47 S. E. 1013, 1014, 102 Va. 896 (quoting Elliott, Roads & S. §§ 11, 192).

The term "public highway," as used in Acts 1905, p. 114, forbidding appearance on the "public road" in an intoxicated condition, is not synonymous with "public road." Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

A road used, worked, and occupied as a public road by a county court is a "public road," within Code 1906, c. 43, §§ 31, 53. Burke v. Jackson County Court, 73 S. E. 304, 305, 70 W. Va. 174.

A "public road" within the meaning of the blow post law is a thoroughfare which is used by the public as a matter of right, or a highway having its origin in a legislative act, or ordered by court, or existing by dedication or prescription. Southern Ry. Co. v. Combs, 53 S. E. 508, 511, 124 Ga. 1004.

"Public road," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2222, requiring railroads to blow the whistle and reduce speed after reaching a point 400 yards from a public road crossing, is not confined to a road laid out and established by county authorities by regular proceedings, but includes as well highways which came into existence by legislative action, by proceedings of the county authorities, by dedication, or by prescription. McCoy v. Central of Ga. Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 297, 298, 131 Ga. 378.

Proof that a road was commonly and largely used by the general public for a number of years, without more, will not support an allegation that it was a "public" highway or a "public" road. Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 267, 1 Ga. App. 195.

The term "public roads" is commonly understood and recognized to apply exclusively to rural highways, and not to that portion of a highway lying within the limits of a city or village. As used in a statute providing that, in counties under township organization, the expense of building, maintaining, and repairing bridges on public roads over streams shall be borne exclusively by the counties within which such bridges are located, the term "public roads" has such meaning. Central City v. Marquis, 106 N. W. 221, 222, 75 Neb. 233 (citing Nebraska Tel. Co. v. Western Independent Long Distance Tel. Co., 68 Neb. 772, 95 N. W. 18).

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 851, as amended by Sess. Laws 1893, p. 12, defining roads to be roads laid out and recorded by order of the county commissioners and roads used for five years, provided the latter shall have been worked and kept up at public expense or located and recorded by order of the county commissioners, roads used for five years that have been worked and kept up at public expense are public roads, whether recorded or not. Meservey v. Gulliford, 93 Pac. 780, 782, 14 Idaho, 133.

Public bridge

A public bridge is a part of the "public road" on which it is located. Pickens County v. Greene County, 54 South. 998, 999, 171 Ala. 377.

Street or alley

Drainage Act May 29, 1879, § 55, authorizing the assessment of benefits for drains against "any public or corporate road or railroad," and apportioning to the county, state or free turnpike road, to the township, if a township road, to the company, if a corporate road or railroad, such portions of the "cost" thereof as to individuals, and providing that, in case such assessment is made in any "township," the commissioners of highways shall cause the same to be levied in the manner provided by Act June 23, 1883, §§ 13, 14, 15, 16, does not confer on a drainage district the power to assess benefits to public streets without the consent of the city. City of Joliet v. Spring Creek Drainage Dist., 78 N. E. 836, 843, 222 Ill. 441.

Const. art. 7, § 28, grants to the county courts the exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters relating to roads and the disbursement of moneys for county purposes, and in other cases necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the county; and Const. Amend. 5, adopted January 13, 1899, gives the county court power to levy a road tax of not exceeding three mills, if the majority of the qualified electors of the county shall have voted therefor at a general election preceding such levy, but makes no provision who shall receive or expend the amount collected, except that it shall be used in the respective counties only to make and repair public roads. Const. art. 12, § 3, empowers the Legislature to pass laws for the organization of towns and cities, and Kirby's Dig. § 5458, grants to municipal councils the power to lay out, improve, and repair streets within their corporate limits. Act approved May 30, 1911 (Sp. & Priv. Acts 1911, p. 1003), requires two-fifths of the road tax collected on property within the city of Texarkana to be used on roads and bridges outside of the city limits according to discretion of the county judge, and the remaining three-fifths to be used exclusively for streets and highways within the city limits, and that the collector of Miller county pay three-fifths of such fund to the city treasury, and section 2 of the act extends its provisions to the tax collected in such city for 1910. Held, in an action to compel the collector to pay into the city treasury three-fifths of the road tax collected for 1910 on the property within the city, that the streets of the city were "public roads of the county" of which the city was a component part, although "streets" did not include roads, and that, in view of the powers of towns and cities, the act apportioning the road tax between the city and the county was not in conflict with the grant of exclusive original jurisdiction to county courts in all matters relating to roads. Sanderson v. City of Texarkana, 146 S. W. 105, 107, 103 Ark. 529.

Turnpike

2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 2202, § 12, authorizes water companies created thereunder to lay their pipes beneath such public streets, roads, etc., as they deem necessary, free of charge by any person or municipality, provided they do not unnecessarily interfere with public travel, etc., and that the consent of the corporate authorities of any town through which the pipes shall be laid, be obtained. Held, that a turnpike road which was established upon an ancient public highway, which was delivered to the turnpike company for maintenance and control under the toll system, was a "public road," within section 12. Gloucester Turnpike Co. v. American Pipe Co., 78 Atl. 708, 709, 77 N. J. Eq. 471.

PUBLIC SALE

A "public sale" is a sale in pursuance of a notice, by auction or public outcry. Robins v. Bellas (Pa.) 4 Watts, 255, 258.

There is a "public sale" in bankruptcy where all persons are permitted to bid, where bids are not held open, except with the bidder's consent, and where notice inviting bids is publicly given. In re Nevada-Utah Mines & Smelters Corporation, 198 Fed. 497, 498.

PUBLIC SALE OR USE (In Patent Law)

PUBLIC SCHOOL

See Free Public School.

As place of worship, see Place of Worship.

The schools referred to in Rev. Laws, c. 42, §§ 1, 2, requiring cities and towns to maintain certain schools, are open under proper regulations to all children of the city or town, as provided by chapter 44, § 8; and all children between the ages of 7 and 14 are obliged to attend such schools, unless they receive equivalent instruction outside of them, as provided by chapter 44, §§ 1, 2. Held, that Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, providing that street railway companies shall transport pupils of the "public schools" at half fare, while traveling to and from the school-houses in which they attend school, referred to those schools mentioned in chapter 42, §§ 1, 2, which are a part of the system of compulsory education for children, and did not include other schools maintained at public expense, such as industrial schools, nautical schools, evening schools, etc., authorized by sections 10, 11, 12, 15, and 16. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. Ry. Co., 82 N. E. 19, 20, 196 Mass. 309.

The term "public schools," as used in Const. art. 3, § 25, as amended under the joint resolution proposed by the Legislature in 1899, and adopted at the general election in 1900, authorizing special legislation as to a university or the public schools, could not be construed to mean the public free schools, as used in Const. art. 12, § 1, but must be held to refer to the other public institutions of learning existing in the state at the time of the adoption of the joint resolution proposing such amendment. State ex rel. Moodle v. Bryan, 39 South. 929, 958, 50 Fla. 293 (citing Cooke v. School Dist. No. 12, 21 Pac. 496, 719, 12 Colo. 453, 456; St. Joseph's Church v. Assessors of Taxes of Providence, 12 R. I. 19, 34 Am. Rep. 597; Merrick v. Inhabitants of Amherst, 12 Allen [94 Mass.] 500, text 508; Jenkins v. Inhabitants of Andover, 103 Mass. 94, 97; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608, 616; People v. Crissey, 45 Hun [N. Y.] 19, 21; Collins v. Henderson, 11 Bush [74 Ky.] 74, text 82 et seq.; Roach v. Board of President and Directors of the St. Louis Public Schools, 77 Mo. 484, 487).

The Corporation Commission ordered: "That the defendant (appellant), the Oklahoma Railway Company, furnish to children under the age of fifteen years, going to or from St. Joseph's Parochial School, as pupils therein, tickets at the rate of two and one-half cents each in quantities of twenty tickets at one time. Such tickets to be used only in going to and returning from said school, to be honored for continuous passage and transfer on connecting lines over any other tracks of said defendant within the corporate limits of Oklahoma City. That such book of tickets shall not be limited to use on any particular day, but may be used any day on which the school may be in session." Section 7 of the ordinance granting the franchise under which the appellant operates its line of street railway provides: "Tickets for the use of school children shall be furnished good for one continuous passage, in quantities of not less than twenty rides at the rate of two and one-half cents each, under any reasonable regulations which the company may impose to prevent the abuse of such privilege or the use of such tickets by others than children under fifteen years of age in actual attendance on the public schools of said city." Held, that "public schools of said city" include the public schools of said city whether maintained by the public by taxation or by private agencies for the public by private benevolence. Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. St. Joseph's Parochial School, 127 Pac. 1087-1089, 33 Okl. 755.

Evening school

Under Const. art. 9, § 6, providing that the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools and such high schools, evening schools, commercial schools, and technical schools as may be established by the Legislature or by municipal or district authority, the words "evening school" were merely intended to obviate doubt as to the power to provide for schools holding evening sessions, so that the section did not prevent the conduct of an evening high school as a part of the "public school system." Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco v. Hyatt, 93 Pac. 117, 118, 152 Cal. 515.

High school

High schools may be properly included within the term "public schools." Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco v. Hyatt, 93 Pac. 117, 119, 152 Cal. 515.

University

The term "public schools," as used in Const. art. 13, § 5, providing that the supervision of instruction in the public schools shall be vested in a board of education, does not include in its meaning the University of Oklahoma. Regents of University of Oklahoma v. Board of Education, 95 Pac. 429, 432, 20 Okl. 809; Elsberry v. Seay, 3 South. 804, 83 Ala. 614; Jenkins v. Inhabitants of Andover, 103 Mass. 94.

PUBLIC SECURITIES

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation in pursuance of an act of the Legislature, approved April 17, 1908 (Laws 1907-08, c. 10, art. 1), the provisions of which are to be found in article 5, c. 14, Comp. Laws 1909, to raise revenue or funds with which to make street improvements in a city, which are to be paid by special assessments levied against the property benefited by the improvements, are not "public securities or bonds," within the meaning of section 2 of an act of the Legislature, approved March 24, 1910 (Laws 1910, c. 94), entitled "An act for the protection, validation and sale of bond issues of the state, counties, townships and municipalities and all other political organizations and subdivisions of the state of Oklahoma"; and such bonds are not required to be examined and certified to by the Attorney General as ex officio bond commissioner. City of Lawton v. West, 126 Pac. 574, 575, 33 Okl. 395.

PUBLIC SERVICE

See, also, Public Business; Public Duty.

Water supply

Water companies are corporations performing services of a public nature quite as much as common carriers and are within the Florida Constitution giving the Legislature full power to correct abuses and prevent injurious discrimination and excessive charges by persons and corporations engaged as common carriers or in transporting persons or property or in performing other services of a "public" nature. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. City of Tampa, 26 Sup. Ct. 23, 24, 199 U. S. 241, 50 L. Ed. 170.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

As court, see Court (Of Justice).

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION

As defined by the Oklahoma Constitution, the term "public service corporation" includes "all transportation and transmission companies, all gas, electric light, heat and power companies, and all persons authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, or to use or occupy any right of way, street, alley, or public highway, whether along, over, or under the same, in a manner not permitted to the general public." Shawnee Gas & Electric Co. v. State ex rel. Shawnee City Waterworks, 122 Pac. 222, 228, 31 Okl. 505.

Electric company

An electric company, organized under the transportation law of New York, was engaged in transmitting and selling electricity for light and power to private consumers and street railway lines in a number of towns and villages, for which it had franchises. It also kept electrical supplies in store, which it sold chiefly to its consumers of electricity. It did not generate electricity, and had no plant for so doing, but purchased the same from other corporations, although it owned its own transmission lines and stations. Held, that it was a "public service corporation," and not principally, if at all, engaged in trading or mercantile pursuits, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, 32 Stat. 797, and was not subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 946.

A company having the right, whether exclusive or not, to supply the citizens of a city with gas for light and fuel, is a public service corporation, and must serve all alike. Vanderberg v. Kansas City, Mo., Gas Co., 105 S. W. 17, 19, 126 Mo. App. 600.

Railroad or street railway company

A street railway corporation is a public service corporation, and owes duties to the general public which it cannot breach except under penalty of ouster from its franchise. Johnson v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 127 S. W. 63, 70, 227 Mo. 423.

Const. art. 12, § 153, defines the term "public service corporation" as including "all transportation and transmission companies, all gas, electric, heat, and power companies, and all persons authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain, or to use or occupy any street, alley, or public highway, whether along, over, or under the same, in a manner not permitted to the general public." A railway and light company, though a public service corporation, stands on the footing of an individual as respects its power house, so that it being a nuisance, the company is liable for the injury. Townsend v. Norfolk Ry. & Light Co., 52 S. E. 970, 971, 105 Va. 22, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 115 Am. St. Rep. 842, 8 Ann. Cas. 558. And the same is true of a railroad company. Terrill v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 66 S. E. 55, 57, 110 Va. 340, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 371.

A "public service company" is one engaged in a business of such nature as to clearly distinguish it from those purely private persons and corporations who may conduct their own business in their own way. All such corporations must observe certain rules of dealing with the public on account of the interest which the public has in the manner in which their business is conducted as well as on account of the special franchise enjoyed by them. These rules and the corresponding duties which are implied from the nature of the calling are not always declared by specific statute, but are frequently enforced by the courts as a part of the general law or of the common law. A telegraph company is a private corporation performing a public duty, and it is immaterial whether it be regarded as a common carrier, a bailee, or a person engaged in business sui generis. One of the great requirements which the government demands of these public service corporations is the duty to act impartially with all. They are under obligation to extend the facilities to all persons on equal terms who are willing to comply with their reasonable regulations and to make such compensation as is exacted for others in like circumstances. Dunn v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 59 S. E. 189, 190, 2 Ga. App. 845 (quoting and adopting Jones, Tel. & Tel. Co. § 236).

Telephone company

A telephone company is a "public service corporation," required to transmit messages, if within its power to do so, with authority to prescribe reasonable rules and charges for conducting the business. McDaniel v. Faubush Telephone Co. (Ky.) 106 S. W. 825, 826.

PUBLIC SERVICE FACILITIES AND CONVENIENCES

See, also, Public Convenience; Public Facilities.

The quoted phrase in Const. art. 9, § 18, relating to the duties of the Corporation Commission, and providing that it shall from time to time require transportation companies to maintain all "such public service facilities and conveniences as may be reasonable and just," means everything incident to the general, prompt, safe, and impartial performance of the duties to the public at large imposed by the state, in the proper exercise of its police power, on transportation companies. The Constitution does not require transportation or transmission companies at their own expense to provide such equal facilities and conveniences between private persons or corporations as to overcome or equalize disadvantages caused by dissimilarity of location. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. State, 99 Pac. 901, 905, 23 Okl. 94.

PUBLIC SEWER

A "public sewer" is not necessarily one to accommodate a whole city, but is one which serves the public, and not an individual, and which connects with and receives the discharges from district sewers and the surface water which falls on the street near to or under which they run. Southworth v. City of Glasgow, 132 S. W. 1168, 1174, 232 Mo. 108, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1267.

PUBLIC SHOW

See, also, Public Exhibition.

A moving picture show is not a "public show" within the meaning of those words as used in Pen. Code, § 265, prohibiting all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming, or other public sports, exercises, or shows on Sunday. People v. Hemleb, 111 N. Y. Supp. 690, 691, 127 App. Div. 356; William Fox Amusement Co. v. McClellan, 114 N. Y. Supp. 594, 598, 62 Misc. Rep. 100; Edwards v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 181. Contra, see Gale v. Bingham, 110 N. Y. Supp. 12, 13.

PUBLIC SPORT

A public sport, game, show, or entertainment is one held out and given to the public. People v. Poole, 89 N. Y. Supp. 773, 774, 44 Misc. Rep. 118.

"Private sports" are those which are engaged in for the entertainment and pleasure of those who participate, but "public sports" are those which are engaged in for the entertainment and pleasure of the public. Cheeves v. State, 114 Pac. 1125, 1126, 5 Okl. Cr. 361.

Relator was committed by a city magistrate on a charge of violating Pen. Code, § 265, prohibiting all "public sport, exercise, or shows" on the first day of the week, by exhibiting moving pictures. The return on habeas corpus showed that the act consisted in exhibiting pictures illustrating lectures delivered at the same time on the story of Joseph and his brethren and also an illustrated lecture on the lumber industry in California. Held, that the exhibition did not constitute "public sport, exercise, or show," within the intention of the Code. People v. Finn, 110 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 57 Misc. Rep. 659.

PUBLIC SQUARE

See, also, Public Park.

The term "public square" signifies in law that certain property has been dedicated to public use. The public square of a county is of a public nature and held for governmental purposes. People ex rel. Whittock v. Willison, 86 N. E. 1094, 1096, 237 Ill. 584.

A "public square" is a widening of the street or the reservation of a plot of ground at intersections of streets for the purpose of beautifying the town or providing a breathing space in its center, or where the people are most likely to congregate. A borough has no power, under a statute authorizing it to hold such real estate as the purposes of the borough shall require and empowering it to regulate streets and common grounds and to make such other regulations as may be necessary for the health and cleanliness of the borough, to contract to lease from a private owner an inclosed pleasure park within the borough in order to derive a revenue therefrom by subletting or charging the public for admission, and, if the borough enters into possession of the park under such agreement, no recovery can be had from it as for the use and occupation of the same. Bloomsburg Land Imp. Co. v. Borough of Bloomsburg, 64 Atl. 602, 604, 215 Pa. 452.

PUBLIC STREET

See Street.

PUBLIC TAX

The covenant of a perpetual leaseholder with his municipal lessor to pay the public taxes which shall become due on the land embraces municipal taxes whenever they can thereafter be lawfully assessed on the land or the improvements which are part of the land, although when the lease was made the municipality had no power of taxation. J. W. Perry Co. v. City of Norfolk, 31 Sup. Ct. 465, 467, 220 U. S. 472, 55 L. Ed. 548.

PUBLIC THINGS

See Things Public.

PUBLIC TRACK

Where a railway switch, though used largely by one person, is open to all persons for shipping purposes, it is a "public track," and its presence in a public street does not constitute a nuisance per se. "The public or private character of a track or way de-depends upon the right of the public generally to its use, and not upon the extent of the exercise of that right. If such right is confined to a limited number only, it is a private use and a private track, although such persons may use it an equal or unequal number of times each, while, if it is available to all the public who desire to use it for shipping purposes, it is a public use, although some one or more of the public may use it more frequently than others." Wolfard v. Fisher, 87 Pac. 530, 48 Or. 479, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 18 N. W. 650, 63 Iowa, 33; Elliott, R. R. [3d Ed.] § 961; Bridal Veil Lumber Co. v. Johnson, 46 Pac. 790, 30 Or. 210, 34 L. R. A. 368, 60 Am. St. Rep. 818; Towns v. Klamath County, 58 Pac. 604, 33 Or. 233).

PUBLIC TRAFFIC

Sale

The phrase "public traffic," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, §§ 1960-1970, prohibiting "public traffic" on the Sabbath, and declaring that all manner of public selling, or offering or exposing for sale publicly, of any commodities on the Sabbath, is prohibited, etc., includes the sale of an animal, and the making and execution of a note for the price thereof, and a debt created for the sale of an animal cannot be enforced unless there is such a subsequent recognition of the indebtedness on a secular day as will amount to an acknowledgment of indebtedness, and a promise at that time, either express or implied, to pay. A. Helm & Son v. Briley, 87 Pac. 595, 596, 17 Okl. 314 (citing Van Hoven v. Irish, 10 Fed. 13; Adams v. Gay, 19 Vt. 358; Harrison v. Colton, 31 Iowa, 16; Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co. v. Chapell, 22 N. W. 278, 56 Mich. 190; Wilson v. Milligan, 75 Mo. 41; Banks v. Werts, 13 Ind. 203; Clough v. Davis, 9 N. H. 500; King v. Fleming, 72 Ill. 21, 22 Am. Rep. 131).

PUBLIC TRIAL

The word "public," as used in the Constitution guaranteeing to all persons accused of crime a public trial, is there used in opposition to "secret." The constitutional requirement is fairly observed, if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable portion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence would be of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether. The exclusion by the court of all persons other than those interested in the case, where, from the character of the charge and nature of the evidence, public morality would be injuriously affected, does not violate the constitutional right to a public trial. Robertson v. State, 60 South. 118, 119, 64 Fla. 437.

The term "public," in its enlarged sense, takes in the entire community, the whole body politic, so that a "public trial" means one which is not limited or restricted to any particular class of the community, but is open to the free observation of all. This does not impose upon the authorities a duty to provide so large a place for public trials as would accommodate every member of the community at the same time. "It is also requisite that the trial be public. By this is not meant that every person who sees fit shall in all cases be permitted to attend criminal trials, because there are many cases where, from the character of the charge and the nature of the evidence by which it is to be supported, the motives to attend the trial on the part of portions of the community would be of the worst character, and where a regard to public morals and public decency would require that at least the young be excluded from hearing and witnessing the evidences of human depravity which the trial must necessarily bring to light. The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused, that the public may see he is fairly dealt with and not unjustly condemned, and that the presence of interested spectators may keep his triors keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions; and the requirement is fairly observed if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence could be of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether." An order made by the court of common pleas during the trial of an indictment for a felony, to the effect that in view of the testimony expected to be given by witnesses next to be called the court would continue the trial during the taking of the testimony in the small courtroom, that the sheriff should admit no one to said room except the jury, defendant's counsel, members of the bar, and newspaper men, and one other person, a witness for defendant, exceeds the power of the court in the premises, and its enforcement is a denial to defendant of his constitutional right to a "public trial." State v. Hensley, 79 N. E. 462, 463, 75 Ohio St. 255, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 116 Am. St. Rep. 734, 9 Ann. Cas. 108. But the making of an order excluding all persons from the courtroom until the argument, except officers of the court, witnesses and persons whom the several parties to the action may request to remain, does not deprive defendant of a public trial within the statutory and constitutional provisions. State v. Nyhus, 124 N. W. 71, 73, 19 N. D. 326, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 487.

The requirement in Const. § 11, guaranteeing a public trial, does not mean that all of the public who desire to be present may do so, or that the trial judge may not without favor or discrimination limit the spectators to the capacity of the room in which the trial is had, and the court's action in stationing policemen at convenient places and in limiting admission to the courtroom, to prevent overcrowding, without discriminating against accused or his friends, is not ground for reversal of a conviction. Wendling v. Commonwealth, 137 S. W. 205, 211, 143 Ky. 587.

"Public trial" means trial by jury, perhaps including the rendition of judgment; but, if the accused is convicted and sentenced the trial is over. State v. Pioneer Press Co., 110 N. W. 867, 869, 100 Minn. 173, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 117 Am. St. Rep. 684, 10 Ann. Cas. 351.

PUBLIC TRUST

Office as, see Office.

A "public trust" is one in which the public at large, or some undetermined portion of it, have a direct interest or property right, or in which the beneficiaries cannot be ascertained with certainty. Holman v. Renaud, 125 S. W. 843, 845, 141 Mo. App. 399. The term is synonymous with "charity." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1033, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

PUBLIC USE

See Damage for Public Use; Opened and Dedicated to Public Use; Prior Public Use; Reserved for Public Use.

More necessary public use, see More.

Other public use, see Other.

A "public user" of land dedicated for a street is a use by the public of the neighborhood. Board of Com'rs of Town of Keyport v. Freehold & A. H. R. Co., 65 Atl. 1035, 1036, 74 N. J. Law, 480 (citing Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. Law, 87, 91).

A dedication to a public use may be limited actually to the inhabitants of a small locality; but the use must be in common and on the same terms, however few the number who avail themselves thereof, and a "public use," whether for all men or a class, is one not confined to privileged persons. People ex rel. Scott v. Ricketts, 94 N. E. 71, 72, 248 Ill. 428.

A city owning land dedicated to it for a public landing, executed a lease of a part thereof to an individual for a private purpose. Thereafter it granted to a railroad the right to construct railroad tracks and terminal facilities on such part. Held, that the occupation of the land with railroad tracks and terminal facilities was not a "public use," terminating the prior lease, but necessarily excluded the public from that part of the land, so that the company was not entitled, because thereof, to dispossess the lessee without compensation. Union R. Co. v. Chickasaw Cooperage Co., 95 S. W. 171, 177, 116 Tenn. 594.

"The expressions 'public interest' and 'public use' are not synonymous. The establishment of furnaces, mills, and manufactures, the building of churches and hotels, and other similar enterprises, are more or less matters of public concern, and promote in a general sense the public welfare, but they lie without the domain of public uses for which private ownership may be displaced by compulsory proceedings." Expending money in caring for streets which are so narrow that the village cannot accept them as streets is not a "public use" of money. Smith v. Smythe, 90 N. E. 1121, 1123, 197 N. Y. 457, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524 (citing In re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co., 15 N. E. 429, 432, 108 N. Y. 375, 385).

A water company contracted to furnish a town with water for public uses, etc. Held, that the term "public use" meant uses such as benefited all the inhabitants, as distinguished from those that benefited individuals as a class and did not include mechanical purposes or manufacturing purposes. Mayor, etc., of Town of Boonton v. Boonton Water Co., 61 Atl. 390, 393, 69 N. J. Eq. 23.

A contract by a water company to furnish a town with water "for domestic purposes, the extinguishment of fires and other lawful uses," and also "for public and domestic uses and purposes of the inhabitants" of the town, did not authorize the corporation to furnish water for the purpose of creating any power for mechanical purposes either by the means of the creation of steam or for the propelling of any water motor to the prejudice of the town for domestic and fire uses. Boonton v. United Water Supply Co., 64 Atl. 1064, 1065, 70 N. J. Eq. 692.

It is understood by the term "public use" as applied to a street that the primary intention and idea of the use of the street was for travel—moving from place to place in any way that does not interfere with the use of the street for travel in any other way. The manner or mode of travel is not restricted to those known or in use at the time of the dedication, but may be those modes of travel that are the result of modern invention. The construction and operation of a telephone line on a street is not a proper street use. Cosgriff v. Tri-State Telephone & Telegraph Co., 107 N. W. 525, 526, 15 N. D. 210, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142.

There is a distinction in the meaning of the term "public use," as employed in the law of eminent domain, and in that of taxation. The furnishing water by a municipality to its inhabitants for domestic purposes, in consideration of a compensation which even yields an incidental profit to the municipality, is a "public use" within the meaning of that term as used with reference to exemptions from taxation. Stiles v. Newport, 56 Atl. 662, 665, 76 Vt. 154.

Money raised by a city on bonds to invest in railroad bonds is for a "public use" within the meaning of the Constitution. Town of Bennington v. Park, 50 Vt. 178, 193, 194.

Water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is a "public use" subject to the regulation and control of the state. Cozzens v. North Fork Ditch Co., 84 Pac. 342, 347, 2 Cal. App. 404 (citing Const. art. 14, § 1).

A petition for a writ of mandate to compel a water company to furnish plaintiff with a supply of water, averring that one of the purposes for which defendant was incorporated and in which it has been since its incorporation and is now engaged is to distribute water for compensation to the residents of L., that the petitioner is, and has been for more than 10 years, a resident of L. and a freeholder thereof, and during that time defendant has supplied him with water upon his premises, and that it has a sufficient quantity of water to supply him, sufficiently shows that defendant is in the control of a "public use," within Const. art. 14, providing that the "use of all water now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution is hereby declared to be a public use," and that plaintiff is a beneficiary of that use. Mahoney v. American Land & Water Co., 83 Pac. 267, 268, 2 Cal. App. 185.

The right of an individual to a public use of water is in the nature of a public right possessed by reason of his status as a person of the class for whose benefit the water is appropriated or dedicated. All who enter the class may demand the use of the water, regardless of whether they have previously enjoyed it or not, and a water company having water appropriated under Const. 1879, Art. 14, § 1, for sale, rental, or distribution, the use of which is thereby declared to be a "public use," cannot confer any preferential right on one consumer over another to the use of any part of the water. But it would not be in derogation of the Constitution for a water company in possession of a limited amount of water so appropriated to fix the limits of the territory to the irrigation of which it shall be devoted, and agree to supply the water first to the lands therein, and to supply only the surplus to outsiders. Leavitt v. Lassen Irr. Co., 106 Pac. 404, 407, 157 Cal. 82, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 213 (quoting and adopting definition in Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co., 72 Pac. 395, 139 Cal. 32).

The obligation of a corporation organized to sell and distribute water to furnish water is created by Const. Cal. art. 14, § 1, declaring that the use of water, appropriated for sale or distribution shall be a "public use" and subject to regulation in the manner prescribed by law, and does not arise under St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115, requiring a corporation appropriating water for sale or distribution to furnish water to the extent of the actual supply, and providing that any corporation neglecting so to do shall be liable in damages to the extent of the actual injury sustained. Lowe v. Yolo County Consol. Water Co., 96 Pac. 379, 380, 8 Cal. App. 167.

The term "public use" has been defined to be a use or right of use on the part of the public, or some limited portion of it, and it has also been defined as a public benefit, utility, or advantage. To constitute a public use under the first definition, it is necessary that the public should in some way use or be entitled to use or enjoy the property taken, while, according to the second definition, the use is a public one where the property taken is so employed as to inure in any way to the public benefit or advantage. But whatever definition is adopted, a convention hall to be owned, controlled, and used exclusively by a city to accommodate public gatherings of the people of the city and for such other public uses as may be designated by the mayor and city council is a "public use" and a public utility within Const. art. 10, § 27, authorizing any municipality by a majority of the qualified property taxpaying voters thereof, to become indebted for the purpose of purchasing or constructing public utilities. State ex rel. Manhattan Const. Co. v. Barnes, 97 Pac. 997, 998, 22 Okl. 191.

PUBLIC USE (In Eminent Domain)

To constitute a "public use," the public must be concerned in the use, and it must be public in fact. Cloth v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 132 S. W. 1005, 1006, 97 Ark. 86, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1115.

A "public use" must be either a use by the public or by some agency which is quasi public, and not simply a use which may incidentally or indirectly promote the public interest or general prosperity of the state. Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 74 Pac. 681, 685, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964; Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co., 51 S. E. 485, 496, 71 S. C. 457, 110 Am. St. Rep. 579 (quoting and adopting definition in Healy Lumber Co. v. Morris, 74 Pac. 681, 33 Wash. 490, 63 L. R. A. 820, 99 Am. St. Rep. 964). See, also, Matthews v. Belfast Mfg. Co., 77 Pac. 1046, 1047, 35 Wash. 662.

The term "public use," as employed in a constitutional provision that no person's property shall be taken, damaged or destroyed, or applied to public use without adequate compensation being made, etc., is not that use which either the Legislature or the courts may deem a public benefit or advantage, but means the same as "use by the public," and is synonymous with the employment or application by the public of the thing taken. It means that, though property is vested in private individuals or corporations, the public yet retains certain definite rights to the use or employment of the property. Borden v. Trespalacios Rice & Irrigation Co. (Tex.) 82 S. W. 461, 465.

A "public use," justifying the taking of private property against the will of the owner, implies a possession, occupation, or enjoyment of the property taken by the public at large, or by public agencies. That only is a public use where the government is supplying its own needs, or is furnishing facilities for its citizens as a matter of public necessity or convenience, which on account of their peculiar character, it is proper, useful, and needful for the government to provide. Brown v. Gerald, 61 Atl. 785, 788, 100 Me. 351, 70 L. R. A. 472, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526. See, also, Arnsperger v. Crawford, 61 Atl. 413, 415, 101 Md. 247, 70 L. R. A. 497.

"The 'public use' implies possession, occupation, and enjoyment of the land by the public at large or by public agencies, and due protection of the rights of private property will preclude the government from seizing it in the hands of the owner and turning it over to another on vague grounds of public benefit to spring from a more profitable use to which the latter is devoted." Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co., 51 S. E. 485, 496, 71 S. C. 457, 110 Am. St. Rep. 579 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. 654). See, also, Cozad v. Kanawha Hardwood Co., 51 S. E. 932, 936, 139 N. C. 283, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 969, 111 Am. St. Rep. 779 (quoting and adopting definition in Cooley, Const. Lim. 652).

The test whether a use is "public" or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property, whether the public has a legal right to the use, which cannot be gainsaid or denied or withdrawn by the owner. It has also been said that speaking in strictness private property can only be said to have been taken for public use when it has been so appropriated that the public have certain well-defined rights to that use secured, as the right to use the public highway, the public ferry, the railroad, and the like; but, when it is so appropriated that the public have no right to those uses secured, it is difficult to perceive how such an appropriation can be denominated a public use. "Public use" implies a possession, occupation, and enjoyment of the land by the public at large or by public agency, and the due protection of the rights of private property will preclude the government from seizing it and turning it over to another on vague grounds of public benefit to spring from a more profitable use to which the latter may devote it. A petition for leave to erect a dam on a creek for the purpose of securing power to operate a public cider mill and the machinery of a certain public telephone exchange then on land owned by petitioner did not show that the purpose for which the property was sought to be taken was for a public use. Dice v. Sherman, 59 S. E. 388, 107 Va. 424 (quoting and adopting definition in Fallsburg Power & Mfg. Co. v. Alexander, 43 S. E. 194, 101 Va. 98, 61 L. R. A. 129, 99 Am. St. Rep. 855).

A use, to be "public," must be fixed and definite. It must be one in which the public, as such, has an interest, and the terms and manner of its enjoyment must be within the control of the state, independent of the rights of the private owner of the property appropriated to the use. The use of property cannot be said to be public if it can be gainsaid, denied, or withdrawn by the owner. The public interest must dominate the private gain. Hench v. Pritt, 57 S. E. 808, 810, 62 W. Va. 270, 125 Am. St. Rep. 966 (citing Fallsburg v. Alexander, 43 S. E. 194, 101 Va. 98, 61 L. R. A. 129, 99 Am. St. Rep. 855).

The existence of the power to take private property for public use by eminent domain excludes the idea that it might be taken for private use or under semblance of public use, and immediately or ultimately conveyed to private uses, and land cannot be taken under such power because the public will be incidentally benefited by the use to which private persons will put the land, so long as the public has no right of control, and a city could not vacate a highway to make it possible for several railroad companies to convert it into an exchange yard for the handling of the product of a large industry in the city, though the city would be thereby indirectly benefited together with individual property in the city because of the increased facility with which the product of the industry could be handled; such vacation of the highway being for a private use. City of Gary v. Much (Ind.) 94 N. E. 583, 587 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5827, 5828).

The use of property to obtain the possible income or profit that might inure to a city from its ownership and control would not be a public use, and a city cannot take property for such a purpose. In re Opinion of the Justices, 91 N. E. 405, 406, 204 Mass. 607, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483.

That the use of property sought to be condemned may bring about private profit, does not prevent the use from being a public one. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 94 Pac. 631, 634, 37 Mont. 60.

The term "public use," as used in the rule governing the right to condemn property already devoted to a public use, is employed in the sense in which it is used in the law of eminent domain, and it may be that the meaning of the term varies according to its application. Rutland Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Clarendon Power Co., 83 Atl. 332, 334, 86 Vt. 45, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1204.

There is no fixed rule as to what is a "public use." It has been held that by "public use" is meant a use by the public or its agencies; that is, the public must have the right to the actual use in some way of the property appropriated. The better rule is that "public use" is the taking of property for a use that will promote the public interest and which use tends to develop the great natural resources of the commonwealth. Const. art. 3, § 15, declares that the use of all water and the right of way over the lands of others for ditches and sites for reservoirs shall be held to be a public use, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2211, as amended by Sess. Laws 1899, p. 135, in defining public uses enumerate sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting water and electric power lines. Held, that the flooding of land by a dam erected for the purpose of supplying electric power to mines and smelters and to the public generally and for supplying water for irrigation purposes was a "public use" authorizing condemnation of such land. Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 88 Pac. 773, 774, 775, 35 Mont. 108, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 567, 10 Ann. Cas. 1055 (citing Aldridge v. Tuscumbia, C. & D. R. Co. [Ala.] 2 Stew. & P. 199, 23 Am. Dec. 307; Todd v. Austin, 34 Conn. 78; Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419; Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 21 Conn. 294; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 446; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray [82 Mass.] 417; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221; Boston & Roxbury Mill Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. [29 Mass.] 467, 23 Am. Dec. 622; Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 394, 728, 23 Am. Dec. 756).

"The term 'public use' is a flexible one. It varies and expands with the growing needs of a more complex social order. * * * It may be said at the present time that anything which will satisfy a reasonable public demand for public facilities for travel or for transportation or transmission of intelligence or commodities and of the general public, under reasonable regulations, and which have a definite and fixed use, independent of the will of the parties in whom the title is vested, would be a public use." A terminal railroad, the purpose of which is to switch cars from one road to another, receive freight on the line of its road, and give bills of lading over its own and other roads, to any part of the world, and which by its charter is obligated to do a general railroad business, both as to freight and passengers, "is intended to subserve a 'public use.'" Collier v. Union R. Co., 83 S. W. 155, 162, 113 Tenn. 96 (citing Ryan v. Louisville & N. Terminal Co., 50 S. W. 744, 102 Tenn. 111, 45 L. R. A. 308; Mills, Em. Dom. § 11; Stewart v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 68 N. W. 208, 65 Minn. 515, 33 L. R. A. 427).

"The definition of 'public use' must be such as to give it a degree of elasticity capable of meeting new conditions and improvements and the ever-increasing needs of society. * * * In determining whether or not a use is public, the physical conditions of the country, the needs of a community, the character of the benefit which a projected improvement may confer upon a locality, and the necessities for such improvement in the development of the resources of the state, are to be taken into consideration." A condemnation of a right of way for a tunnel, under Laws 1891, p. 98, § 3 (3 Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 616), authorizing any corporation formed for the purpose of constructing a tunnel to acquire any necessary real estate under the eminent domain act, is a condemnation for a "public use," where the tunnel is to be used for draining mines, and for the transportation of waste and ore, for such proprietors as desire to avail themselves of the facilities offered. Tanner v. Treasury Tunnel, Mining & Reduction Co., 83 Pac. 464, 465, 35 Colo. 593, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106.

The term "public use," as used in Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property may be taken for "public use," means public usefulness and productive of general benefit. The term is a flexible one, and necessarily has been of constant growth as new uses have developed. If the taking is necessary to the complete development of the material resources of the state, it is for a "public use." The lumbering interest of the state cannot be completely developed without the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Peterson, 88 Pac. 426, 432, 12 Idaho, 769, 118 Am. St. Rep. 233 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5828; Olmstead v. Camp, 33 Conn. 532, 89 Am. Dec. 221).

Revisal 1905, §§ 1571-1577, confer on electric light companies the power to condemn property for the erection of poles and other appropriate purposes on making just compensation therefor. Defendant was incorporated to distribute electricity for the operation of street railways, and to supply electricity for any purpose whatever. Held, that condemnation by defendant of a right of way across plaintiffs' land for the erection of its electric light poles, etc., was for a public use, and therefore authorized. Wissler v. Yaddin River Power Co., 74 S. E. 460, 158 N. C. 465.

Under Laws 1901, p. 679, c. 195, § 5, authorizing a corporation formed under the general law for manufacturing and selling electricity for lighting, transportation, and business purposes to hold and to purchase lands necessary to carry out its purposes, a corporation empowered to generate electricity, to sell to those designing it for any use to which it is applicable, and furnishing power for the operation of electric railway lines and other authorized purposes, may take private lands necessary for the construction of its lines, as such taking is a "public use." Rockingham County Light & Power Co. v. Hobbs, 58 Atl. 46, 47, 72 N. H. 531, 66 L. R. A. 581 (citing petition of Mt. Washington Road Co., 35 N. H. 134; Proprietors of Piscataqua Bridge v. New Hampshire Bridge, 7 N. H. 35; Peirce v. Somersworth, 10 N. H. 369; Backus v. Lebanon, 11 N. H. 19, 35 Am. Dec. 466; Concord R. R. v. Greely, 17 N. H. 47; Northern R. R. v. Concord & C. R. R., 27 N. H. 183; Crowell v. Londonderry, 63 N. H. 42; Evergreen Cemetery Ass'n v. Beecher, 5 Atl. 353, 53 Conn. 551; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590).

The construction of a dam in the Spokane river at Post Falls, and the raising of the dam so as to increase the height of the waters in Cœur d'Alene Lake for storage purposes to be used in the low-water season for power purposes in generating electrical current for lighting, heating, and power, is a public use within Const. art. 1, § 14, declaring the necessary use of lands for construction of reservoirs or storage basins for irrigation or for rights of way for construction of canals, ditches, flumes, etc., or any useful, beneficial, or necessary purpose shall be a public use, and Rev. Codes, § 5210, authorizing condemnation of lands for necessary use in constructing lines to be used in transmitting electrical current for power, lighting, heating, or other purposes, though part of such power may be used in another state. Washington Water Power Co. v. Waters, 115 Pac. 682, 684, 19 Idaho, 595.

Manufacturing, generating, selling, distributing, and supplying electricity for power for manufacturing or mechanical purposes is not a "public use" for which private property may be taken against the will of the owner. Brown v. Gerald, 61 Atl. 785, 789, 100 Me. 351, 109 Am. St. Rep. 526.

The furnishing of electricity for light and power, when exercised by a corporation having the power under its charter, to develop water power, construct dams, generate electricity, to be transmitted to various towns to be used by the public, may be a "public use" justifying the exercise of the power of eminent domain for the acquisition of the necessary rights and privileges in the real estate of individuals. McMillan v. Noyes, 72 Atl. 759, 761, 75 N. H. 258.

Furnishing light to a municipality is a "public use" and benefit, with regard to which the power of eminent domain may be exercised, even by a private corporation. In re East Canada Creek Electric Light & Power Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 109, 110, 49 Misc. Rep. 565 (citing Matter of Burns, 49 N. E. 246, 155 N. Y. 27; Buffalo & N. Y. City R. R. Co. v. Brainard, 9 N. Y. 100).

The taking of land for a right of way for a ditch and a flume to convey water used in furnishing electricity to the public generally or to all persons within a county or elsewhere in the state for lighting, power, and heating purposes is a public use within Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1238, and Civ. Code, § 1001, authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain in behalf of certain public uses. Shasta Power Co. v. Walker, 149 Fed. 568. Walker v. Shasta Power Co., 160 Fed. 856, 859, 87 C. C. A. 660, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725.

It is for the public interest that a railroad company condemn the few shares of stock of another railroad company, which it does not own, where extensive improvements of the other company's connecting road are necessary, the means or credit for which it does not, but the condemning company does, possess. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Offield, 59 Atl. 510, 511, 77 Conn. 417.

Priv. Laws 1901, p. 463, c. 168, empowering a majority of the stockholders of certain railways to consolidate with other companies, and providing for assessing and paying the value of the dissenting stock, is an exercise of the power of eminent domain and the property appropriated is taken for a "public use." Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 49 S. E. 96, 103, 137 N. C. 107, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 604 (citing Clark & M. on Priv. Corp. 1051; North Carolina & R. D. R. Co. v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 83 N. C. 489).

Convenience, necessity, or welfare of public

A "public use" is defined as any use of anything which will satisfy a reasonable public demand for public facilities for travel or for transmission of intelligence or commodities. Mueller v. Supervisors of Town of Courtland, 135 N. W. 996, 998, 117 Minn. 290.

Duty to or right in public

To constitute a "public use" within the meaning of the statutes relating to eminent domain, something more than a mere benefit to the public must flow from the contemplated improvement. The public must be to some extent entitled to use or enjoy the property not as a mere favor or by permission of the owner but by right. Gaylord v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 68 N. E. 522, 524, 204 Ill. 576, 63 L. R. A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 295.

The term "public use," within the rule as to taking private property for public use, means to be occupied and enjoyed by the public or for some use necessary to enable the public to command the services of citizens, or to enable the citizen to perform his duties to the public. It is not the number of people who use the property taken that constitutes the use of it a public one, nor does the fact that the benefits will be in a large measure local enter into the question. The fact that only a few persons, aside from the individual at whose instance it is sought to establish a tramway over private property, will have occasion to use it, does not destroy its public use within the meaning of the Constitution. The controlling and decisive question is: Have the public the right to its use on the same terms as the person at whose instance it is established? If they have, it is a public use; if they have not, it is a private use. If the owner can exercise the same kind of dominion over it as he does over other property owned by him, if he can close it up, or prohibit all or any part of the public from its use, then it is clear that its establishment would be private and not public; nor is the fact that the public interest will be promoted by the contemplated improvement sufficient to authorize the taking, in the absence of the right on the part of the public to participate in the enjoyment of the property taken. Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Moreland, 104 S. W. 762, 765, 126 Ky. 656, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479.

"The Supreme Court of California has spoken also with reference to the question of 'public use.' It says: 'The words "public use" here mean [referring to the Constitution] a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals. It is not necessary, however, that each and every individual member of society should have the same degree of interest in this use, or be personally or directly affected by it, in order to make it public. * * * If the use for which the property is taken be to satisfy a great public want or public exigency, it is a "public use." * * * It may be a use in which but a small portion of the public will be directly benefited, * * * though it must be of such a character as that the general public may, if they choose, avail themselves of it.' Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, 251-253. These utterances have the especial sanction of other courts. In Board of Health v. Van Hoesen, supra, the court says: 'To justify the condemnation of lands for a private corporation not only must the purpose be one in which the public has an interest, but the state must have a voice in the manner in which the public may avail itself of that use. In Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, a "public use" is defined to be a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual. The use which the public is to have of such property must be fixed and definite. The general public must have a right to a certain definite use of the private property, on terms and for charges fixed by law, and the owner of the property must be compelled by law to permit the general public to enjoy it. It will not suffice that the general prosperity of the community is promoted by the taking of private property from the owner, and transferring its title and control to a corporation, to be used by such corporation as its private property, uncontrolled by law as to its use. In other words, a use is private so long as the land is to remain under private ownership and control, and no right to its use, or to direct its management, is conferred upon the public.' So it is said in Gaylord v. Sanitary District of Chicago, 68 N. E. 522, 204 Ill. 576, 63 L. R. A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235: 'It is also the settled doctrine of this court that, to constitute a "public use," something more than a mere benefit to the public must flow from the contemplated improvement. The public must be to some extent entitled to use or enjoy the property, not as a mere favor or by permission of the owner, but by right.' So, also, in Sholl v. German Coal Company, 10 N. E. 199, 118 Ill. 427, 59 Am. Rep. 379: 'If, from the nature of the business, and the way in which it is to be conducted, it is clear no obligations will be assumed to the public, or liability incurred, other than such as pertains to all strictly private enterprises, it may safely be concluded the use is private, and not public. It is also believed to be generally, if not universally, true that benefits resulting from a public use capable of individual appropriation are open to all alike upon the same terms and conditions.' And again, by a footnote to section 165, Lewis on Eminent Domain: 'The test whether a use is public or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property, whether the public has a legal right to the use, which cannot be gainsaid or denied or withdrawn by the owner.' " Shasta Power Co. v. Walker, 149 Fed. 568, 571.

A strip of land owned, though never used, by a railroad company, but leased by it to, and occupied by the loading platforms of, a mill company, is not devoted to a "public use" so as to be exempt from condemnation for the track of another railroad company, though it adds to the convenience of the mill company in loading its products on the cars of the railroad company owning the strip when switched onto the track of the mill company; it being the use to which the property is applied, and not its ownership, which marks the use as public or private, and the test of whether the use is public being whether the property is impressed with a trust in favor of the public so that its use is not of grace, but of right, which cannot be defeated at the owner's will. A use will not be classified as public, merely because it may economize the handling of the products of a patron of common carrier. The exemption from condemnation, if any, must rest upon the ground that the public interest would suffer by an appropriation of the property for the use of the relator for track purposes. It is the use to which the property is applied and not the ownership that marks such use as public or private. The true criterion by which to judge of the character of the use is whether the public may enjoy it by right or only by permission. The test is, not what the corporation owning the land may choose to do, but what under the law it must do. State ex rel. Milwaukee Terminal

R. Co. v. Superior Court for King County, 103 Pac. 469, 473, 54 Wash. 365 (quoting Farmers' Market Co. v. Philadelphia & R. T. R. Co., 21 Atl. 990, 142 Pa. 587; citing Diamond Jo Line Steamers v. City of Davenport, 87 N. W. 400, 114 Iowa, 434, 54 L. R. A. 859; In re New York, L. & W. R. Co., 1 N. E. 27, 99 N. Y. 12).

Where a railroad condemned land for public use and rented it to a wholesale grocery company, the use of the land by the grocery company was not a public use, for, while it might be a public benefit or public interest, no obligation rested upon the grocery company to conduct its business for the benefit of the public; the true criterion of a public use being whether the public may enjoy it by right or by permission only, and the terms "public interest" and "public use" not being synonymous. Neitzel v. Spokane International Ry. Co., 117 Pac. 864, 869, 65 Wash. 100, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522.

Extent of public benefited

It is not necessary to make a use public in the sense in which that term is used in condemnation proceedings, that the whole community or any large portion thereof may actually participate in it, but only that a right to its enjoyment exists in the general public; and, if a use is public in this sense, it does not lose this quality merely because of an incidental private advantage. Sexauer v. Star Milling Co., 90 N. E. 474, 477, 173 Ind. 342, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

It is not necessary that the whole community, or any considerable portion thereof, should directly enjoy or participate in the improvement to make a use public, but if the proposed improvement tends to enlarge the resources and promote the productive power of any considerable number of the community, the use is public; and hence the fact that the principal-consumer of the water of a water company, chartered under Act May 16, 1869 (P. L. 226), will be a railroad company, and that, from the nature of the country, few of the citizens can engage in commercial or manufacturing enterprises, is immaterial on the question of public use. Jacobs v. Clearview Water Supply Co., 69 Atl. 870, 872, 220 Pa. 388, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410 (quoting Mills, Em. Dom. § 12).

To constitute a "public use" authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain, it is not required that the entire community, or even a considerable portion of it, should directly participate in the benefits to be derived from the property taken. Riche v. Bar Harbor Water Co., 75 Me. 91, 96, 97.

The "public use" which will authorize the taking of property under power of eminent domain need not be the use of the whole state or any considerable portion of it, but the use and benefit must be in common and not to particular individuals. Every "public use" is in a measure local and benefits a particular section more than others, and this is true of railroads as well as highways. Madera R. Co. v. Raymond Granite Co., 87 Pac. 27, 30, 31, 3 Cal. App. 668 (citing County of Madera v. Raymond Granite Co., 72 Pac. 915, 139 Cal. 128; Sherman v. Buick, 32 Cal. 253, 91 Am. Dec. 577; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 161; Lindsay Irrigation Co. v. Mehrtens, 32 Pac. 802, 97 Cal. 676).

Judicial or legislative question

Whether a use is public or private is a question, not for the Legislature, but for the judiciary. Arnsperger v. Crawford, 61 Atl. 413, 415, 101 Md. 247, 70 L. R. A. 497.

Whether the contemplated use of property proposed to be taken by a private corporation is a public use is a question of law. McMillan v. Noyes, 72 Atl. 759, 761, 75 N. H. 258; Rockingham County Light & Power Co. v. Hobbs, 58 Atl. 46, 72 N. H. 531, 532, 66 L. R. A. 581.

Acts 30th Gen. Assem. p. 61, c. 68, § 1, authorizing the creation of drainage districts, and declaring that the drainage of surface waters from agricultural lands shall be considered a public benefit, does not authorize a taking of property for private use by declaring what constitutes a public use, and invading the right of the courts to determine whether in any particular case the drainage of agricultural lands is a public benefit; the act merely marking out a general field within which the drainage of lands shall be deemed a public benefit. Sisson v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 455, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440.

Laws 1895, c. 232 (Gen. St. 1902, § 8694), authorizing a railroad company, which has acquired more than three-fourths of the stock of another railroad company, and cannot agree with the holders of the outstanding stock for purchase thereof, to condemn it on a finding that it will be for the public interest, is within the power of the Legislature. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Offield, 59 Atl. 510, 511, 77 Conn. 417.

Private or public agency

That a corporation purposes to engage in a private use in addition to serving a public use does not deprive it of the right to exercise eminent domain for the public use. Shasta Power Co. v. Walker, 149 Fed. 568; Walker v. Shasta Power Co., 160 Fed. 856, 860, 87 C. C. A. 660, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725.

A corporation organized under Act Feb. 20, 1902 (23 St. at Large, p. 1168), for the erection of a union depot, with its connecting necessities, is a corporation organized for a "public use," so that the provision in such act authorizing it to condemn land is not unconstitutional. Riley v. Charleston Union Station Co., 51 S. E. 485, 496, 71 S. C. 457, 110 Am. St. Rep. 579.

Under Const. art. 1, § 17, prohibiting grant of irrevocable and uncontrollable franchises, incorporation of a terminal railroad company under Act May 9, 1905 (Acts 29th Leg. c. 109) did not constitute a contract which could not be modified by subsequent legislation, as affecting the company's right to accept and rely on the subsequent amendment of the act in 1907 (Acts 30th Leg. c. 157), by acting under the amendment, so as to make the operation of the road a public use, entitling the company to exercise the right of eminent domain as a common carrier, within Const. art. 10, §§ 1, 2. Houston Belt & Terminal R. Co. v. Hornberger (Tex.) 143 S. W. 272, 277.

Public benefit synonymous

"Public use" is not synonymous with "public benefit." Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pier, 118 N. W. 857, 862, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

"The expressions 'public interest' and 'public use' are not synonymous. The establishment of furnaces, mills, and manufactures, the building of churches and hotels, and other similar enterprises, are more or less matters of public concern, and promote, in a general sense, the public welfare. But they lie without the domain of public uses for which private ownership may be displaced by compulsory proceedings." Smith v. Smythe, 90 N. E. 1121, 1123, 197 N. Y. 457, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524 (quoting In re Niagara Falls & W. R. Co., 15 N. E. 429, 432, 108 N. Y. 375, 385). And so where a railroad condemned land for public use and rented it to a wholesale grocery company, the use of the land by the grocery company was not a public use, for, while it might be a public benefit or public interest, no obligation rested upon the grocery company to conduct its business for the benefit of the public; the true criterion of a public use being whether the public may enjoy it by right or by permission only, and the terms "public interest" and "public use" not being synonymous. Neitzel v. Spokane International Ry. Co., 117 Pac. 864, 65 Wash. 100, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522.

Drainage

It is not necessary that the entire state should directly participate in the benefits of a drainage district to constitute it a "public use," within the constitutional requirement that property shall not be taken without the consent of the owner except for a public use. Lee Wilson & Co. v. Wm. R. Compton Bond & Mortgage Co., 146 S. W. 110, 112, 103 Ark. 452.

The use of lands for the purpose of constructing thereon a ditch of a drainage district organized under the drainage and levee act of 1879 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1899, c. 42) is a "public use," within Eminent Domain Act, § 2 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 47), and such drainage district having the right under Const. 1870, art. 4, § 31, as amended November 28, 1878 (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 138), and laws in pursuance thereof, to construct their ditches "across the land of others," it may avail itself of the provisions of the eminent domain act to obtain a right of way for a ditch. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Polecat Drainage Dist., 72 N. E. 684, 685, 213 Ill. 83.

Lands taken or damaged by a drainage district for its purposes are taken or damaged for a "public use." Bradbury v. Vandalia Levee & Drainage Dist., 86 N. E. 163, 165, 236 Ill. 36, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 15 Ann. Cas. 904.

It is competent for the Legislature to authorize the taking of private property for the drainage of agricultural lands, the taking being for a public use. Sisson v. Board of Sup'rs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 458, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440.

Electricity

Where the only present market of a power company for electric current is a town and its inhabitants, and its only present purpose is to supply electric light thereto, the use is a public one, so as to authorize the exercise of the power of eminent domain. State ex rel. Weyerhaeuser Lumber Co. v. Superior Court for Snohomish County, 127 Pac. 591, 593, 71 Wash. 84.

Fishing

"The reason of the case and the settled practice of free government must be our guides in determining what is or is not to be regarded as a public use, and that can only be considered such where the government is supplying its own needs or is furnishing facilities to its citizens in regard to those matters of public interest, convenience, and welfare which, on account of their peculiar character and the difficulty of making provisions for them otherwise, it is alike proper, useful, and needful for the government to provide." The right to fish in an inland lake in New Jersey cannot be separated from the ownership of the lake and taken under the power of eminent domain, because, first, the natural supply of fish therein is so small as to be incapable of meeting the public demand, and, second, the object of acquiring such a right is not use which implies utility, but mere sport or pastime. Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission, 57 Atl. 398, 400, 71 N. J. Law, 303, 309, 69 L. R. A. 768, 108 Am. St. Rep. 749, 2 Ann. Cas. 48 (quoting Cooley, Const. Lim. 553).

Highway or street

The taking of land by a county for the widening of a public highway is the taking of land for a "public use," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subds. 3, 4, Pol. Code, § 2681, and County Government Act, § 25, subd. 4

(Gen. Laws 1903, p. 121), relating to the establishment and alteration of highways. Mendocino County v. Peters, 82 Pac. 1122, 1123, 2 Cal. App. 24.

Since streets in cities must of necessity be given over at times to the use of railways and transportation companies, and such use is itself a public one, an objection that a city desired to condemn land to widen a street to permit a railway company having a franchise thereon to double its tracks, and that the same was a private and not a public use, was unsustainable. City of Tacoma v. Brown, 125 Pac. 940, 941, 69 Wash. 538.

The use of property for a street or highway is necessarily public. "One of the oldest and commonest of uses for which private property has been appropriated is the establishment of public highways. An appropriation of private property for the establishment of such highways has been held uniformly to be for a 'public use.'" And the taking of property for a public street is for a "public use," though the street so established be in the form of a cul-de-sac on either side of property of the city. State ex rel. Thomas v. Superior Court of Whatcom County, 85 Pac. 258, 258, 42 Wash. 521 (citing State ex rel. Schroeder v. Superior Court of Adams County, 69 Pac. 368, 29 Wash. 1; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Town of Lake, 71 Ill. 333).

Laws 1893, p. 135, c. 62, empowering cities to condemn property for "public corporate uses," includes power to condemn streets and alleys to be used by the public, as well as property to be used by the corporation itself. State ex rel. Jones v. Superior Court of Pierce County, 87 Pac. 521, 522, 44 Wash. 476.

The laying out of a townway involves the taking of private property for public use, under statute authority, and all statute requirements must be fully and strictly complied with. In re Conant, 67 Atl. 564, 566, 102 Me. 477, 120 Am. St. Rep. 512 (citing Leavitt v. Eastman, 77 Me. 117).

"Public," as applied to the power to condemn land for public use, means everybody. A city council has no authority to establish a street for the use of a private individual, and, in a proceeding to condemn land for the extension of a street terminating at the boundary of an owner's land, evidence that the proceeding is for the use of an individual, and not for the purpose of establishing a street for public use, is admissible. In re Twenty-first St., 96 S. W. 201, 205, 196 Mo. 498, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 113 Am. St. Rep. 766.

A street railroad is a "public use," very valuable to the public. Statute law authorizes municipalities to allow the use of streets for such purpose. A city may acquire land for such purpose. City of Bluefield v. Bailey, 57 S. E. 805, 807, 62 W. Va. 304.

Irrigation

Property is taken for "public use" when the taking is for use that will promote a public interest, and which use tends to develop the great natural resources of the commonwealth. The taking of property for the purpose of obtaining water for the irrigation of a farm and to render the same productive is a taking for a public use. Nash v. Clark, 75 Pac. 371, 373, 27 Utah, 158, 10 Am. St. Rep. 953, 1 Ann. Cas. 300.

Where an irrigation company which appropriated water from a river to irrigate a named county, organized subsidiary corporations for the purchase of the land in that territory, and transferred to them perpetual water rights for the irrigation of land owned by them, there was no dedication of the water right to public use; the essential feature of a public use being that it shall not be confined to privileged individuals, but open to the indefinite public, while in this case not every landowner could use water. Thayer v. California Development Co., 128 Pac. 21, 24, 164 Cal. 117.

Property is taken for a "public use," as intended by the Constitution, only where there results to the public some definite right or use in the business or undertaking to which the property is devoted. Acts 1895, p. 21, c. 21 (Rev. St. 1895, tit. 60, c. 2), authorizes the organization of corporations for the construction of reservoirs, ditches, etc., and the furnishing of water "to all persons entitled to the same" for irrigation and other purposes, to make contracts for the sale of permanent water rights, to lease, to rent, and to otherwise dispose of water, and provides that all persons possessing land adjacent to any ditch shall have a right of water for any of the purposes mentioned at just prices, and that, if any shortage occurs, the distribution of water shall be pro rata. Held, that the purposes for which the act authorizes the taking of private property are "public purposes" in character. Borden v. Trespacios Rice & Irrigation Co., 86 S. W. 11, 14, 98 Tex. 494, 107 Am. St. Rep. 640.

Mills and manufacturing

The appropriation of land for the use of water mills for the public convenience is a "public use." Newcomb v. Smith (Wis.) 1 Chand. 71, 76; Id. (Wis.) 2 Pin. 131, 135. See, also, Thien v. Voegtlander, 3 Wis. 461, 465; Pratt v. Brown, 3 Wis. 603, 613.

Mining

The construction and operation of roads and tramways for the development and working of mines is a public use, so that Rev. St. 1898, § 3588, as amended by Sess. Laws 1901, p. 19, c. 25, authorizing condemnation therefor, is constitutional. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Strickley, 78 Pac. 296, 297, 28 Utah, 215, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 107 Am. St. Rep. 711, 3 Ann. Cas. 1110. See, also,

Under the statutes of Montana, by which property taken for mining and milling ores is for a public use, and may be condemned by an individual or corporation for such use, where a bankrupt mining company had built an electric light and power plant for use in its business on the land of another, and the plant has come into possession of its trustee, on the filing of a petition by the owner of the land in the bankruptcy court to recover the land and the plant thereon, the trustee may defend on the ground that the taking was for a public use, and the court may permit him to retain the property for the estate, and may fix the compensation to be paid petitioner for the land. Bear Gulch Placer Mining Co. v. Walsh, 198 Fed. 351, 354.

Rev. St. Idaho 1887, § 5210, as amended by Act March 3, 1903 (7 Sess. Laws, p. 203), declaring that tunnels and other means of working mines are declared to be "public uses" within the statutes relating to eminent domain, and Act March 15, 1899 (5 Sess. Laws, p. 442), granting to any owner of ground with a tunnel located thereon the right to run the same through the claims of others on payment of all actual damages or injury done to the owner of the claims crossed by the tunnel, are not unconstitutional, as a deprivation of property without due process of law, in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution, in that the construction of a mining tunnel is in fact a private and not a "public use." Ballie v. Larson, 138 Fed. 177, 179 (citing Rev. St. 1887, § 5210, amended in 1903 by 7 Sess. Laws, p. 203).

Park

Acts 1899, pp. 250-252, c. 142, §§ 1-7, authorizing taxing districts and cities to condemn land beyond their corporate limits for parks and parkways, is not invalid as authorizing condemnation of land for a mere public convenience, as distinguished from a "public necessity" or "public use." City of Memphis v. Hastings, 86 S. W. 609, 612, 113 Tenn. 142, 69 L. R. A. 750.

A taking of land belonging to a corporation possessing the power of eminent domain by a railway company for a park at its terminal, attractive to pleasure seekers because of its scenic features, is not taking of land for a public use within Va. Code 1904, p. 576, c. 46a, § 1105e, subd. 52. Great Falls Power Co. v. Great Falls & O. D. R. Co., 52 S. E. 172, 173, 174, 104 Va. 416.

Playground

Since the physical development of a child attending school cannot be had without a suitable place for recreation and exercise, the condemnation of land adjacent to a school building for an athletic and play ground is a taking for public use. State ex rel. School District No. 56 v. Superior Court for Chelan County, 124 Pac. 484, 486, 69 Wash. 189.

Private road

The term "public use" means the same as "use by the public." The test whether the use is public or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property; whether the public has a legal right to the use, which cannot be gainsaid or denied or withdrawn at the pleasure of the owner. The expressions "public interest" and "public use" are not synonymous. "Public use" implies a possession, occupation, and enjoyment of the land by the public at large or by public agency. Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 25, §§ 100-121, declaring that any owner of land shall have a right to a road to or from his land to places of public worship, courthouses, etc., and may obtain a road or way by application in a certain manner, authorized the taking of private property for private use in violation of Const. art. 3, § 40, prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Arnsperger v. Crawford, 61 Atl. 418, 415, 101 Md. 247, 70 L. R. A. 497 (citing Lewis, Em. Dom. § 165; Mills, Em. Dom. § 26; Farmers' Market Co. v. Philadelphia R. & Terminal Co., 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 25; Matter of Niagara Falls & W. Ry. Co., 15 N. E. 429, 108 N. Y. 375).

Railroad

A railroad use of land is a "public use." Porter v. International Bridge Co., 93 N. E. 716, 718, 200 N. Y. 234, 21 Ann. Cas. 684.

The use of property reasonably necessary for the construction, maintenance, or operation of a railroad is a public use. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Kreszeszewski, 115 N. W. 679, 680, 17 N. D. 203.

The condemnation of land for a right of way for a regularly organized and chartered railroad is a taking for a "public use." Kansas City Interurban R. Co. v. Nelson, 91 S. W. 1036, 1037, 193 Mo. 297.

The fact that the main business of a railroad is "freight business and a business in bulk does not make it the less a 'public use.'" Collier v. Union R. Co., 88 S. W. 155, 162, 113 Tenn. 96.

The acquisition of a crossing by one railroad over another contemplates the taking of private property for "public use" under the law of eminent domain. Wellsburg & S. L. R. Co. v. Panhandle Traction Co., 48 S. E. 746, 748, 56 W. Va. 18.

In view of Const. art. 12, § 3, relating to the taxation of mining property and article 15, §§ 5, 7, making railroads public highways, and all railroad companies public carriers, and in view of Rev. Codes, § 7331, authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain, for roads, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes and dumping places for working mines, etc., a railroad built on the streets of a city for the cartage of materials to and from a mine is a public use. Kipp v. Davis-Daly Copper Co., 110 Pac. 237, 240, 41 Mont. 509, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, 21 Ann. Cas. 1872.

A street railroad is a "public use," very valuable to the public. City of Bluefield v. Bailey, 57 S. E. 805, 807, 62 W. Va. 304.

Sewer

A sewerage system is a "public use" within a statute authorizing the exercise of the power of eminent domain by any incorporated city, town, or village for any and all public uses. Village of Twin Falls v. Stubbs, 96 Pac. 195, 196, 15 Idaho, 68.

Water supply

The supplying of pure water by a corporation to the inhabitants of a city, town, or village is a public use, within the law of eminent domain. State ex rel. Shropshire v. Superior Court of Pacific County, 99 Pac. 3, 5, 51 Wash. 386.

PUBLIC USE (In Patent Law)

See, also, On Sale (In Patent Law).

A single unrestricted sale by the inventor of his invention is a public sale, or puts it "on sale," within the meaning and intent of Rev. St. U. S. § 4886. And while a shop test of a machine may be sufficient to show a reduction to practice, especially in view of favorable results being obtained by a later actual test under the conditions of ordinary use for which the machine is intended, it does not necessarily remove the machine from the domain of experiment, so as to constitute a conditional sale a public sale, under the statute. In re Mills, 25 App. D. C. 377, 383.

Where the inventor of a cigar pocket for more than two years before applying for a patent therefor made and sold such pockets in the regular course of his business, such articles were in "public use" and "on sale," and defeated his right to a patent under Rev. St. § 4886, although they were not kept by him in stock, but were made up only on orders received; it being the custom of the trade to take such orders by sample. A device will be "on sale" and in "public use" if it is offered for sale, whether any specimen of it is actually sold or not. Dittgen v. Racine Paper Goods Co., 181 Fed. 394, 398.

The use of a machine while it was being perfected, in a room from which the public and all others not engaged in its operation were excluded, changes and improvements being made from time to time, although extending back to more than two years before application was made for a patent, was an experimental and not a public use, and did not invalidate the patent granted therefor, and it is immaterial that the product of such experimental use was sold. Penn Electrical & Mfg. Co. v. Conroy, 150 Fed. 943, 946, 87 C. C. A. 149.

The mere exhibition of an experimentally constructed machine by the inventor to an audience, accompanied by an explanation of the invention, no charge being made, is not such a "public use" as will defeat his right to a patent applied for more than two years afterwards. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co., 140 Fed. 860, 865.

An experimental use becomes a "public use" within the federal statute, invalidating a patent if the invention therein described was in public use earlier than two years before the application was filed, when it extends further, either in time or in number of instances, than is reasonably required to test the invention. National Phonograph Co. v. Lambert Co., 142 Fed. 164, 166, 73 C. C. A. 382 (quoting and adopting Walk., Pat. [3d Ed.], § 94).

"By the provisions of the statutes, if the invention was in public use or on sale in this country with or without the consent of the inventor more than two years before his application was filed, the grant of a patent is barred. * * * The bar of public use arises from use by the inventor himself or by others, but in either case it must be such as makes the invention accessible by some members of the public. Public use, however, does not mean a general adoption or use by the public as distinguished from a secret use. Exhibition of a design is a 'public use.' A single instance of public use by a single individual will operate as a bar. General and continuous use is unnecessary. The bar arises whether or not the inventor knows of or consents to the public use. To constitute public use the invention must have been complete. This does not mean, however, that the machine embodying it must have been perfect, but merely that it shall have been sufficiently perfect to be practically applied to its intended purpose. * * * Use of the invention in secret, either by the inventor or his agents under an injunction of secrecy, is not a public use. But permitting another to use the invention without any injunction of secrecy is public use, although the use may have been concealed from others. Use of an invention in public, however, in its natural and intended way, is a public use, although from its nature it is concealed from the general view of the public." The use of a composition for lining pulp digesters in the practical lining of digesters for use in a number of different plants by persons to whom it had been disclosed without secrecy was a "public use," which, if continued for more than two years, would bar a patent whether such use was known to the inventor or not, unless the delay was for the purpose of perfecting the invention. Hentschel v. Carthage Sulphite

Pulp Co., 169 Fed. 114, 123, 124 (quoting and adopting definition in 30 Cyc. 865-867).

The manufacture of a machine upon an order for its construction, followed by its delivery and acceptance, constitutes a "sale" within the patent statute. National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co., 178 Fed. 79, 83, 101 C. C. A. 569

PUBLIC UTILITY

The term "public utility," wherever used in the Public Utilities Act (Chapter 238, Laws 1911), means "every corporation, company, individual, association of persons, their trustees, lessees or receivers" that may own, control, or manage, except for private use, any equipment, plant, generating machinery, or any part thereof in the operation of the business enterprises specified in section 8 of that act; and the term, as used in said act, nowhere means the physical equipment, plant, or machinery used in conducting any such business. State ex rel. Marshall v. Wyandotte County Gas Co., 127 Pac. 639, 640, 88 Kan. 165.

For detail means, by section 1797m1, the person or persons, natural or artificial, in touch with the public in connection with public utility service, whether as owner, operator, manager, or controller, or private or quasi-public entity, is a public utility, the physical and other things in use, public utility property, and the subject of the service, —a utility—the term "public utility" being used to characterize the physical situation and condition as to immediate authority over it. Calumet Service Co. v. City of Chilton, 135 N. W. 131, 143, 148 Wis. 384.

That the owner of an office and manufacturing building sells to three neighbors surplus heat, light, and power, left after supplying his tenants, does not render the operation of the plant, which was intended to supply his own building only, a "public utility," within Laws 1907, c. 499, §§ 1797m—1 to 1797m—108, regulating public utilities. Cawker v. Meyer, 133 N. W. 157, 158, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510.

Extent of use by public

Whether a plant furnishing heat, light, or power is a "public utility," within Laws 1907, c. 499, §§ 1797m—1 to 1797m—108, regulating public utilities, does not necessarily depend upon the number of consumers; it being sufficient that the plant is devoted to the use of all the members of the public who may require it. Cawker v. Meyer, 133 N. W. 157, 159, 147 Wis. 320, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510.

The general incorporation statute (St. 1898, §§ 1771-1791m) authorizes the forming of a corporation for certain enumerated purposes, among others, the furnishing of power. Laws 1907, p. 1130, c. 499, defines "public utility," as used in the act, to embrace every corporation that then or thereafter may operate or control a plant or equipment for the production or furnishing of power to or for the public, and provides that every utility must furnish reasonably adequate service and facilities, and that the charge made for power furnished, etc., must be reasonable, prohibits unreasonable charges as unlawful, and authorizes the railroad commission to fix charges when found unreasonable, etc. Held, that the use of a company organized under the act of 1898 to furnish power is a public, and not a private, use. Wisconsin River Imp. Co. v. Pler, 118 N. W. 857, 861, 137 Wis. 325, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 538.

Electricity

A corporation obtaining the franchise granted by Laws 1901, c. 462, authorizing certain persons and their assigns to build a dam across the Wisconsin river to obtain electric power, is a "public utility," within the public utilities act (St. 1898, §§ 1797m33, 1797m89, 1797m91, and 1797m92, as added by Laws 1907, c. 499), forbidding any public utility to charge a greater or less compensation for any service than is specified in filed schedules of rates, and prohibiting unjust discriminations; and a corporation contracting to supply power may not resort to any subterfuge, whereby a consumer may receive free current to a specified amount per year. President and Trustees of Villages of Kilbourn City v. Southern Wisconsin Power Co., 135 N. W. 499, 503, 149 Wis. 168.

Fire department

The erection and equipment of public fire stations and street cleaning equipment and machinery to be owned by a city are within the term "public utilities," as used in Const. art. 10, § 27, authorizing the issue of bonds for the purchase of public utilities. Oklahoma City v. State, 115 Pac. 1108, 1109, 28 Okl. 780.

A proposition attempting to refer to the qualified property tax paying voters of a city whether the city shall be allowed to become indebted for the purchase, construction, or repair of public utilities, as expressly permitted by Const. art. 10, § 27, must be stated in such specific language as to apprise the voters of the nature of the public utility the city wishes to purchase, construct, or repair, and the proposition as to whether a city should be authorized to issue bonds in a certain amount to raise means for its improvement of the fire department is too general; fire department improvements, while including many things that might be public utilities, also including many that are not. Coleman v. Frame, 109 Pac. 923, 929, 26 Okl. 193, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556.

Hall

A convention hall to be owned, controlled, and used exclusively by a city to accommodate public gatherings of the people, and for such other public uses as may be designated by the mayor and council, is a "public utility" within the meaning of that term as used in Const. art. 10, § 27 (Bunn's Ed. § 293), authorizing incorporated cities or towns to become indebted for the purpose of purchasing or constructing public utilities. State ex rel. Manhattan Const. Co. v. Barnes, 97 Pac. 997, 998, 22 Okl. 191.

Public park

A public park is a "public utility" within Const. art. 10, § 27, authorizing a city by a majority vote to become indebted in a larger amount than that specified in section 26 to purchase or construct public utilities or repair the same. City of Ardmore v. State ex rel. Best, 104 Pac. 913, 916, 24 Okl. 862; Barnes v. Hill, 99 Pac. 927, 928, 23 Okl. 207.

Sewer

A sewer is a public utility within Const. art. 10, § 27, authorizing an incorporated city or town by a majority vote to become indebted in a larger amount than that specified in section 26 to purchase or construct public utilities. State ex rel. Edwards v. Millar, 96 Pac. 747, 753, 21 Okl. 448.

Street improvement

Street improvements do not constitute "public utilities" within Const. art. 10, § 27, providing that any incorporated city may, by a majority of the qualified property tax paying voters of such city, voting at an election to be held for that purpose, be allowed to become indebted in a larger amount than that specified in section 26 (relating to the limitation of municipal indebtedness) for purchasing or constructing public utilities, or for repairing them, to be owned exclusively by such city, since, while streets are directly under the charge and control of municipal authorities, such control is subject to the paramount authority of the state. Coleman v. Frame, 109 Pac. 928, 929, 26 Okl. 193, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556; Hooper v. State ex rel. Cline, 110 Pac. 912, 26 Okl. 646; Dingman v. City of Sapulpa, 111 Pac. 319, 27 Okl. 116.

Street railroad

San Francisco Charter of 1907, art. 12, § 14, approved by the Legislature November 23, 1907 (St. Ex. Sess. 1907, p. 37), and previous charter provisions authorizing acquisition of "public utilities," includes municipally owned street railways; the term comprehending any utility employed in rendering quasi public service, such as waterworks, gasworks, telephone system, etc. Platt v. City and County of San Francisco, 110 Pac. 304, 306, 158 Cal. 74.

Switch track

A switch track which is part of a general railway system, and which may be used by any or all who have occasion to ship freight over it, and which is not designed for the exclusive use or convenience of any particular person or corporation, is, although from its location and surroundings only a limited number of persons will have occasion to use it, a public utility. Stockdale v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., 77 Pac. 849, 851, 28 Utah, 201.

Waterworks

Waterworks are "public utilities" subject to the exclusive control of the city in its governmental capacity for the convenience, health, and general welfare of the city. The city determines the amount of water mains, where to be laid, and the number and location of fire hydrants. Over these the individual has no control. In the exercise of this political power the city has discretion, with which the courts have no right to interfere. Asher v. Hutchinson Water, etc., Co., 71 Pac. 813, 814, 66 Kan. 496, 61 L. R. A. 52.

PUBLIC VEHICLE

See Public Conveyance.

PUBLIC WAREHOUSE

A "public warehouse" is a place that is held out to the public as being one where any member of the public who is willing to pay the regular charges may store his goods and then sell or pledge them by transferring the receipt given him by the keeper or manager. Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 143 Fed. 32, 40, 74 C. C. A. 186.

Rev. St. 1899, § 7625, declares a "public warehouse" to be a building, elevator, or warehouse wherever state grain inspection may be established by the state board of railroad and warehouse commissioners and having a capacity of not less than 50,000 bushels for the purpose of storing grain of different owners for compensation. State ex inf. Hadley v. Goffee, 91 S. W. 486, 489, 192 Mo. 670.

PUBLIC WATERS

The term "public waters," as used in Sess. Laws 1903, p. 223, relating to the appropriation and division of the public waters, refers to all water running in natural channel streams, and the state may by proper application regulate the appropriation and use thereof. Boise City Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 27, 10 Idaho, 38.

By the adoption of our state Constitution, all of the unappropriated waters at that time were declared to be "public waters," and it matters not through or over whose land they flow. The Legislature has full authority to provide the method and procedure of appropriating such waters to a beneficial use by all persons and corporations. Speer v. Stephenson, 102 Pac. 365, 368, 16 Idaho, 707 (quoting and adopting Idaho Power & Transportation Co. v. Stephenson, 101 Pac. 821, 16 Idaho, 418; and citing and adopting Boise Irrigation & Land Co. v. Stewart, 77 Pac. 25, 321, 10 Idaho, 38).

A natural fresh-water pond containing 15 or more acres, though situated in the midst of and entirely surrounded by the land of a private owner, is "public water," and the ownership in the land ceases at the water's edge or at high-water mark. Dolbeer v. Suncock Waterworks Co., 58 Atl. 504, 506, 72 N. H. 562.

PUBLIC WAY

As street, see Street.
See, also, Public Track.

There are different kinds of public ways and different kinds of private ways, but all ways are included in the one or the other general classification, though some may partake of the nature of both, being maintained and operated for private gain and for use by the public. Jones v. Venable, 47 S. E. 549, 550, 120 Ga. 1, 1 Ann. Cas. 185.

The character of a "way," whether it is public or private, is determined by the extent of the right to use it, and not by the extent to which that right is exercised. If all the people have the right to use it, it is a public way, although the number who may have occasion to exercise the right is very small. A road or way established under a statute authorizing a mineowner to establish ways from a railroad to his coal mine is a public way in the sense that the public may use and enjoy it in the way in which roads and highways are ordinarily used by it, and the mineowner who procured it to be established must use the special privileges which the act confers on him in such manner as not to destroy the right of the public or prevent its enjoyment. Railroad Commission of Texas v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas, 80 S. W. 102, 104, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 52 (citing Phillips v. Watson, 18 N. W. 659, 63 Iowa, 28).

If all the people have the right to use a way it is a "public way," though the number who have occasion to exercise the right is very small. Wolford v. Fisher, 87 Pac. 530, 48 Or. 479, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991.

An alley of small dimensions actually used by only a limited number of persons, but which the public have a general right to use, may be regarded as a "public way." Johnston v. Lonstorf, 107 N. W. 459, 461, 128 Wis. 17 (quoting and adopting definition in Elliott, Roads & S. [2d Ed.] §§ 23, 24, 25).

Alleys are "public ways" under the control of municipal authorities. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Boles, 115 S. W. 375, 377, 88 Ark. 533. See, also, City of Covington v. Schlosser, 133 S. W. 987, 988, 141 Ky. 838 (quoting statutory definition).

"Whatever may be the dimensions of a way, if it be opened to the free use of the public, it is a highway; nor is its character determined by the number of persons who actually use it for passage. The right of the public to use the way, and not the size of the way or the number of persons who choose to exercise that right, determines its character. An alley of small dimensions, actually used by only a limited number of persons, but which the public have a general right to use, may be regarded as a 'public way.' It is to be understood, of course, that the way cannot be deemed a public one so as to charge the local authorities with the duty of maintaining it, unless it has been legally established or accepted; but, if it is so established or accepted, it is to be considered one of the public ways, whatever may be its size or situation, provided it is suitable for any kind of travel by the public." Tise v. Whitaker-Harvey Co., 57 S. E. 210, 211, 144 N. C. 507 (quoting and adopting the definition in Elliott, Roads & S. § 24). See, also, State v. Hamilton, 70 S. W. 619, 621, 109 Tenn. 276 (quoting Elliott, Roads & S. § 120).

Where in separating the grade of a street and a railroad, under the provisions of St. 1900, p. 471, c. 472, acting under an order of the city council authorizing the mayor to designate the streets which should be closed, and to fix the conditions under which they should remain closed, the mayor authorized the railroad company, which was required to perform the work, to close a part of the street, it nevertheless remained a "public way," which the city was charged with the primary duty of keeping "reasonably safe for the use of travelers," under Pub. St. 1882, c. 52, § 1. Torphy v. Fall River, 74 N. E. 465, 466, 188 Mass. 310.

The Brooklyn Bridge is a "public way" resting at each end upon land dedicated by a municipality under the laws of the state to a public purpose. Town of Nahant v. United States, 136 Fed. 273, 277, 70 C. C. A. 641, 69 L. R. A. 723.

PUBLIC WELFARE

See Inimical to the Public Welfare.

PUBLIC WHARF

A wharf in the harbor of a city, at the foot of a public street, built by a railway company under authority from the city, in addition to adequate terminal facilities, for the purpose of more conveniently procuring the transportation of freight beyond its own line by such carriers as it might select, is not a public wharf whose use can be demanded by a shipper, on payment of reasonable hire, for the purpose of employing vessels of his own selection for the further carriage of his goods. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. West Coast Naval Stores Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 745-748, 198 U. S. 483, 49 L. Ed. 1135, 1137.

Act March 3, 1899, c. 429, § 460, 30 Stat. 1336, provides that any person maintaining public docks, wharves, and warehouses in Alaska shall first obtain a license and pay a license fee of $100 per annum. By Act June 8, 1900, c. 786, § 29, 31 Stat. 330, 331, this provision was amended so as to impose a license tax on public docks, wharves, and warehouses of 10 cents per ton on freight handled or stored. Defendant operated a lighterage business in Nome, consisting of an aerial tramway operated from towers anchored on permanent concrete foundations several hundred feet out to sea. Along this tramway cargoes were discharged from vessels by means of lighters; defendant contracting with each vessel for lighterage services at an agreed price per ton. Held, that such structure constituted a "public wharf," which defendant had no right to operate without payment of the fee. John J. Sesnon Co. v. United States, 182 Fed. 573, 576, 579, 105 C. C. A. 111.

A wharf constructed at the end of a street under authority given a city by Local Acts 1887, p. 805, Act No. 533, c. 14, § 3, to construct public wharves and to lease wharfing and landing privileges thereon, in such manner as to preserve the right of all persons to a free passage over the same with their baggage, is not subject to all the incidents of a highway, so as to prevent its use as a wharf as other wharves may be used. "There is no instance in which the term 'public wharf' has been used in our legislation to indicate anything analogous to a dedication to any public use like that of highways. Such a public right is unknown to the public law." Kemp v. Stradley, 97 N. W. 41, 42, 134 Mich. 676 (quoting Horn v. People, 26 Mich. 221).

PUBLIC WORK

See Works of Improvement and Public Works.

See, also, Public Improvement.

The meaning of the words "public work," as used in Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 260, 28 Stat. 278, giving a right of action to persons only supplying labor and materials for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building, or public work, is broader and more comprehensive than the dictionary meaning given to public works. "Public work" as used in the act is susceptible of application to any constructive work of a public character, and is not limited to fixed works. United States, to Use of Standard Furniture Co., v. Henningsen, 82 Pac. 171, 173, 40 Wash. 87.

County jail

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 34, §§ 22, 24, 26, providing that each county shall be a body politic and corporate, with power to purchase and hold real estate necessary for the uses of the county, and requiring the county board to erect or otherwise provide, a suitable courthouse, jail, and other necessary county buildings, a county may condemn land for a county jail, under Eminent Domain Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 47) § 2, providing that, where the right to construct or maintain any public work has been conferred on any corporate or municipal authority, public body, etc., the party authorized to construct the public work may proceed to condemn the land necessary; a county being a public municipal corporation, and a county jail being a "public work." Mercer County v. Wolff, 86 N. E. 708, 710, 237 Ill. 74.

Garbage disposal

The term "public work," as used in a provision of a city charter prohibiting the assembly from directly contracting for any public work, or improvement or repairs thereon, or fixing the price or rate therefor, and prescribing the method by which such work or improvement, etc., shall be done, has no technical meaning, and includes every species and character of work done for the public and for which the taxpaying citizens are liable. It includes contracts for the removal and disposition of city garbage, which contract was let to a sanitary company, which disposed of the garbage by the method known as "reduction." State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 568, 178 Mo. 272.

Improvement of navigation

Dredging a channel in Boston Harbor is not a "public work of the United States" within the meaning of the act of August 1, 1892, forbidding a contractor upon any public work of the United States, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, to permit or require employes thereon to work more than eight hours each day. Ellis v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 600, 602, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. Ed. 1047, 11 Ann. Cas. 589.

The widening or deepening of navigable streams, or the improvement of those which are not navigable, so that they may become so, and the construction or improvement of harbors, are public works conferring benefits on the public at large, the cost of which must be met by general taxation, and cannot be raised by special assessment on riparian property. People ex rel. Deneen v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 769, 241 Ill. 290.

Lighting

The term "public works," used in the supplement to an act entitled "An act relating to regulating and providing for the government of cities" (P. L. 1905, p. 50), does not apply to a lighting contract. Atlantic Gas & Water Co. v. Atlantic City, 63 Atl. 997, 73 N. J. Law, 360.

Sewer or street

"The municipality of Denver, though created by a constitutional amendment by a direct vote of the people, and having the power to frame its own charter, is just as much an agency of the state, for the purpose of government, as if it was organized under a general law passed by the General Assembly. The mode of its creation does not change the nature of its relation to the state. Like cities and towns organized under the General Statutes, it is still a part of the state government. It is as much amenable to state control in all matters of a public, as distinguished from matters of a local, character, as are other municipalities." While the work of the city in building a sanitary sewer is local or "private," in that it affects, primarily, its own citizens, it is directly connected with the public health, and is a matter of concern to the people of the entire state. It is not municipal work of a private character, and hence is within 3 Mills' Ann. St. Rev. Supp. § 2801 a-c, restricting the hours of labor on work undertaken in behalf of the state toward any municipality, etc. Keefe v. People, 87 Pac. 791, 793, 37 Colo. 317, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 131 (citing and adopting Atkin v. Kansas, 24 Sup. Ct. 124, 191 U. S. 218, 48 L. Ed. 148; Id., 87 Pac. 519, 64 Kan. 174, 97 Am. St. Rep. 343).

Vessel or dredge

A vessel building for the United States, the title to which passes to the government as fast as paid for, is a "public work" within the meaning of Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, as amended by Act Feb. 24, 1905, c. 778, 33 Stat. 811, requiring a bond from the contractor for the protection of persons furnishing labor or materials for the construction of public works. Title Guaranty & Trust Co. of Scranton, Pa., v. Crane Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 140, 141, 219 U. S. 24, 55 L. Ed. 72; Same v. Puget Sound Engine Works, 163 Fed. 168, 89 C. C. A. 618; United States v. Perth Amboy Shipbuilding & Engineering Co., 137 Fed. 689, 893. But a contrary view has been expressed by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, which has decided that the words "public works," as used in this statute, relate to fixed improvements, such as fortifications, river, and harbor improvements, etc., and do not include a movable article, such as a seagoing dredge. Penn Iron Co. v. William R. Trigg Co., 56 S. E. 329, 330, 106 Va. 557.

PUBLIC WORSHIP

See House of Public Worship; Place of Public Worship.

One who willfully disturbed a Sunday school was indictable at common law, and also under Revisal 1905, §§ 3704, 3706, prohibiting the disturbing of a meeting of people held for public worship, etc. State v. Branner, 63 S. E. 169, 171, 149 N. C. 559.

PUBLIC WRITING

A judicial record is a "public writing." Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Boyd, 100 Pac. 239, 242, 155 Cal. 193 (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1894).

PUBLIC WRONG

"Public wrongs" are breaches and violations of public rights and duties which affect the whole community, considered as a community. United States v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 156 Fed. 182, 185 (citing Huntington v. Attrill, 13 Sup. Ct. 228, 146 U. S. 668, 36 L. Ed. 1123).

A wrong of a nature which affects the rights and interests of people in almost every city and village in the state, as well as persons in the country, when committed by a public service corporation, is a public wrong, and an action to restrain the same by the state is within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. State v. Pacific Express Co., 115 N. W. 619, 624, 80 Neb. 823.

PUBLICLY EXECUTED

A sentence that defendant be hanged "at the usual place of execution," which is fixed by Cr. Code 1902, § 660, within the county jail, or the inclosure thereof, is not a sentence "to be publicly executed." State v. Anderson, 67 S. E. 237, 238, 85 S. C. 229, 137 Am. St. Rep. 887.

PUBLICLY PROFESS TO BE PHYSICIAN

Code, § 2579, declares that any person shall be held as practicing medicine or to be a physician within the meaning of the chapter, prohibiting the practice of medicine without a certificate, "who shall publicly profess to cure or heal." One accused under the chapter of such offense claimed to discover and remove cause of disease so as to give nature a chance, to do which he professed to "stop the leaks in the nervous system, and repair the damages done," by "rest and dietetics." He announced himself as a graduate of a unique medical school and as "master mechanic of the human body" who would remove the cause if any organ was not working well, or if there was pressure on a nerve causing pain. He claimed his system gave a permanent cure in difficult diseases, and that he proved his system by getting good results among those who had tried other systems. Held, a public profession to cure and heal within the meaning of the section. The definition of the section also includes any one "who shall publicly profess to be a physician * * * and assume the duties." Held, that publishing a card as "doctor of neurology and ophthalmology" was a public profession that he was a physician, and this, with the assumption of duties as such, came within the meaning of the section. State v. Wilhite, 109 N. W. 730, 731, 132 Iowa, 226, 11 Ann. Cas. 180.

PUBLICATION

See Indecent Publications; Last Publication; Limited Publication; Privileged Publication; Restricted Publication. Anonymous publication, see Anonymous. Fifteen days' published notice, see Fifteen.

Published four consecutive weeks, see Four.

In copyright law

Entering an original painting with the copyright reserved at an exhibition of the Royal Academy, whose by-laws prohibit copying, is not such a "publication" as defeats the right to take out a copyright in such painting. American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, 28 Sup. Ct. 72, 77, 207 U. S. 284, 52 L. Ed. 208, 12 Ann. Cas. 595.

In its ordinary acceptation, the word "publication" means "the act of publishing a thing or making it public; offering to public notice; or rendering it accessible to public scrutiny." In copyright law, it is "the act of making public a book; that is, offering or communicating it to the public by sale or distribution of copies." Without undertaking to state the qualifications of this definition, as applied to certain incidents, by which the book might be exhibited by the author, prior to copyrighting it, without amounting to a publication, within the spirit of the statute, it is safe to say that the appearance of a pamphlet, after its delivery to plaintiff by the publisher, in a public hotel, subject to be seen and read by any person about so public a place, certainly was a "rendering it accessible to public scrutiny," and was likewise a "communicating it to the public by distribution of copies." D'Ole v. Kansas City Star Co., 94 Fed. 840, 842.

In patent law

The sale of an article made under a secret process is a "publication" of the process, if and when one can by his own ingenuity ascertain therefrom the process by which it is made. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 378.

Of libel or slander

To constitute a "publication" of slander, it is essential that the defamation not only be heard, but be understood, by some third person. Cameron v. Cameron, 144 S. W. 171, 173, 162 Mo. App. 110.

To "publish" means to make publicly known, to proclaim to the public, so that an averment that defendants "did publish" the alleged libelous matter imported a communication to others, and it was not necessary to aver in detail the manner of the publication. Morgan v. Black, 63 S. E. 821, 822, 182 Ga. 67 (citing Townsh. Sland. & L. §§ 324, 325; Wilcox v. Moon, 22 Atl. 80, 63 Vt. 481; Indianapolis Sun Co. v. Horrell, 53 Ind. 527; Hamilton v. Lowery, 71 N. E. 56, 33 Ind. App. 184); Hamilton v. Lowery, 71 N. E. 54, 56, 33 Ind. App. 184 (citing Walstel v. Holman, 2 Hall [N. Y.] 193, and quoting from Indianapolis Sun Co. v. Horrell, 53 Ind. 527).

In pleading publication the name of the person or persons to whom the communication or publication was made need not be given, and the word "published" imports that the words were spoken in the presence of some third person, but the complaint should allege with exactness the time when and the place where publication was made, unless the statute otherwise provides. Perry v. Dozier, 49 South. 909, 913, 161 Ala. 292.

The dictation of a libelous letter to a stenographer, who copies it on a typewriter, and the subsequent signing and mailing thereof, by the person dictating is a sufficient "publication" of the contents to support libel. Ferdon v. Dickens, 49 South. 888, 891, 161 Ala. 181.

A letter written to attorneys of another, relating to the business in hand, is not published, in the sense of the law of libel. Dickinson v. Hathaway, 48 South. 136, 137, 122 La. 644, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 33.

Where a person writes a defamatory letter, and sends it in a sealed envelope, through the United States mail, to the person defamed thereby, who receives it, and reads the contents thereof to a third person, such reading will not constitute a "publication" of the libel by the writer thereof for the purposes of a civil action. Lyon v. Lash, 88 Pac. 262, 74 Kan. 745, 11 Ann. Cas. 424.

A later patent was not in the prior art, so as to invalidate a patent in suit as a prior patent or "publication," although it was granted on an earlier application; but it may be proved by competent evidence that the later patentee was the original and first inventor by being the first to both conceive the invention and reduce it to practice, and such prior invention may be shown by his prior application, where there is no evidence to carry the invention of either patentee back of the date of his application, provided the invention of the patent in suit and of such application is the same. Sundh Electric Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 198 Fed. 94, 96, 117 C. C. A. 280.

Same—Single person

"Publication" in the law of libel relating to mercantile reports, is the preparation and delivery of the copy with the alleged libelous matter to some third person, and, to recover in such case, it is unnecessary to prove the issue and publication of numerous copies of the report, if, at a date prior to the suit, defendant prepared and delivered a copy to any firm, person, or corporation other than the plaintiffs themselves. Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 73 S. W. 668, 676, 174 Mo. 444.

Of newspaper

The day a notice is printed is not the day of publication, but publication takes place when the notice is seen and read in the paper by the public, though it need not reach all the public at the same time; and publication will date from the day when the public begins to receive it from the publisher. State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court, 122 S. W. 316, 317, 138 Mo. App. 427.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 13, § 1 (now St. 1909, c. 490, pt. 2, § 1), providing that "publication of any notice" shall mean the act of printing the notice for a successive number of weeks in a newspaper, etc., an advertisement of a tax sale must be published in English in a newspaper printed in English, and a publication in English of a notice in a French newspaper is insufficient. Connors v. City of Lowell, 95 N. E. 412, 415, 209 Mass. 111, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 627.

Laws 1909, p. 419, § 6, provides that the board of directors of education shall, before adopting text-books for use in public schools, advertise for bids in newspapers of general circulation published in the city or district. A large majority of the school districts have no paper published within their borders. Held, that this provision could not be construed as allowing the publication of an advertisement in a newspaper having a general circulation in, but not published in, the district, for a newspaper of "general circulation" need only circulate among all classes, and may be published in a place far distant from the district, and the provision requires the advertisement in a newspaper of general circulation published in the city or district; the word "published" clearly meaning the place where a newspaper is first issued or printed, and hence the section is invalid, as impossible to be obeyed. Polzin v. Rand, McNally & Co., 95 N. E. 623, 627, 250 Ill. 561, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 471.

Under a statute requiring notice of tax sale to be published once in each week for four successive weeks prior to the sale, where the tax sale in 1903 took place on May 19th, and that in 1904 on May 17th, and the affidavit of publication in each case declared that the notice was "printed and published" in a designated newspaper once in each week for four successive weeks, commencing on April 15th, and terminating on May 6th, it showed a sufficient publication; the term "published" being used in the sense of the physical act of printing the notice in a published newspaper, and not to refer to the term of notice, the office of the word "printed" in that connection being only to emphasize such meaning. Bauchier v. Hammer, 123 N. W. 132, 133, 134, 140 Wis. 648.

Kirby's Dig. § 7085, provides that the county clerk shall cause the delinquent tax list to be published weekly for two weeks, between the second Monday in May and the second Monday in June, in some newspaper in the county, if any be published there. Section 7086 provides that the clerk shall record the list, and shall certify at the foot of the record in what newspaper the same was published, and the date of publication, and for what length of time the same was published before the second Monday in June. Held, that the statement at the foot of the record of the delinquent tax list of Chicot county, signed by the clerk, "Given to the Chicot Life on the 17th day of May for publication," and "published in Chicot County Life for two issues, to wit, 21st of May and 28th day of May, 1901," was a sufficient certificate. The word "published" in the clerk's statement shows that the list was printed. Cook v. Ziff Colored Masonic Lodge No. 119, 96 S. W. 618, 620, 80 Ark. 31.

A return of execution, which states that the notice of sale was published in a newspaper "printed" in the county, shows a compliance with Rev. Laws, c. 178, § 28, requiring the officer to cause a notice of the time and place of sale to be published in a newspaper "published in the county in which the land lies;" the quoted phrase, construed as required by chapter 8, § 4, cl. 13, according to the common and approved usage of language, referring to a newspaper printed and issued within the county. Blake v. Rogers, 97 N. E. 68, 69, 210 Mass. 588.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3029, requiring publication of notice of a local option election in a newspaper published in the county, where the election was for that part of the county outside the county seat, a city containing over 2,500 inhabitants, publication in a paper published at the county seat and having general circulation in the county was sufficient; it being "published in the county" within the meaning of the statute. State v. Morgan, 128 S. W. 839, 841, 144 Mo. App. 35.

Where a newspaper is entered as second-class matter at a post office at a certain town, to be distributed in the town in the first instance, and mailed to a large number of subscribers, and first distributed, circulated, and sold in that town, though printed elsewhere, it is "published" in that town within Liquor Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 34) § 13, requiring publication of notice of submission of questions relating to local option. In re Gainsway, 123 N. Y. Supp. 966, 66 Misc. Rep. 521.

The "publication" of an appropriation ordinance adopted by the village of Morgan Park in a newspaper published weekly in the interest of Morgan Park, Blue Island, and the entire country along the Blue Island ridge, in Chicago, by an unincorporated company, and entered as second-class matter at the post office at Chicago, is not a publication within General Act for the Incorporation of Cities and Villages, art. 5, § 3 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 24, § 64), providing that appropriation ordinances shall be published in a newspaper published in the city or village, since the place of publication of a newspaper is the place where it is first put into circulation or issued to be delivered by mail or otherwise to its subscribers, and the testimony of a witness that the newspaper was published in Morgan Park, and was a paper of general circulation in the village and outside, does not show a publication in Morgan Park, where the witness understood that a paper is published in any community where it is generally circulated. People ex rel. O'Connell v. Read, 100 N. E. 230, 256 Ill. 408, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 293.

Of will

"Publication" is the act of testator whereby he manifests that it is his intention to give effect to the paper as his will, and any communication indicating that testator intends so to do by word, sign, motion, or conduct is a sufficient publication. In re Ayers' Estate, 120 N. W. 491, 492, 84 Neb. 16. See, also, Danley v. Jefferson, 114 N. W. 470, 471, 150 Mich. 590, 121 Am. St. Rep. 640, 13 Ann. Cas. 242.

"'Publication' of a will may be made by words or acts or signs which clearly and distinctly make known to the witnesses that what they are requested to subscribe to is the testator's will." Vernon v. Vernon, 81 Atl. 409, 410, 69 N. J. Eq. 759 (citing Mundy v. Mundy, 15 N. J. Eq. 290; Swain v. Edmunds, 53 N. J. Eq. 142, 82 Atl. 369).

The "publication" of a will, defined as the act of making it known, in the presence of witnesses, that the instrument to be executed is the will of testator, with the statutory formalities, is not required in Michigan; but in the execution of a will the attesting witnesses, signing it at the request of testator, should be advised that the instrument to which they subscribe is the will of testator; and execution in substantial compliance with the statute is equivalent to "publication." In re Kohn's Estate, 137 N. W. 735, 737, 172 Mich. 342.

A testator did not make "publication" of a writing as his will, where one of the subscribing witnesses did not hear the will read, was not requested by any one to sign as a witness to the writing as a will, did not see the signature of the testator, and was not informed of the character of the paper until nearly two years later. In re Noyes' Estate, 105 Pac. 1013, 1017, 40 Mont. 178.

A testatrix may "publish" a will by assenting to a statement made in her presence. Such an assent may be made by some act or sign. If the scrivener declared, in the hearing of testatrix, that the paper was her will, and she had then signed it, publication might be inferred; but such publication cannot be inferred where the scrivener said, in the presence of the testatrix, that she had made her will and wanted two persons who had been called in to witness it, and testatrix made no sign of assent and did not sign the paper in their presence. Manners v. Manners, 66 Atl. 583, 584, 72 N. J. Eq. 854.

PUBLISH

See Printed and Published.

Fifteen days' published notice, see Fifteen.

Print as publish, see Print—Printing.

Published four consecutive weeks, see Four.

Utter and publish, see Utter.

See, also, Publication.

In Rev. Laws 1905, § 1453, providing that the state board of administration of farmers' institutes shall publish annually a "Farmers' Institute Annual," "publish" means to print, as well as to compile and distribute. Syndicate Printing Co. v. Cashman, 132 N. W. 915, 917, 115 Minn. 446.

The phrase "publish, sell, exchange, and deliver," in an indictment alleging that defendant did unlawfully "publish, sell, exchange, and deliver" a forged note, is synonymous with the words "sell, exchange, or deliver" in the statute declaring that every person who shall sell, exchange, or deliver a forged note, etc., shall be guilty of forgery; the word "publish" not changing or altering the nature of the offense charged. Connella v. Territory, 86 Pac. 72, 74, 16 Okl. 365.

See Express.

Utter synonymous

See Utter.

PUBLISHER*Foreman

The foreman of the mechanical department of a newspaper or a typesetter is not a "printer" or "publisher," who is authorized by Mills' Ann. St. § 3884, to make proof of publication of a notice of tax sale; the quoted terms relating to one who has some title or proprietary interest in the plant. Herr v. Graden, 127 Pac. 319, 321, 22 Colo. App. 511.

Mercantile agency

To the ordinary man, the word "publishing" connotes the business of publishing, as prosecuted by those professedly engaged therein, by those who are ordinarily called "publishers"; that is, manufacturers and distributors of books, pamphlets, etc. An incorporated mercantile agency, whose business is to rate and report the credit seekers of the United States and Canada, to publish these ratings in the form of a book, and to furnish such book and also special reports at a special price to all mercantile agency users, is not engaged principally in publishing, and cannot be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Zugualla v. International Mercantile Agency, 142 Fed. 927, 930, 74 C. C. A. 97.

As proprietor

The fact that a person making an affidavit of publication of process in a newspaper signs himself "publisher," instead of "editor, proprietor, or manager," does not make proof of publication defective, though the statute requires that the proof shall be made by the "editor, proprietor, or manager" of the newspaper; the word "publisher" being used in the sense of proprietor or manager. Stuart v. Cole, 92 S. W. 1040, 1042, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 478.

PUEBLO

"By the laws of Mexico, in force at the date of the acquisition of the country, 'pueblos' or towns were entitled, for their benefit and the benefit of their inhabitants, to the use of the lands constituting the site of such pueblos and towns, and of adjoining lands, within certain prescribed limits." Townsend v. Greeley, 72 U. S. (5 Wall.) 326, 336, 18 L. Ed. 547.

"Each 'pueblo' (under the Mexican law) was quasi a public corporation. By the scheme of the Mexican law it was treated as an entity or person having a right as such, and, by reason of its title to the four leagues of land, to the use of the water of the river on which it is situated, while as a political body it was vested with power, by ordinance, to provide for a distribution of the waters to those for whose benefit the right and power were conferred." City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co., 93 Pac. 869, 871, 152 Cal. 645 (quoting from Lux v. Haggin, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674, 69 Cal. 255).

PUEBLO INDIANS

As tribe, see Indian Tribe.

The "Pueblo Indians" of New Mexico are not wards of the government, nor are they in charge of an Indian superintendent or agent, nor are they Indians over whom the government, through its departments, exercise guardianship, within the meaning of Act Cong. Jan. 30, 1897, c. 109, 29 Stat. 506, 3 Fed. St. Ann. p. 384, penalizing the sale or gift of intoxicants to such Indians. United States v. Mares, 88 Pac. 1128, 1129, 14 N. M. 1.

PUFFING

As false representation, see False Representation.

PULL

To "pull" railroad cars means to haul them. McGuire v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 107 S. W. 411, 412, 128 Mo. App. 677.

The phrase "pull timber," as used in a logging contract, means to drag it from where it has been felled to the water on which it is to be floated to the sawmill. Des Allemands Lumber Co. v. Morgan City Timber Co., 41 South. 332, 334, 117 La. 1.

PULLED GOODS

"Pulled goods" are chattels sold upon condition and retaken by the vendor for non-compliance with the conditions of sale. Levine v. D. Wolff & Co., 73 Atl. 73, 78 N. J. Law, 306, 138 Am. St. Rep. 617.

The expression "pumps pulled," used in the account of a collector for a pump company, means the pumps retaken in lieu of the purchase money. Sharp v. State, 67 S. E. 1124, 7 Ga. App. 749.

PULLER

See Ratchet Puller.

PULLEY

As shafting, see Shaft.

PULP

PULP WOOD

See Wood Pulp.

The term "pulp woods," in the Tariff Act, has no commercial signification differing from its ordinary meaning, and is employed as a short, comprehensive expression intended to cover pulp wood in all its forms, including such as has been subjected to the rossing process, whereby the bark, skin, and rough places are removed. It is not necessary that pulp woods shall be "round unmanufactured timber." United States v. Pierce, 147 Fed. 199-201, 77 C. C. A. 425.

PUMPHOUSE

As factory, see Factory.

PUNCTUATION

Under General Construction Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 22) § 21, providing that a folio is 100 words, counting as a word each figure, a "folio," in determining an allowance under Insanity Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 27) § 84, for taking and transcribing testimony, means words and figures, but not punctuation; the word "figure" being limited to numerals, which are letters or characters representing a number, and not including "punctuation," which is a pointing off or separating of one word from another by arbitrary marks. In re Murtaugh, 128 N. Y. Supp. 850, 851, 71 Misc. Rep. 513.

PUNISH

PUNISHABLE

In Rev. St. § 4596, as amended by Act Dec. 21, 1898, c. 28, § 19, 30 Stat. 760, providing that offenses by seamen shall be punishable as therein prescribed, the word "punishable" does not mean "must be punished," but "may be punished" as therein provided. The Thrasher, 173 Fed. 258, 262, 97 C. C. A. 424.

"Punishable," as used in Pen. Code, § 1232, providing that if one having been convicted of an offense, which would be "punishable" as a first conviction, by imprisonment in the penitentiary for more than five years, he is punishable by imprisonment for not less than ten years, means liable to punishment. And section 392 makes robbery punishable by not less than 1 year's imprisonment nor more than 20 years, so that under section 1232, if the maximum punishment for the subsequent offense, as a first offense, is more than 5 years, the punishment may not be less than 10 years, and hence one convicted of robbery and a prior offense may be imprisoned for 50 years. State v. Paisley, 92 Pac. 566, 570, 36 Mont. 237.

The word "punishable," in a statute stating that a crime is punishable by a designated penalty or term of years in the state prison, limits the penalty or term of years to the amount or term of years stated in the statute. State v. Magoon, 17 Atl. 729, 61 Vt. 45.

The word "punishable," as used in a statute declaring that a violation thereof shall be punishable by a fine of not more nor less than a designated amount, indicates that a crime is intended, and not a pecuniary penalty to be recovered by a civil action. In re Jackson, 14 Blatchf. 245, 13 Fed. Cas. 194-197.

PUNISHMENT

See Corporal Punishment; Cruel and Unusual Punishment; Infamous Punishment; Unusual Punishment.

"Punishment," as anciently regarded, was deemed largely compensatory; the natural and logical conception of a sentence for crime being that the punishment should be nicely graduated to the nature and circumstances of the offense. But the modern conception of "punishment" takes practically no account of compensation, but commits the offender to the charge of the officers of the state as a sort of penitential ward, to be restrained as far as necessary to protect the public from recurrent manifestations of his criminal tendencies, and, if possible, reformed, cured of his criminality, and finally released, a normal man and rehabilitated citizen. State ex rel. Kelly v. Wolfer, 138 N. W. 315, 318, 119 Minn. 368, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978.

"Punishment" in a legal sense is any pain, penalty, suffering, or confinement inflicted upon a person by the authority of the law, and the judgment and sentence of a court for some crime or offense committed by him or for his omission of a duty enjoined by law. State v. Pope, 60 S. E. 234, 236, 79 S. C. 87.

"Punishment" is either the act of inflicting a penalty for an offense or the enduring of the penalty. Where one who had been convicted and sentenced for aiding illegal voting at an election, by inducing a designated person to vote, appeared pursuant to a subpoena before a committing magistrate, and testified in reference to his crime and his efforts to procure various persons to vote at the election, he was not entitled to his discharge, under Pen. Code, § 41q, providing that any person testifying to offenses against the elective franchise shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or "punishment" for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given; the word "punishment," when construed, as required by section 11, according to its fair import, not meaning the enduring of penalty, but the act of inflicting a penalty, and referring to the act of fixing the penalty before such examination. People ex rel. Hunt v. Lane, 116 N. Y. Supp. 990, 992, 132 App. Div. 406 (citing Cent. Dict.).

The detention of a female minor in the House of the Good Shepherd under an ordinance relating to juvenile vagrants, and authorizing the detention of such persons until they reach a certain age, is not a "punishment," being designed for her good and welfare, to protect her against herself and from evil-minded parties surrounding her. State ex rel. Caillouet v. Marmouget, 35 South. 529, 533, 111 La. 225.

A commitment of a boy to the State Industrial School, in pursuance of Comp. St. 1907, c. 75, § 4840, providing that where a boy under 18 shall be found guilty of any crime except murder or manslaughter, the court may instead of entering judgment or sentencing the boy to the penitentiary, commit him to the State Industrial School, is not a "punishment," nor is the industrial school a prison, so as to require the imposition of a fine rather than the commitment, within the rule that, where one of two or more punishments may be imposed, the court should inflict the one which would be the less severe and result in the least disgrace. Roberts v. State, 118 N. W. 574, 576, 82 Neb. 651.

The words "mulct," "punishment," and "fine," as used in the decisions of the Supreme Court of Alabama in referring to the statutory action for death, given by Code Ala. 1896, § 27, are not used in the sense that is ordinarily attached to such words in the domain of criminal law, and therefore such statute is not a penal one, within the rule that one state will not enforce the penal laws of another state. Whitlow v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., 84 S. W. 618, 620, 114 Tenn. 344, 68 L. R. A. 503 (citing Southern Ry. Co. v. Bush, 26 South. 173, 174, 122 Ala. 470, 488, 489).

In a prosecution for larceny, a verdict finding accused guilty as charged, and fixing his "penalty" at one year in the penitentiary, was not insufficient; the word "penalty" being synonymous with the word "punishment," and being evidently used with that meaning.

Russell v. State, 133 S. W. 188, 191, 97 Ark. 92.

As costs

See Cost.

Suspension

The suspension of a naval officer, charged with drunkenness and neglect of duty, from morning until evening of the same day, when he was restored to duty to give "time to investigate the case," is not such a punishment for the offense as precludes, under Navy Regulations 1865, par. 1205, further proceedings against him by court-martial, but must be deemed simply a temporary precaution for the preservation of good order and discipline. Bishop v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 440, 441, 197 U. S. 334, 49 L. Ed. 780.

Tax

A "tax" is not a "punishment." Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

PUNITIVE

PUNITIVE DAMAGES

Malice as justifying punitive damages, see Malice.

See, also, Exemplary Damages; Smart Money.

"Punitive damages" are damages allowed, not as a compensation, but as a punishment for a wrong, willfully and maliciously done. Shields' Adm'rs v. Rowland, 151 S. W. 408, 410, 151 Ky. 136.

"'Punitive damages' have now come to be generally, though not universally, regarded, not only a punishment for wrong, but as vindication of private right. This is the basis upon which they are now placed in this state." Beaudrot v. Southern R. Co., 48 S. E. 106, 107, 69 S. C. 160.

Damages for aggravating circumstances in actions of tort, to deter the wrongdoer, or as compensation for wounded feelings, given by Civ. Code 1895, § 3906, are called "punitive damages." Batson v. Higginbotham, 68 S. E. 455, 457, 7 Ga. App. 835.

"Punitive damages" are awarded in addition to compensation as a punishment to the wrongdoer and as a warning to others, and they are allowed only where there are some features of aggravation, as where the wrong is done willfully and maliciously. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 72 S. E. 619, 620, 157 N. C. 21, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 65, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1117.

"Punitive damages" are damages over and above such sum as will compensate the person for his actual loss, the imposition of which the law permits in proper cases at the discretion of the jury, not because the party injured is entitled to them as a matter of right, but as a punishment to the wrongdoer and to deter him and others in the same business from such wrongdoing in the future. Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Kelley, 56 South. 838, 841, 2 Ala. App. 629.

"Punitive damages" consist of such sum above the actual damages which plaintiff sustained as will punish defendant for the wrong and unwarranted act complained of. Miller v. Rambo, 64 Atl. 1053, 1054, 73 N. J. Law, 726.

"Punitive damages" do not depend on the injury inflicted or the legal wrong committed, and are allowed in excess of simple compensation as a punishment of the defendant for his wrongful conduct and with a view to prevent similar wrongs in the future. They are not allowed as a matter of course, but only where there are some features of aggravation, as where the wrong is done willfully and maliciously, or under circumstances of rudeness or oppression, or in a manner which evinces a wanton and reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights. Thus, where a trespass is committed deliberately, in a manner and under circumstances of aggravation and humiliation, showing a reckless and lawless disregard of plaintiff's rights, the law allows damages beyond the strict measure of compensation by way of punishment. Ammons v. Southern Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 731, 732, 733, 140 N. C. 196 (citing Champion v. Vincent, 20 Tex. 811; Joyce, Dam. § 26).

"Punitive damages" may be recovered only in cases where the acts complained of are characterized by malice, fraud, oppression, or willful wrong, evincing a disregard of the rights of others." Cumberland Telephone Co. v. Allen, 42 South. 666, 667, 89 Miss. 832. See, also, James McNeil & Bro. Co. v. Crucible Steel Co. of America, 56 Atl. 1070, 1071, 207 Pa. 493.

A sum assessed by a jury additional to compensation for damages, by way of punishment for wrongdoing, is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages. Farrow v. Hoffecker (Del.) 79 Atl. 920, 7 Pennewill, 223; Doerhoefer v. Shewmaker, 97 S. W. 7, 10, 123 Ky. 646 (citing Chiles v. Drake [Ky.] 2 Metc. 146, 74 Am. Dec. 406).

"Punitive damages," being apart from compensation, are not recoverable as a matter of right. Their imposition is discretionary with the jury. This discretion is not an unbridled or arbitrary one, but a legal, sound, and honest discretion," to be exercised with due regard to attendant circumstances in the commission of the wrong complained of, its enormity, etc. And the enormity of the wrong is not to be determined alone by the consequences of the act, though these, in connection with the manner of its commission, whether or not intentionally done, or otherwise attended with circumstances of aggravation, may be accorded their due weight.

While the damages to which a plaintiff may become entitled, in an action of tort, to the amount of his expenses in litigation, in addition to his actual damages, are in fact and in effect "compensatory damages" and not "punitive," they are in practice variously termed "exemplary," "punitive," "vindictive," or "smart money," and, in an action for personal injuries in which plaintiff was entitled to recover such additional damages, it was not error to refer to them as "exemplary." Hull v. Douglass, 64 Atl. 351, 353, 79 Conn. 266.

Exemplary or punitive damages are not recoverable from a telegraph company for breach of contract to promptly deliver messages. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reeves, 126 Pac. 216, 217, 34 Okl. 468.

See Damage—Damages.

PUNITIVE DEATH

The word "punitive," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2118, declaring that death by the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive, releases the insurer from the obligation of his contract, refers to death inflicted by an officer of the law in obedience to the commands of the law. Even though the killing by the husband of the paramour of the wife be under such circumstances that the law would class the act as justifiable homicide, such killing is not, at the hands of justice, either punitive or preventive. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Crenshaw, 58 S. E. 628, 629, 129 Ga. 195, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307.

PUNITIVE JUDGMENT

A judgment finding defendants in a pending suit in equity guilty of contempt of its authority in violating an interlocutory injunction previously granted in a suit for the benefit of the complainant, and ordering the payment of specified fines, three-fourths of which when paid should go to the complainant "as compensation in part for the expenses incurred in prosecuting these contempt proceedings," is punitive instead of remedial, and reviewable on writ of error without awaiting a final decree in the suit in equity. In re Merchants' Stock & Grain Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 339, 223 U. S. 639, 56 L. Ed. 584.

PUPIL

The word "pupils," by derivation and the definition of lexicographers, is properly applicable to children and youth. Students in colleges and professional schools are not called pupils; hence students attending a college or business institute are not properly within the correct construction of the term.

Selectmen of Clinton v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 507, 512, 199 Mass. 279. Thus the word "pupils," as used in Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, requiring street railroads to transport the pupils of public schools at half rates, means children and youths attending the public schools, and does not include students in colleges and professional schools, nor young men or boys attending nautical or industrial schools, nor adults attending evening schools or evening high schools, nor children attending vacation schools. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. Ry. Co., 82 N. E. 19, 21, 196 Mass. 309.

Where a municipal ordinance, when proposed by a street railway company, required it to sell tickets at reduced rates to "children going to and from school," but the council refused to incorporate this language, and substituted the phrase "pupils presenting a certificate of enrollment in some school," it was held that the word "pupils" was of much broader signification, and would embrace classes of young persons receiving instruction at more advanced institutions of learning, who would not be aptly described as "children going to and from school." In the broader sense it included the students of a business college. Northrop v. City of Richmond, 53 S. E. 962, 963, 105 Va. 335.

PURCHASE

The word "purchase" implies acquisition. Marsh v. Lott, 97 Pac. 163, 165, 8 Cal. App. 384.

The word "purchased" may mean a completed transaction, or it may mean a transaction still incomplete. State v. Ware, 58 Atl. 595, 596, 71 N. J. Law, 53.

"Purchase" includes every mode of acquisition known to law except that by which an heir, on the death of an ancestor, becomes substituted in his place as owner by act of the law. Shulthis v. MacDougal, 162 Fed. 331, 338 (citing 3 Washb. Real Prop. p. 4).

Under the act of 1885 (Laws 1885, p. 229), relative to the consolidation of railroad corporations, section 1, providing that any railroad company organized under the laws of this state operating in connection with their own lines any other railroads in this or any other state may purchase and hold in fee simple or otherwise, and use and enjoy the property rights and franchises of the companies owning such other roads, it is not necessary that the transaction should take the form of a technical sale, but it is sufficient if the contract or agreement merges the properties, franchises, and corporate rights of the merging company into the merger corporation, as a result of which one corporation disposes of its property and franchises and the other acquires them in a lawful manner, since "purchase" is not used in its popular and commercial meaning as equivalent to "buy," but in its enlarged and legal signification meaning the acquisition of real property by any voluntary act of the parties, as distinguished from title by descent which results from operation of law. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Doyle, 100 N. E. 278, 280, 256 Ill. 514 (citing 7 Words and Phrases).

A parol donee of land stands on a parity with a parol purchaser; the word "purchase," at common law, being defined as the possession of lands which one has by his own act or agreement, and not by descent. Bailey v. Henry, 143 S. W. 1124, 1127, 125 Tenn. 390 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5853).

Real estate purchased with the proceeds of inherited property is held by "purchase"; the equity practice of following a fund through changes and transactions not obtaining in applying the statutes of descent. In re Hullett's Estate, 89 N. E. 509, 510, 46 Ind. App. 412.

The word "purchase," as used in an affidavit of defense in an action based on a book account for goods sold, averring that defendant never purchased or authorized the purchase of the property mentioned in the book of entries attached to the affidavit of demand, under a reasonable construction covers defendant's liability as purchaser, either express or implied, upon a book account for goods sold and delivered. A. H. Davenport Co. v. Addicks (Del.) 57 Atl. 532, 533, 5 Pennewill, 4.

As used in Civ. Code, §§ 286, 360, providing that a corporation may obtain title by purchase, the word "purchase" does not mean merely the acquisition of title from a voluntary grantor, by the payment of prices or other valuable consideration, but a corporation had power to acquire title by prescription. Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 77 Pac. 1113, 1118, 144 Cal. 578.

Technically speaking, a conveyance by deed as a gift is within the term "purchase," but Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 11,038, providing that the qualified voters of a school district may at any annual or special meeting direct the "purchase" of an appropriate site and the "purchase" of a schoolhouse, prevents the expenditure of the school district funds, except on the authority of the voters, but the statute does not prevent the acquisition of title to a schoolhouse site when the same may be acquired without the expenditure of any of the school district funds. McMahon v. School Dist. No. 66, of Antelope county, 113 N. W. 1046, 1047, 80 Neb. 156.

Evidence, in an action by an ex-county treasurer against the county for commissions, on the theory that a transaction by which, during his term, a judgment creditor of the county transferred the judgment to a bank, it paying him therefor, was a loan by the bank to the county and a payment of the judgment creditor by the county, so that such treasurer was entitled to commissions for receiving and disbursing the money, held sufficient to support a finding that the transaction was not a loan, but a "purchase" by the bank of the judgment. Benefield v. Marion County, 95 S. W. 713, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 245.

The charter of Lowell (St. 1896, p. 364, c. 415) created a department of supplies, with a chief elected annually, and section 3 requires all materials and supplies for the city to be purchased by the head of such department, subject to the mayor's approval, and provides that, so far as practicable, such purchases shall be made after public advertisement and under contract approved by the mayor. Section 6 provides that heads of departments shall have general charge of matters relating thereto, and shall execute all contracts, except for purchase of material and supplies; and section 7 forbids the city council, or any committee or member, from making contracts, purchasing material, etc., or expending public money, except to defray incidental expenses of the council. Held, that the provision relating to purchase of supplies and material in section 3 could not be construed so as to limit the word "purchase" to a purchase for money, the word "supplies" to articles of food, or the word "material" to that which the city has on hand for manufacture of other things, so that purchase of gravel, to be removed by the city and used on the streets and paid for by other filling deposited on the lot from which it was taken, was a purchase of material, which, under section 6, the superintendent of streets had no authority to make. Bartlett v. City of Lowell, 87 N. E. 195, 196, 201 Mass. 151.

Under a statute providing that real estate purchased on behalf of the state for taxes should not be entered in the land books without any deed, the word "purchased" is used in the legal sense of the term, and means a valid purchase for the state, and not merely an abortive, futile purchase. Webb v. Ritter, 54 S. E. 484, 491, 60 W. Va. 193.

In an action for an accounting, in which the issue was as to whether the defendant furnished the money to "purchase" property for the plaintiff, or purchased it for his own account, the complaint was not insufficient for alleging that the defendant purchased the property, thereby implying the payment of money, and negating the possibility of a debt, a fiduciary relation, or duty to render an accounting, as such expression also means the acquisition of property by a party's own act, as distinguished from acquisition by act of law. Semi-Tropic Spiritualists' Ass'n v. Johnson, 126 Pac. 488, 489, 163 Cal. 639 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, 5853).

Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of Washington, land acquired under the homestead laws is acquired by "purchase" within the meaning of the community property law of the state and is therefore community property, and such rule is not in contravention of any provision of the homestead law. Buchser v. Morss, 196 Fed. 577, 578; Id., 202 Fed. 854; United States v. Beaty, 198 Fed. 284, 286.

As maintain and operate

The phrase "purchasing or constructing," as used in Const. art. 10, § 12a, and Laws 1903, p. 93, authorizing certain cities with the assent of two-thirds of the voters thereof, voting at an election for the purpose, to become indebted in a larger amount than specified in Const. art. 10, § 12, not exceeding an additional 5 per cent. of the value of the taxable property, for the purpose of "purchasing or constructing" waterworks or electric light plants, to be owned exclusively by the city so purchasing or constructing the same, does not give cities the power to issue bonds for the purpose of maintaining and operating waterworks or electric light plants, for the power to maintain and operate waterworks and electric light plants is not necessarily incident to or implied in the power to purchase or construct waterworks or electric light plants, for the word "maintain" does not mean to provide or construct, but to keep up and preserve, and the word "operate" means to put into or continue in operation or activity. State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Wilder, 98 S. W. 465, 467, 200 Mo. 97.

Code

"The ceding of land by the state probably constituted a 'purchase' thereof by the United States, in the broad sense of that word." United States v. Tucker, 122 Fed. 518, 520 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

Condemnation

"The term 'purchase' includes the acquisition of title by condemnation, and must be so construed when the terms of the law recognize that mode of acquisition." United States v. Inlots, 26 Fed. Cas. 482, 487.

Under the provisions of Army Appropriation Act March 3, 1911, c. 209, 36 Stat. 1037, 1049, making an appropriation "for the purchase of land accessible to the horse-raising section of the state of Virginia for the assembling, grazing and training of horses purchased for the mounted service," such land may be acquired by condemnation, as authorized by Act Aug. 1, 1888, c. 728, 25 Stat. 357, "in every case in which * * * any * * * officer of the government has been or hereafter shall be authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or for other public uses"; the word "purchase" being used in the appropriation act in a broad sense. United States v. Beaty, 198 Fed. 284, 286 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5853).

Act June 30, 1906, c. 3916, § 24, 34 Stat. 788, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to rent buildings on sites "purchased" for public buildings until their removal becomes necessary, applies as well to property acquired by condemnation proceedings. United States v. Whipple Hardware Co., 191 Fed. 945, 946, 112 C. C. A. 357.

The words "to purchase" in title to P. L. 1903, p. 736, c. 269, mean "to buy"; and hence does not embrace the right to condemn, though it is broad enough to embrace such right. Griffith v. City of Trenton, 69 A. 29, 30, 76 N. J. Law, 23.

The words "to purchase" may be construed as including the power to acquire by condemnation, yet generally in statutes, as well as by common use, the word "purchase" is employed to denote acquisition by contract between the parties without governmental interference. Weeks v. Grace, 80 N. E. 220, 222, 194 Mass. 296, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 10 Ann. Cas. 1077 (citing Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 367, 23 L. Ed. 449).

Enter synonymous

Laws 1877, c. 15, § 8, relating to the disposition of state lands, provided that no person should be allowed to enter more than 240 acres; while Ann. Code 1892, § 2564, relating to the same subject, declares that one person may purchase as much as one quarter section of public lands in one year and no more, and that all lands acquired directly or indirectly by any person in contravention of section 2564 or 2565 escheat to the state. Held, that there was no substantial difference between such statute; the words "enter" and "purchase," used therein, being convertible terms, and the provision for "escheat" in section 2564 meaning nothing more than that the lands should be recovered or should be reclaimed, which would be implied, though not expressed, in the act of 1877. Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. State, 54 South. 247, 249, 97 Miss. 571.

Locate

The location of a placer mining claim by a United States mineral surveyor is within the prohibition of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 452, against the direct or indirect "purchase" by officers, clerks, and employés in the General Land Office of any of the public land. Such location is void and not merely voidable at the instance of the government. Waskey v. Hammer, 32 Sup. Ct. 187, 189, 223 U. S. 85, 56 L. Ed. 359.

Mortgage

An action to foreclose a mortgage is not an action in relation to property purchased, located, or held in the county, within a statute providing that no corporation shall purchase, locate, or hold property in any county in the state without filing a certified copy of its articles of incorporation in the office of the clerk of the county within 60 days after the purchase or location, and that any corporation failing to comply therewith shall not maintain or defend an action or proceeding in relation to such property until it has so complied. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 80 Pac. 1080, 1082, 146 Cal. 644.

Payment

"Money paid by an indorser to an indorsee is not for the benefit of the maker, but rather to protect the indorser's contract with the indorsee; and it operates as a 'purchase,' and not as a payment, so far as concerns the maker, and cannot be taken advantage of by him." On payment of a note by the indorser on the failure of the maker so to do, the indorser can recover the amount from the maker, though the note was not protested. McGowan v. Hover, 91 N. Y. Supp. 892, 893, 45 Misc. Rep. 138 (quoting and adopting the definition in 7 Cyc. 1021).

PURCHASE MONEY

See, also, Purchase Price.

The words "purchase money," as used in the rule that, in an action for breach of a covenant of warranty, the measure of damages is the "purchase money" and interest, include the actual consideration paid for the land, whether in money, property, or otherwise. Taylor v. Allen, 62 S. E. 291, 293, 131 Ga. 416.

The words "purchase money," in the provisions of the statute of frauds as to the sale of land, mean consideration to be paid for the land. Kane v. Luckman, 131 Fed. 609, 617 (citing Devin v. Himer, 29 Iowa, 297).

Within the statute of frauds as to personality (Code 1906, § 4779), there is a payment of the "purchase money," where the consideration is to be a credit on indebtedness and credit is actually entered. Johnson v. Tabor, 57 South. 365, 366, 101 Miss. 78 (citing Devin v. Himer, 29 Iowa, 297).

Loans for improvement

Money loaned by a vendor to vendee to improve the land purchased, pursuant to the terms of the sale, is not "purchase money" within the meaning of the statute which subjects a homestead to execution for the satisfaction of a decree foreclosing a vendor's lien. Comp. St. 1911, c. 36, §§ 3, 4. City Savings Bank v. Thompson, 136 N. W. 992, 993, 91 Neb. 628, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89.

PURCHASE-MONEY MORTGAGE

A mortgage given for money borrowed at the time to pay the purchase price of the property mortgaged, whether or not the same identical money was used to make the payment, is in effect a "purchase money mortgage," and as such entitled to high rank, and the mortgagee's right to payment from the proceeds of the property when sold by the mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy is not affected by the fact that he received an illegal preference from the bankrupt in an entirely separate transaction, the remedy of the trustee in such case being by a suit to recover the preference. In re Franklin, 151 Fed. 642, 647.

PURCHASE PRICE

See, also, Purchase Money.

The exception of debts for the "purchase price" of property from homestead exemption, under Const. art. 245, does not include a debt resulting from a former sale of the property to defendant, where he was evicted by foreclosure of a prior mortgage, and afterwards acquired a new title to the property. Heinss v. Henry, 54 South. 24, 25, 127 La. 770.

St. 1903, § 4152, provides that when delinquent property is offered for sale, and no one will bid therefor the amount of taxes, charges due, and cost of sale, including the cost of advertising, the sheriff shall purchase for the state for the amount of tax due, and the commission thereon, and make return to the county clerk; that the owner may redeem within two years by paying the purchase money with interest at 30 per cent. per annum and 15 per cent. on the total amount of the purchase price, and the amount of the clerk's costs, if any; that in the redemption of land sold to the state the county clerk has authority to collect such delinquent taxes, interest, and penalties as are prescribed by law, and shall make a report thereof to the auditor; and that the total amount paid the state for redemption shall be paid into the state treasury, less 5 per cent. commission to the clerk. Held that, under such section, the delinquent sale must be not only for the taxes due thereon, but for the cost of advertising as well, and that, when the property is redeemed from the state, the "purchase price," with interest and penalties, includes the $2 fee to the sheriff for advertising authorized by section 4151, which the clerk is bound to collect, and for which he is bound to account. Commonwealth v. Smedley, 139 S. W. 861, 863, 144 Ky. 694.

PURCHASER

See Bona Fide Purchaser; Innocent Purchaser; Mala Fide Purchaser.

See, also, Vendee.

A contract by plaintiffs to purchase a lot for $1,000, paying $10 down, giving a chattel mortgage to secure $90, and agreeing to pay $10 a month thereafter until the purchase price should be paid, when a deed was to be made, does not constitute plaintiffs purchasers before compliance with the terms of the contract, within the meaning of an offer of a prize, to be competed for by purchasers of lots, as a "purchaser" is one who acquires title otherwise than by descent, and generally refers to the acquisition of property for a valuable consideration. Younkman v. Hillman, 102 Pac. 773, 774, 53 Wash. 661.

As used in St. 1898, § 2108, which provides that when an absolute power of disposition is given to the owner of a life estate, such estate shall be changed into a fee absolute as to the rights of creditors and purchasers, but subject to any future estates limited thereon in case the power should not be executed or the land should not be sold for the satisfaction of debts, the word "purchasers" is not used in its technical sense, but means purchase for a valuable consideration. Perkinson v. Clarke, 116 N. W. 229, 232, 135 Wis. 584.

Laws 1910, c. 227, providing that a recording officer shall not accept for record any "conveyance of real estate" unless the residence of the purchaser shall be stated, does not apply to a certificate of discharge of a mortgage, since such an instrument does not create, transfer, mortgage, or assign any interest in real property, nor assign any mortgage, lease, or other conditional estate, nor is there any "purchaser," properly so called, and the register must accept for record a satisfaction piece, though it does not state the residence of the purchaser. Blume v. Lundy, 180 N. Y. Supp. 836.

Assignee

A tender of payment of a certificate of sale under a special assessment to the "purchaser" under assignment of the certificate is insufficient, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120, § 215, making the receipt of the redemption money by any "purchaser" operate as a release of all claims to the property purchased at the sale, since the word "purchaser" in case of assignment of the certificate must be regarded as meaning "assignee." Ambler v. Glos, 86 N. E. 1113, 1114, 237 Ill. 637.

Where a "purchaser" of school lands assigns the certificate, and the assignment is brought to the knowledge of the county clerk, who enters it upon the records of his office, the assignee will thereafter be deemed the purchaser within Gen. St. 1901, § 6356, providing that notice of forfeiture must be issued to the purchaser, and notice of such proceedings must be served upon him as required by the statute. Roll v. Nation, 109 Pac. 392, 393, 82 Kan. 675.

Assignee of mortgage

A subsequent assignee of a chattel mortgage as well as a subsequent mortgagee is a "purchaser," within Code 1897, § 2906, providing that no unrecorded mortgage of personal property, where the possession is retained by the mortgagor, is valid against existing creditors or subsequent purchasers.

Central Trust Co. of Illinois v. Stepanek, 115 N. W. 891, 893, 138 Iowa, 131, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025, 128 Am. St. Rep. 175.

Condemnation petitioner

A petitioner for condemnation is not in any sense a "purchaser" or creditor within the purview of the registration statutes. Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 131 Fed. 657, 666, 66 C. C. A. 601.

Creditor

Where defendant received payment of her debt from a bankrupt otherwise than by descent, she was a "purchaser," within the provision of Bankrupt Act, declaring that a preferential transfer to any one not a "purchaser in good faith and for a present, fair consideration" will be void. Wright v. Sampster, 152 Fed. 196, 199 (citing McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc., 9 Cow. [N. Y.] 437, 18 Am. Dec. 516).

Devisee

The word "purchaser" in the section of the Code providing that, as against a purchaser from a nonresident alien, the survivor shall not be entitled to a distributive share in the estate of deceased, if at the time of the purchase the survivor was also a nonresident alien, does not include a devisee, but is limited to a purchaser for a consideration. In re Kennedy's Estate, 135 N. W. 53, 55, 154 Iowa, 460.

A devisee is a "purchaser" within Real Property Law, § 208 (Laws 1896, p. 593, c. 547), requiring conveyances of freehold estates to be attested in order to be effectual as against subsequent purchasers. Clark v. Strong, 93 N. Y. Supp. 514, 516, 105 App. Div. 179.

Mortgagee

The word "purchaser," as used in a statute declaring unrecorded chattel mortgages to be void as against creditors and bona fide purchasers for value, includes a mortgagee for value. Eason v. Garrison & Kelly, 82 S. W. 800, 801, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 574.

The mortgagee of a conditional vendee of personal property is not a "purchaser" within Comp. St. 1907, § 3659, and cannot by his mortgage acquire any rights superior to the conditional vendee, though the contract of conditional sale is not filed as required by said section. Racine-Sattley Co. v. Meinen, 114 N. W. 602, 604, 79 Neb. 33.

Under the express provisions of Rev. St. Wis. 1898, § 2242, a mortgage is embraced in the word "conveyance," and a mortgagee is included in the word "purchaser," as those terms are used in section 2241, declaring an unrecorded conveyance void as against a subsequent purchaser, whose conveyance is placed on record first. Allison v. Manzke, 94 N. W. 659, 661, 118 Wis. 11.

be subsequently acquired by the grantor, is regarded in equity as a "purchaser," within the recording statutes; and a decree of sale, treating the equitable lien created by the trust deed as having been perfected in equity by specific execution of the contract to give a lien, passes the legal title to the property as against the trust deed grantor's vendor. Triumph Electric Co. v. Empire Furniture Co., 73 S. E. 325-327, 70 W. Va. 164.

As owner

See Owner.

Purchase by administrator at his own sale

An administrator did not, by entering into an agreement with his brother that the latter should bid in the land at the administrator's sale, become a "purchaser," within the inhibition of section 5346, Snyder's Comp. Laws. Turner v. Turner, 125 Pac. 730, 734, 34 Okl. 284.

Where a mortgagee sells land of decedent under a power of sale, and purchases it for the benefit of decedent's administrator, the transaction is not a "purchase by the administrator at his own sale," but in view of the administrator's trust in the personalty for the benefit of the heirs, and his duty to pay the mortgage and prevent the sale if the personalty had been sufficient, such purchase, even if for a fair price, made in good faith, except where the administrator has an interest in the land when sold, will be regarded, in equity, as for the common benefit of all the heirs who, within a reasonable time, elect to avail themselves of such purchase. Randolph v. Vails (Ala.) 60 South. 159, 162.

Purchaser at judicial sale

A buyer at a bankrupt sale of a stock of goods, including goods delivered to and kept by the bankrupt as a part of the stock, under a conditional contract of sale not recorded as required by Code 1907, § 3394, is a "purchaser," within the statute, and acquires title as against the original seller, where he buys without notice, actual or constructive, of the conditional sale. F. A. Ames Co. v. Slocomb Mercantile Co., 51 South. 994, 995, 166 Ala. 99.

As used in Code 1876, § 2468, providing that after confirmation of a sale of land made under authority of the probate court, when the "purchaser" has paid the whole of the purchase money, on his application, or that of the executor or administrator, the court must order a conveyance to be made to such "purchaser," the word "purchaser" means the original vendee or buyer, who acquired by bid, at an authorized sale, an estate in the land sold. It does not include a sub-purchaser, or one who holds under him by transfer, sale, or release. Anderson's Adm'r v. Bradley, 66 Ala. 263, 265.

As representative

See Legal Representative; Representative.

School land purchaser

A contract by a husband for the purchase of state school land is a community obligation through which the wife acquires a half interest in the land, and she, as well as the husband, is a "purchaser" within the statute, and, in determining whether the land has been settled on and occupied in accordance with the law, the joint acts of the husband and wife must be considered. Ericksen v. McWhorter (Tex.) 132 S. W. 847, 848; Leaverton v. Robison, 120 S. W. 169, 170, 102 Tex. 516.

The assignee of a tax sale certificate bid in by the county for delinquent taxes, who takes out a compromise tax deed, is a "purchaser" at tax sale. Nesbit v. Bearman, 109 Pac. 1085, 83 Kan. 122.

The word "purchaser" in St. 1898, § 1178, requiring that the purchaser at a tax sale be named in the tax deed, means one who has made a completed purchase, and not a mere bidder, who has forfeited his bid by failing to pay for the tax certificate, and who never obtained a delivery of the certificate. Herbst v. Land & Loan Co., 115 N. W. 119, 120, 134 Wis. 502.

The word "purchaser" in Revenue Act July 23, 1868 (Acts 1868, p. 281) § 72, and in Acts 1883, p. 275, § 152, authorizing the purchaser under an invalid tax sale to recover the taxes assessed against the land for which it was sold and taxes subsequently paid up to the time of adjudication of invalidity, does not limit such right to the person actually purchasing at the sale, but extends to his subsequent grantees. Caruthers v. Greer, 122 S. W. 629, 630, 92 Ark. 167.

One who became the substitute for the bidder at a tax sale was the "purchaser" of the property, within Rev. Laws, c. 13, § 44, though not within section 43, providing that the collector shall execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed of the land sold at a tax sale, etc. Spring v. City of Cambridge, 85 N. E. 160, 162, 199 Mass. 1.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5187, providing that the owner may within two years after the sale redeem "by paying or tendering to the purchaser, his heirs or legal representatives, double the amount paid for the land," payment may be made to the purchaser, although he had transferred his interest, and the owners had notice of such transfer, as the word "purchaser," as used in the statute, applies only to one who purchases at the tax sale, such statutes being liberally construed in favor of the owner, and such right is not affected by a judgment in an action by the owners against the original purchasers in which the right to redeem was conferred on the owners by payment or tender of the amount due the purchasers or those holding under them. Turner v. Smith, 119 S. W. 922, 925, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 1.

Laws 1901, p. 220, c. 165, amending Rev. Codes 1899, § 1269, relating to the rights of purchasers at tax sales, and requiring that such purchasers shall take possession or procure deeds within six years from the date of the sale, or within one year after the act took effect, if the sale had been made more than five years before the passage of the act, has no application to sales to the state or county, where the rights of the latter had not been assigned. It cannot be pretended that the Legislature had any such intention, and, although the state or county might be termed a "purchaser" at a tax sale, it is too clear for argument that the word "purchaser," as used in section 1269, as amended, refers only to private persons or corporations holding tax sale certificates. Scott & Barrett Mercantile Co. v. Nelson County, 104 N. W. 528, 529, 14 N. D. 407.

Trustee in bankruptcy

A bankrupt's trustee is not a "purchaser," and the transfer to him by operation of law of mortgaged personal property does not extinguish the right of creditors to assert the invalidity of the mortgage, for nonfiling, as to the mortgagee and his assignee. In re Beede, 138 Fed. 441, 454.

Wife

Marriage is a valuable consideration, and a married woman is regarded as a "purchaser" for a valuable consideration of all property which accrues to her by virtue of her marriage. Staser v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 79 N. E. 404, 405, 168 Ind. 131 (citing Derry v. Derry, 74 Ind. 560; Richardson v. Schultz, 98 Ind. 429).

PURCHASER FOR A VALUABLE CONSIDERATION

Where a person in good faith obtained a stock of hardware in bulk, from an individual as his own property, for a valuable consideration, while the stock in fact belonged to a corporation of which the individual was a member, the transfer not being by the owner, there was no sale, and the would-be buyer is not a purchaser for a valuable consideration who would be protected against the owner's creditors, under Comp. Laws, § 9537, providing that provisions of the statutes, invalidating conveyances and contracts made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud other persons of their lawful claims, shall not affect the title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration, unless it appear that he had notice of the fraudulent intent of his immediate grantor, or of the fraud rendering void the title of such grantor. Pierson & Hough Co. v. Noret, 117 N. W. 644, 645, 154 Mich. 267.

Lessee

A lessee in possession of a mining claim in Alaska under an agreement to work the same continuously, and pay over to the lessor a percentage of the minerals extracted, is a "purchaser for a valuable consideration," within the meaning of the Act of June 6, 1900, tit. 3, § 98, providing that every unrecorded conveyance of real property shall be void against any subsequent innocent purchaser, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, of the same real property or any portion thereof, whose conveyance shall be first duly recorded. Waskey v. Chambers, 32 Sup. Ct. 597, 598, 224 U. S. 564, 56 L. Ed. 885, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 998.

Mortgagee

A mortgage taken to secure a debt contemporaneously contracted constitutes the mortgagee a "purchaser for a valuable consideration," who will be protected in equity against outstanding claims or incumbrances of which he had no notice. Atlanta Nat. Building & Loan Ass'n v. Gilmer, 128 Fed. 293, 296.

PURCHASER FOR VALUE

A person paying $10 for a quitclaim deed "of the right, title, and interest" of the grantor to property worth $20,000, with full notice that his grantor disclaimed having title, was not a "purchaser for value" as the term is used in the registration laws. Abernathy v. South & W. Ry. Co., 63 S. E. 180, 184, 150 N. C. 97.

One is not an innocent purchaser of land for value, where he does not pay value within the legal meaning of that term. Tinnin v. Brown, 53 South. 780, 782, 98 Miss. 378, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1081.

The mortgagee in a mortgage given merely to secure antecedent debts is not "a purchaser for value," within the meaning of clause "e" in section 70 of federal Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 566, or for "a valuable consideration," within the meaning of section 64 of the New Jersey corporation act (P. L. 1896, p. 298). Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of Wm. F. Fisher & Co., 60 Atl. 940, 941, 67 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Ann. Cas. 393.

Where, after the assignment of a mortgage had been recorded, a purchaser from the mortgagor paid the debt to the assignor, which executed a release, a subsequent purchaser from the person who paid the mortgage was charged with notice that the assignor had no power to execute the release, and hence was not a "purchaser for value," free from incumbrances. Cornish v. Wolverton, 81 Pac. 4, 10, 11, 32 Mont. 456, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598.

An indorsee before maturity in part payment of a pre-existing debt who credits the note thereon is a "purchaser for value" in due course. Second Nat. Bank of Monmouth, Ill. v. Snoqualmie Trust Co., 120 N. W. 182, 184, 88 Neb. 645.

To constitute one a "purchaser for value and without notice" from a fraudulent grantor, it must be shown that the purchaser paid a valuable consideration for the property, that at the time of the payment he had no notice of any outstanding equity or the fraudulent intent of the grantor, and that he acted in good faith, and a consideration secured to be paid is not sufficient. Bennett v. Bennett, 81 Pac. 632, 639, 15 Okl. 286, 70 L. R. A. 864.

PURCHASER IN DUE COURSE OF BUSINESS

See Due Course of Business.

PURCHASER IN GOOD FAITH

See Good Faith.

PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE

Bona fide purchaser synonymous, see Bona Fide Purchaser.

A "purchaser without notice," within Code 1907, § 3386, providing that transfers of personalty to secure debts, etc., are inoperative against "purchasers without notice" until recorded, etc., means a bona fide purchaser without notice. Hickey v. McDonald Bros., 48 South. 1031, 1032, 160 Ala. 300.

One who has knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the existence of an unrecorded deed is not a "purchaser without notice," within the protection of the registry act (Code 1907, § 3383). Gamble v. Black Warrior Coal Co., 55 South. 190, 191, 172 Ala. 669.

PURE

See Ordinarily Pure; Perfectly Pure.

The term "pure" means free from extraneous matter; separate from matter of another kind; free from mixture; unmixed. Levy v. Uri, 81 App. D. C. 441, 445.

The word "pure," in Agricultural Law (Laws 1893, p. 667, c. 338, § 5052) to prevent injury to health by penalizing the manufacture of vinegar which is not made from pure apple juice, means not only free from any foreign substance, but free from any defiling or objectionable mixture. People v. J. Heinz Co., 86 N. Y. Supp. 141, 143, 90 App. Div. 408.

PURE ACCIDENT

"A casualty cannot be classed as a 'pure accident,' for which no one is to blame, merely because it would happen infrequently, if the danger of its occurrence was present to the mind of the party who was charged with the duty of taking care to avert the casualty, or if by reasonable prudence he could have known there was danger of its occurrence." Rogers v. Meyerson Printing Co., 78 S. W. 79, 82, 103 Mo. App. 683.

Where a thing happens so often as to become a well-known fact and a matter of common knowledge, it can hardly be called a "pure accident." Where a pedestrian on a sidewalk was injured by pieces of glass falling from the globe of an electric light which was struck and broken by the pole of an electric car slipping from the wire, the slipping of the pole was not a "pure accident," it appearing that the trolley poles jumped the wire from time to time from various causes. Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co., 58 Atl. 802, 803, 26 R. I. 258, 67 L. R. A. 116, 106 Am. St. Rep. 711.

PURE ALCOHOL

"Pure alcohol," as used in Local Option Act (Laws 1909, p. 14) § 15, authorizing the sale of pure alcohol for medicinal purposes, upon the written application of the purchaser in form prescribed, consists of 92.3 per cent. by weight of absolute ethyl alcohol, and about 7.7 per cent. by weight of water. State v. Osmers, 120 Pac. 165, 168, 21 Idaho, 18.

PURE AND WHOLESOME

A contract requiring the party contracted with to furnish "pure and wholesome water" required the water to be furnished to be reasonably pure and wholesome, whether it was required to be perfectly pure or not. Meridian Waterworks Co. v. City of Meridian, 37 South. 927, 928, 85 Miss. 515.

PURE ANTHRACITE COAL

If "free burning anthracite" will meet the government test for anthracite, a notice for bids for furnishing a city's school board "pure" anthracite coal, that "will meet the government test" for anthracite coal, is sufficiently definite, without stating that "free burning anthracite" will be received; "pure," in such connection, meaning "separate from all heterogeneous or extraneous matter," and not being synonymous with "true" or "hard." Maloney v. Maddever, 136 N. Y. Supp. 498, 500, 77 Misc. Rep. 340.

PURE PEPPER

Where boxes labeled "Pure Pepper," and containing a combination of ground black pepper and ground long pepper, were shipped in interstate commerce, and there was evidence that "pure pepper," in the trade and according to its ordinary usage, meant nothing but black pepper, the combination was subject to forfeiture for misbranding. United States v. Seventy-Five Boxes of Alleged Pepper, 198 Fed. 934, 936.

PURE RYE WHISKY

"Pure rye whisky" is a whisky which is made solely from malted rye, and the term will not apply to whisky that is only 50 per cent. of real rye whisky. Levy v. Uri, 31 App. D. C. 441, 445.

PURELY

The word "purely," as used in Rev. St. 1906, § 2732, cl. 6, exempting from taxation buildings belonging to institutions of "purely" public charity, etc., like the word "exclusively," as used in preceding clauses of such section, expresses a kindred limitation, or rather exclusion, in that it means free from mixture or combination, and, as applied to a parish house, the charity must be unalloyed with other purposes and objects. Waterson v. Halliday, 82 N. E. 962, 968, 77 Ohio St. 150, 11 'Ann. Cas. 1096.

PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY

As used in the constitutional provision, exempting "purely public charities" from taxation, the word "purely" describes the quality of the charity rather than the means by which it is administered, and means that it should be wholly altruistic in the end to be attained, and that no private or selfish interest should be fostered under the guise of charity, but it was never meant that, because a charity was limited by its terms to objects belonging to a certain sect, or fraternal order, or color, or class, it was a private, and not a public, charity. Green's Adm'rs v. Fidelity Trust Co. of Louisville, 120 S. W. 283, 286, 134 Ky. 311, 20 Ann. Cas. 861 (quoting with approval from Widows' and Orphans' Home of Odd Fellows v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 354, 126 Ky. 386, 16 L. R. A. [N. S.] 829).

Cemetery

Funds of a cemetery company derived from sale of lots are not exempt from taxation under provisions exempting from taxation places of burial not held for private or corporate profit, and institutions of "purely public charity." Commonwealth v. Lexington Cemetery, 70 S. W. 280, 281, 114 Ky. 165.

Home

A corporation, whose sole object is to provide a suitable home for the destitute widows and orphans of deceased members of a certain secret society of the state, is an "institution of purely public charity," within the meaning of Const. § 170, and its property is exempt from taxation. Widows' and Orphans' Home of Odd Fellows of Kentucky v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 354-356, 126 Ky. 386, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 829.

That the benefits of a home for the support of widows and orphans are confined to those of members of a particular secret society does not deprive it of the character of a "purely public charity," within the meaning of a constitutional tax exemption. A Masonic home, using its entire property for the support and care of aged and indigent members of its order, and of another order and their dependent widows and children, without payment, and with educational and religious opportunities, is a pure charity, within the constitutional exemption from taxation of all property used exclusively for charitable purposes. Kansas Masonic Home v. Board of Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 106 Pac. 1082, 1085, 81 Kan. 859, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702 (quoting and adopting definition in Widows' and Orphans' Home of Odd Fellows v. Commonwealth, 103 S. W. 354, 126 Ky. 386, 16 L. R. A. [N. S.] 829).

Religious purposes

A trust fund devoted to the propagation of the principles of primitive Christianity, as taught by the Christian Church, is not a "purely public charity," within the meaning of Const. § 170, exempting such charities from taxation. Commonwealth v. Thomas, 83 S. W. 572, 119 Ky. 208, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 320.

School

Buildings erected by a church for use as dormitories in connection with a school where women and girls are taught at a nominal tuition, if they are able to pay, and, if not, are given their education, and the deficit in conducting the institution is contributed by charitable people, are exempt from taxation under Const. § 170, which provides that institutions of "purely public charity and institutions of education," not used or employed for gain, shall be exempt from taxation. Morgan v. Presbyterian Church of the United States of America (Ky.) 101 S. W. 838.

PURPORT

The "purport" of a written instrument is its meaning. Early v. Early, 54 S. E. 827, 829, 75 S. C. 15.

In Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1036, c. 51, § 10, providing that the printed statute books of the United States and of the several states and territories "purporting" to be printed under the authority of said United States, any state or territory, shall be evidence in courts of this state, the word "purporting" means what appears on the face of the instrument. It means the apparent, and not the legal, import. Here the title page expressly stated that the statutes offered in evidence were published with the authority of the state of Iowa. This was all that the law requires. McCraney v. Glos, 78 N. E. 921, 923, 222 Ill. 628.

Tenor distinguished

Where an indictment for uttering a forged note contained the words "tenor, purport, and effect" in referring to the instrument forged, the word "tenor" imported an exact copy of the note, while the words "purport and effect" only meant the substance of the instrument, and were surplusage, being included in the word "tenor," and not in conflict therewith. Teague v. State, 110 S. W. 224, 86 Ark. 126.

Other purposes, see Other.

"Purpose" is something placed before the mind as an aim or desideratum. Sawter v. Shoenthal, 80 Atl. 101, 81 N. J. Law, 197.

The word "purposes" is equivalent to object, and no distinction between the two terms can be drawn, in construing a constitutional provision, requiring the object of an act to be stated in its title. Sawter v. Shoenthal, 83 Atl. 1004, 83 N. J. Law, 499.

The word "purpose" means that which a person sets before himself as an object to be reached; the end or aim to which the view is directed in any plan, matter, or execution. Ex parte McCoy, 101 Pac. 419, 425, 10 Cal. App. 116 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 5865, 5866).

Act March 17, 1911, § 7, part of the act (Rev. Laws, §§ 4486-4494) creating the state bureau, and the office of commissioner of industry, agriculture, and irrigation, and defining its objects and purposes, does not by section 7, appropriating $25,000 to carry out "the purposes of this act," and providing that all disbursements from it shall be on certificate of the commissioner, approved by the state board of examiners, indicate that such appropriation includes the salary of the commissioner, which section 6 fixes and declares payable in equal monthly installments by the state treasurer on warrants drawn by the state controller; Const. art. 5, § 21, expressly excluding salaries of officers "fixed by law" from the claims against the state which the board of examiners shall pass on, and "purposes" indicating something to be accomplished rather than an existing fact, so that the bureau and office of commissioner were but means for the subsequent accomplishment of the purposes of the act. State ex rel. Norcross v. Eggers, 128 Pac. 986, 988, 35 Nev. 250 (citing Words and Phrases).

The words "willfully," "unlawfully," "feloniously," and "maliciously" import only that criminal intent which is the necessary part of every felony, or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific "purpose" to do the act which is an element of the crime charged. Whether the indictment is on a statute or at common law, it is a rule universal and without exception that every intent, like everything else, which the law makes an element of the offense must be alleged, for otherwise no prima facie case appears. Newby v. State, 105 N. W. 1099, 1100, 75 Neb. 83.

Act of April 3, 1902 (P. L. p. 284) which was adopted by Atlantic City as its charter, provides in section 105 that it shall be lawful for the city council to issue bonds, the proceeds of which may be used for the making of any of the improvements authorized by this act and for any other lawful purposes, provided that in every instance the issue of bonds shall be authorized by ordinance, and the purpose for which the bonds are to be used shall be expressed therein, and the proceeds shall be used for no other purposes; whenever bonds are used to provide funds for any of the purposes authorized by this act, any part of the costs and expenses of which is authorized to be assessed upon the property benefited, the assessments for benefits shall be exclusively apportioned, etc. Held, that the words "purposes authorized by this act" refer back to the words "purposes of making any of the improvements authorized by this act, and for other lawful purposes," and do not limit the power of the city council to the issuance of bonds for charter purposes. Fishblatt v. Atlantic City, 73 Atl. 125, 127, 75 N. J. Law, 134.

PURPOSELY

"To do an act 'purposely' is to do it designedly, intentionally, with a will." Reed v. State, 106 N. W. 649, 652, 75 Neb. 509.

The word "purposely," in the statute making it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, means an act done with a purpose or intent of doing that act. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

The use of the word "purposely," in defining second degree murder, implies the existence of an intention to cause death. It follows that drunkenness may reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter, if it is so extreme as to prevent the existence of an intention to kill. State v. Rumble, 105 Pac. 1, 3, 81 Kan. 16, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376 (citing State v. Young, 40 Pac. 659, 55 Kan. 349, 355; 21 Cyc. p. 712, note 50).

The word "purposely," as used in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2073, which provides that it shall be unlawful for any person over the age of 10 years, with or without malice, purposely to point or aim any pistol or other firearm, either empty or loaded, towards any other person, means "intentionally or designedly." An indictment charging involuntary manslaughter because of the killing of deceased by accused while he was violating the section by pointing and aiming a firearm at deceased is insufficient for failing to employ the word "purposely," or any other word of equivalent import, in describing the conduct of accused. Eaton v. State, 70 N. E. 814, 815, 162 Ind. 554.

In an action upon a life insurance policy, the use of the word "purposely," in an allegation in the complaint that defendant "purposely" concealed from plaintiff the contents of the application of the insured, adds nothing to the charge that defendant concealed the contents of the application, "for to conceal means 'purposely' to keep from sight or discovery." Gill v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 95 Pac. 89, 90, 11 Ariz. 232.

PURPOSES OF SUIT

Admission for purposes of suit

An admission made at a former trial, "for the purposes of the suit," that defendant was a city of the fourth class was an admission of that fact throughout all the stages of the suit, and was binding on defendant at a retrial in another jurisdiction. York v. City of Everton, 116 S. W. 490, 491, 135 Mo. App. 607.

PURPOSES OF TRADE

A person's picture is not used for "advertising purposes" or for "purposes of trade," within Civil Rights Law (Consol. Laws, c. 6) § 51, prohibiting the use of any person's picture or portrait without his written consent for advertising purposes, or for purposes of trade, so as to warrant an injunction against such use, unless it is used as part of an advertisement, nor is it used for the purposes of trade within the section when merely used for the dissemination of information, and not for commerce or traffic. Jeffries v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 780, 67 Misc. Rep. 570.

PURPRESTURE

A "purpresture" is an invasion of the right of property in the soil, while the same remains in the King or the people. Trustees of Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 80 N. E. 665, 673, 188 N. Y. 74, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326, 11 Ann. Cas. 1 (quoting the definition in People v. Vanderbilt, 26 N. Y. 287).

A "purpresture," or more properly speaking "porpresture," exists when anything is unjustly encroached upon, against the King, as in the royal demesnes, or in obstructing public ways, or in turning public waters from their right courses, or when any one has built an edifice in a city on the King's street. City of Montpelier v. McMahon, 81 Atl. 977, 979, 85 Vt. 275.

Encroachment on highway

"A permanent encroachment upon a public street for a private purpose is a 'purpresture,' and is in law a 'nuisance.'" Lacey v. Oskaloosa, 121 N. W. 542, 545, 143 Iowa, 704, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853.

The erection of a suitable monument by a municipal corporation at a street intersection, so situated as not to interfere with the free and reasonable public use of the highway by the public, is not a "purpresture" or unlawful invasion of the public highway. Wallace v. Village of Canandaigua, 117 N. Y. Supp. 912, 913.

Where a connection between two buildings over a public alley has been erected without a legal permit from the city council, it is a "purpresture," which may or may not be a public nuisance, depending on whether the public is put to any inconvenience thereby. Leitchfield Mercantile Co. v. Commonwealth, 136 S. W. 639, 642, 143 Ky. 162.

Encroachment on navigable water

Every building or wharf erected upon lands without license, below high-water mark, is a "purpresture," and may, at the suit of the King, either be demolished, or be seized and rented for his benefit, if not a nuisance to navigation. San Francisco Sav. Union v. R. G. R. Petroleum & Mining Co., 77 Pac. 823, 144 Cal. 134, 66 L. R. A. 242, 103 Am. St. Rep. 72, 1 Ann. Cas. 182; Trustees of Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 80 N. E. 665, 673, 188 N. Y. 74, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326, 11 Ann. Cas. 1 (citing Shively v. Bowlby, 14 Sup. Ct. 548, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. Ed. 331).

Any erection on tidelands without license is deemed an encroachment upon the property of the sovereign, or, as it is termed in the language of the law, a "purpresture," which he may remove at pleasure, whether it tend to obstruct navigation or otherwise. Grays Harbor Boom Co. v. Lowndsdale, 104 Pac. 267, 271, 54 Wash. 83 (quoting and adopting definition in Weber v. State Harbor Com'rs, 18 Wall. [85 U. S.] 65, 21 L. Ed. 798).

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS

See Life, Liberty, and Pursuit of Happiness.

The term "pursuit of happiness" is a very comprehensive expression which covers a broad field. Unquestionably it covers the idea of the acquisition of private property. Nunnemacher v. State, 108 N. W. 627, 629, 129 Wis. 190, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121, 9 Ann. Cas. 711.

The "right to procure happiness," as referring to a right guaranteed by the Constitution, means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity or develop their faculties, so as to give them their highest enjoyment. In re Boyce, 75 Pac. 1, 17, 27 Nev. 299, 65 L. R. A. 47, 1 Ann. Cas. 66 (dissenting opinion quoting Butchers' Union Slaughter-House & Live-Stock Landing Co. v. Crescent City Live-Stock Landing & Slaughter-House Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 660, 111 U. S. 757, 28 L. Ed. 585).

PURSUIT OF OFFENDER

A deputy sheriff of one county, who goes into another county to arrest one charged with crime in the former county, after learning that such person is in the latter county, is not in "pursuit of an escaping offender," within Code 1906, § 1454, and has no more authority to arrest the offender, and no more right to carry a weapon, than any other citizen has. Shirley v. State, 57 South. 221, 100 Miss. 799, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998.

PURVIEW

"The meaning usually attached to this word 'purview' by writers on law seems to be the enacting part of a statute in contradistinction to the preamble, and we think the provision of the act repealing all acts or parts of acts coming within its purview should be understood as repealing all acts in relation to all cases which are provided for by the repealing act, and that the provisions of no act are thereby repealed in relation to cases not provided for by it." State ex rel. Jett v. Ives, 78 N. E. 225, 226, 167 Ind. 13 (quoting and adopting the definition in Payne v. Conner, 3 Bibb [6 Ky.] 180, and citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5870; 1 Lewis, Suth. Const. § 246). See, also, dissenting opinion of Judge Hobson, in Murphy v. Louisville, 71 S. W. 934, 935, 114 Ky. 762.

The "purview" of an act is the enacting part in contradistinction to the preamble. Frank v. City of Decatur, 92 N. E. 173, 174, 174 Ind. 388.

PUT*PUT IN CHARGE

Receivers are "put in charge" of the property of a defendant, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a (4), 30 Stat. 546, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 797, when the decree appointing them is entered, although they do not qualify nor take actual possession of the property until later, and the four-months period within which a petition in bankruptcy based on such appointment as an act of bankruptcy must be filed runs from the date of such decree. In re Perry Aldrich Co., 165 Fed. 249, 252.

PUT IN DEFAULT

To "put in default" is a purely technical expression, meaning that the debtor is tardy in the fulfillment of his obligation, and that he is liable for the damages which the delay may occasion the creditor, where an obligation is limited as to the time of performance, putting in default is necessary only where the purpose of the creditor is to claim damages for the delay. Murray v. Barnhart, 42 South. 489, 493, 117 La. 1023.

PUT IN ISSUE

Under Const. art. 5, § 22, giving justices jurisdiction unless "the boundaries or title to any real property shall be called in question," and Rev. St. 1887, § 3852, providing that a justice shall not have jurisdiction where possession of real property "is put in issue," the phrases "called in question" and "put in issue" have the same meaning, and justices' courts have no jurisdiction of actions, where the boundaries or title to real estate are called in question. Hammer v. Garrett, 99 Pac. 124, 126, 15 Idaho, 657.

PUT IN TRUST

Testator provided that his property should be "put in a trust," and declared that the income should be equally divided between his brother, sister, and widow as long as the widow remained unmarried, and in case of her death or marriage her share should go to the brother and sister. Held to create a trust, to continue during the widowhood or life of the widow, and on her death or remarriage the corpus of the estate passed to testator's next of kin as intestate property. Hiles v. Garrison, 62 Atl. 805, 70 N. J. Eq. 605.

PUT INTO EFFECT

The phrase "put into effect," when used with reference to railroad rates, means to charge and receive a certain rate when the article to which it belongs is transported; in other words, to give it practical operation. The phrase cannot be said to be indefinite and indeterminate in meaning. State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 37 South. 652, 656, 48 Fla. 114.

PUT OFF

An allegation, in an action for damages in being set down at a wrong station, that she was "put off the train," in connection with other allegation, meant that she got off the train in response to the conductor's invitation, and there was no material variance between the allegation and the proof. Southern Ry. Co. v. Melton, 47 South. 1008, 1010, 158 Ala. 404.

PUT ON INTEREST

The words "put on interest," "the interest of my property shall be paid annually," and "the principal shall go," etc., as used in a will, all relate, in their ordinary sense, to dealing with money, the value of the use of money measured by interest and securities, dischargeable by the payment of money, and not the rents and profits of real estate. In re Benner's Will, 113 N. W. 663, 664, 133 Wis. 325.

PUT THROUGH

"He has sworn to a damned lie, and I will put him through for it," implies a threatened legal prosecution for perjury, and is actionable. Crone v. Angell, 14 Mich. 340, 345.

PUT TO EXPENSE

Where, in an action for injuries, plaintiff alleged that he had been put to great expense for medical attendance and nursing, and for the purchase of drugs and medicine, to the amount of $400, the words "put to expense" meant "had incurred or been compelled to incur expense," the word "expense" meaning not only the cost of contemplated services, and materials, but also the charges for such as have been performed or furnished, whether paid or not, and hence plaintiff was not limited to recovering "expenses paid," but was entitled to recover for expenses incurred. Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 1018, 144 Mo. App. 273.

PUTTING IN FEAR

"Intimidation," in the Georgia Penal Code definition of robbery, is synonymous with the "putting in fear," in the common-law definition thereof. If the fact be attended with such circumstances of terror, such threatening by words or gesture, as in common experience are likely to create an apprehension of danger, and induce a man to part with his property for the safety of his person, it is robbery. Johnson v. State, 57 S. E. 1056, 1 Ga. App. 729.

PUTATIVE .*PUTATIVE CRIMINAL

The term "putative criminals" has been defined to be all who have actually committed crime before the grand jury is sworn, or who are charged or suspected, or, being wholly innocent, are ignorant of the fact that they are suspected, as well as those who are charged with the crime during the sitting of the grand jury. Lang v. New Jersey, 28 Sup. Ct. 594, 595, 209 U. S. 467, 52 L. Ed. 894.

PUTATIVE MARRIAGE

A "putative marriage" is one which is in reality null, but which has been contracted in good faith by the two parties, or by one of them. Walker v. Walker's Estate (Tex.) 136 S. W. 1145, 1148.

PUTLOG

"Putlogs" are the timbers supporting the floor of a scaffold or staging. The injury to an employé by the falling of the staging is the result of negligence in the exercise of superintendency. Solari v. Clark, 72 N. E. 958, 187 Mass. 229, 68 L. R. A. 243. See, also, Fisher v. Minegaux, 63 Atl. 902, 73 N. J. Law, 424.

PUTS

"A 'put' is a privilege to deliver or not deliver grain or other commodity." Where plaintiff purchased from defendants certain puts, or an option to sell to defendants a certain quantity of grain at a fixed price within a limited time, and the evidence established that such contracts were merely speculative, and that the parties did not intend that any grain should be delivered or received, but that settlement should be made by payment of differences in the market price, the contract was in violation of Rev. St. 1899, § 2337, prohibiting all contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery where the intention was to settle by payment of differences, and section 2342, declaring that such contracts shall be considered gambling. Lane v. Logan Grain Co., 79 S. W. 722, 724, 105 Mo. App. 215. See, also, Zeller v. Leiter, 99 N. Y. Supp. 624, 626, 627, 114 App. Div. 148 (citing Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 55 Am. Rep. 414).

"Puts and calls" are transactions in the form of written offers to contract for the purchase or sale of grain at a designated price, with an agreement to leave the offers open for acceptance until a specified hour for a paid consideration equal to one-tenth of a cent per bushel of grain. Ware v. Pearsons, 173 Fed. 878, 880, 98 C. C. A. 364.

QR

See Se qr 24.

The letters "qr" are the recognized abbreviations for "quarter," as applied to weights and measures. Bandow v. Wolven, 107 N. W. 204, 206, 20 S. D. 445 (citing Stand. Dict.).

QUACK

A physician who is utterly incompetent is usually termed a "quack." Burk v. Foster, 69 S. W. 1096, 1097, 114 Ky. 20, 59 L. R. A. 277, 1 Ann. Cas. 304.

QUADROON

The "quadroon" is distinctly whiter than the mulatto. State v. Treadaway, 52 South. 500, 508, 126 La. 300, 139 Am. St. Rep. 514, 20 Ann. Cas. 1297.

QUALIFY

QUALIFICATION

All qualifications, see All.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 3784, prescribed the subjects in which applicants to practice medicine should be examined, and article 3785 that, when the board should be satisfied as to the qualifications of an applicant, they should grant him a certificate to that effect. Held, that the term "qualification of an applicant" as so used referred to the knowledge possessed by the applicant in the opinion of the board in the several subjects or branches of medical science specified in section 3784. Board of Medical Examiners for State of Texas v. Taylor, 120 S. W. 574, 576, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 291.

Office

The word "qualification," in Const. art. 18, § 6, providing that the qualifications of the county superintendent shall be fixed by law, means educational equipment or attainment. Bradfield v. Avery, 102 Pac. 687, 689, 16 Idaho, 769, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1228.

Witness

The word "qualification," in an instruction that the jury is the judge of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of each witness, and, in deciding upon the weight of evidence, the jury may consider the qualification and interest of each witness, is not synonymous with the words "competent" and "competency," but clearly intends that the jury shall regard such qualities in witnesses to enable them to give due weight and credence to their testimony, and it is not for them to decide, and they could not have understood the instruction as to authorize them to pass upon the competency of the witnesses.

Parkersburg Nat. Bank v. Hannaman, 60 S. E. 242, 63 W. Va. 358 (citing and adopting Railway Co. v. Whitehead, 15 South. 890, 71 Miss. 451, 452).

QUALIFIED

See Regularly Qualified.

The word "qualified," in Pen. Code 1895, § 958, declaring that if a person shall not be tried at the term at which his demand for trial is made, or the next term, and at both terms there were juries qualified to try him, he shall be discharged, relates to qualifications of the panel, rather than particular qualification of individuals. Campbell v. State, 65 S. E. 307, 308, 6 Ga. App. 539.

In Gen. Laws, c. 243, § 2, providing that either party in a civil action may, before the opening of the action to the jury, challenge any qualified jurors called for a trial of such cause, the word "qualified" refers only to those jurors who are not subject to challenge for cause in the case then for trial. Stevens v. Union R. Co., 58 Atl. 492, 494, 26 R. I. 90, 66 L. R. A. 465.

In Const. § 121, as amended, providing who shall be a qualified elector, the word "qualified" neither adds to, nor detracts from, the meaning of the word "elector." It follows that the word "electors," as used in section 168, providing that all changes in the boundaries of organized counties shall be submitted to the electors at a general election, means all persons who are qualified to vote. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 362, 18 N. D. 31.

Hill's Code, § 1084, provides that, when a will is proven, letters testamentary shall be issued to the persons named therein as executors, or to such of them as give notice of their trust and are qualified. Section 1108 prescribes that "the following persons are not qualified to act as executors or administrators: Nonresidents of this state; minors; judicial officers other than justices of the peace; persons of unsound mind or who have been convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; or a married woman." It was held that all persons who are qualified and competent to serve were not disqualified, and, when nominated in the will, were entitled to have the letters testamentary issued to them. One who is not disqualified, or does not fall within one or the other exception of the statute, must then be qualified and entitled to the letters. Holladay v. Holladay, 19 Pac. 81, 83, 16 Or. 147.

QUALIFIED CONSENT

A paper was circulated by a railroad company among property owners to obtain their consent for construction of an elevated railroad in a street. An abutting owner signed it, after the words written in by him, "I am in favor of an elevated road over the middle of the street, but not on the walk." Held that, if this was a consent, it was a "qualified" and conditional one, which was not accepted; the company having built their structure onto the sidewalks. Shaw v. New York Elevated R. Co., 79 N. E. 984, 986, 187 N. Y. 186.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR

Under the express provisions of the election law (Laws 1896, c. 909, § 34), a "qualified elector" is a male citizen who is or will be on the day of election 21 years of age, who has been an inhabitant of the state for one year next preceding the election, and for the last four months a resident of the county, and for the last 30 days a resident of the election district in which he may offer his vote. In re Sheridan, 107 N. Y. Supp. 244, 246, 57 Misc. Rep. 42.

A "qualified elector" within the local option law (Pub. Acts 1889, No. 207, § 3, as amended by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 183), providing for petition for a local option election to be signed by one-third of the qualified electors of the county, as shown by the poll lists or returns and canvass of the last general election, is one who meets the requirements of Const. art. 7, § 1. Rutledge v. Board of Sup'rs of Marquette County, 124 N. W. 945, 946, 160 Mich. 22.

Laws 1907, c. 245, provides that upon petition of one-fifth of the qualified electors residing within territory sought to be annexed, the board of county commissioners, after due hearing, shall call an election on the question of the annexation in the territory to be annexed, which shall be conducted according to the general election laws and at which only qualified electors shall vote. The general election law (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4798) provides that the board of county commissioners in each county shall divide their respective counties into election precincts, establish the boundaries thereof, and designate one voting place in each precinct. Held, that since under the general election law a voter would only be a "qualified elector" within the precinct in which he resided, there was no valid election for the annexation of territory to a city, where no polling places were established by the notice calling for the election in eight of the precincts of the county which were included within the territory to be annexed; the voters in such precincts not being qualified electors. Wilton v. Pierce County, 112 Pac. 386, 387, 61 Wash. 386.

As qualified voter

See Qualified Voters.

As registered voter

Under the local option act providing for the calling of an election to determine the question on petition of not less than one-fourth of all the "qualified electors" of the county, a registered elector is a qualified elector although his name does not appear upon the poll lists. Werstein v. Board of Sup'rs of Calhoun County, 120 N. W. 354, 355, 156 Mich. 63.

The terms "legal voters" and "qualified electors" are interchangeable, but are not equivalent to registered voters, as used in Laws 1905, p. 41, providing for the calling of an election to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited on petition of 10 per cent. of the registered voters. The phrase "legal voters" is a synonym for "registered voters," as used in the act. Roesch v. Henry, 103 Pac. 439, 440, 441, 54 Or. 230.

Laws 1911, c. 112, by section 2, confers power to create new counties upon county commissioners, and provides that the proceedings therefor shall be instituted by petition signed by at least one-half of the "qualified electors of the proposed new county" whose names appear on the official registration books used at the general election therein last preceding the presentation of the petition, and permits the board to take the petition as prima facie evidence of the jurisdictional facts or to hear evidence thereon. Sections 3 and 4 require the commissioners to designate the election precincts in the proposed new county, and to proclaim and hold an election therein. A petition showing all other jurisdictional facts contained 641 signatures, all of which the board found were of electors entitled to join in the petition, and that of the total of 1,411 registered voters on the register 143 did not, because of deaths, removal, etc., represent qualified electors, but held the petition insufficient because it was not signed by one-half of the total number of 1,411. Held, that the qualified electors of the proposed new county were those whose names were properly on the list, excluding those deceased, or disqualified by change of residence or other cause, and that, as the number of signatures remaining on the petition was more than one-half of the properly qualified electors, the petition was sufficient. State ex rel. Bogy v. Board of Com'rs, 117 Pac. 1062, 1064, 43 Mont. 533.

Women

Women entitled to vote for school officers under Const. § 128, constitute a class separate from "qualified electors," as defined by section 121, and only possess a limited elective franchise. Wagar v. Prendeville, 130 N. W. 224, 225, 21 N. D. 245.

QUALIFIED FEE

See, also, Base Fee; Determinable Fee.

An estate which may end on the happening of an event is usually called a "qualified fee." The estate taken by a church to continue in such organization as long as devoted to specified uses was such a fee. North v. Graham, 85 N. E. 267, 268, 235 Ill. 178, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 624, 126 Am. St. Rep. 189, 14 Ann. Cas. 434 (citing First Universalist Society of North Adams v. Boland, 29 N. E. 524, 155 Mass. 171, 15 L. R. A. 231).

"Whenever a fee is so qualified as to be made to determine, or liable to be determined, at the happening of some contingent event, or act, the fee is said to be 'qualified.' There are four classes of such fees, viz., fee upon condition, fee upon limitation, a conditional limitation, and a fee conditional at common law." Testator first devised to his wife and her heirs one-half of all his property to hold, use, and manage during her life, remainder to testator's son, if he survived her. Testator then devised to the son and his heirs the other half of the property to have, hold, use, and manage in his discretion "during his natural life," and, in case the wife survived the son, at his death the property so devised to him should belong to her. Held that, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4008, requiring all courts concerned in the execution of wills to have due regard to the directions of the will and the true intent of the testator, the will should be construed as giving to the widow and son each a freehold estate for the life of the one who might first die, with cross-determinable fees in remainder; the one to be enlarged into a fee simple in the survivor. Tebow v. Dougherty, 103 S. W. 985, 988, 205 Mo. 315 (quoting and adopting the definition in Tiedeman, Real Prop. p. 28, §§ 44, 271).

Under a patent to the Choctaw Nation, by which it conveyed and granted certain lands to said nation in fee simple to them and their descendants to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, liable to no transfer or alienation except to the United States or with their consent, the estate conveyed is a "qualified fee." Dukes v. McKenna, 69 S. W. 832, 834, 4 Ind. T. 156.

A "qualified fee" is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Black. Com. 109). A deed which, in consideration of a sum paid by A. and K., a committee of a certain church society, "or their successors to that office for the time being," conveyed "unto the said A. and K." a certain tract, "to have and to hold the aforegranted premises to the said A. and K. and to their successors in office to their use and behoof forever," conveyed a fee simple and not a base or qualified fee which would terminate when the church society ceased to exist. Hamlin v. Particular Baptist Meeting House, 69 Atl. 315, 317, 103 Me. 343.

An "estate in fee" may not be an estate in fee simple, properly speaking, which is a pure inheritance, free from any and every qualification or condition. Estates in fee are not thus restricted in their nature. Every estate which may pass to heirs general by descent, and continue forever, is a fee; the owner having the entire property in himself. Such an estate may be a pure fee simple; or it may be a "qualified fee." The latter is an estate which may continue forever, and is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event circumscribing its continuance or extent, though the object on which it rests for perpetuity may be transitory or perishable; yet such an estate is deemed a fee, because, as is said, it has a possibility of enduring forever. A limitation to a man and his heirs, so long as A. shall have heirs of his body, or to a man and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale, or till the marriage of B. or so long as St. Paul's church shall stand, or a tree shall stand, are a few of the many instances given in the books of this species of fee. The material difference between a fee simple and other fees is "that the former estate will, the latter may, continue forever." Waldron v. Gianini, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent's Comm. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. 68, §§ 42-80; 1 Prest. Est., 429-431); Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs, 42 South. 290, 314, 89 Miss. 448 (citing And. Law Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 109).

E. died in 1798, having by his last will and testament devised a farm to his son M., his heirs and assigns forever, and another farm to his son J., in like manner. The will contained this clause: "It is my will, and I do order and appoint, that if either of my sons should depart this life without lawful issue, his share or part shall go to the survivor." In 1801 the sheriff sold all the estate which M. then had in his share, by virtue of a fi. fa. against him; and J. died in 1813, leaving M. surviving. Held, that the estate devised to M. was a "qualified fee," which became a fee simple on the death of J., and belonged to W. Waldron v. Gianini (N. Y.) 6 Hill, 601, 604, 605 (citing 4 Kent, Comm. [5th Ed.] 5, 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 104, 106, 109; 1 Cruise's Dig. p. 68, §§ 42-86; 1 Prest. Est. 429-431).

QUALIFIED OWNERSHIP

"Qualified ownership" in property is not absolute ownership, which is perfect ownership without condition and without restriction or limitation. A testator by his will left his residuary estate in trust until the death or remarriage of his widow, on the happening of either of which events it was to be divided equally between his three sons. Until such times the income was to be collected by the trustees, and on a stated day each year, after deducting the cost of administration, divided equally between the widow and sons, share and share alike. The reversionary interest of the sons in the corpus of the estate was not subject to tax under War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, Schedule B, §§ 29, 30, 30 Stat. 464, 465, as amended by Act March 2, 1901, c. 806, §§ 10, 11, 31 Stat. 946, because such interests were not "absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment" prior to July 1, 1902, within the meaning of Act June 27, 1902, c. 1156, 32 Stat. 406, the widow being then living and unmarried, and for the further reason, as to the one-fourth part from which the widow received the income, the statute requires the tax to be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged, and the widow's interest is not subject to tax nor deduction on account of the same. Shanley v. Herold, 141 Fed. 423, 428.

QUALIFIED PERSONS

By Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 50, 30 Stat. 561, "any 'qualified person' may file a petition to be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt." Section 4a of the act (30 Stat. 547) provides that "any person who owes debts, except a corporation, shall be entitled to the benefit of this act as a voluntary bankrupt." "Qualified person" of the statute is therefore one other than a corporation who owes debts. In re Little, 137 Fed. 521, 522, 70 C. C. A. 105.

QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE

See, also, Qualifiedly Privileged.

A "qualified privilege" extends to all communications made bona fide on any matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he owes a duty to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, and to cases where the duty is not a legal one, but is of a moral or social character of imperfect obligation. De Van Rose v. Tholborn, 134 S. W. 1093, 153 Mo. App. 408.

Where there is no express malice, statements, otherwise defamatory, made to a person with an interest in the person about whom they are made, may be privileged, but such privilege is a "qualified" one, in that it extends only to such statements as are made in the discharge of a legal or moral duty, and which he in good faith believes true. Bingham v. Gaynor, 96 N. E. 84, 85, 203 N. Y. 27; 126 N. Y. S. 353, 141 App. Div. 301.

Words sued on as being slanderous are uttered under "qualified privilege" where they are uttered under honest belief that the speaker is discharging a moral or social duty in speaking. Where defendant, on meeting plaintiff, stated to him that he should be careful how he spoke, that others had stated that he had committed perjury, and that defendant, as plaintiff's friend, had tried to stop the prosecution of plaintiff, and defendant alleged that such statement was made in the honest belief that he was performing a moral and social duty toward the plaintiff for his benefit, the statement was privileged. Hudnell v. Eureka Lumber Co., 45 S. E. 532, 533, 133 N. C. 169.

Letters written in due course of business by an insurance adjuster, addressed to insurers, to show their liability to contribute their pro rata share of the expenses incurred by the adjuster in securing an adjustment of the loss at a sum substantially less than the adjustment made by the addressees' adjuster, which refer to such adjuster as incompetent and unable to protect the interests of insurers, and state that his conduct as adjuster was reprehensible, unprofessional, and silly, are qualifiedly privileged, and do not go beyond the privilege, and do not by themselves indicate malice, in view of the fact that the writer, in making the adjustment, had been handicapped by the adjustment made by the addressees' adjuster, who had procured an adjustment for the addressees on the condition that insured would reimburse addressees, provided any other adjuster found a less loss acquiesced in by insured; a "qualified privilege" existing where the person making the communication complained of has an interest in the subject-matter, and the person to whom the communication is made has a corresponding interest, and the privilege extending to all such communications made bona fide. Richardson v. Cooke, 56 South. 318, 320, 129 La. 365.

QUALIFIED TEACHER

Within Ballinger's Annotated Codes & St. § 2322, providing that no person shall be a qualified teacher who has not first received a certificate issued by the superintendent of public instruction, or who has not a state certificate, or life diploma from the state board of education, or who has not a temporary certificate or a special certificate granted by the county superintendent, a mere letter from a county superintendent, stating that an applicant's papers were sufficient to entitle him to a temporary certificate, and that such certificate would be granted on application as provided by statute, was not the equivalent of a temporary certificate, so as to make the applicant a "qualified teacher." Kester v. School Dist. No. 34 of Walla Walla County, 93 Pac. 907, 48 Wash. 486.

QUALIFIED VOTERS

"Qualified voters," within the local option law, providing that a local option petition shall be signed by "qualified voters" who are qualified to vote for members of the Legislature, are those persons who have the qualifications specified by the Constitution and by Rev. St. 1899, § 6994, there being no special qualifications for persons entitled to vote for members of the Legislature. State v. Foreman, 97 S. W. 269, 270, 121 Mo. App. 502.

Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 3, 4, provide the qualifications of voters, and declare that every person shall be able to read and write, unless registered under another clause, before being entitled "to register," as required by section 3, and that "before he shall be entitled to "vote" he shall have paid his poll tax for the previous year. Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 233, § 7, requires an order for a municipal election to determine whether saloons shall be licensed in lieu of a city dispensary on petition of one-third of the "registered voters" therein for the preceding municipal election, and section 9 declares that "any person entitled to vote for," etc., "shall have the right to vote at such election." Held, that "registered voters" did not include all persons whose names were on the permanent registration roll at the preceding municipal election, but only included those who had paid their poll tax as required and were entitled to vote. Pace v. City of Raleigh, 52 S. E. 277, 278, 282, 140 N. C. 65.

As persons actually voting

As used in Mississippi Constitution, providing for the issuance of bonds with the assent of two-thirds of the qualified voters of the county, given at an election lawfully held for the purpose, meant not those qualified and entitled to vote, but those qualified and actually voting; a voter in that connection being one who actually votes, and not one who, though qualified to vote, did not do so. Treat v. De Jean, 118 N. W. 709, 712, 22 S. D. 505 (quoting Hawkins v. Board of Sup'rs of Carroll County, 50 Miss. 761).

The words "qualified voters," as used in the constitutional provision requiring, for the adoption of a constitutional amendment, the assent of a certain portion of such voters at an election, must be taken to mean those qualified and actually voting. Knight v. Shelton, 134 Fed. 423, 431 (citing Belknap v. City of Louisville, 36 S. W. 1118, 99 Ky. 475, 34 L. R. A. 256, 59 Am. St. Rep. 478).

Act Cong. March 4, 1898, c. 35, and Act New Mexico March 16, 1907, authorizing municipal bonds, notwithstanding the limitations on municipal indebtedness, if two-thirds of the qualified voters, as defined, shall vote therefor, require a two-thirds of those actually voting only, and not two-thirds of all the voters of the municipality. Fabro v. Town of Gallup, 103 Pac. 271, 275, 15 N. M. 108.

As registered voters

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 2746, requiring officers in certain cities to be "qualified voters," one's eligibility is not affected by his failure to register. Meffert v. Brown, 116 S. W. 779, 132 Ky. 201.

Registration is necessary to qualification as a voter, so that, when a statute requires that a majority of the "qualified voters" should have cast their votes for a given proposition before it becomes the law, it means a majority of the registered voters. Clark v. City of Statesville, 52 S. E. 52, 54, 139 N. C. 490 (citing Norment v. Charlotte, 85 N. C. 387; Southerland v. City of Goldsboro, 1 S. E. 760, 96 N. C. 49; Duke v. Brown, 1 S. E. 873, 96 N. C. 127; McDowell v. Massachusetts & S. Const. Co., 2 S. E. 351, 96 N. C. 514; Wood v. Town of Oxford, 2 S. E. 653, 97 N. C. 227).

The term "qualified voters," as used in Acts Wash. 1903, p. 393, § 186, relating to amendment of a city charter on petition of a certain proportion of qualified voters of the city, refers to those persons who are defined as qualified voters in Const. art. 6, § 1, and does not import that they should have been registered voters. Registration laws cannot be regarded as adding a new qualification to those voters for those prescribed by the Constitution, but are merely regulations prescribing the mode of exercising the right to vote. Hindman v. Boyd, 84 Pac. 609, 613, 42 Wash. 17.

The term "qualified voters," in Act Feb. 19, 1907, requiring the submission of the question of the issuance of bonds by a school district to the "qualified voters" thereof, and declaring that at the election only "qualified voters" residing in the district shall be allowed to vote, means the same as "qualified electors," and a qualified elector is one who presents to the managers of election his registration certificate and proof of payment of all taxes, including the poll tax, assessed against him and collectible during the previous year, and a registered elector is a qualified voter, though not liable to a poll tax nor to the payment of any taxes, because taxes had not been assessed against him. McLaurin v. Tatum, 67 S. E. 560, 562, 85 S. C. 444.

Women

The marshals provided for in each division of the city court of Kansas City, Kan., by Laws 1905, c. 193, are not city officers, and women are not "qualified voters" in the election of such officers. Fee v. Richardson, 107 Pac. 789, 82 Kan. 190.

QUALIFIEDLY PRIVILEGED

See, also, Qualified Privilege.

Privileged communications fall into two classes, those absolutely privileged, such as the opinions of judges, and others qualifiedly privileged, such as publications made to protect the rights of the one publishing. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1104.

Where defendant, in attempting to secure evidence as to the unchaste conduct of plaintiff, uttered words imputing a want of chastity on her part, to one having no interest in the case, but who, defendant hoped, would testify as to plaintiff's want of chastity, the communication was not "qualifiedly privileged," for a qualifiedly privileged communication is one made bona fide by a party having an interest to one having a corresponding interest, and in this case the prospective witness had no interest. Vanloon v. Vanloon, 140 S. W. 631, 636, 159 Mo. App. 255.

A communication is "qualifiedly privileged" when made in good faith upon any subject in which the communicant has an interest, or with reference to which he has a duty to one having a corresponding interest or duty; malice not being inferable in such case merely from the falsity of the communicated statements. A qualifiedly privileged communication is not actionable libel, in absence of malice. Bohlinger v. Germania Life Ins. Co., 140 S. W. 257, 258, 100 Ark. 477, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 613.

QUALITY

See Best Quality; Guaranty of Quality. Similar quality, see Similar.

In a bill of lading noting that the captain of the vessel was "not responsible for the weight nor quality nor for loose bales," the word "quality" meant no other than the commercial quality of the fiber shipped and could not be held to mean that the vessel should be relieved of any liability for a damaged condition of the fiber delivered, where it appeared that it was in good condition when shipped. The La Kroma, 138 Fed. 936, 938.

QUALITY GUARANTEED

Where a contract for the sale of binder twine contained the words "quality guaranteed," such words should be construed to import a warranty that the twine was reasonably fit for the use for which binder twine is designed. Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 128 Fed. 672, 677, 63 C. C. A. 224.

QUALITY OF ACT

An instruction on insanity, in a prosecution for homicide, that, if accused was sufficiently sane to know the nature and quality of his act, he was then legally responsible therefor, was not objectionable for failure to also require that he was sufficiently sane to know that his act in killing deceased was wrong; the term "nature of act" being defined to mean the attributes which constitute the thing and distinguish it from all others, while "quality of act" is the power to clearly and distinctly apprehend its nature, so that, if a person has sufficient mental power to fully appreciate and know what he is doing, he must necessarily know that the killing of a human being is wrong. Montgomery v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 813, 817.

QUANTITY

See Paying Quantities; Reasonable Quantities.

In a statute providing for a homestead "consisting of any 'quantity of land' not exceeding 80 acres, and a dwelling house thereon, and its appurtenances," the term "quantity of land" does not necessarily mean one parcel or compact body of land, and therefore two separate ten-acre parcels of land touching only at the corners between which is a regular roadway, if owned, occupied, and cultivated as one farm, may constitute a homestead, although the residence and appurtenances are all located on one tract. Brixius v. Reimringer, 112 N. W. 273, 101 Minn. 347, 118 Am. St. Rep. 629.

QUANTUM

QUANTUM MERUIT

A claim against an estate for services performed at the request of deceased and with her knowledge, and alleging that they were worth a stated sum, is not a claim on an express contract, but is a claim on "quantum meruit," and is supported by proof of performance and value. Boss's Estate v. Baehr, 113 N. W. 433, 434, 133 Wis. 119.

In an action on an express contract, alleged to have been performed by the plaintiff, there can be no recovery on a "quantum meruit." Wade v. Nelson, 95 S. W. 956, 119 Mo. App. 278 (citing Huston v. Tyler, 36 S. W. 654, 41 S. W. 795, 140 Mo. 252; McDonnell v. Stevinson, 77 S. W. 766, 104 Mo. App. 193; Eyerman v. Mount Sinai Cemetery Ass'n, 61 Mo. 469; Deatherage Lumber Co. v. Snyder, 65 Mo. App. 568; Squire v. Ferd Helm Brewing Co., 90 Mo. App. 462; Cox v. Bowling, 54 Mo. App. 289).

When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. "There is no doubt but what a suit on 'quantum meruit' is a distinct cause of action from that of contract. * * * It is the settled law of the state that in a suit on contract the plaintiff cannot recover on quantum meruit." A count of a petition, setting out a contract of employment on commission and alleging performance on plaintiff's part and breach by the defendant, whereby plaintiff was prevented from doing any business, and that plaintiff remained in defendant's service 4½ months, till defendant discharged him, and by reason of defendant's said acts lost 4½ months' time, of the value of $650, and in the performance of said contract incurred $50 expenses, is for breach of contract, and not quantum meruit. McCormick v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 89 S. W. 905, 906, 907, 114 Mo. App. 460 (quoting and adopting definition in Bouv. Law Dict.).

QUARANTINE

Widow's right

"By the seventh section of the Magna Charta, the widow was allowed, under a right known as 'quarantine,' to remain in the mansion house 40 days after the death of her husband, during which time her dower was to be assigned, and during her continuance a reasonable support was allowed her out of the estate." Casteel v. Potter, 75 S. W. 597, 598, 178 Mo. 76.

Where a statute gives the widow the right to retain full possession of the dwelling house in which her husband most usually dwelt, together with the outhouses and plantation thereto belonging, free from molestation and rent until her dower is assigned, the right is called the "widow's quarantine." Dewitt v. Shea, 67 N. E. 761, 762, 203 Ill. 393, 96 Am. St. Rep. 311.

QUARREL

Make quarrel, see Make.

QUARRY

See Undeveloped Granite Quarry.

The term "coal bed" may be used in the sense of "quarry." Hoysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 151 Fed. 321, 327, 330, 331.

"Pit" is synonymous with "quarry," signifying a large opening in the earth from which rock or ores are taken. J. M. Guffey Petroleum Co. v. Murrell, 53 South. 705, 711, 127 La. 466.

There is no inconsistency in a bill to rescind a sale of land for the purchaser's misrepresentations as to its value because it alleges than an "undeveloped granite 'quarry'" under the land is of great value; the phrase signifying a place from which granite may be taken. Crompton v. Beedle, 75 Atl. 331, 335, 83 Vt. 287, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 399.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 10,250, authorizing the valuation of real property on which there is a mine or quarry, owned by the same persons, at the price for which the property, including the mine or quarry, would sell at private, voluntary sale for cash, and, in case the mine or quarry is owned or leased by a person, other than the owner of the land, authorizing the valuation of the land and mine or quarry separately, does not authorize the assessment of hidden, undeveloped coal or other minerals underlying land; a "quarry" being an excavation for obtaining stone, slate, or limestone; and a "mine" being defined by section 8569 to include the workings in every shaft, slope, or drift which is used, or has been used, in the mining and removing of coal from and below the surface of the ground, and being also defined as a pit or excavation from which metallic ores or other similar substances are taken by digging. Board of Com'rs of Greene County v. Lattas Creek Coal Co. (Ind.) 96 N. E. 633, 635.

The term "quarry" is not properly applicable to the comparatively slight excavation on land made primarily for purposes of construction thereon, and not primarily for the purpose of disposing of the rock, or stone, or other material taken out. As defined by the lexicographers, it is similar to a mine, in the sense that the material removed, be it mere rock, or stone, or valuable marble, is removed because of its value for some other purposes, and in the sense that it is not removed for the purpose of improving the property from which it is taken. It is distinguished from a mine in the fact that it is usually open at the top and front (see Century and Standard Dictionaries), and, in the ordinary acceptance of the term, in the character of the material extracted. Webster defines a "quarry" as "a place, cavern, or pit where stone is taken from the rock or ledge, or dug from the earth, for building or other purposes; a stone pit," and in March's Dictionary we find it defined as "a stone mine." In its proper significance this is what it really is. It is a place, generally open at top and front, from which rock or stone is extracted solely because of its value for use elsewhere, just as gold or other precious metals are removed from a mine; and "proper and usual excavations" made for construction purposes on the land to be improved do not fall within the term "quarry." Ex parte Kelso, 82 Pac. 241, 147 Cal. 609, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178.

QUARRYING

As mining, see Mining.

QUART

As to foxberries in barrels, with water added to act as a cushion, so as to prevent crushing, held that, in assessing the duty "per quart," provided in paragraph 262, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, 30 Stat. 171, the dutiable quantity should be ascertained by the use of the dry quart and not the liquid quart. United States v. Boak Fish Co., 146 Fed. 104-106.

QUARTER

See Southwest Quarter.

The court will take judicial notice that a "quarter" as indicative of value means 25 cents. Sims v. State, 57 S. E. 1029, 1 Ga. App. 776.

Fourth synonymous

The interlineation of the word "fourth" after the words "northeast" and over some other word—probably "quarter"—in the descriptive part of a deed is not such an evident mark of suspicion as to authorize the court to exclude the deed from evidence; the words "quarter" and "fourth" being synonymous, and no other words being appropriate at the place. Campbell v. Bates, 39 South. 144, 146, 148 Ala. 338.

QUARTERLY DURING HIS NATURAL LIFE

Where a testator by his will created a trust estate, the income thereof to be paid to one beneficiary "quarterly during his natural life," that term is a mere direction as to the time and manner of payment, and has no reference to the vesting of the beneficiary's interest, and hence the beneficiary's death before the first quarterly payment was due does not divest his right. Union Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Dudley, 72 Atl. 166, 172, 104 Me. 297.

QUASH

See Motion to Quash.

According to 2 Abb. Law Dict. p. 364, "quash" means to annul, overthrow, or vacate, by judicial decision, and where a writ of venire facias was quashed it was as though it had never been issued and the court was without a jury present from which to make up a panel; the persons present who had been summoned under the writ being mere bystanders and no longer under the control of the court. Hoback v. Commonwealth, 52 S. E. 575, 576, 104 Va. 871.

The power to "quash" writs is limited to proceedings that are irregular, defective, or improper. Bruner v. Finley, 60 Atl. 488, 489, 490, 211 Pa. 74 (citing Crawford v. Stewart, 38 Pa. 34; Steel v. Goodwin, 6 Atl. 49, 113 Pa. 288).

QUASI

"Quasi" is not a very definite term. It marks a resemblance and supposes a difference. Barron v. City of Anniston, 48 South. 58, 59, 157 Ala. 399.

QUASI CONTRACT

See, also, Statutory Obligation.

A "quasi contract" is one where liability exists from implication of law arising from facts and circumstances, independent of agreement or presumed intention, based on the doctrine of unjust enrichment; the agreement being one defining the duty of the defendant, rather than his intention. Board v. Highway Com'rs, Bloomington Tp., v. City of Bloomington, 97 N. E. 280, 284, 253 Ill. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 471.

A "quasi contract" arises where there is a legal duty to respond in money, which by legal fiction may be enforced as on an implied promise, but in such case there is no element of contract so called, but there is only the duty to which the law affixes a legal obligation of performance, as in case of a promise between the parties. Wojahn v. National Union Bank of Oshkosh, 129 N. W. 1068, 1069, 1077, 144 Wis. 646.

"A statutory obligation which does not rest upon the consent of the parties is clearly quasi-contractual in its nature." A tax as an obligation or duty created by statute to pay money is quasi-contractual, although there may be difficulty as to the remedy for its enforcement in a given case. In re United Button Co., 140 Fed. 495, 502 (quoting Kee-ner, Quasi Cont. p. 16).

Where there was no agreement between plaintiff and defendant that defendant was to return money advanced on the purchase price of real property if the negotiations failed, or at all, yet where equity and good conscience required him to do so, the law implied a promise on his part, and the obligation created or implied is termed a "quasi contract," a contract implied by law, or a constructive contract. Schaeffer v. Miller, 109 Pac. 970, 972, 41 Mont. 417, 137 Am. St. Rep. 746.

A trustee in bankruptcy may sue in assumpsit for the value of a preferential transfer of goods by the bankrupt to a creditor, who takes the goods impressed with the obligation created by the bankruptcy act to restore or pay on the trustee electing to sue; such obligation being a "quasi contract," which is a fiction of law adapted to enforce legal duties by actions of contract, where no proper contract, express or implied, exists. Reber v. Ellis Bros., 185 Fed. 313, 314.

Where a contract for the construction of a public work for a city required the contractor to use a certain kind and quality of cement in the masonry and concrete work, but no particular quantity was specified, nor the price to be paid therefor, the contract having been let on a bid for the completed work, the fact that the contractor used an inferior and cheaper cement does not give the city, after paying for the work without knowledge of the substitution, a right of action ex quasi contractu or in repetition, under Rev. Civ. Code La. art. 2293 et seq., to recover the difference in the cost of the two kinds of cement or the profit made by the contractor by the substitution as money paid which was not due; but the remedy is by action on the contract, as provided for in articles 1930 and 2769, and the measure of recovery is the amount of damages sustained by the city by reason of its breach. National Contracting Co. v. Sewerage & Water Board of New Orleans, 141 Fed. 325, 329, 72 C. C. A. 478.

QUASI CORPORATION

See Quasi Public Corporation.

The designation of certain corporations such as school districts, or road districts as "quasi corporations," distinguishes them on the one hand from private corporations, aggregate, and on the other from municipal corporations, proper, such as cities or towns acting under charters or incorporating statutes and which are invested with more power and endowed with special functions relating to the particular or local interests. Herald v. Board of Education, 65 S. E. 102, 104, 65 W. Va. 765, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588.

As agencies of state

"Quasi corporations" consist of counties, townships, school districts, highway districts, etc. They are governmental agencies, and it is, to say the least, doubtful if they are in any respect anything else, or have any rights that can be called private. They perform many functions, but these are for and about the business of the state, which has imposed upon them the responsibility and expense of maintaining highways, schools, drains, and bridges, etc. Ex parte Corliss, 114 N. W. 962, 989, 16 N. D. 470 (citing Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 92 N. W. 289, 131 Mich. 639); Whitehead v. Board of Education of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 1028, 1029, 139 Mich. 490 (quoting and adopting definition in Attorney General ex rel. Kies v. Lowrey, 92 N. W. 289, 131 Mich. 639).

Counties

Counties are commonly called "quasi corporations." James v. Trustees of Wellston Tp., 90 Pac. 100, 105, 18 Okl. 56, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1219, 11 Ann. Cas. 938 (citing Helgal v. Wichita County, 19 S. W. 562, 84 Tex. 392, 31 Am. St. Rep. 63).

"The counties of this state, like townships, are 'quasi corporations,' created solely for governmental purposes, and hold their property, not as private owners, but for the performance of their duties as public agencies." State ex rel. Skillingstad v. Gunn, 100 N. W. 97, 99, 92 Minn. 436.

Counties are "quasi corporations" formed to exercise purely governmental powers and, in the absence of an express statute to that effect, are not liable for damages either for the nonexercise of their powers or for their improper exercise by those charged with their execution. Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 309, 247 Mo. 197.

Municipal corporation

The term "municipal corporations" involves the idea of a voluntary association by the inhabitants of a particular territory, sanctioned by the power of the state for the purposes of local government. But the sovereign power may, without regard to any prior agreement or action on the part of the inhabitants of the territory involved, provide for the exercise of powers such as the election of local officers by the inhabitants, and these organizations, though public in character and partaking somewhat of the nature of a corporation, are not strictly speaking corporations, but "quasi corporations." Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109-1111, 132 Iowa, 533.

Private bank

A private bank carried on by an individual is not a "quasi corporation" under the banking law. In re Purl's Estate, 125 S. W. 849, 853, 147 Mo. App. 105.

Reclamation district

While "reclamation districts" are sometimes called "quasi corporations," it would perhaps be more accurate to say that they are not corporations at all, but are so classed because of the many presumptions and rules which apply to corporations and have been made applicable to them. They are public agencies which will cease to exist when the policy of the state has changed so that they are no longer required or when there is no further function for them to perform. Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, 105 Pac. 277, 280, 11 Cal. App. 399 (citing People ex rel. Van Loben Sels v. Reclamation District No. 551, 48 Pac. 1016, 117 Cal. 114).

Road district

A road district is not a "quasi corporation." Custer County Bank v. Custer County, 100 N. W. 424, 426, 18 S. D. 274.

School district

A school district is a "quasi corporation" created pursuant to legislative enactment. It can exercise only those powers which are expressly conferred by statute or which arise therefrom by necessary implication. A. G. Andrews Co. v. Delight Special School Dist., 128 S. W. 361, 362, 95 Ark. 26.

A school district is but a "quasi corporation," with limited powers, and can do only those things which the law expressly allows or implies. Montpelier Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. School Dist. No. 5, 92 N. W. 439, 442, 115 Wis. 622; Schmutz v. Special School Dist. of City of Little Rock, 95 S. W. 438, 439, 78 Ark. 118 (citing Memphis Trust Co. v. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist., 62 S. W. 902, 69 Ark. 284; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 22).

Township

A township is clearly to be classed with "quasi corporations," and not with municipal corporations. Hanson v. City of Cresco, 109 N. W. 1109, 1112, 132 Iowa, 533.

Townships are merely "quasi corporations," not endowed with the full and plenary powers usually conferred either by charter or by general law upon municipal corporations proper, but only resembling the same in organization and functions. Wilson v. Ulysses Tp. of Butler County, 101 N. W. 986, 988, 72 Neb. 807, 9 Ann. Cas. 1153.

Townships are "quasi corporations" formed to exercise purely governmental powers, and, in the absence of an express statute to that effect, are not liable for damages either for the nonexercise of their powers, or for their improper exercise by those charged with their execution. Cassidy v. City of St. Joseph, 152 S. W. 306, 309, 247 Mo. 197.

QUASI CRIME

"Quasi crime" is an offense not constituting a crime or misdemeanor at law, but which is in the nature of a crime. It includes a class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the local or general public proper to be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ferrell, 39 Ind. App. 515, 78 N. E. 988, 995, 80 N. E. 425 (citing Bouv. Dict. title "Quasi Crimes"); Southern Ry. Co. v. McNeeley, 88 N. E. 710, 712, 44 Ind. App. 126.

QUASI CRIMINAL

A prosecution for a violation of a municipal ordinance, designed for the protection of the public morals, the preservation of the public peace, the security of the person or property, is a "quasi criminal proceeding." Bray v. State, 37 South. 250, 253, 140 Ala. 172.

QUASI CRIMINAL CONTEMPT

There is a difference between a "quasi criminal contempt" and a civil contempt. A judgment for criminal contempt is not only unnecessary, but positively unwarranted unless there has been a willful disobedience of the court's order. A party may be guilty of both a criminal contempt and a civil contempt, or may be guilty of the one and not the other. A criminal contempt, actual or constructive, or, as Blackstone says, "direct or circumstantial," partakes of the quality of an offense against the state, whereas a civil contempt under the statute is such disobedience of an order of a court of competent jurisdiction, entered for the benefit or advantage of a party to a civil action, as works a loss or injury to the litigant. The one is quasi criminal and the other is a civil wrong; the one is absolved by a fine payable to the state or imprisonment, and the other, by reparation to the other party litigant. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5807 (Pierce's Code, § 1476), providing that, if any loss or injury to a party in an action prejudicial to his rights therein have been caused by the "contempt," the court may give judgment that the party aggrieved recover of the defendant a sum sufficient to indemnify him, it is not necessary that the contempt be a criminal contempt for which a fine could be adjudged. State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co., 107 Pac. 196, 198, 55 Wash. 1.

QUASI EASEMENT

The owner of an entire tract of land or of two or more adjoining parcels may so employ a part thereof as to create a seeming servitude in favor of another portion to which the use becomes appurtenant. Such use is tantamount to an easement at will, so long as the unity of ownership continues, and is described as a "quasi easement." German Savings & Loan Society v. Gordon, 102 Pac. 736, 738, 54 Or. 147, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

There are two classes of easements—"quasi easements," which are existing conditions in the land retained, the continuance of which should be so clearly beneficial to the land conveyed that they would be presumed to be intended, and easements by implied grant where the grantor's conveyance describing the land by a street, passageway, or existing park at the time belonging to the grantor vests an easement of right of way, light and air in the grantee by estoppel. Quasi easements must be such as are apparent in the sense of being indicated by objects which are necessarily seen, or which would be ordinarily observable by persons familiar with the premises. Brown v. Dickey, 75 Atl. 382, 384, 106 Me. 97.

QUASI EMPLOYÉ

Where defendant railroad company was rightfully using the tracks of plaintiff's employer, another railroad company, the plaintiff is not a "quasi employé" of defendant company, within Act April 4, 1868, providing that, when any person shall be injured while employed about the premises of a railroad company of which he is not an employé, the right of action shall be such only as would exist if he were an employé. Hunt v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 76 Atl. 13, 227 Pa. 290.

QUASI ESTOPPEL

The term "quasi estoppel" has been applied to certain legal bars which are in some respects analogous to estoppel in pais, and which have the same practical operation as an estoppel in pais, but which nevertheless differ from that form of estoppel in essential particulars. The term includes the doctrine of election, the principle which precludes a party from asserting to another's disadvantage a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him, and certain forms of waiver. Humes Const. Co. v. Philadelphia Casualty Co., 79 Atl. 1, 3, 32 R. I. 246, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 906.

QUASI GUARDIAN

"The term 'quasi guardian' or guardian de son tort has been applied to persons who, without legal appointment or qualification, assume the functions of a guardian by exercising control over the person, or estate, or both, of a minor. He is subject to all the responsibilities that attach to a legally constituted guardian or trustee. If he takes advantage of the confidence reposed, or of the means afforded him by such relation, by buying up outstanding debts of the estate, for instance, at an under rate, and using them with or without the sanction of a judicial proceeding to acquire in his own name the valuable lands of the infant wards, he is guilty of fraud and breach of trust entitling the infants to the interposition of a court of equity. He who arrogates to himself functions of a guardian will be held to stricter account in chancery than a regularly appointed guardian. So the agent or husband of an administratrix who assumes control and management of the estate, and uses the trust funds for his private purposes, makes himself liable to the infants as a trustee de son tort." Zeideman v. Molasky, 94 S. W. 754, 756, 118 Mo. App. 106 (quoting and adopting the definition in Woerner, Am. Law Guard. 1897, p. 76; citing Grimes v. Wilson [Ind.] 4 Blackf. 331; Hanna v. Spott's Heirs, 5 B. Mon. [44 Ky.] 362, 43 Am. Dec. 132; Johnson v. Smith's Adm'r, 27 Mo. 591).

QUASI IN REM

That class of actions having some of the characteristics of an action strictly in personam and some of the characteristics of an action strictly in rem are known as actions "quasi in rem," and a court of equity may acquire jurisdiction of a suit to establish rights in personal property in the custody of a person in this state as against a nonresident, as such a suit would be one "quasi in rem"; a decree in personam not being necessary to transfer the legal title to complainant. The essential elements of an action "quasi in rem" are a res located within the territorial limits of the state in such a way that the state can exercise absolute power to control and dispose of it, a course of judicial procedure, the object of which is to subject the res to the power of the state directly by judgment or decree, which is entered as distinguished from a course of procedure which only disposes of the res by compelling a party to control or dispose of the res, and a course of judicial procedure on its face directed sufficiently towards the res so as to disclose this res to the defendant when reasonably notified of the action. The jurisdiction in such actions is based on the power of the sovereign state to exercise control over all objects to which that power can be directly applied, and the necessity of the court to control all property within its territorial limits. Hence, an action by a home corporation against a foreign corporation not engaged in business in this state, and without any office, agent, or place of business in the state, to establish title to treasury shares of the capital stock of complainant, which defendant claims to own absolutely, but which complainant alleges were held by defendant's testator in his lifetime as security for the payment of a sum of money, is an action quasi in rem, although complainant asks for a transfer of the shares of stock, and no receiver has been appointed to take possession of the res, and is within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, and defendant, having been duly notified of the suit by the statutory publication of notice and actual service of notice of the suit, and of the order requiring it to appear and plead on or before a time stated, will be bound by the decree, if it refrains from appearing, so far as the same relates to the status of the stock. Amparo Mining Co. v. Fidelity Trust Co., 71 Atl. 605, 607, 74 N. J. Eq. 197.

A suit quasi in rem arises where the suit is against the person in respect of the res, where, for example, it has for its object partition or the sale or other disposition of defendant's property within the jurisdiction to satisfy plaintiff's demand by enforcing a lien upon it. In such a suit personal service within the jurisdiction or appearance is not necessary. The decree can, however, extend only to the property in controversy. Defendant's interest is alone sought to be effected, and he must be cited to appear, and the judgment is conclusive only between the parties. Hill v. Henry, 57 Atl. 554, 555, 66 N. J. Eq. 150.

Though a proceeding is not strictly "in rem," still where the purpose of the proceeding is not to establish an infinite personal liability against any defendant, but is merely to affect the interest of the defendant in specific real property within the state, which has at the outset of the proceeding been brought within the control of the court, it is a proceeding "quasi in rem" within the contemplation of the act of June 1906, relating to the establishment and quieting of title to real estate in case of the loss or destruction of public records by fire, flood, or earthquake, and providing that one claiming an estate in real estate may bring an action "in rem" against all the world. Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 88 Pac. 356, 359, 150 Cal. 289, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199.

"It was early sought to classify all judicial proceedings and all judgments as in personam or in rem; but the courts and text-writers have encountered extreme difficulty in attempting to formulate satisfactory definitions of these terms. A proceeding in personam is one, in form as well as in substance, between the parties claiming the right, and that it is so inter partes appears from the record itself. The judgment in such a proceeding binds the judgment debtor to some sort of personal ability. Such a judgment debtor is not a passive party, but must be eminently active in the performance of any decree which may be made against him. 'A judgment in rem I understand to be an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself, whose state or condition is to be determined. It is a proceeding to determine the state, or condition of the thing itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be. There is, however, a large class of cases which are not strictly actions in rem, but are frequently spoken of as actions quasi in rem, because, though brought against persons, they only seek to subject certain property of those persons to the discharge of the claims asserted. Such are actions in which property of nonresidents is attached and held for the discharge of debts due by them to citizens of the state, and actions for the enforcement of mortgages and other liens. Indeed, all proceedings having for their sole object the sale or other disposition of the property of the defendant to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff are in a general way thus designated. But they differ, among other things, from actions which are strictly in rem, in that the interest of the defendant is alone sought to be affected, that citation to him is required, and that judgment therein is only conclusive between the parties." Gassert v. Strong, 98 Pac. 497, 501, 38 Mont. 18.

QUASI JUDICIAL

See, also, Judicial Power.

There is nothing sacred or inflexible in the meaning of the terms "judicial" or "quasi judicial" functions as applied to condemnation proceedings and the like. In their generally understood and accepted meaning they do not ascribe to lay public officers or bodies the judicial functions of courts of justice, but for want of more accurate terms they simply distinguish acts which are presumed to be the product of judgment based upon evidence, either oral or visual or both, as distinguished from those purely ministerial duties which can only be properly performed in one particular way. People ex rel. Schau v. McWilliams, 77 N. E. 785, 789, 185 N. Y. 92 (dissenting opinion).

Quasi judicial functions are those which lie midway between the judicial and ministerial ones. The lines separating them from such as are thus on their two sides are necessarily indistinct; but, in general terms, when the law, in words or by implication, commits to any officer the duty of looking into facts and acting upon them, not in a way which it specifically directs, but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed "quasi judicial." Bair v. Struck, 74 Pac. 69, 71, 29 Mont. 45, 63 L. R. A. 481 (citing Mechem, Pub. Off. § 637; Bish. Non-Cont. Law, §§ 785, 786); People ex rel. School Dist. No. 5 in Mineral County v. Van Horn, 77 Pac. 978, 982, 20 Colo. App. 215 (quoting with approval Bish. Non-Cont. Law, §§ 785, 786).

A "quasi judicial duty" is one lying in the judgment or discretion of an officer other than a judicial officer. The functions of the board of liquidation of the city debt of the city of New Orleans are not strictly judicial, nor, on the other hand, ministerial, but are quasi judicial. When an officer is charged with looking into and acting upon facts not in a way which it specifically directs but after a discretion in its nature judicial, the function is termed "quasi judicial." An act is judicial when it requires the exercise of judgment or discretion by one or more persons or by a corporate body when acting as public officers in an official character in a manner which seems to them just and equitable. State ex rel. Board of Liquidation of City Debt v. Briede, 41 South. 487, 489, 117 La. 183 (citing Bish. Cont. § 785; Throop, Pub. Off. § 533; Grider v. Tally, 77 Ala. 422, 54 Am. Rep. 65; People v. Board of Supervisors of Schenectady County [N. Y.] 35 Barb. 414).

Under Act March 3, 1899, known as the "State Medical Law," the state board of medical examiners, in the examination of applicants for a license to practice medicine and surgery, are required to exercise judgment and discretion in granting or refusing a license to such applicant, and in so doing exercises "quasi judicial functions." Raaf v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 84 Pac. 33, 36, 11 Idaho, 707.

A moderator of an elector's meeting is a "quasi judicial" officer. Blake v. Brothers, 66 Atl. 501, 79 Conn. 676, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501.

QUASI OFFICE

A man who has received a plurality of the votes of his party at a primary election holds a recognized legal position which may be called, in default of a better term, a "quasi office," namely, that of a nominated candidate. State ex rel. Gulon v. Miles, 109 S. W. 595, 609, 210 Mo. 127 (citing State ex rel. Rinder v. Goff, 109 N. W. 628, 129 Wis. 668, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 916).

Where a person has been elected as a party candidate at a primary election and has received a certificate thereof, he is the holder of a "quasi office" of which he cannot be deprived by subsequent canvass of the vote, or other act of the board of canvassers. State ex rel. Rinder v. Goff, 109 N. W. 628, 632, 129 Wis. 668, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916.

QUASI PARTNERSHIP

Where plaintiff advanced money to another to be used solely in carrying on of a specified business under the latter's name, the venture to continue five years, and plaintiff to be paid one-fourth of the net profits, and provision being made that, upon the death of the other, or the expiration of the stipulated period, the amount advanced, or so much thereof as should remain in the business, must be paid back to plaintiff, with a proportionate share of profits, plaintiff and the other stood towards each other in a "quasi partnership" or "joint adventure" relation. Kirkwood v. Smith, 95 N. Y. Supp. 926, 929, 47 Misc. Rep. 301.

QUASI PUBLIC CORPORATION

See, also, Public Quasi Corporation.

A "quasi public corporation" is one engaged in a business affected with a public interest. McCarter v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 73 Atl. 80, 82, 74 N. J. Eq. 372, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194, 135 Am. St. Rep. 708, 18 Ann. Cas. 1048.

A school district is a corporation of "quasi municipal" character, and though its territorial limits may be actually coterminous with those of a city, the identity of the school district as a corporate entity is not lost or merged in that of the city. Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Longden, 83 Pac. 246, 247, 148 Cal. 380.

A school district is a body corporate by statute, and is a "quasi public corporation," which can exercise only those powers expressly conferred upon it or arising by necessary implication. First Nat. Bank of Waldron v. Whisenhunt, 127 S. W. 968, 969, 94 Ark. 583.

School districts are "public quasi corporations" included in the term "municipal corporations" as used in Const. art. 7, § 7. Smith v. Board of Trustees of Robersonville Graded School, 53 S. E. 524, 529, 141 N. C. 143, 8 Ann. Cas. 529.

A school district is not a municipal corporation, but is a "quasi public corporation," devoted to the single purpose of building schoolhouses, furnishing the same, hiring teachers, levying taxes to support schools, incurring debts, and issuing bonds to further the purposes of taxation. State ex rel. Carrollton School Dist. v. Gordon, 133 S. W. 44, 51, 231 Mo. 547.

School districts are "quasi public corporations," and they raise funds for school purposes by the exercise of the taxing power of the territory. They are simply the agencies of the higher power. On behalf of the territory they cause taxes to be levied out of which schoolhouses are constructed, and such acts when performed by a school district are part of the general exercise of sovereignty which the territory exercises over its entire domain; and it cannot say, after the exercise of such power, that the property and rights so acquired belong to the district independent of the territory. School districts do not own a school building and grounds in the sense that it may sell or exchange or dispose of it except for the purpose of renewing or bettering the school facilities of the district, and for the same reason a county acting through its board of county commissioners, having erected a school building as provided in the separate school act of March 8, 1901, cannot sell or exchange or dispose of it as mere county property. School Dist.

No. 71, Oklahoma County, v. Overholser, 87 Pac. 665, 667, 17 Okl. 147 (quoting and adopting definition in Board of Education of City of Kingfisher v. Board of Com'rs of Kingfisher County, 78 Pac. 458, 14 Okl. 333).

A common carrier possessing the power of eminent domain is a "quasi public corporation." Kakeldy v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co., 80 Pac. 205, 206, 37 Wash. 675.

Companies organized to distribute to cities and inhabitants thereof water or natural gas are universally recognized as being "quasi public corporations." Quinby v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 140 Fed. 362, 364.

A waterworks company is a "quasi public corporation." It must supply water to all who apply therefor and offer to pay the rates. Waterworks companies are required to supply water impartially to all consumers, and they cannot act capriciously, or discriminate against any one who is able to pay for the water supplied. Wiemer v. Louisville Water Co., 130 Fed. 251, 252 (quoting 3 Cook, Corp. § 931).

A corporation exercising a public franchise to supply light to the community, and enjoying public rights in the streets of a municipality, derived from the commonwealth through action of the board of aldermen of the city pursuant to authority from the Legislature, is a "quasi public corporation," and owes duties to the public and must exercise the franchise for the benefit of the public, with a reasonable regard for the rights of individuals who desire to be served, and without discrimination between them; and it cannot relieve itself from such duty so long as it retains its charter. Weld v. Board of Gas & Electric Light Com'rs, 84 N. E. 101, 102, 197 Mass. 556.

"A telephone company is a 'public quasi corporation' when it serves the public." A city council cannot prevent the lessee of a stall in the public market from employing telephonic service, provided the rights of others are not affected and legitimate ordinances of the municipality are not disregarded. Swayze v. City of Monroe, 40 South. 926, 928, 116 La. 643.

A corporation organized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public telephone system, for the purpose of furnishing telephone connection between its subscribers, is a quasi public corporation. Its business is of a public character. It depends upon the public for its support, and the public depends upon it for its accommodations. Such a corporation has such powers only as are expressly or impliedly granted by the statute under which it is organized. A quasi public corporation cannot disable itself for the performance of its functions by the sale and transfer of its property without legislative authority. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville, 127 Fed. 187, 190.

A railroad company chartered by authority of law is a "quasi public corporation," and the public have an interest in the location of its lines of road and depots. In the discharge of this duty, the company should recognize it as a paramount duty to establish and maintain its depots at such points and in such manner as to best subserve the public necessities and convenience. A contract which provides that for a consideration the location of a railroad depot by a railroad company shall be at a certain point, without regard to the right of the people or the public convenience, is contrary to public policy. Enid Right of Way & Townsite Co. v. Lile, 82 Pac. 810, 15 Okl. 328.

A railroad company chartered by authority of law is a "quasi public corporation," and the public have an interest in the location of the lines of road and depots. In the discharge of this duty the railroad company should recognize it as a paramount duty to establish and maintain depots at such points and in such manner to best subserve the public necessities and conveniences. A note made payable to a director or officer of a railroad company on condition that a railroad is to be built to a certain point by a certain time is void as against public policy. McGuffin v. Coyle & Guss, 85 Pac. 954, 959, 16 Okl. 648, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524.

"Railroad companies are 'quasi public corporations,' created for the purpose of exercising the functions and performing the duties of common carriers. These duties are defined by law, and in accepting their charters they necessarily take with them all the duties and liabilities annexed, and they are required to supply to the extent of their resources adequate facilities for the transportation of all business offered and to deal fairly and impartially with their patrons." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Central Stockyards Co., 97 S. W. 778, 788, 133 Ky. 148 (quoting Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pittsburg & K. Coal Co., 64 S. W. 969, 111 Ky. 960, 55 L. R. A. 601, 98 Am. St. Rep. 447).

A railroad company is only a "quasi public corporation," and as such it must not only take into consideration the public welfare, but the private welfare of its shareholders as well in the location and construction of its line of road. A donation to its assets which enables it to build a contemplated line immediately, and a consideration in part of its immediate construction, or which enables it to build its line on a route which it might not otherwise be able to build, could not be held to be void on the ground of public policy. Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Improvement Co., 85 Pac. 965, 967, 16 Okl. 436.

"A railroad company is a 'quasi public corporation.'" Its duties with reference to carrying freight and passengers are subjects of legislative regulation and control. It is properly held to the highest degree of care for the safety of the lives and property thus intrusted to it, commensurate with the business in which it is engaged. Hence, since the rights of the public are involved and the safety of public travel demands a clear track and places upon the railroad company the duty to provide such a track, one who constantly rides upon the rails of the railroad company's track by means of a bicycle, and thereby menaces the safety of public travel, may be perpetually enjoined therefrom at the instance of the railroad company. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Spaulding, 77 Pac. 106, 107, 69 Kan. 431, 66 L. R. A. 587, 107 Am. St. Rep. 175, 2 Ann. Cas. 546 (citing St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Ryan, 11 Kan. 603, 15 Am. Rep. 357; State v. Dodge City, M. & T. Ry. Co., 36 Pac. 747, 53 Kan. 378, 42 Am. St. Rep. 295).

A railroad is a "quasi public corporation" in which the public is interested. It holds a franchise from the state and must operate its road or forfeit its franchises. Though the decisions are not in harmony on the question, the best considered cases hold that its right of way cannot be sold on execution or for a street assessment. Southern California Ry. Co. v. Workman, 79 Pac. 586, 587, 146 Cal. 80, 2 Ann. Cas. 583.

Since a railroad company is a "quasi public corporation," the property of the railroad is private property and cannot be taken for private use, and therefore Act 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 956), providing that railroad companies shall build side tracks connecting industrial enterprises with their main lines for the delivery and receipt of freight, the cost thereof to be paid by the enterprises and repaid by the companies in annual installments of 20 per cent. of the freight collected, is violative of Const. U. S. Amend. art. 14, and Const. art. 1, §§ 5, 17, as authorizing the taking of private property for private use. Mays v. Seaboard Air Line R., 56 S. E. 30, 34, 75 S. C. 455 (citing Moore v. Columbia & G. R. Co., 16 S. E. 781, 38 S. C. 1).

QUASI PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

A telegraph company engaged in transmitting and delivering messages is engaged in a "quasi public employment," carried on for the accommodation of the community with a view to the general benefit, and under Rev. Laws, c. 122, § 9, it may not refuse to receive a proper message, for whose transmission payment has been tendered. Vermilye v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Massachusetts, 91 N. E. 904, 905, 205 Mass. 598, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472.

QUAY

See, also, Pier.

The word "quay" (quat) includes a levee on the bank of a river and the shore between the exterior of the levee and the water. De Armas v. Mayor, etc., of New Orleans, 5 La. 182, 215.

A "quay" is a vacant space between the first row of buildings and the water's edge used for the reception of goods and merchandise imported or to be exported. In the Civil Code of Louisiana it is said to be common property to the use of which all the inhabitants of the city, and even strangers, are entitled in common, such as the streets and public walks. The term is well understood in all commercial countries, and, while there may be some difference of opinion as to its definition, there can be little or none in regard to its popular and commercial signification. It designates a space of ground appropriated to the public use, such use as the convenience of commerce requires. New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. [35 U. S.] 662, 715, 9 L. Ed. 573.

QUESTION

See Drawn in Question; Federal Question; Hypothetical Question; Intricate Question; Judicial Question; Jurisdictional Question; Leading Question; Political Question.

Any question, see Any.

The word "question" does not necessarily mean an interrogative inquiry. As stated in Bouvier's Law Dict., it may be a proposition, as "something in controversy, or which may be the subject of a controversy." In re Merow, 99 N. Y. Supp. 9, 20, 112 App. Div. 562.

QUESTION IN DIFFERENCE

There was no "question in difference" between a justice of the peace who had issued a search warrant against L. which had been delivered to the sheriff, who had taken no steps to serve it, and L., which could be the subject of an action so as to authorize a submission by them of the question whether the justice had jurisdiction to receive and file the affidavit for the warrant and to issue the same under Code Civ. Proc. § 1138, providing that the parties to a "question in difference" which might be the subject of a civil action may, without action, agree on a case containing the facts on which the controversy depends, and present a submission of the same to any court which would have jurisdiction if an action had been brought. In re De Lucca, 79 Pac. 853, 854, 146 Cal. 110.

QUESTION OF ENGINEERING

The rule that, as long as there is no latent danger in the construction or maintenance of appliances, a servant assumes the risk of injury from the obvious character of such appliances, has no application between carrier and passenger; and hence, in an action against a railroad by a passenger for injuries in a baggage room, that the construction of the baggage room was a "question of engineering," meaning a question of judgment in the construction of the appliance, was not a defense; it being the duty of defendant to have the room reasonably safe. Bates v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 122 N. W. 745, 747, 140 Wis. 235, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1069.

QUESTION OF FACT

When undisputed facts require the exercise of reason and judgment so that one reasonable mind may infer that a controlling fact exists and another that it does not exist, there is a "question of fact" as affecting the Court of Appeals' jurisdiction of an appeal from the Appellate Division. Hirsch v. Jones, 83 N. E. 786, 787, 191 N. Y. 195.

QUI TAM ACTION

When a portion of the penalty went to the person or persons informing, and a portion to the sovereign, the common-law action to recover a penalty was styled a "qui tam action." Williams v. Wells Fargo & Co. Express, 177 Fed. 352, 355, 101 C. C. A. 328, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034, 21 Ann. Cas. 699.

A "qui tam action" is "an action brought by an informer under a statute which establishes a penalty for the commission or omission of a certain act and provides that the same shall be recoverable in a civil action, part of the penalty to go to any person who will bring such an action and the remainder to the state or some other institution. It is called a 'qui tam action' because the plaintiff states that he sues as well for the state as for himself." State ex rel. Rodes v. Warner, 94 S. W. 962, 965, 197 Mo. 650 (quoting Black's Law Dict. tit. "Qui Tam").

A prosecution brought under P. L. 1880, p. 218, § 13, prohibiting cruelty to animals, with a penalty collectible in an action of debt, in fact followed the procedure prescribed by section 16, P. L. 1880, p. 223, which provides that an offender may be taken before the nearest district court or justice of the peace, who may fine him not to exceed $100. Section 15, P. L. 1880, p. 222, provides that one half of the fines and penalties collected under the act shall be paid to the informer, and the other half to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. P. L. 1902, p. 500, declares that no justice of the peace resident in any city where there is a district court shall exercise any civil jurisdiction. Held that, as the penalty recoverable was payable in part to the informer, the action was a "qui tam action," and as such a "civil action," of which the justice had no jurisdiction. New Jersey Soc. for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals v. Russ, 83 Atl. 961, 962, 83 N. J. Law, 450.

QUICK*QUICK ACTION TRIPLE VALVE

"The devices belonging to the class known as 'quick action triple valves' are used in connection with the ordinary automatic brake systems on railways. Their special and peculiar utility consists in their adaptation for use in effecting the application of the brakes for making emergency stops." Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. Christensen Engineering Co., 128 Fed. 437, 438, 63 C. C. A. 179.

QUICK ANSWER

Plaintiff sold to defendant a quantity of goods warranted to be of good quality. Defendant, on receiving the goods, inspected them, and on Saturday after 5 p. m. notified plaintiff by wire that the goods were not as represented, but that they would be accepted if the price would be reduced a specified sum, and requested a "quick answer." Plaintiff wired its bank to accept the proposed reduction. The bank did not notify defendant of the message until the following Monday morning, and defendant then wired plaintiff that he would not take the goods. Held, that defendant's offer to take the goods notwithstanding the breach of warranty was not accepted, so as to become a binding contract. Edgeworth v. Talerico (Tex.) 95 S. W. 677, 678.

QUICK ASSETS

Where a corporation credit statement recited that the present mortgages did not cover any of the "quick assets" of the company, amounting to $635,165.35 in cash, merchandise, accounts receivable, etc., which, together with equities in real estate and machinery of $104,775.01, made the total assets $829,940.36, the term "quick assets" was used merely to distinguish liquid assets from those permanently invested in the business, like real estate and machinery, and included amounts charged against officers for return of part of salaries paid them in a previous year, in accordance with the agreement of employment. In re American Knit Goods Mfg. Co., 173 Fed. 480, 483, 97 C. C. A. 486.

QUIET HOUSE

A "quiet, orderly house," or place for the sale of liquors, within the condition of a bond providing that a liquor dealer shall maintain such a place, is one in which no music, loud or boisterous talking, yelling, or indecent, vulgar language is allowed, used, or practiced, or any other noise calculated to disturb or annoy any person residing or doing business in that vicinity. Adams v. State (Tex.) 146 S. W. 1086, 1088.

QUIRT

A "quirt" is a rawhide whip plated with two thongs of buffalo hide. Miller v. Meche, 35 South. 491, 492, 111 La. 143 (quoting Webster, Dict.).

QUIT

The word "quit" is a contraction of the word "acquit," meaning to discharge. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

QUITCLAIM

"Quitclaim" means in law to release a claim to by deed without covenants of warranty against adverse and paramount titles. Bannard v. Duncan, 112 N. W. 353, 355, 79 Neb. 189, 126 Am. St. Rep. 661 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster, Dict.).

The words "remise," "release," and "quitclaim" each mean to discharge. An agreement between the owners of land and a railroad company stated that, in consideration of a certain sum paid, the owners "do hereby discharge and forever release" the railroad company from all damages and claims whatsoever on account of the taking, etc., of the land, had the effect of a formal quitclaim deed, the operative words of which are "remise, release, and forever quitclaim," and served to discharge and release the railroad company from all claims of ownership and title to the lands, constituting the transaction a grant of real property, which as thoroughly divested the grantors of their title as a warranty deed with full covenants of title. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

Where a deed recites that, in consideration of a specified sum paid by the grantee to the grantor, the grantor has sold, conveyed, and by the deed sells and conveys to the grantee, property described, and binds the grantor to deed, "quitclaim, assign, sell and transfer" the premises to the grantee, the use of the word "quitclaim" therein does not show that this is a "quitclaim deed" in the strict sense of that species of conveyance, the other language indicating an intention that the deed is more than a quitclaim deed, and conveys the premises of the grantee, who is entitled to the protection of a bona fide purchaser, where he paid the purchase money without notice of the claim of a third person. Allen v. Anderson & Anderson (Tex.) 96 S. W. 54, 55.

QUITCLAIM DEED

See Good and Sufficient Quitclaim Deed.

A "quitclaim deed" is defined as "a deed in the nature of a release, containing words of release and grant. It conveys such interest as the grantor may have, without covenants of title." A deed in which the granting clause states the grantors "do convey, grant, remise, release and quitclaim all their right, title, estate, interest, property, and equity in and to the" real estate described, is a "quitclaim deed," and is not within the statute providing that a covenant against incumbrances will be implied from the word "grant," and that after-acquired title of the grantor passes to the grantee, and hence title acquired by the assignment to the grantors of a certificate of sale under a mortgage in force at the date of the deed does not pass to the grantee. State v. Kemmerer, 84 N. W. 771, 773, 14 S. D. 169 (quoting and adopting definition in And. Law Dict.).

Under an agreement to convey by "quitclaim deed," the vendor is under no obligation to do more than quitclaim his interest in the land and is not required to give a good title. McNellis v. Hilkowski, 107 N. W. 965, 98 Minn. 127.

A deed with a habendum clause "to have and to hold the above-described premises" and with a general warranty of all the said premises with a description of the land "herein conveyed" was not a "quitclaim deed," but conveyed the land and not a mere chance of title. Merriman v. Blalack, 122 S. W. 403, 409, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 270.

"In form, a 'quitclaim deed' is like the common-law release, a derivative or secondary common-law form. In substance, it is similar to an original common-law deed creating an estate, and not requiring for its operation any estate in possession or otherwise in the grantee. In effect, it transfers to the grantee whatever interest the grantor has in the property described, be it a fee, chattel interest, a mere license, or nothing at all. A quitclaim deed operates as a release only of such interest as the grantor has or as may be specifically named, and it does not operate as an estoppel on the grantee, so as to preclude him from denying that he received any estate thereby or from setting up rights under superior titles. Bryan v. Eason, 61 S. E. 73, 74, 147 N. C. 284.

There is no difference in their operative force between a conveyance in the form of release and quitclaim and one in the form of a grant, bargain, or sale. Under a statute providing that a "quitclaim deed" may be substantially the same as a warranty deed with the word "quitclaim" inserted in connection with the words "do hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey" as follows, "do hereby quitclaim, grant, bargain, sell and convey," and by omitting the words "and warrant the title to the same," providing that a quitclaim deed made in substantial compliance with the provisions of the act shall convey all the right, title, and interest of the maker, deed by which the parties of the first part "remised, released, and quitclaimed" and by these presents do for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, remise, release, and forever quitclaim unto the other party, his heirs and assigns, all their right, title, estate, claim, and demand, both at law and in equity, all and in the property described, was valid, being a substantial compliance with the act. Mosler v. Momson, 74 Pac. 905, 906, 13 Okl. 41.

See Conveyance.

QUITE VIOLENT

The unexpected jarring of a passenger car, variously described as "swift," "quite violent," "terrible," "awful," "very severe," and "unexpected," as the train was passing over a cross-over switch used during the repair of one of the railroad company's bridges, which resulted in a passenger, who was standing near the open door of a car, being thrown from the car and injured, did not constitute negligence on the part of the carrier. Foley v. Boston & M. R. R., 79 N. E. 765, 766, 193 Mass. 332, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1076.

QUO WARRANTO

See Information in the Nature of Quo Warranto.

The "writ of quo warranto" is a common-law process which became obsolete in England before the Revolution. This was a civil proceeding and issued out of chancery as a right in favor of the crown and against defendant. Meehan v. Bachelder, 59 Atl. 620, 73 N. H. 113, 6 Ann. Cas. 462.

"Quo warranto" is in the nature of a direct proceeding, in which the title to an office, as evidenced by the record, is assailed. Daniels v. Newbold, 100 N. W. 1119, 1120, 125 Iowa, 193.

"Quo warranto" is the appropriate remedy by which to test the title to office in a private corporation. Hankins v. Newell, 66 Atl. 929, 930, 75 N. J. Law, 26.

"Quo warranto" is the proper legal proceeding to determine the right to an office or franchise, or to oust the defendant therefrom if his title is found to be defective, or if his franchise has been forfeited or has expired. State ex rel. Juny v. Louisiana, B. G. & A. Gravel Road Co., 86 S. W. 170, 172, 187 Mo. 439.

The purpose of a "quo warranto" at common law and in the territory of New Mexico is to oust the respondent from an office which he is alleged to hold unlawfully, and not to install the relator or any person into such office. Albright v. Territory, 79 Pac. 719, 722, 13 N. M. 64, 11 Ann. Cas. 1165.

The purpose of the remedy by "quo warranto" is the recovery of an office or to oust from office the occupant. The occupant who already has the office and is in possession needs no such relief, and his sole remedy against unwarranted intrusion or interference is by injunction until the adverse claimant shall establish his title to the office in a court of law. Callaghan v. Irvin, 90 S. W. 335, 337, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 453.

"Quo warranto" is the remedy or proceeding where the state inquires into the legality of the claim which a party asserts to an office or franchise, and to oust him from its enjoyment if the claim be not well founded, or to have the same declared forfeited and recover it, if, having once been rightfully possessed and enjoyed, it has become forfeited for misuser or nonuser. Moody v. Lowrimore, 86 S. W. 400, 402, 74 Ark. 421 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Spell. Extr. Rem. § 1765).

"Quo warranto" is the proper method of determining disputed questions of title to public office, yet a mere groundless assumption of an election on the part of a person claiming title to public office, and the apparent exercise of the functions of the office de facto, will not deter the court, as a preliminary question, from examining the uncontroverted facts before it for the purpose of determining who has prima facie title, notwithstanding the person claiming the adverse title may not be a party to the proceeding. Matney v. King, 93 Pac. 737, 745, 20 Okl. 22.

"Quo warranto" had its origin in the theory that all special privileges (franchises) which are conferred upon an individual or corporation, and do not belong to the citizens of the county generally as a matter of common right, are the gift or grant of the king. When therefore it was claimed that such special privilege had been usurped without gift or grant thereof from the sovereign, or where the privilege so conferred was alleged to have been abused or the conditions thereof had not been observed, a writ was issued at the suit of the crown requiring the party charged with the usurpation to appear and show by what warrant or authority he assumed to exercise the privilege thus challenged. The use of the writ in this form was superseded by what was termed 'proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.' * * * Both quo warranto and proceedings in the nature of quo warranto partook of the character of criminal proceedings." Code, tit. 21, c. 9, avoids the use of the words "quo warranto" or "proceedings in the nature of quo warranto." Its effect is to secure the essential purpose formerly effected by such proceedings, i. e., the vindication of public rights and public interests against usurpation by invoking the ordinary powers of the court and conforming to the ordinary rules of procedure, subject only to the modification expressly mentioned therein. State ex rel. Fullerton v. Des Moines City Ry. Co., 109 N. W. 867, 870, 135 Iowa, 604.

"The words 'quo warranto,' as used in Const. art 3, § 3, giving the Supreme Court original jurisdiction of quo warranto proceedings, are used as if their meaning were a matter of common understanding, and there must have existed at the time the Constitution was adopted a body of knowledge in which the terms were concurrent and to which resort may be had to ascertain their signification. * * * When the Constitution was adopted, various notions were entertained respecting some of the essential common-law features of jurisdiction in quo warranto. By some courts it was held that all the virtues of the ancient prerogative writ of right, the writ of quo warranto, still persisted, while it was contended by others that proceedings of that nature had been entirely superseded by informations in the nature of quo warranto; and it was the opinion of many that the naming of one remedy differentiated it from the other. * * * In framing the Constitution, the purpose appears to have been to confer jurisdiction broadly, and language was chosen which avoided the consequences of this diversity of opinion, and authorized all the relief which at common law could be given by a quo warranto proceeding of any kind. * * * Such was the interpretation placed upon the Constitution by the Legislature of 1868, which in regulating the procedure authorized a civil action in any case in which a remedy might formerly have been obtained either by the writ of quo warranto or by an information in the nature of quo warranto. Hence the court possesses all the jurisdiction which the common law afforded in quo warranto in any form. * * * The writ was of a civil nature. The information in the nature of quo warranto was originally criminal in form and purpose, the object of the proceeding being not merely to oust, but to fine, the usurper. * * * In the progress of time, the fine fell to a nominal amount and its imposition was ultimately discontinued in England, though the practice still prevails in some of the American states. * * * Therefore, through a gradual process of evolution, the procedure by information became essentially civil in character." State ex rel. Jackson v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n, 90 Pac. 777, 778, 78 Kan. 184 (citing State v. Foster, 3 Pac. 534, 32 Kan. 14).

As civil proceeding

Quo warranto is a civil action to redress a public wrong or enforce a public right. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Norcross, 112 N. W. 40, 43, 132 Wis. 534, 122 Am. St. Rep. 998.

Under Code 1896, § 3428, "quo warranto" is a civil action, and the complaint must allege the act or omission complained of concisely and clearly, and if faulty in that respect it is demurrable. State ex rel. Goodgame v. Matthews, 45 South. 307, 153 Ala. 646.

As information in nature of quo warranto

The term "quo warranto," used in Gen. St. 1878, c. 63, § 1, relating to informations in the nature of quo warranto, must be deemed to refer to "an information in the nature of quo warranto" as existing at the common law. State ex rel. Young v. Village of Kent, 104 N. W. 948, 953, 96 Minn. 255, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 826, 6 Ann. Cas. 905.

The modern proceeding in "quo warranto," known as the information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto, was originally a criminal proceeding; the common-law writ of quo warranto having become obsolete long before the American Revolution. Hence under a state statute authorizing the issuance of writs of quo warranto, the court may issue informations in the nature of writs of quo warranto. Meehan v. Bachelder, 59 Atl. 620, 73 N. H. 113, 6 Ann. Cas. 462.

"Quo warranto," as used in Const. Mo. art. 6, § 3, providing that the Supreme Court shall have power to issue writs of "quo warranto," was intended to convey in abbreviated form the meaning that phrase had for so long a prior period, and so continually used to mean "information in the nature of quo warranto, etc."; the writ having fallen into disuse in England and the proceeding having been conducted by information. State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1008, 218 Mo. 1.

The constitutional provision giving the Supreme Court original jurisdiction of "writs of quo warranto" does not confine such jurisdiction to a quo warranto proceeding proper, but extends the same to proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto; the words "writ of quo warranto" being used in the Constitution as the legal equivalent and synonym of "information in the nature of quo warranto," which is the modern substitute for the ancient writ of quo warranto. State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1008, 218 Mo. 1.

Information in the nature of quo warranto distinguished

The ancient writ of "quo warranto" was in the nature of a writ of right, invocable by the king against persons claiming or usurping an office or liberty, to inquire by what authority they asserted right thereto, and the judgment was conclusive even as against the crown, while a proceeding by "information in the nature of quo warranto" is properly a criminal prosecution instituted not only to fine the usurper, but to oust him from the office, franchise, or liberty. State v. Sengstacken, 122 Pac. 292, 295, 61 Or. 455.

QUORUM

Majority of quorum, see Majority.

A "quorum" is a majority of an aggregate body of men in absence of express provision to the contrary. Gumaer v. Cripple Creek Tunnel, Transp. & Min. Co., 90 Pac. 81, 84, 85, 40 Colo. 1, 122 Am. St. Rep. 1024, 13 Ann. Cas. 781.

"Of assemblages of political parties regularly called, those who actually assemble constitute a 'quorum.'" Walling v. Landson, 97 Pac. 396, 410, 15 Idaho, 282.

Where an act constituting the board of police commissioners did not define how many should constitute a "quorum," the usual parliamentary rule should apply, and three of the four members thereof will constitute a "quorum." McManus v. Board of Police Com'rs of City of Newark, 62 Atl. 997, 998, 73 N. J. Law, 307.

Under Const. art. 5, § 11, providing that when the Supreme Court, Court of Criminal Appeals, Court of Civil Appeals, or any member of either, shall be disqualified to hear any case, the same shall be certified to the Governor, who shall commission the requisite number of persons for the determination of the case, etc., the disqualification of one of the judges of the Court of Criminal Appeals does not require the appointment of a special judge; but the remaining judges who are qualified, being a quorum, may determine the case. The question of the number of judges necessary to authorize the transaction of business by a court is as a general rule to be determined from the Constitution or statutory provisions creating and regulating courts, and as a general rule a majority of the members of a court is a "quorum" for the transaction of business and the decision of cases. Long v. State, 127 S. W. 551, 557, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 103, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1244.

Pub. Acts 1903, No. 232, § 10, provides that a majority of the directors of every manufacturing or mercantile corporation convened according to the by-laws shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and the stockholders holding a majority of the stock at any meeting shall be capable of transacting the business of that meeting, except as herein otherwise provided, and that at all meetings of such stockholders each share shall be entitled to one vote; stockholders being permitted to vote in person or proxy. Held that, in order to constitute a statutory quorum to hold a lawful meeting of stockholders for the transaction of business, a majority of all the stock must be represented in person or by proxy. Hill v. Town, 138

N. W. 334, 336, 172 Mich. 508, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799.

QUOTATION

See Continuous Quotations.

QUOTATION OF PRICES

"A 'quotation of prices' is not an offer to sell in the sense that a complete contract will arise out of the mere acceptance of the rate offered or the giving of an order for merchandise in accordance with the proposed terms. It requires the acceptance by the one naming the price of the order so made to complete the transaction. Until thus completed, there is no mutuality of obligation." Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co., 92 S. W. 733, 734, 115 Mo. App. 701.

QUOTIENT VERDICT

A "quotient verdict"—that is, a verdict based upon the average judgment of all the jurors—is not illegal, where it does not affirmatively appear that there was an agreement beforehand to abide by the average of the amounts the jurors were in favor of awarding; the presumption of law being that no such arrangement was made. State ex rel. Senter v. Cowell, 102 S. W. 573, 574, 125 Mo. App. 348.

R

The abbreviation "R. L. D.," as used in the blanks and reports of the United States revenue service, means "retail liquor dealer." State v. Nippert, 86 Pac. 478, 479, 74 Kan. 371.

The courts will take judicial notice that the abbreviations "R. L. D.," as used in the records of the collector of internal revenue, mean "Retail Liquor Dealer." Billingsley v. State, 113 Pac. 241, 243, 4 Okl. Cr. 597.

R. M. L. D.

Courts take judicial notice that the initials "R. M. L. D.," used in the records of the internal revenue office to designate the business for which a permit has been issued, mean "retail malt liquor dealer." City of Topeka v. Stevenson, 99 Pac. 589, 79 Kan. 394, 131 Am. St. Rep. 297, 17 Ann. Cas. 491.

RACE

Separation of as within police power, see Police Power.

The term "race" primarily means an ethnical stock; a great division of mankind having in common certain distinguishing physical peculiarities, constituting a comprehensive class appearing to be derived from a distinct primitive source. A second definition is a tribal or national stock; a division or subdivision of one of the great racial stocks of mankind, distinguished by minor peculiarities. The word "race" connotes descent. In re Halladjian, 174 Fed. 834, 837.

An actual and not a feigned trial of speed is necessary to constitute a "race." Lockman v. Cobb, 91 S. W. 546, 550, 77 Ark. 279 (citing and adopting Webb v. Fulchire, 25 N. C. 485, 40 Am. Dec. 419).

Sess. Acts 1905, p. 185, c. 82, is entitled "A bill to be entitled 'An act to prohibit gambling on races.'" Section 1 provides that it shall be unlawful to gamble upon the result of any trial or contest of skill or power of endurance of man or beast. Section 2 is not confined to the matter of betting or wagering on races, but extends to every bet or wager, whatever may be the subject thereof. Held, that the word "races," as used in the title, embraces only contests of progression, including speed and endurance, and that the subject-matter of the act is not within the title, as required by Const. art. 2, § 17, which provides that no bill shall become a law which embraces more than one subject, that subject to be expressed in the title. State v. Hayes, 93 S. W. 98, 99, 116 Tenn. 40.

RACER

A "racer" is the name applied to carriers used for delivering the strands of leather to be braided in a whiplash-braiding machine. Mesick v. Hassler, 134 Fed. 395.

RADIATION

A contract for the installation of a heating plant in a residence, stipulating that the boiler and radiators shall be of sufficient capacity to heat the building, requires the installation of a boiler and radiators which, when constructed and joined together, will produce the results promised; "radiation" referring to the heating capacity of the radiators when connected with the boiler. Cooper v. Scott Co., 120 N. W. 631, 633, 143 Iowa, 744.

RADIUS

Under a rule of a telegraph company providing that messages will be delivered free within "a radius" of one-half mile from the office, a straight line is meant, without regard to distance by the nearest traveled route. George v. State, 84 S. W. 1057, 1058, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 545.

RAFFLE

A "raffle" is a game of perfect chance in which every participant is equal with every other in the proportion of his risk and prospective gain, and the price is a common fund or that which is purchased by a common fund. Risien v. State, 71 S. W. 974, 975, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 413 (citing Stearnes v. State, 21 Tex. 692).

RAFT

See Sack Raft.

RAFTAGE

"Raftage" is the expense of floating and running logs to market. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Thompson, 35 South. 828, 83 Miss. 499.

RAGS

Clippings of woolen material, produced in the process of making up garments, are "rags," within both the popular and the commercial signification of the term. United States v. Pearson & Emmott, 131 Fed. 571, 572; Id., 137 Fed. 1021, 70 C. C. A. 306.

The provision for "rags" in paragraph 648, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201, includes coarse pieces of jute bagging which are in their condition as torn from cotton bales, and are not sufficiently large and otherwise suitable for other use than as mere rags in stuffing and as paper stock. Train-Smith Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 113.

Selected pieces of second-hand jute bagging, intended for patching the covering of cotton bales, are not "bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 344, 30 Stat. 181, nor "rags," under section 2, Free List, par. 648, 30 Stat. 201, but are dutiable as "waste" under section 1, Schedule N, par. 463, 30 Stat. 194. United States v. Davies, 160 Fed. 456, 457, 87 C. C. A. 672.

RAIL

The term "rails," as used in Const. art. 13, § 10, relating to taxation of railroad companies, means simply the rails in place on the roadbed constituting the superstructure of the railroad. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

The word "rails" in Const. art. 13, § 10, providing that the franchise, roadway, roadbed, rails, and rolling stock of railroads operating in more than one county shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, does not include spur tracks and switches, though on the actual roadway. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 111 Pac. 250, 251, 158 Cal. 437.

Steel rails, which are new, but by reason of defects are depreciated in value, but which have not lost their character or identity as "rails," are not within the provision in paragraph 122, Schedule C, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, 30 Stat. 159, c. 11, for "scrap steel * * * fit only to be remanufactured," but are dutiable as "rails" under paragraph 130, 30 Stat. 160, even though they may be intended to be used as scrap iron. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McCall, 147 Fed. 925.

The word "rail" ordinarily means a strip of timber or metal generally used for wheels to run on, and as used in a contract to deliver to defendant piles "f. o. b. cars at N. & S. rail" could not be construed to mean an established railroad siding in absence of evidence showing that that meaning was intended, so that, in an action on the contract, parol evidence was admissible that the meaning of the word was determined by the parties by defendant on plaintiff's demand, designating the place of delivery, at which place plaintiff delivered the piles. Willis v. Jarrett Const. Co., 67 S. E. 265, 267, 152 N. C. 100.

RAILING

The word "railing" in a statute authorizing actions against towns for injuries by defects in a bridge, culvert, etc., or dangerous embankments and defective railings, means a railing necessary to guard travelers from going over dangerous embankments, and not railings used as handrails, and a pedestrian injured while using steps leading from a sidewalk to a crosswalk over a street, by reason of slipping on the ice on steps, cannot recover because of the absence of a handrail. Wentworth v. Town of Pittsfield, 62 Atl. 218, 219, 73 N. H. 358.

A "railroad" is an entity; its being is created by a charter granted by the commonwealth, declaring it a public highway for the conveyance of passengers and the transportations of freight; it acts as a body; its tracks are all owned and used by the corporate entity; and its stockholders receive their dividends from the net proceeds of its entire traffic. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Philadelphia County, 68 Atl. 676, 686, 220 Pa. 100, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108.

A "railroad," including in that term the tracks, platforms, instrumentalities, and equipment furnished by its owners to carry freight and passengers, is a vast machine, and it is at the same time a place for the servants of the company to work. Canadian Northern Ry. Co. v. Walker, 172 Fed. 346, 350, 97 C. C. A. 44, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020.

The term "railroad," as used in a municipal charter provision providing for the regulation of the construction of railroads and street railways "through the municipality," indicates the common carrier of passengers and freight. Gill v. City of Lake Charles, 48 South. 440, 442, 122 La. 1019.

A corporation which carries freight, although not a common carrier, is a "railroad" under the direct provisions of Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 3214, if the physical equipment is that of a railroad. Mound City Transfer Ry. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 133 S. W. 611, 615, 154 Mo. App. 156.

"The fact that passengers may rarely, if ever, pass over a line, does not deprive it of its character as a 'railroad.'" Collier v. Union Ry. Co., 83 S. W. 155, 162, 113 Tenn. 96.

The word "railway" or "railroad," when not qualified by the word "street" or other expression of similar import, has special reference to what are sometimes denominated commercial railroads. McLeod v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 101 N. W. 77, 80, 125 Iowa, 270.

The words "railroad" and "railway" have identically the same meaning, and the use of the word "railway" in one phrase, and "railroad" in another, in referring to a corporation in an affidavit of illegality filed by the security, was not a substantial and material change in the name of the corporation. Paramore v. Alexander, 64 S. E. 660, 662, 132 Ga. 642.

The terms "railroad" and "railway," as used in the statutes of Montana relating to railroad corporations, are synonymous terms and refer to those engaged in the general passenger and freight traffic of the state. The provision that a judgment against any railway corporation for any injury to person or property shall be a lien superior to that of any mortgage relates exclusively to steam railroads or railways of commerce, and has no application to street railroads. Daily Bank & Trust Co. v. Great Falls St. Ry. Co., 80 Pac. 252, 254, 32 Mont. 298.

"'Railway' and 'railroad' are synonymous, and in all ordinary circumstances are to be treated as without distinction, and when either of them is used in a statute, and the context requires that a particular kind of road is intended, that kind will be held to be the subject of the statutory provision; but if the context contains no such indication, and either of the words are used in describing the subject-matter, the statute will be applicable to every species of road embraced within the general sense of the word used." Riggs v. St. Francois County Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 707, 708, 120 Mo. App. 335 (quoting and adopting the rule laid down in Gyger v. Philadelphia City P. Ry. Co., 20 Atl. 399, 136 Pa. 104).

In an action against a railroad company for breach of a shipping contract made with a company with which it was alleged defendant had consolidated, an allegation that the contract was made with the K. "Railroad" Company, and that the consolidation was between defendant and the K. "Railway" Company, did not allege that the contract was made with a different corporation from that with which defendant consolidated, the words "railroad" and "railway" being descriptive of the corporation, and synonymous. Black v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 85 S. W. 96, 97, 110 Mo. App. 198.

In the absence of evidence of another corporation of a similar name, the jury may infer that defendant, named in the caption of the complaint as "Mobile Light & Railroad Company, a corporation," was, as alleged, operating the street car in the city of M. that killed plaintiff's mule, from his testimony that he had a mule killed on a certain street in such city, that the railroad track runs on such street, that it was the track of the "Mobile Light & Railway," and that "they" operated cars down that street; the words "railroad" and "railway" being practically synonymous. Mobile Light & R. Co. v. Mackay, 48 South. 509, 158 Ala. 51.

Ky. St. 1903, § 842a, provides that interurban electric railroad companies authorized to construct a railroad 10 or more miles in length incorporated under the laws of the commonwealth shall have the same rights, powers, and privileges as are now granted to or conferred upon railroad companies. Section 835 et seq. permit condemnation of land by any company authorized to construct a railroad which shall be unable to contract with the owner of any land necessary for its use. A railroad corporation was organized to construct and operate a line of railway not exceeding 10 miles long from the city of Covington to the town of Erlanger, and such points beyond as might thereafter be determined upon, to be operated by electricity or other improved methods of rapid transit. Held, that the term "railroad," as used in section 835, has the same meaning as "railway," and that the company had the same right to condemn private property for a right of way that a steam railroad would have, especially since under its charter it might use steam. Devon v. Cincinnati, C. & E. Ry. Co., 109 S. W. 361, 363, 128 Ky. 768.

The term "railroad," as used in Acts 1899, c. 4700, prohibiting any "railroad" from making unjust discrimination in its rates, or charges, of toll, or compensation for transporting passengers or freight, upon its tracks, or any of the branches thereof, or upon any "railroad" within the state which it has the right, license, or permission to use, operate, or control, includes all the road in use by any corporation, receiver, trustee, or any other person operating the railroad, whether operated under a contract, agreement, lease, or otherwise. State ex rel. Railroad Commissioners v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 37 South. 314, 319, 48 Fla. 129.

In discussing the liability of railroads for violation of the Interstate Commerce Act by unjust discriminations, the court says: "In the absence of such special circumstances, we are not aware of any principle or ground on which one of the common carriers would incur liability on account of the exaction of illegal charges by other common carriers over the through route during a period when the former carrier was not co-operating with the others. Section 1, in defining the word 'railroad' as employed in the act, certainly does not countenance such an idea of liability. It provides that the term 'railroad' so far as used in this act shall include * * * all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement or lease." Western New York & P. R. Co. v. Penn Refining Co., Limited, of Oil City, Pa., 137 Fed. 343, 356, 70 C. C. A. 23.

Intrastate railroads and employes wholly engaged in local business were not affected by the provisions of Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, making it "unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act, to require or permit any employé subject to this act to be or remain on duty" for a longer period than that prescribed, since such carriers and employes are defined in section 1 as those who are engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad in the District of Columbia or the territories, or in interstate or foreign commerce, although that section further defines "railroad" as including all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any carrier operating a railroad by contract, agreement, or lease, and "employes" as meaning persons actually engaged in, or connected with, the movement of any train. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 31 Sup. Ct. 621, 624, 221 U. S. 612, 55 L. Ed. 878.

In general use the word "railroad" is understood to signify a road constructed of cross-ties on which iron rails are placed and dedicated to public use under the general law regulating public highways, but as used in a deed to a corporation organized under a statute providing for the creation of corporations except for railroad purposes, and which recites that the corporation contemplates building a "tram or railroad," and which grants to it a right of way on which to locate its "road, depot, stationhouses," etc., may well be construed as a private road such as the improvement company was authorized to construct with iron rails. Beasley v. Aberdeen & R. R. Co., 59 S. E. 60, 62, 145 N. C. 272.

The phrase "railway," when used in connection with a patent for a pleasure car moved by an independent means of locomotion, may not necessarily include a vehicle traveling on a pair of fixed rails, but it does denote that the vehicle travels in a predetermined course rigidly controlled to that course independently of the will of the occupant. A bicycle following a groove, and not controlled by the sides, is a railway within the meaning of the patent laws. Frazer v. Rohr, 180 Fed. 773, 774.

Where a corporation owned and operated standard gauge railroad tracks in connection with its factory, renting a locomotive to handle cars in its yards, such tracks constituted a "railroad" within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, making a corporation operating a "railroad" liable for damages sustained by an employé while operating the cars, etc., by reason of the negligence of a fellow servant. Cunningham v. Neal, 109 S. W. 455, 456, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 613.

Code, § 2071, makes every railroad company liable for damages to employes by the management of the engineers of other employes, when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the use and operation of any railway about which they shall be employed. Plaintiff was a machinist's helper in the machine shop of defendant railroad company where engines were brought for repairs, his duty being to block the wheels of an engine when placed over the draw pit in the shop and to remove such blocks when the engine was to be moved. After one set of wheels had been put on an engine and it was about to be moved by another engine, in order to put on the second pair of drivers, plaintiff attempted to brush a chock from under the wheel of the dead engine, when the other engine started without warning and crushed his hand. The operating department of the railroad had no control over the machine shops, which were used only for repairing disabled equipment which had been withdrawn from service, and not merely for temporary repairs and cleaning, as were the roundhouses. Held, that the statute referred to the physical "use and operation" of the railroad in transportation, and the rails on the shop floor did not constitute a "railway," nor was the movement of the repaired engine by the other engine done in the "use and operation" of the railway, within the meaning of the statute, so that the company was not liable for the negligence of the engineer in starting the live engine. Slaats v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 63, 64, 149 Iowa, 735, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 642.

Michigan Railroad Commission Act (Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300) § 7a, declaring that nothing in the act shall require any railroad to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another railroad engaged in like business, and Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, adding to section 7, subd. d, requiring railroads to transport car load freight consigned locally between points in the same city or town from a junction or transfer point or intersection with another railroad, to team tracks or other sidings of any line operated by the delivering carrier, etc., were consistent with each other, so that the latter subdivision was not in conflict with the former, as requiring a carrier to submit its terminal facilities to the use of another railroad. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. of Canada v. Michigan Railroad Commission, 198 Fed. 1009, 1022.

Bridges and ferries

A corporation organized under the Michigan statute "providing for the incorporation of railroads," whose business was to build and own a bridge used solely for railroad purposes, and which has always reported to the Railroad Commissioner and paid taxes as a railroad company is a "railroad," within the provisions of Act No. 173, Acts Mich. 1901, providing for the taxation of the property of railroad companies. Sault Ste. Marie Bridge Co. v. Powers, 138 Fed. 262, 263 (citing Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co., 9 Sup. Ct. 770, 131 U. S. 371-389, 33 L. Ed. 137).

The act of Congress regulating commerce (1 Supp. Rev. St. 529), defining the term "railroad" as including all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, applies to a ferry operated in connection with a railroad, for the transportation of passengers between New York City and points in New Jersey, and elsewhere, and prevents regulation of rates of ferriage by the state. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 65 Atl. 860, 864, 74 N. J. Law, 367.

There is no legal requirement that a railroad shall be of any particular length, nor is it essential that it should own rolling stock. A ferry company operated in connection therewith a number of tracks over which steam cars were drawn to and from the ferry; such tracks being the only ones over which cars could pass to the ferry and be carried over the river to other tracks. The tracks were also used for storage, for loading and unloading, and for regular traffic and switching purposes. Held that the tracks constituted a railroad within the statute providing for the assessment and taxation of railroads. State ex rel. Hammer v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 106 S. W. 1005, 1010, 208 Mo. 622.

Intrastate railroads and employes wholly engaged in local business were not affected by the provisions of Act March 4, 1907, c. 2939, § 2, making it "unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act, to require or permit any employe subject to this act to be or remain on duty" for a longer period than that prescribed, since such carriers and employes are defined in section 1 as those who are engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad in the District of Columbia or the territories, or in interstate or foreign commerce, although that section further defines "railroad" as including all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any carrier operating a railroad by contract, agreement, or lease, and "employes" as meaning persons actually engaged in, or connected with, the movement of any train. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 31 Sup. Ct. 621, 624, 221 U. S. 612, 55 L. Ed. 878.

An interstate bridge corporation owning in an adjoining state a terminal railroad operated in connection with the bridge is within the term "railroad" as used in the statute providing for the assessment of railroad property by the State Board of Tax Commissioners. City of Jeffersonville v. Louisville & J. Bridge Co., 83 N. E. 337, 341, 169 Ind. 645.

Cut

The railroad cut is as much a part of the railroad structure as is the fill. They are both necessary to produce a level track, and it is the duty of the railroad company to see that the cut is in safe condition as well as the fill. Fisher's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 373, 374, 104 Va. 635, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954.

Depots and other buildings

The word "road," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 2692, requiring every railroad company in this state to fence its road, and imposing a liability for all damages resulting from a failure of compliance therewith, held to apply to the repair shops and side tracks if practicable to be fenced. Mattes v. Great Northern R. Co., 104 N. W. 234, 235, 95 Minn. 386.

The word "railroad," as ordinarily understood, includes many kinds of property, real and personal, and cannot be confined to the track or the land necessary to lay the track on, and land acquired for depot facilities and so used may be deemed within the meaning of the word. Bostwick v. Florida Cent. & W. R. Co., 56 South. 290, 292, 61 Fla. 850 (citing Knevals v. Florida Cent. & P. R. Co., 66 Fed. 224, 13 C. C. A. 410).

Electric railroad

Code 1907, § 5473, providing that the engineer or other person having control of the running of a locomotive on any "railroad" shall blow the whistle or ring the bell in certain designated situations, does not apply to interurban railroads operated by electricity. Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Ozburn, 56 South. 599, 600, 4 Ala. App. 399.

Laws 1905, c. 97, providing for the appropriation of land for railroad purposes, and declaring in section 13 that the court may regulate the place and manner of making connections and crossings, applies to electric railroads, whether incorporated under the statute authorizing the incorporation of railroads or not, as well as to steam railroads; they being railroads within the meaning of the act. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Citizens' Traction & Power Co., 113 P. 810, 811, 16 N. M. 154. ¶

The words "railroad" and "railroad company," as used in section 1, c. 142, Laws of 1877, and in amended section 1, c. 183, Laws of 1887, do not mean "street railway," "electric street railway," or an interurban company such as is described in the petition in this case. O'Malley v. Board of Com'rs of Riley County, 121 Pac. 1108, 1110, 86 Kan. 752, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 578.

The word "railroad" does not include street railroads, and an interurban road is regarded as a street railroad. An interurban railroad for the operation of cars by electricity and by the tractive friction resulting from their own weight is not within the act of April 25, 1901 (97 Ohio Laws, p. 546), "to provide how railroad and highway crossings may be constructed." Com'rs of Ross County v. Scioto Valley Traction Co., 80 N. E. 176, 177, 75 Ohio St. 548.

A municipal corporation has no authority to compel an interurban or street railroad company to light its bridge or railroad within the limits of such corporation. Section 1536—176, Revised Statutes 1908, applies only to steam railroads. Ohio Electric Ry. Co. v. Village of Ottawa, 97 N. E. 835, 85 Ohio St. 229.

Code, § 2072, requiring a bell and a steam whistle to be placed on each locomotive engine operated on any railway, and the whistle to be sounded 60 rods before a highway crossing is reached, and the bell to be rung from that time continuously till the crossing is passed, is made applicable to electric interurban railways by Acts 29th Gen. Assem. c. 81, § 2 (Code Supp. § 2033b), providing that the word "railway," as used in the Code, shall apply to and include all interurban railways, so that an interurban railway failing to give the signals required by section 2072 is guilty of negligence per se. Swisher v. Interurban Ry. Co., 130 N. W. 404, 405, 151 Iowa, 384.

Railroad Commission Law (Laws 1907, p. 70, c. 53, § 11), makes the term "railroad" as used therein include all corporations which operate by electric power any interurban railroad, etc. Section 28 authorizes the Railroad Commission, upon complaint of any municipality that fares are unreasonable, or discriminatory, to investigate and order just and reasonable fares, upon finding that those complained of are unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory. Section 48 makes it unlawful to charge smaller compensation to persons furnishing part of the facilities than to other persons. Section 49 makes the giving of an unreasonable preference, or the subjecting of any person to an unreasonable prejudice, an unjust discrimination. Section 59 requires the act to be liberally construed to attain the public welfare and substantial justice between passengers and railroads. Section 61 makes the duties of railroads the same as at common law, and the remedies against them the same, except where otherwise provided, and makes the provisions of the act cumulative. Held, in view of section 61, that the Railroad Commission could correct charges made by an electric railroad company which were unjustly discriminatory as to a locality, upon complaint of a town, independent of Laws 1909, p. 158, c. 97, making the provisions of the railroad commission law applicable to any locality. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission, 105 Pac. 709, 711, 56 Or. 468.

Elevated railway

Rev. Laws 1902, c. 106, § 71, cl. 3, which first appeared in St. 1887, p. 899, c. 270, gives a right of action to an employé injured through the negligence of any person in the service of the employer who has charge or control of a railroad train. The Revised Laws, enacted 10 years after railroad corporations were authorized to use electric power, described, in chapter 111, § 1, a railroad as a railroad or railway of the class usually operated by steam power. St. 1908, p. 370, c. 420, changes said clause 3 by adding to it the term "elevated railway," as distinguished from the term "railroad," and makes the clause applicable to a train on an elevated railway. Held, that the latter statute was not declaratory of the existing law, but amendatory, imposing on elevated railway companies a new burden, and that prior to the passage of such statute an elevated electric railway was not a "railroad," within the meaning of said clause. McGilvery v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 86 N. E. 893, 895, 200 Mass. 551.

Logging railroad

The word "railroad," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h, prescribing what railroad employes are fellow servants with each other, includes a logging railroad operated by a corporation solely to carry its own lumber from the woods to its sawmill. Keystone Mills Co. v. Chambers (Tex.) 118 S. W. 178.

The word "railroad," as used in Revisal 1905, § 2646, depriving any railroad operating in the state of the defense of assumption of risk as to any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, means any road operated by steam or electricity on rails, and hence includes logging railroads and street railroads. Hemphill v. Buck Creek Lumber Co., 54 S. E. 420, 421, 141 N. C. 487.

The word "railroad," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560f, making every corporation operating a railroad liable for damages to its servants by negligence of other servants, is used in the same sense as in article 3017, making the proprietor of any railroad liable for death caused by its negligence, and does not relate only to such railroads as are common carriers, but includes a logging railroad operated by a corporation solely for the purpose of carrying its own lumber from the woods to its sawmill, and from thence to a nearby railroad station. Lodwick Lumber Co. v. Taylor, 87 S. W. 358, 359, 360, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 302.

Laws 1901, c. 27, declares that all suits against railroad corporations or any receiver operating any railway in the state for personal injuries resulting in death or otherwise, shall be brought either in the county in which the injury occurred or in the county in which the plaintiff resided at the time of the injury. Held, that the word "railroad," in such act, was not limited to a commercial railroad, but included a tram road operated as appurtenant to a sawmill by receivers of the sawmill corporation, so that an action for injuries to a brakeman thereon was triable in the county where plaintiff resided and where the injury occurred, though the principal office of the receivers and corporation was in another county. Receivers of Kirby Lumber Co. v. Lloyd, 124 S. W. 903, 103 Tex. 153.

Though owned by a limited company, and having for its primary and principal function the carrying of logs to a saw mill, a railroad which runs regular trains for freight and passengers, with a fixed schedule of charges, is entitled to the exemption accorded by article 230 of the Constitution to "any railroad, or part of such railroad," constructed within certain specified dates. Defendant's contention which was overruled was that the "railroad" meant by said article 230 was the same as meant by article 272—a common and public carrier organized and operated by a duly chartered railroad company endowed with all the rights and bound to the public by all the responsibilities of such carriers. Amos Kent Lumber & Brick Co. v. Tax Assessor of Parish of St. Helena, 38 South. 587, 588, 114 La. 862.

Denial by the Supreme Court of a writ of error to review a decision of the Court of Civil Appeals, adjudging that a logging road of a lumber company is a "railroad" within Rev. St. 1895, art. 3017, authorizing an action for wrongful death caused by the negligence of any railroad, is a decision of the Supreme Court that such road is a railroad, and the decision is conclusive on the Court of Civil Appeals on a subsequent appeal, and the court will not certify the question to the Supreme Court. Rice & Lyon v. Lewis (Tex.) 125 S. W. 961, 963.

A company chartered with the power of eminent domain, and authorized to construct railways, etc., for the transportation of passengers and freight, including logs, lumber, timber, etc., though its chief purpose was to exploit certain timber land and market the timber thereon, was a "railroad," and subject to the fellow-servant act (Priv. Laws 1897, p. 83, c. 56), and hence such company and the trustee in charge and control were responsible for actionable negligence in the operation of the road under a lease and in the exercise of the franchise. Wright v. Caney River Ry. Co., 66 S. W. 588, 589, 151 N. C. 529, 19 Ann. Cas. 384.

Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139, creating the Railroad Commission, defining the term "common carrier" as one operating as a common carrier any railroad, spurs, terminal facilities necessary in the transportation of persons or property, and defining the term "railroad" as meaning all railroads, provided that the act shall not apply to any logging or other private railroad not doing business as a common carrier, and conferring on the Commission jurisdiction over side tracks and branches, in so far as the same are used by common carriers, includes branch roads built by railroads for lumbermen. Detroit & M. Ry. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 137 N. W. 329, 332, 171 Mich. 335.

A logging railroad which is standard gauged, steel railed, connected by switch with another railroad, operated by steam engines and standard gauged cars, and has branches extending for convenience into the woods, over which the same engines and cars are used, which branches are sometimes taken up and relaid elsewhere, is a railroad within Revisal 1905, § 2018, relative to the liability of railroad companies for labor performed in constructing a railroad for a contractor, although in 1872, when that section was first enacted, there were no logging railroads in existence, since legislative enactments, in general and comprehensive terms, prospective in operation apply alike to all persons, subjects and business within their general scope coming into existence subsequent to their passage. Carter v. Coharie Lumber Co., 75 S. E. 1074, 1075, 160 N. C. 8.

As highway or road

See Highway; Road.

Operation of trains required

A "railroad" has been defined as a road or way on which iron rails are laid for wheels to run on for the conveyance of heavy loads and vehicles. Such a track is a "railroad" independently of the use made of the track in the hauling of cars over it. United States v. Union Stock Yards Co. of Omaha, 161 Fed. 919, 923 (citing Dinsmore v. Racine & M. R. Co., 12 Wis. 649; Lake Superior & M. R. Co. v. United States, 93 U. S. 442, 23 L. Ed. 965).

Power plant

Pub. St. 1901, c. 55, § 6, provides that the real estate of a railroad, not used in its ordinary business, shall be taxed in the town where situated. Chapter 64, § 1, provides for the taxation by the state of the road, rolling stock, and equipment of railroad corporations. Held, that a power plant of a railroad company, used to generate power for the operation of the railroad, is not a part of its "road," and is not used in the ordinary business of the railroad, and hence is taxable in the town where situated, especially as chapter 55, § 6, when originally enacted as Laws of 1844, c. 141, § 1, only provided for the exemption from local taxation of the real estate of railroads on which a part of the capital stock has been expended, so as to entitle the town where it was situated to a portion of the state tax, as provided in Rev. St. 1843, c. 39, §§ 4, 5. Boston & M. R. R. v. City of Franklin, 84 Atl. 44, 45, 76 N. H. 459.

All property included

The law treats a "railroad" and its appurtenances as one entire thing. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Grayson, 78 S. W. 777, 779, 72 Ark. 119.

As used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 42, as amended by Pub. Laws 1901, p. 160, c. 145, relating to taxation, the word "railroad" comprehends the equipment, roadbed, sites of depots and warehouses and other real estate, and the words "line or system" cannot be disconnected from it, and mean in this connection a railroad operated as a part of a line or system extending beyond the state. State v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 60 Atl. 901, 902, 100 Me. 202.

In common and accepted usage the meaning of the term "railways" and "railroads" has been extended to include not only the permanent way, but everything necessary to its operation, including the stations, warehouses, roundhouses, locomotive, and car shops, and also all other property of the operating company. Under Code, § 1994, providing that a railroad corporation may take land otherwise than by consent of the owner to the extent of a strip 100 feet in width, a strip along a 100-foot right of way, purchased by the railroad to protect the right of way from snow, was a part of the railroad, within section 2022, requiring a railroad to construct an adequate crossing on demand of one owning land on both sides of the road. Mattice v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 107 N. W. 949, 950, 130 Iowa, 749 (citing Cent. Dict.; Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 700; United States Trust Co. v. Atlantic & P. R. Co., 47 Pac. 725, 8 N. M. 673; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co., 70 Pac. 939, 67 Kan. 569; *State ex rel. New Haven & D. R. Co. v. #### As railroad company

Under Const. art. 9, § 8, prohibiting the granting of a license to a foreign corporation to build a railroad within the state, and providing that where a "railroad" is partly within the state the owners or projectors must incorporate in the state, the term "railroad" does not mean railroad corporation, but refers to the property fairly falling within the term "railroad," including track, rolling stock, station houses, and generally such property as is usual, incident, or necessary to the operation of a railroad, doubtless including all franchises when conferred. Carolina, C. & O. R. Co. v. McCown, 66 S. E. 418, 423, 84 S. C. 318 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 5900, 5901).

The word "railroads," in Greater New York City Charter, Laws 1901, c. 466, § 242, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 629, § 14, conferring on the board of estimate and apportionment the exclusive power to grant franchises or rights, or make contracts providing for the occupation of any of the streets for "railroads" for the transportation of persons or property, means public service corporations for the transportation of persons and possibly of property, and the board has no authority to grant to the owners of a department store the right to construct and operate a spur track in the street to connect its store with a street railway, to be used exclusively for the transportation of its goods. Hatfield v. Straus, 82 N. E. 172, 176, 189 N. Y. 208.

Kirby's Dig. § 6732, provides that the term "railroad" or "railroad corporation," shall be deemed to mean all corporations owning or operating any railroad in the state. Section 6743 provides that any railroad existing under the laws of any other state may buy or lease, or otherwise acquire, any railroad within the state, with all the rights thereto pertaining. Section 6757 provides that, if a railway company of another state shall lease a railroad, such part of the road as shall be within the state shall be subject to all regulations relative to railroads in the state, and section 6758 provides that a corporation of another state, being the lessee of a railroad in the state, shall be liable for a violation of any of the laws in the state, and liable to be sued therefor. Held, that a foreign corporation, which is the lessee of a railroad in the state, is liable, under the statute requiring railroads to erect stock gaps, where the road passes through inclosed land. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hale, 100 S. W. 1148, 82 Ark. 175.

"The term 'railroad' includes all side tracks necessary or convenient for the transaction of the company's business." Roby v. State, 107 N. W. 766, 767, 76 Neb. 450 (citing Rock Creek Tp. v. Strong, 96 U. S. 271, 24 L. Ed. 815; Black v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 58 Pa. 249; Town of Mason v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 S. E. 418, 51 W. Va. 183; State ex rel. Murphy v. Stone, 25 S. W. 211, 119 Mo. 668).

The word "road," as used in Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 2692, requiring every railroad company in this state to fence its road, and imposing a liability for all damages resulting from a failure of compliance therewith, held to apply to the repair shops and side tracks if practicable to be fenced. Mattes v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 104 N. W. 234, 235, 95 Minn. 386.

Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 4, provides that a railroad should have power to lay out its road not exceeding nine rods wide, and to construct and maintain the same with a single track and with such appendages and adjuncts as might be necessary for its convenient use, and subdivision 5 authorized the construction of the "road" along any street so as not to unnecessarily impair its usefulness or injure its franchise, etc. Held, that the word "road" was not used in subdivision 5 in connection with "appendages and adjuncts" as in subdivision 4, and therefore should be construed only to include the railroad's single or double track, as the case might be, and hence the city had no power to grant a railroad company the right to lay a third track in a street for any purpose. City of Los Angeles v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 108 P. 65, 68, 157 Cal. 363.

Under a statute defining a "railroad" as "all the road in use by any corporation," a railroad transporting a car load of freight for a short distance, as a mile, using a switch engine for motive power, is as much a common carrier as if the road extended a long distance. State ex rel. Railroad Com'rs v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 52 South. 4, 10, 59 Fla. 612 (quoting the definition in Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Wichita Wholesale Grocery Co., 40 Pac. 899, 55 Kan. 525).

Where a private switch leading to a mill was used by defendant railroad company in transporting cars in interstate commerce to and from the mill, as they were consigned, with the railroad's own engines and crews, such track constituted a "railroad" and a part of defendant's line to which the Safety Appliance Act (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531), was applicable. Gray v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 197 Fed. 874, 876.

Comp. Laws 1897, § 6234, authorizing a railroad company to construct its "road" upon or across a highway, relates to its main line tracks and necessary side tracks in transporting passengers and freight, and does not authorize the construction of additional tracks, occupying about 200 feet of the highway, for yard purposes, without the consent of the highway commissioners. Highway Com'r of Ecorse Tp. v. Wabash R. Co., 111 N. W. 1090, 1091, 148 Mich. 436.

The term "railroad" is a generic term under which street railroads fall as a species, unless by the text of the law in which the former term is used it appears that the intention was not to include in it the latter kind of railroads. Shreveport Traction Co. v. Kansas City, S. & G. Ry. Co., 44 South. 457, 462, 119 La. 759.

"A 'railway' is a way which is made for the movement of cars, or something of that character, upon tracks that are laid down either on the street or somewhere else. They are not propelled as ordinary vehicles, such as wagons and carriages, are on the highways generally, but require for their operation that tracks be expressly formed to be moved upon, and a street railway is of that character." Minneapolis St. Ry. Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 155 Fed. 989, 995.

While the word "railroad" is ordinarily held not to include a street railway, this is not an arbitrary and inflexible rule and where street railways are within the spirit and purpose of a law, although not expressly named, they have been regarded as covered by the general term "railroad." Kansas City, O. B. & E. R. Co. v. Board of R. Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 73 Kan. 168 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 5904, 5907).

The term "railroad," when used in statutes, may or may not embrace a street railroad; its meaning in each case depending upon the connection in which it is used. Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 488, 196 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114 (quoting Sams v. St. Louis & M. R. Co., 73 S. W. 686, 174 Mo. 53, 61 L. R. A. 475); Riggs v. St. Francois County Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 707, 708, 120 Mo. App. 335 (quoting and adopting statement in Sams v. St. Louis & M. R. Co., 73 S. W. 686, 174 Mo. 53, 61 L. R. A. 475).

The word "railroad," as used in Revisal 1905, § 2646, depriving any railroad operating in the state of the defense of assumption of risk as to any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, means any road operated by steam or electricity on rails, and hence includes logging railroads and street railroads. Hemphill v. Buck Creek Lumber Co., 54 S. E. 420, 421, 141 N. C. 487.

The word "railroad" does not include street railroads, and an interurban road is regarded as a street railroad. An interurban railroad for the operation of cars by electricity and by the tractive friction resulting from their own weight is not within the act of April 25, 1901 (97 Ohio Laws, p. 546), "to provide how railroad and highway crossings may be constructed." Com'rs of Ross County v. Scioto Valley Traction Co., 80 N. E. 176, 177, 75 Ohio St. 548.

A street railroad is not a "railroad," within Gen. St. 1901, § 2098, making it an offense to willfully injure any locomotive, car, or other machinery in use upon any railroad within the state. State v. Cain, 70 Pac. 443, 444, 69 Kan. 186.

Where a company organized under the general railroad law built a road in the streets of a city, as organized by an ordinance thereof, to carry freight from manufacturing not otherwise accessible by steam railroads, and the road was operated as a steam railroad in connection with the road of the lessee, it was subject to taxation as a "railroad" and not as a street railway. City of Detroit v. Detroit Manufacturers' R. R., 113 N. W. 365, 366, 149 Mich. 530.

The words "railroad" and "railroad company," as used in section 1, c. 142, Laws 1877, and in amended section 1, c. 183, Laws 1887, do not mean "street railway," "electric street railway," or an interurban company such as is described in the petition in this case. O'Malley v. Board of Com'rs of Riley County, 121 Pac. 1108, 1110, 86 Kan. 752, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 576.

The Century Dictionary defines a "street railway" as a railroad constructed upon the surface of a public street in towns and cities, and Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law states that "the distinctive and essential features of a 'street railway,' as distinguished from other railroads, are the location of the road upon the surface of streets and highways, its mode of operation, and its use for the carriage of passengers." In re Minneapolis & St. P. Suburban Ry. Co., 112 N. W. 13, 16, 101 Minn. 132.

The word "railroad," as used in law, is broad enough to include street railroads, and many cases have arisen where the courts have held that the word does in its signification include such. Each case is to be determined upon its own facts, having in view the circumstances, the context, the presumed intention of the lawmakers, and the general policy of the state in regard to the particular matter. San Francisco & S. M. Electric R. Co. v. Scott, 75 Pac. 575, 576, 142 Cal. 222 (citing Ferguson v. Sherman, 47 Pac. 1023, 116 Cal. 169, 176, 37 L. R. A. 622).

The provision of the Virginia Constitution abolishing the doctrine of fellow servants, so far as it affects the liability of the master for injuries to a servant, etc., as to every employé of a railroad company, affects only railroads proper or "commercial railroads," and does not apply to street car companies. Norfolk, etc., Traction Co. v. Ellington's

A municipal corporation has no authority to compel an interurban or street railroad company to light its bridge or railroad within the limits of such corporation. Section 1536—176, Rev. St. 1908, applies only to steam railroads. Ohio Electric Ry. Co. v. Village of Ottawa, 97 N. E. 835, 85 Ohio St. 229.

An electric street railway doing an interstate business in the carriage of passengers, although incorporated under the street railroad statutes of a state, and not authorized to carry freight, nor vested with the right of eminent domain, is a "railroad," within Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584. Omaha & C. B. St. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 191 Fed. 40—48.

Gen. St. 1902, § 4140, provides that, if any person shall have a claim for services rendered in the construction of any railroad or any of its appurtenances, etc., such claim shall be a lien on said railroad, etc. Held, that a street railway is a "railroad" on the property of which a lien may be enforced, though Gen. St. 1902, § 1, provides that the phrase "railroad company," as used in the statutes, shall in general be construed to mean a corporation operating a railroad by steam power, and though other statutes dealing with railroads refer to steam railroad companies as "railroad companies," and street railroad companies as "street railway companies." Egan v. Cheshire St. Ry. Co., 61 Atl. 950, 951, 78 Conn. 291.

There is a well-defined distinction between the definition of the words "railroad" and "street railway." The one is a word of general and extended meaning, applying to all roads incorporated under the general law, and has always been held to impose an additional servitude upon a public way for which abutting owners are entitled to compensation. The other is local in its signification, referring to transportation of a character entirely different from that of a general railroad, and has been held to add no burden as an additional servitude. Ecorse Tp. v. Jackson, A. A. & D. Ry., 117 N. W. 89, 91, 153 Mich. 393.

Civ. Code, § 291, providing that the articles of incorporation of any "railroad" must state the kind of road intended to be constructed, the places from and to which it is intended to be run, its estimated length, and that 10 per cent. of the capital stock subscribed has been paid in; section 293 providing that such a proposed corporation before filing articles must have subscribed to its capital stock $1,000 for each mile of contemplated work; section 294 providing that before the articles are filed there must have been paid for the benefit of the corporation,

10 per cent. of the amount subscribed; and section 295 providing that before the Secretary of State issues to such a corporation a certificate of filing of articles of incorporation, there must be filed in his office an affidavit that the required amount of stock has been subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof paid in—have no application to street railroads corporations. Huntington v. Curry, 112 Pac. 583, 584, 14 Cal. App. 468.

"The Constitution, statutes, and decisions of this state recognize that the word 'railroad' is generic, and includes street railroads, narrow gauge roads, horse car companies, dummy lines, and street railroads operated by electricity. Whether a particular statute applies to any one of these various forms of railroads is to be determined from the language of the statute, from the context, or from the intent of the lawmakers." Civ. Code 1895, § 2234, providing that "all engine drivers and conductors must cause the trains which they respectively drive and conduct to come to a full stop within 50 feet of the place of crossing," where the tracks of separate and independent railroads cross each other, does not apply to a street railway, so as to compel it to stop its cars before crossing a steam railroad track. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Joiner, 48 S. E. 336, 337, 120 Ga. 905 (quoting Savannah T. & I. of H. Ry. v. Williams, 43 S. E. 751, 117 Ga. 414, 61 L. R. A. 249).

Technically a "railroad" is a way or road on which rails are laid for wheels to run on for the conveyance of heavy loads and vehicles. The term is generic, and embraces all species of road constructed by corporations of a quasi public character. Whether a road is a railroad depends on the mode of construction and chartered use and not on the motive power; it being declared in the original act for the incorporation of railroads (1 Rev. St. 1852, p. 409, c. 83; section 5153, cl. 8, Burns' Ann. St. 1901) that they should have power to convey persons and property by steam, animal, or any mechanical power or any combination of them. Act May 12, 1869 (Laws 1869, p. 92, c. 44), was entitled an act to authorize aid to the construction of "railroads" by counties and towns, etc. Act March 9, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 233, c. 134), provided that wherever the word "railroad" occurred in either section of the act of 1869 or any section of any subsequent act amendatory or supplemental to the act of 1869 the same should extend to every kind of street railroad, suburban street railroad, or interurban street railroad by whatever power its vehicles were transported. Held, that the word "railroad" in the act of 1869 was not limited to steam railroads, so that the act of 1903 was not objectionable as not germane to the title of the act of 1869. McCleary v. Babcock, 82 N. E. 453, 456, 169 Ind. 228.

"Railroads now exist in great variety as regards motors and motive power, the size and style of cars and coaches, and methods of operation and construction. It is probable that these variations will be multiplied in the coming years. It is doubtful whether any permanent and satisfactory classification can now be made. There has been a general concurrence, however, in embracing all railroads in two divisions or classes: (1) Commercial railroads, and (2) street railroads. Commercial railroads embrace all railroads for general freight and passenger traffic between one town and another or between one place and another. So far they have not been successfully operated, to any extent at least, except by steam. They are usually not constructed upon the public streets or highways, except for short distances. Street railroads embrace all such as are constructed and operated in the public streets for the purpose of conveying passengers, with their ordinary hand luggage, from one point to another on the street." Wilder v. Aurora, De Kalb & R. Electric Traction Co., 75 N. E. 194, 206, 216 Ill. 493 (quoting and adopting definition in Lewis, Em. Dom. vol. 1, § 110a).

While street railways are not specifically mentioned under either title of Gen. St. Minn. 1866, c. 34, relating to the formation of corporations, title 1 providing generally for corporations which are or may be authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain, and specifying certain public service corporations, such as those formed for the construction of railways, canals, and works of like character, and title 2, providing for all other corporations for pecuniary profit, all those specified therein being for the conducting of purely private enterprises, the nature of their business is such as to render them quasi public corporations, which might properly be authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain, and to bring them within the generic term "railways," and hence a street railroad company organized under said chapter came within the provisions of and derived its powers from title 1, having the right as therein provided to fix the term of its corporate existence at 50 years. Minneapolis St. Ry. Co. v. City of Minneapolis, 155 Fed. 989, 995.

Fellow Servant Act (Pub. Laws 1909, No. 104), abolishing the defense of fellow servant in actions for injuries to railroad employes, is entitled "An act to prescribe the liability of common carrier railroad companies to their employes," and section 1 of the act makes it applicable to every common carrier railroad company in the state. Held that, since street railroads are common carriers, the word "railroad" was sufficiently broad to include street railroads, and that the act was therefore not limited to commercial railroads, but included street railroads as well. Arends v. Grand Rapids Ry. Co., 138 N. W. 195, 196, 172 Mich. 448.

The tax law (Laws 1881, c. 293), defining the terms, "land," "real estate," and "real property" as including "all surface, underground or elevated railroads," and the value of all franchises to construct or operate railroads, in, under, above or through streets, is not limited to street surface railroads only, but includes long distance surface steam railroads, and hence a franchise granted by the state to a steam surface railroad for its road in, under, above, or through streets is property, and a special franchise, and taxable. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 133 N. Y. Supp. 135, 139, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 145.

As structure

See Permanent Structure.

As track

The word "railway," as used in a complaint in an action for a wrongful killing of an engineer, alleging that the said "railway" from which the engine intestate was operating was derailed, was defective, may be construed as synonymous with track, and was sufficiently specific as to defects. E. E. Jackson Lumber Co. v. Cunningham, 37 South. 445, 447, 141 Ala. 206.

A petition in an action against a carrier which alleges negligence of servants in charge of the "railroad, train, and roadbed" alleges that the track was defective, though the word "roadbed" does not include track and ties, since the word "railroad" is broad enough to include the roadbed and the superstructure including crossties, rails, and fastenings. Skiles v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 108 S. W. 1082, 1084, 130 Mo. App. 162.

A tramway laid in the slope of a mine upon which tram cars operated by electric motors on tracks having switches and run in carrying ore from the bottom of the slope or mine to the top where the cars are dumped, is a "railway" within the meaning of the employer's liability act (Code 1907, § 3910, subd. 5), which makes the master liable for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of any servant in charge of any car, train, etc., on a "railway." Woodward Iron Co. v. Lewis, 54 South. 566, 570, 171 Ala. 233.

The operation of a tramway upon which small cars were operated by gravity, except for a short distance, where cables were sometimes used to haul dirt from the pits to plaintiff's brick-making machinery, did not constitute the operation of a "railroad," within an application for an employer's liability policy which stated that assured did not operate a railroad on its premises. South Knoxville Brick Co. v. Empire State Surety Co., 150 S. W. 92, 93, 126 Tenn. 402, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 107.

Viaduct

Where a corporation was granted the right to "build a railroad," it had power to build a viaduct across certain streets in a city on which to lay its tracks, the effect of which was to change the crossing from a grade crossing to an elevated one. Bubbenzer v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (Del.) 61 Atl. 270, 273.

RAILROAD BONDS

As property, see Property.

RAILROAD BRIDGE

A "railroad bridge" means a viaduct constructed for the exclusive use of railroad transportation. Diebold v. Kentucky Traction Co., 77 S. W. 674, 676, 117 Ky. 146, 63 L. R. A. 637, 111 Am. St. Rep. 230, 4 Ann. Cas. 445 (citing Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City Ry. Co., 2 Duv. [63 Ky.] 175).

RAILROAD BUSINESS

See Gross Earnings.

Money received by a railroad company for services of its employes in loading cars for lumbermen constitutes money received from "railroad business," and cannot be distinguished on the ground that the services were performed for the mere accommodation of shippers; the railroad being authorized by its charter to load property received for transportation, and the proceeds from such work being therefore subject to gross earnings taxation. State v. Minnesota & I. Ry. Co., 118 N. W. 679, 681, 106 Minn. 176, 16 Ann. Cas. 426.

RAILROAD CAR

As commerce, see Commerce.

As house, see House.

As property, see Property.

Pinching a railroad car, see Pinching.

One who breaks and enters a freight car resting on timbers on railroad ground after the removal of the trucks, and occupied by section hands as a lodging place, and who commits larceny therein, violates Code, § 4791, punishing the burglary of any office, shop, store, warehouse, railroad car, or any building in which goods are kept, though the structure is not a "railroad car" as alleged, but is a building within the statute. State v. Anderson, 135 N. W. 405, 154 Iowa, 701.

RAILROAD CATTLE GAP OR GUARD

A "railroad cattle gap or guard" is a contrivance to restrain cattle. In a sense it is a fence, but the construction of the gap or guard itself is not limited in its dangerous quality as is a fence. To be at all effective and serviceable, it cannot be a barrier erected perpendicular to the surface of the ground, and rising above it, but must, in order to answer the purpose in view, be so constructed that its appearance of dangerousness will, under ordinary circumstances, deter cattle from attempting to pass over it; and, in so ordering the gap or guard, a really dangerous contrivance may be properly installed without, in the event of injury to cattle attempting to cross it, rendering the railway company liable, if the fact of its want of safety for that purpose is the proximate cause of the injury. Carrollton Short Line Ry. Co. v. Lipsey, 43 South. 836, 837, 150 Ala. 570.

"Railroad companies," as they exist in this country, are corporations in which private capital is embarked in a public occupation, that of common carriage. These corporations possess, therefore, a dual nature, having in trust, on the one hand, the financial interests of their stockholders, and, on the other, the convenience and safety of the traveling public. Shelton v. Erie R. Co., 66 Atl. 403, 405, 73 N. J. Law, 558, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 118 Am. St. Rep. 704, 9 Ann. Cas. 883.

A corporation engaged as a common carrier by rail in the channels of interstate commerce is a "railroad company," within the terms of the Hepburn Act of February 29, 1906, prohibiting such companies from transporting, in interstate commerce, commodities with which they are associated or in which they are interested. United States v. Delaware & H. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 540, 213 U. S. 366, 53 L. Ed. 836.

"A railroad company" is a carrier of goods for the public, and, as such, is bound to carry safely whatever goods are intrusted to it for transportation, within the course of its business, to the end of its route, and there deposit them in a suitable place for their owners or consignees. If the road of the company connects with other roads, and goods are received for transportation beyond the termination of its own line, there is superadded to its duty as a common carrier that of a forwarder by the connecting line; that is, to deliver safely the goods to such line, the next carrier on the route beyond. This forwarding duty arises from the obligation implied in taking the goods for the point beyond its own line. The common law imposes no greater duty than this. If more is expected from the company receiving the shipment, there must be a special agreement for it. This is the doctrine of this court, although a different rule of liability is adopted in England and in some of the states." McGuire v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 153 Fed. 434, 438 (quoting and adopting definition in Myrick v. Michigan Cent. Ry. Co., 1 Sup. Ct. 425, 107 U. S. 102, 27 L. Ed. 325, and citing Pennsylvania Ry. Co. v. Jones, 15 Sup. Ct. 136, 155 U. S. 333, 39 L. Ed. 176; Peterson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 45 N. W. 573, 80 Iowa, 92; Root v. Great Western Ry. Co., 45 N. Y. 527; Ortt v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 31 N. W. 519, 36 Minn. 398).

A "company" incorporated for the purpose of building and operating a railroad three miles in length, for the carrying of goods and passengers, is a "railroad company," although it selects the name of "terminal company." Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co., 56 S. E. 624, 626, 127 Ga. 520, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

The terms "railway company" and "railroad company" are interchangeable, and, in proceedings before the board of commissioners of a county for an order directing the levy of a tax voted by a township in aid of a railway company, the objection that the appropriation was voted in aid of a railroad company may be met by proof that the railway company was entitled to avail itself of the appropriation. Davis v. Hert, 90 N. E. 634, 636, 46 Ind. App. 242.

The words "railroad companies" and "railway companies," as used in the statutes of Pennsylvania, are synonymous, and apply to both steam and street railways, unless the context clearly shows a different intent. City of Philadelphia v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 55 Atl. 762, 763, 206 Pa. 35.

Under Gen. St. 1901, § 5997, defining the term "railroad company," and declaring that, as used in the railroad commissioners law, it means a company whose road is operated by steam, the statute forbids such term being construed to include a company owning a road operated only by electricity, except where such intention may be expressly manifested. Kansas City, O. B. & Electric R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 84 Pac. 755, 756, 73 Kan. 168.

The words "railroad" and "railroad company," as used in section 1, c. 142, Laws of 1877, and in amended section 1, c. 183, Laws of 1887, do not mean "street railway," "electric street railway," or an interurban company such as is described in the petition in this case. O'Malley v. Board of Com'rs of Riley County, 121 Pac. 1108, 1110, 86 Kan. 752, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 576.

Under the express terms of Gen. St. 1902, § 1, the term "railroad company" includes "all corporations, trustees, receivers, or other persons that lay out, construct, maintain, or operate a railroad operated by steam power, unless such meaning would be repugnant to the context or to the manifest intention of the General Assembly." "A 'street railway company' is a kind of 'railroad company,' but it does not follow that it is affected by every statute concerning railroad companies. That is a question to be determined in each case by a study of the whole body of legislation bearing upon the question." Stafford Springs St. Ry. Co. v. Middle River Mfg. Co., 66 Atl. 775, 777, 80 Conn. 37.

The term "railroad company," as used in St. 1898, § 1816, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 254, withdrawing the defenses of assumed risk and acts of fellow servants in actions against railroads for injuries to servants, and defining "railroad company" to embrace any company managing, maintaining, operating, or in possession of a railroad, does not include interurban railroads operated by electricity, but refers entirely to ordinary steam driven commercial railroads. Jones v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 133 N. W. 636, 638, 147 Wis. 427.

That there can be a railway company which does nothing but construct the road, and a railway company which does nothing but operate the constructed road, cannot be doubted. It is not essential to the idea of a railroad company that it should both construct and operate a railway. A corporation organized for the purpose of constructing railroads generally, and not for the building of any particular railroad, or the operation of any railroad, is a railroad corporation, within the statutes exempting stockholders in railroad companies from liability beyond the amount of their stock. First Nat. Bank of Davenport v. Davies, 43 Iowa, 424, 433, 434 (citing and adopting McKellar v. Stout, 14 Iowa, 359).

Const. art. 12, § 162 (Code 1904, p. cclix), abolishing the doctrine of fellow servant so far as it affects the liability of the master for injuries to his servant, etc., as to every employé of a "railroad company," etc., affects only railroads proper or commercial railroads, and does not apply to street car companies. Norfolk & Portsmouth Traction Co. v. Ellington's Adm'r, 61 S. E. 779, 782, 108 Va. 245, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117.

The headlight law (Act Aug. 17, 1908; Laws 1908, p. 50) requires a railroad company to equip and maintain every locomotive running on its main line after dark with a good and sufficient headlight, which shall consume not less than 300 watts at the arc, with a reflector not less than 23 inches in diameter, and to keep such headlight in good condition, and provides that any railroad company violating the act shall be liable to indictment and punishment. Held, that the term "railroad company," as used, includes natural persons as well as corporations. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. State, 69 S. E. 725, 729, 135 Ga. 545, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 20.

A company engaged in phosphate mining, and, as an incident thereto, operating trolley engines and cars to haul the phosphate, is not a "railroad company" within Gen. St. 1906, §§ 3148, 3149, 3150, modifying the common-law rules regulating the liability of employers for injuries to employes as applied to a railroad company. Taylor v. Prairie Pebble Phosphate Co., 54 South. 904, 61 Fla. 455.

A stockyards company owning stockyards and doing what is known as a terminal business, having switch tracks encircling its yards and connecting therewith and with trunk line railroads so that all cars of stock in and out of its yards must pass over its tracks, which it alone operates with its own engines and crews, which issues no bills of lading and receives no part of the freight paid the trunk line railroads, but charges a fixed price per car for all cars moved from the connection therewith to its yards or to packing houses, is a "railroad company" and a common carrier of freight for hire with the rights, duties, and obligations of a common carrier for hire, and subject to the provisions of Twenty-Eight Hour Law June 29, 1906, c. 3594, 34 Stat. 607, where it participates in the carriage of an interstate shipment. United States v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 181 Fed. 625, 626.

The Supreme Court of North Carolina having decided that the fellow-servant act of that state, providing that "any servant or employé of any railroad company" injured through the negligence of any other servant, employé, or agent of the company may maintain an action therefor against the company, applies to a manufacturing corporation which owns and operates a spur track on its ground as incidental to its main business, with respect to servants employed in such service such construction of the statute is binding on the federal courts. United States Leather Co. v. Howell, 151 Fed. 444, 446, 80 C. C. A. 674.

Gen. St. 1902, § 4140, provides that, if any person shall have a claim for services rendered in the construction of any railroad or any of its appurtenances, such claim shall be a lien on said railroad, etc. Held, that a street railway is a "railroad," on the property of which a lien may be enforced, though Gen. St. 1902, § 1, provides that the phrase "railroad company," as used in the statutes, shall in general be construed to mean a corporation operating a railroad by steam power, and though other statutes dealing with railroads refer to steam railroad companies as "railroad companies," and street railroad companies as "street railway companies." Egan v. Cheshire St. Ry. Co., 61 Atl. 950, 951, 78 Conn. 291.

Code 1907, § 5476, making a "railroad company" liable for damages to persons and property resulting from negligence or a failure to comply with statutory requirements, and providing that, when any person or property is injured by the locomotive or cars of any railroad, the burden is on the railroad company to show compliance with the statutory requirements and absence of negligence, does not apply to electric street railroads. Appel v. Selma St. & Suburban Ry. Co. (Ala.) 59 South. 164, 168.

As domestic corporation, see Domestic Corporation.

As railroad, see Railroad—Railway.

As resident, see Resident.

When a statute speaks of any "railroad corporation," it has reference to a railroad corporation existing or operating in the state. McDermon v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Fed. 669, 678.

Railroad Law (Laws 1892, p. 1390, c. 676, § 32), providing that every "railroad corporation" shall maintain cattle guards at road crossings, applies to a street surface railroad company incorporated under article 1 of the act (page 1382). Evans v. Utica & Mohawk Valley Ry. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1090, 44 Misc. Rep. 345.

Const. art. 11, § 5, forbidding a "railroad corporation" issuing any bonds except for money, labor, or property actually received and applied to the purposes for which such corporation was created, does not apply to street railway corporations not engaged in general railroad business. State ex rel. Tyrrell v. Lincoln Traction Co., 134 N. W. 278, 281, 90 Neb. 535.

The term "railway corporation" means those steam railroads which constitute a class well defined, and hence a statute making an employer liable for the injury or death of an employé injured or killed by reason of the negligence of any person who has charge of any signal, switch, locomotive engine, or train on a railroad, does not apply to street railway companies. Conover v. Public Service Ry. Co., 78 Atl. 187, 188, 80 N. J. Law, 681 (citing Newark v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 26 Atl. 137, 55 N. J. Law, 146).

The term "railroad corporation," as used in General Railroad Act, Laws 1890, p. 1083, c. 565, § 4, includes elevated railroads; and such railroads have power to acquire land necessary for their maintenance and accommodation. Manhattan Ry. Co. v. Astor, 107 N. Y. Supp. 666, 667, 56 Misc. Rep. 353.

An interurban electric railway company, incorporated under Rev. St. 1890, c. 12, art.

3, § 1187, and authorized to operate a street railway for public conveyance of passengers, mail, and express, is a "railroad corporation," within article 2, § 1105, requiring every railroad corporation incorporated in the state under such article, or any railroad corporation running or operating any railroad in the state, to erect and maintain lawful fences on the sides of its road passing through cultivated fields, and, until such fences are constructed, making it liable for double damages for stock killed on its road. Riggs v. St. Francois County Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 707, 708, 709, 120 Mo. App. 335.

The term "railway corporation," in a statute providing that a railway corporation shall be liable for damages sustained by an employé without contributory negligence on his part, caused by the negligence of certain employés, is a general one, including all persons engaged in operating railways, individual and corporate, and hence the statute does not violate the federal Constitution, prohibiting the states from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws. Lewis v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 469, 473, 36 Mont. 207.

A corporation chartered to maintain a lumber business, with power to operate saw-mills, tramroads, etc., which operates a railroad as an incident to the lumber business, is not a "railroad corporation" within Gen. Laws 1901, p. 31, c. 27. Receivers of Kirby Lumber Co. v. McLendon, 120 S. W. 227, 228, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 279.

A company engaged in mining only, which uses in its operations a system of railway tracks of standard gauge aggregating in length some three miles, is operating a "railroad," within the meaning of Rev. Laws 1905, § 2042, abolishing the fellow-servant rule as to railroad corporations. Cook v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 131 N. W. 334, 335, 114 Minn. 299.

A construction company, with the usual powers of a construction company, and authorized to own, but not to operate, a railroad, is not a "railroad corporation" proper, so as to fall within the wording of Const. 1890, § 193, partially abrogating the fellow servant rule as to employés of "any railroad corporation." Bradford Construction Co. v. Heflin, 42 South. 174, 175, 88 Miss. 314, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 8 Ann. Cas. 1077.

A manufacturing company maintaining in its yards a number of tracks and a switch engine for its use in shifting freight cars is not a "railroad corporation operating a railroad or part of a railroad in this state," within 93 Ohio Laws, p. 342, requiring every railroad corporation operating a railroad or part of a railroad in this state to block its frogs, though by the law of Ohio (Rev. St. § 3866) a manufacturing company may construct a railroad when such purpose is stated in its articles of incorporation, and with respect to it is made subject to the general railroad laws of the state. Taggart v. Republic Iron & Steel Co., 141 Fed. 910, 911, 73 C. C. A. 144.

A corporation authorized by its articles to construct and operate a railroad as a common carrier, its primary purpose being to connect the business enterprises of an outskirt of a city with the terminals of a railroad company in the city proper, and to carry freight in car load lots between such points, and which has complied with Pierce's Code, §§ 7053, 7054 (Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4250, 4251), prescribing the manner of executing articles of incorporation of railroads, and the condition precedent for condemning lands, that the whole amount of its capital stock be subscribed, and the good faith of which is evidenced by the money it has expended and the equipment it has under contract, is a "railroad corporation" within the eminent domain statute; the test not being length of road, or that it shall use its own rolling stock, but that it shall be acting in good faith, and that its road shall serve a public purpose. State v. Superior Court of King County (Wash.) 103 Pac. 469, 471.

Statutory definitions

Rev. St. 1899, § 1163, defines the term "railroad corporation" to mean all corporations, companies, or individuals owning or operating, or which may hereafter own or operate, any railroad in this state. State ex inf. Attorney General v. Terminal R. Ass'n of St. Louis, 81 S. W. 395, 402, 182 Mo. 284.

Kirby's Dig. § 6732, declares that the term "railroad" or "railroad corporation" shall mean all corporations operating any railroad in this state, whether as owner or lessee, mortgagee, trustee, receiver, or assignee. Hence a railroad company running a through train over the line of another company passing through the state is subject to section 6068, providing that an action against a railroad company may be brought in any county through or into which the road upon which the cause of action arose passes. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jaber, 107 S. W. 1170, 1171, 85 Ark. 232.

Kirby's Dig. § 6732, provides that the term "railroad" or "railroad corporation" shall be deemed to mean all corporations owning or operating any railroad in the state. Section 6743 provides that any railroad existing under the laws of any other state may buy or lease, or otherwise acquire, any railroad within the state, with all the rights thereto pertaining. Section 6757 provides that, if a railway company of another state shall lease a railroad, such part of the road as shall be within the state shall be subject to all regulations relative to railroads in the state, and section 6758 provides that a corporation of another state, being the lessee of a railroad in the state, shall be liable for a violation of any of the laws in the state, and liable to be sued therefor. Held, that a foreign corporation, which is the lessee of a railroad in the state, is liable, under the statute requiring railroads to erect stock gaps, where the road passes through inclosed land. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hale, 100 S. W. 1148, 82 Ark. 175.

Rev. St. 1898, § 1816, which is a part of chapter 87, concerning railroads, makes every railroad company liable for damages sustained by employes, caused by the negligence of other employes. Other provisions of the chapter relate exclusively to "railroad corporations" doing the usual business of a public or commercial railroad. Thus provision is made for equality of transportation rates, for the furnishing of cars on demand, for the maintenance of guards and fences, and for subservience to regulations for the shipment of grain, carrying of live stock, etc. The power of exercising the right of eminent domain is also given to railroads included within the purview of the chapter. Section 1861 defines the phrase "railroad corporation" as embracing any company, corporation, or person managing or operating a railroad, whether as owner, contractor, mortgagee, assignee, or receiver. Held, that section 1816, notwithstanding section 1861, embraces within its provisions only railroads engaged in a general railroad business for the carriage of passengers and freight, and has no application to a private railroad operated in connection with a logging and lumber business. McKivergan v. Alexander & Edgar Lumber Co., 102 N. W. 332, 333, 124 Wis. 60.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1163 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 988), providing that the term "railroad corporation" shall mean all corporations owning or operating any railroad, a corporation organized under Rev. St. 1869, §§ 2768-2807, providing for the incorporation of manufacturing and business companies, and empowered by its charters to operate terminal lines of railroad in connection with its stockyards and packing houses, and maintaining a number of miles of railroad and terminals and engines, and employes to operate the same, is a railroad corporation, within Rev. St. 1899, § 2873 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1655), providing that every railroad corporation shall be liable for damages sustained by any servant while engaged in operating such railroad by reason of the negligence of any other servant. Penney v. St. Joseph Stockyards Co., 111 S. W. 79, 83, 212 Mo. 309.

RAILROAD CROSSING

As private way, see Private Way.

As warning, see Warning—Warned.

A "railroad crossing," such as is referred to in Civ. Code 1895, § 2222, is the crossing by a railroad of a public highway, not only used, but maintained, as such by the proper authorities having the same in charge. The evidence must show the road to be a public highway, before there is proof of a road crossing. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Bunn, 58 S. E. 538, 2 Ga. App. 305 (citing Johnson v. State, 58 S. E. 265, 1 Ga. App. 195).

Where a road leads from the public road across a railroad to a house, and is used only by the owner and by the tenant of a neighbor, it is a private way, and the railroad is not required to keep the "crossing" over such private way in repair, under Civ. Code 1902, § 2183, providing that a railroad crossing a highway shall protect its rails, so as to procure a safe passage across the road. Moragne v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 58 S. E. 150, 151, 77 S. C. 437.

Within the meaning of Rev. St. 1905, p. 1578, § 8, providing that "at all of the railroad crossings of highways and streets in this state the several railroad corporations in this state shall construct and maintain said crossings and the approaches thereto within their respective rights of way," "railroad crossing" means that portion comprising the track or roadbed, "the approaches thereto," that portion extending from the track on each side thereof back so far as may be necessary, so that at all times the crossing shall be safe. The words do not necessarily include the entire width of railroads' rights of way. Cass County v. Chicago, P. & St. L. Ry. Co., 130 Ill. App. 346, 349.

RAILROAD DEPOT

See Station.

RAILROAD ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The reference, in the Federal Safety Appliance Act, to any "railroad engaged in interstate commerce" is made to the national interstate highway alone, used in interstate commerce, and by no system of reasoning can this reference be properly held to apply to an intrastate highway. United States v. Southern Ry. Co., 164 Fed. 347, 352.

RAILROAD EQUIPMENT

Personal Property Law N. Y. (Consol. Laws, c. 41) § 61, provides that, whenever any railroad equipment and rolling stock shall be sold, leased, or loaned under a contract which provides that the title shall remain in the vendor, lessor, or bailor until the price is paid, such contract shall be invalid as to any subsequent judgment creditor of or purchaser from such vendee, lessee, or bailee for a valuable consideration without notice, unless the contract is in writing, fully acknowledged, and recorded in the book in which real estate mortgages are recorded in the office of the county clerk or register of the county in which is located the principal office or place of business of the vendee, lessee, or bailee, unless there is plainly marked on both sides of the locomotive or car the name of the vendor, lessor, or bailor, followed by the words "lessor," "bailor," or "vendor," as the case may be. Held, that the words "railroad equipment" and "rolling stock," as used in such section, were equivalent to the words "rolling stock used on a railroad," and since the term "railroad" signifies a common carrier or association engaged in hauling passengers and freight for hire, excluding logging roads, construction roads, etc., such section had no application to locomotives only fit for use on temporary construction railroads, used in connection with work of internal improvement, and hence conditional sales of such locomotives were valid as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the conditional vendee, though not recorded. In re Ferguson Contracting Co., 183 Fed. 880, 882.

RAILROAD HAZARD

A "railroad hazard" may exist, within Rev. Laws 1905, § 2042, when the work engaged in is so intimately connected with the movement of engines and trains as to render it more dangerous for that reason. Hanson v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 607, 608, 108 Minn. 94, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968.

Plaintiff, a bridge carpenter, was engaged with other workmen in constructing a railroad track over low ground. Piles were driven, and a trestle built, on which were laid the ties and rails. For the purpose of driving the piles, a pile driver car was used, and as the trestle work progressed the car was moved forward for the purpose of driving the next row of piles, and when that was accomplished the car moved back so that the work of placing the caps on the piles, stringers, ties, and rails could be carried on. Plaintiff was injured by the negligent movement of the car. Held that, conceding that plaintiff and the employé in charge of the car were fellow servants, the work in which they were engaged constituted a "railroad hazard," rendering the railroad liable for the injury sustained. Johnson v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 116 N. W. 936, 104 Minn. 444, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

RAILROAD MORTGAGE

"Railroad mortgages," so called, are as a rule trust deeds securing a large number of bonds distributed over a wide extent of country, and, in many cases among the peo-

Const. 1891, § 182, declares that nothing in the Constitution shall prevent the General Assembly from providing by law how railroads and railroad property shall be assessed, and how taxes thereon shall be collected. Held that, where a bridge was owned and used by a railroad company, it constituted "railroad property" within such section, though it was also used for the accommodation of teams, street cars, and foot passengers. Board of Equalization of Campbell County v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 109 S. W. 303, 304.

Under Acts 1884 (P. L. p. 142), as amended, providing for the taxation of railroads, "railroad property" is divided into four distinct classes: (1) The main stem, consisting of the roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width, with its rails, ties, depot buildings; (2) other real property; (3) tangible personal property; and (4) the franchise. Jersey City v. State Board of Assessors, 68 Atl. 227, 228, 74 N. J. Law, 720.

A company organized under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 167, built a railroad in the streets of a city, as authorized by an ordinance thereof, to carry freight from manufactories not otherwise accessible by steam railroads. The railroad was operated as a steam railroad, and was leased to a steam railroad, which used it in connection with its own road. Held, that the railroad was "railroad property," within Pub. Acts 1901, p. 245, No. 173, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 57, No. 45, providing for the taxation of railroad property, and was not subject to local taxation, at least unless the ordinance imposed as a condition a liability for such taxes. City of Detroit v. Detroit Manufacturers' R. R., 113 N. W. 365, 366, 149 Mich. 530.

RAILROAD TICKET

As property, see Property.

A passenger ticket is mere evidence of a contract. Kirby v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 119 Pac. 1042, 1053, 51 Colo. 509, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 461.

A railroad ticket, though not yet stamped or delivered to a passenger, is a "railroad ticket," and also within the term "any goods or chattels," within L. O. L. § 1947, providing that any one stealing any goods or chattels or any railroad passenger ticket or other evidence of the right of a passenger to transportation should be guilty of larceny, although the stealing of railroad tickets was not larceny at common law. State v. Wilson, 127 Pac. 980, 981, 63 Or. 344.

The "tickets" of a carrier, whether for transfer or for original passage, may well be called the carrier's written direction by one agent to another agent concerning the particular transportation in hand, and if the direction be contrary to the contract, and expulsion follows as a consequence, the carrier must be answerable for all proximate damages ensuing therefrom, just as any other principal is liable for the injurious result of misdirection to his agent. Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 66 N. E. 950, 953, 161 Ind. 153, 100 Am. St. Rep. 261 (quoting and adopting definition in O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street Ry. Co., 52 S. W. 872, 103 Tenn. 124, 46 L. R. A. 614, 76 Am. St. Rep. 639).

"A 'ticket' is evidence of a contract to carry and the right of passage, but the contract itself is implied by law, except in so far as it is expressed in the ticket. Upon the theory that it is not itself the written contract, parol evidence has been held admissible to prove the terms of the contract in fact entered into between the company and the passenger, or the representations made by the agent at the time the ticket was purchased as to stop-over privileges or the like. But the terms of the contract or certain conditions and limitations which enter into and form part of the contract are frequently written on the face of the ticket, and, where such is the case, we think the better rule is that a passenger has no right to rely upon the representations of an agent or conductor which are contrary to its express limitations and conditions." Rolfs v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 71 Pac. 526, 528, 66 Kan. 272.

A "railroad ticket" is not a contract expressing all the conditions and limitations usually contained in a written agreement, but is more in the nature of a receipt given by the railroad company, as evidence that the passenger has paid his fare for certain kind of passage on the proper train, as limited and regulated by its rules. A "railroad ticket," it is said according to general accepted doctrine, is a voucher, token, or receipt, rather than a contract, attached for convenience to show that the passenger has paid his fare from the place named therein as the place of departure to that named therein as the place of destination. It is evidence of a contract to carry and the right to passage implied by law, excepting in so far as expressed in the ticket. Ames v. Southern Pac. Co., 75 Pac. 310, 313, 141 Cal. 728, 99 Am. St. Rep. 98.

"An 'ordinary passage ticket' is not a written contract, though it may be so drawn and signed to become such, and where it embodies in explicit terms an undertaking which the carrier assumes toward the person named therein. Excluding tickets of this kind, it is to be observed that a passage ticket is a mere token or voucher furnished by the carrier to the passenger upon the payment by him of fare." In the absence of evidence to the contrary, railroad tickets are not deemed to be contracts in writing, and no presumption arises, from the purchase of a ticket, that the ordinary duties of a carrier imposed by law are modified in the ticket. "A 'ticket' cannot be said to be either the contract or contain the contract. The settled opinion is that it is a mere receipt taken or voucher adopted, for convenience, to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another. A contract for transportation may therefore be proved independently of the terms of the ticket." McCollum v. Southern Pac. Co., 88 Pac. 663, 666, 31 Utah, 494 (citing Logan v. Hannibal & St. J. Ry. Co., 77 Mo. 663, and quoting and adopting definition in 3 Thomp. Neg. § 2581).

RAILROAD TORPEDO

RAILROAD TRACK

See Private Railroad Track; Street Railroad Track.

As structure, see Structure.

See, also, Public Track; Skeleton Track.

Land adjacent to a street railroad's right of way, used only for a plan for generating electrical power used in the propulsion of its cars, is "railroad track," within the meaning of the law, and assessable as such. People v. Terre Haute & W. Ry. Co., 100 N. E. 173, 256 Ill. 591.

A railroad approach, consisting of elevated tracks, embankment, and viaduct, constructed on land purchased by a railroad company for a right of way, and used exclusively as a railroad track, for railroad purposes, to connect the main tracks of the railroad with a bridge across a navigable river, constitutes a "railroad track," within the meaning of the provisions of the revenue law of 1872 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 120, §§ 40-52, 109), dividing real estate belonging to railroad companies into two classes for the purposes of taxation; the first consisting of railroad track in which is included the right of way, and superstructure of main, side, or second track, and turnouts, and requiring the first class to be assessed by the State Board of Equalization, and not by the county assessor. People ex rel. Roche v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 74 N. E. 116-119, 215 Ill. 177.

Embankment

A "railroad track" is not merely the rails and ties upon which cars are run, but is the road, course, and way, and includes all that enters into and composes such road, course, and way, such as the embankment upon which the rails and ties are laid, etc. Bird v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 111 N. W. 860, 878, 148 Mich. 71 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.; Gates v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 48 N. W. 1040, 82 Iowa, 518).

Right of way

The phrase "railroad track" is quite commonly used to denote the right of way of a railroad, and often means the same as "roadway," as used in P. S. 4327, relating to adverse possession of lands of a railroad company within its roadway. Bacon v. Boston & M. R. R., 76 Atl. 128, 132, 83 Vt. 421.

Spur track

A city ordinance providing that "no street car shall stop on any street crossing or on any 'railroad tracks,' but shall come to a full stop before crossing any 'railroad track,'" is comprehensive enough to include any "railroad track," whether main line or spur. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Vollrath, 89 S. W. 279, 283, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 46.

RAILROAD TRAIN

Under the rule that a statute will be liberally construed to effect the purposes of its enactment, Civ. Code, § 1970, as amended, providing that an employer shall be liable for injury to an employé from the neglect of a coemployé engaged in another department or employed upon another machine, railroad train, switch signal point, locomotive engine, or other appliance, applies to employés on interurban cars, and this would be true though "railroad train" were the only descriptive term used. Patton v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 123 Pac. 613, 614, 18 Cal. App. 522.

RAILROAD YARD

See Freightyard.

As right of way, see Right of Way.

A "railroad yard," as a matter of fact, is a place where cars and trains are deposited and switched from one track to another, and trains are made up, and it consists of the various tracks, switches, and other facilities used for such purposes, the actual limits and boundaries of which may, or may not, be well known to the employes who use it. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Mallard, 44 South. 366, 371, 54 Fla. 143.

RAILROAD YARD FOREMAN

As workman, see Workman.

RAILWAY FISHPLATES

Old fishplates, which are so worn as to have lost their usefulness for railway purposes and are suitable for use only as scrap steel, are not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 130, 30 Stat. 160, as "railway fishplates," but under paragraph 122, 30 Stat. 159, as "scrap steel" * * * fit only to be remanufactured." R. L. Ginsburg & Sons v. United States, 147 Fed. 531, 532 (citing Downing v. United States, 122 Fed. 445, 58 C. C. A. 427; Dwight v. Merritt, 11 Sup. Ct. 768, 140 U. S. 213, 35 L. Ed. 450).

RAILWAY FREIGHT BRAKEMAN OR SWITCHMAN

The by-laws of a fraternal benefit association, made a part of its certificates, provided that railway freight brakemen and switchmen should be ineligible to beneficial membership. The succeeding section provided that a person should be held to be engaged in such occupation when the duties incident to his employment require him to perform any of the duties belonging or pertaining to such occupation. Held, that all prohibited occupations are enumerated in the first section, the subsequent section being intended to prevent an invasion of the prohibition by insured engaging in an occupation the duties incident to which are substantially the same as those incident to an expressly prohibited occupation, and a certificate holder in the service of a mining company, which used in its mining operation a system of railroad tracks of standard gauge, aggregating some three miles in length, his employment being that of mining brakeman on trains used for shipping purposes, his duty being to spot the stripping cars when being loaded in the open pit mine and when unloaded at the dump, was not a "railway freight brakeman or switchman" within the by-laws. Cook v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 131 N. W. 334, 336, 114 Minn. 299.

RAILWAY SPINE

"Medical science treats of a condition currently denominated 'railway spine,' or, in a more technical sense, 'traumatic neurosis.' It is latterly denied by strong authority that any such a malady exists as a concussion of the spine or spinal cord which term is also often used as a synonym for railway spine, but that the symptoms which were supposed to indicate a concussion of the spine are but indications of a concussion of the brain, which may involve a psychic as well as a physical injury, one or both. Such a condition as traumatic neurosis may, it is said, result from actual lesion of the vertebral column, accompanied by immediate and definite signs of such lesion; but it may also result according to medical science, from a nervous shock or sudden fright, involving a psychical condition as well as a nervous derangement and impairment, where there are no outward physical or objective signs or indications of physical lesion of any character. * * * Unlike the question first discussed, railway spine, or traumatic neurosis, is not a sequence or result that follows as of course, or may, within reasonable inference, from a bruise on the leg, a wrench or sprain of the back, or contusion of the muscles and nerves. Such an affliction or malady may or may not result or spring from injuries of that nature, dependent upon the seriousness or severity of the injuries and it is not, therefore, necessarily consequent. But it may arise from another and entirely distinct source; that is, from a concussion, followed by a shock of such proportions as vitally to affect and impair the nervous system, or a sudden fright, producing psychic or mental traumatism ('trauma' meaning a wound, and is generally used as synonymous with 'injury'), which may lead to a multitude of derangements and suffering, and this without lesion of the nerves or contusion apparent objectively." Maynard v. Oregon R. Co., 72 Pac. 590, 592, 593, 43 Or. 63.

RAINFALL

See Ordinary Rainfall.

RAINY DAYS

A provision of a charter party, excluding "rainy days" from the lay days for loading, will be construed to exclude only days when by reason of rain the loading cannot be conveniently prosecuted; but it is the right of either party to insist on the exclusion of such days, and the charterer may do so though the loading in fact proceeded. Schwaner v. Kerr, 170 Fed. 92, 98.

RAISE

See Money Raised.

Where defendant's testator delivered in escrow a promissory note to be given to plaintiff church if $10,000 additional be raised within the year, the term "raised" requires the money to be actually paid to the church or bona fide subscribed. St. Paul's Episcopal Church v. Fields, 72 Atl. 145, 149, 81 Conn. 670.

"Raising money" contemplates a sale of property for money, or a borrowing on engagements to pay in the future. As used in a statute providing for the removal of a county seat, the cost as to the county to be allowed by orders on the county treasury, provided that the "amount is on hand or can be raised by said county without increasing the present tax rate," it must have had reference to payments out of revenue of subsequent years, arising without any increase of the tax rate. Hand v. Stapleton, 37 South. 362, 364, 140 Ala. 555.

Where the signatures to notes are genuine, but the amount of the check has been "raised," it is a kind of forgery known as "raising a check." Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank v. Nevada Bank, 73 Pac. 456, 459, 139 Cal. 564, 63 L. R. A. 245, 96 Am. St. Rep. 169.

Increase not implied

"It is clear to our minds that increase of revenue is not implied in the language to raise revenue. The transitive verb 'to raise,' in this connection, means to bring together; to collect; to levy; to get together for use or service, as to raise money. Webster's Dictionary." Senate Bill No. 245 (Sess. Laws 1907-08, p. 729, c. 81, art. 9), entitled "An act for the discovery of property not listed for taxation, providing for its assessment and the collection of taxes thereon," is not a "bill for raising revenue," such as must originate in the House of Representatives, under section 33, art. 5 (Bunn's Ed. § 106), of the Constitution. Anderson v. Ritterbusch, 98 Pac. 1002, 1006, 22 Okl. 761.

RAISE MONEY BY TAXES OR ASSESSMENT

Village Law (Laws 1897, p. 377, c. 414, as amended by Laws 1906, p. 984, c. 404, § 1) § 41, subd. 2, permits women possessing the qualifications to vote for village officers, except that of sex, who own property assessed at the preceding assessment, to vote upon a proposition to "raise money by taxes or assessment." General Municipal Law (Consol. Laws, c. 24) § 6, provides that a "funded debt" shall not be created by a municipal corporation, unless by a resolution passed by a two-thirds vote of the council adopting it, or on submission to the taxpayers of the village when required by law. A proposition was submitted to the voters of defendant village to issue village bonds to establish a waterworks system, to be paid by the annual levy and collection of taxes. Held that the bonds would be a "funded debt," within section 6, which included all municipal indebtedness evidenced by a bond, the principal of which was payable after the current fiscal year, with periodical payments of interest, when provision for payment was made by future taxation, and the proposition to issue them was one to "raise money by taxes or assessment," within the village law, so that women were entitled to vote thereon, and the election was void. Gould v. Village of Seneca Falls, 118 N. Y. Supp. 648, 649.

RAKE-OFF

Where a trusted employé entered into an unlawful combination with one purchasing goods from the manufacturer against the interest of the employer, the employé receiving a dividend therefor, such dividend is in common parlance called a "rake-off." Nord v. Gray, 82 N. W. 1082, 1083, 80 Minn. 143.

RAMIE SILVER

Dutiable as cotton silver, see Cotton Silver.

RANGE

"The dictionaries define the word 'range' as that which may be traversed or ranged over, especially a region of country in which cattle may wander and pasture." State v. Cunningham, 90 Pac. 755, 756, 35 Mont. 547.

The word "range," as used by ranchmen, signifies sparsely populated and uninclosed prairie, over which stock growers have been allowed to let cattle, horses, and other animals owned by them or in their charge roam and feed without restraint. By common consent, persons residing in such country have usually claimed as their range certain portions of this prairie lying contiguous to the home ranch. Miller v. Lewis, 97 N. W. 364, 365, 17 S. D. 448.

St. 1898, § 1647, declares that the discovery of a "crevice or range," containing ores or minerals, shall entitle the discoverer to the ores or minerals appertaining thereto, subject to the rent due the landlord, before as well as after the ores or minerals are separated from the freehold. Held, that the words "crevice or range," as so used, had a local significance, limiting the word "range" by its associated word, "crevice," defined to be a mineral-bearing vein; the word "range" not being used as commonly understood to designate a large stretch of country carrying with some continuity, or at intervals, ore deposits belonging generally to the same geological stratum. St. Anthony Min. & Mill. Co. v. Shaffra, 120 N. W. 238, 239, 138 Wis. 507.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1898, which provides that a person taking certain animals running at large in the range or woods, and which are not designated by brands or ear-marks, shall not be guilty of larceny, but simply liable to the owner for the value of such animals, a cow, though not under the physical restraint of a halter or inclosure, which was, upon being turned out in the woods during the day to feed, accustomed to return to its home at night, did not run at large and, though unmarked, it was a subject of larceny; "range" meaning a sparsely populated and uninclosed tract of land over which stock and cattle are permitted to roam and feed without restraint, "in the woods" referring to uninclosed and unpopulated woodland, and "running at large" being applicable to animals which roam and feed at will, and which are not under the control and direction of any one. Jefferies v. State, 144 S. W. 514, 515, 102 Ark. 373.

RANK

Under Chicago Civil Service rule 2, § 4, providing that the grades shall be based upon compensation, and rule 7, § 1, providing that promotions shall be from grade to grade, except as otherwise provided, "in the same line or character of work," upon competitive examinations, promotions must be made upward from the grade next below, in the same line of employment, "rank," for the purpose of promotions, not being determined by salary only; and hence though ward superintendents are in the fifth grade, and the assistant superintendent of streets in charge of street and alley cleaning in the tenth, a higher grade, ward superintendents are eligible for such assistant superintendency, being next below in the same line of employment. People ex rel. Williams v. Errant, 82 N. E. 271, 273, 229 Ill. 56.

RAPE

See Assault with Intent to Commit Rape; Attempt to Commit Rape
See, also, Against Her Will; Carnal Knowledge; Force; Forcibly; Forcibly Ravishing; Ravish.

"Rape" is derived from rapuit, meaning to "snatch," to "seize"; but rapuit, while essential in an indictment for rape, does not take the place of the "carnaliter cognovit," as it does not necessarily mean carnal knowledge, much less carnal knowledge against the will of the female. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 668, 670, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will. State v. Colombo, 75 Atl. 616, 618, 1 Boyce, 96; State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006.

"Rape" is carnal knowledge of a woman, above the age of 10 years, by force and against her will. State v. Honey, 80 Atl. 240, 2 Boyce, 324; State v. Truitt (Del.) 62 Atl. 790, 791, 5 Pennewill, 466.

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a woman against her will, and force, or putting her in great fear, is an essential element, whether the crime is committed on a female over or under the age of consent. State v. Sigerella (Del.) 82 Atl. 31, 32, 7 Pennewill, 311; Sigerella v. State (Del.) 74 Atl. 1081, 1 Boyce, 157.

"Rape" is not a continuous offense, but each act of intercourse constitutes a distinct offense. Jamison v. State, 94 S. W. 675, 676, 117 Tenn. 58.

One who by force and against the consent of a female has sexual intercourse with her is guilty of rape. Harris v. State, 56 South. 55, 2 Ala. App. 116.

Rape at common law is the carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and without her consent. Payne v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 110 S. W. 311, 312.

Lord Coke says: "'Rape' is felony by the common law declared by Parliament for the unlawful and carnal knowledge and abuse of any woman above the age of 10 years against her will, or of a woman child under the age of 10 years with her will or against her will, and the offender shall not have the benefit of clergy." Lord Hale defines the crime as follows: "'Rape' is the carnal knowledge of any woman above the age of 10 years against her will, and of a woman child under the age of 10 years with or against her will." The only difference between statutory and common-law rape upon a female child under the age of consent is that by the statutes the age of consent has been raised from 10 to 18 years. While an information charged rape with force, yet, if it contained all the material allegations necessary to charge the crime of rape upon a female child under the statute, the words charging force may be disregarded as surplusage. Baxter v. State, 115 N. W. 534, 535, 80 Neb. 840 (citing Bish. St. Crimes, § 488; 3 Co. Inst. 60; Hubert v. State, 106 N. W. 774, 74 Neb. 220).

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. And an assault is an unlawful attempt, coupled with present ability, to commit a violent injury upon the person of another. An assault with intent to rape includes every ingredient of the crime of rape, except the actual accomplishment of that crime. The proof must show, beyond a reasonable doubt, the unlawful attempt which constitutes an assault with an intention to have carnal knowledge of the female forcibly and against her will. There must be an intention to use such force as may be necessary to accomplish the object. If there was at any time such an intent, the fact that defendant afterwards abandoned his purpose would not relieve him from liability. The evidence for the prosecution tended to prove an aggravated assault and most outrageous conduct on the part of the defendant, well deserving of suitable punishment; but it did not show any attempt to do the act which would have been rape, nor any present intention to do it. Franey v. People, 71 N. E. 443, 444, 210 Ill. 206.

"'Rape' is carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. To indulge the excitement of animal passion in any other manner than with sexual intercourse, no matter how indecent, loathsome, or immoral the act may be, would in no view of the case constitute rape." Smalls v. State, 65 S. E. 295, 296, 6 Ga. App. 502.

An information, charging that "defendant unlawfully, violently and feloniously did make an assault in and upon" the prosecutrix, and her, the prosecutrix, "then and there unlawfully, forcibly, and against her will did ravish and carnally know," contains a sufficient charge of rape. State v. Goodale, 109 S. W. 9, 11, 210 Mo. 275.

In a prosecution for rape on a female under the age of consent, the court charged that the constituent elements of the offense were that accused, with or without the consent of the female, and without the use of force, threats, or fraud, had carnal knowledge of her, that she was under the age of 15 years and was not his wife, and that the proof must show beyond reasonable doubt that the sexual organ of the female was penetrated by the male organ of accused, and charged that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that accused did, as charged in the indictment, at the time and place alleged, have carnal knowledge of prosecutrix, and that she was under the age of 15 years, he should be found guilty, and if they did not so believe he should be acquitted. After instructing with reference to the penalty to be assessed in the event he were found guilty, the court further charged that if the jury believe that accused did not have carnal knowledge of prosecutrix on or about the date and at the place alleged, or if they had a reasonable doubt thereof, accused should be acquitted, and that accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. Held, that the charge was not improper, as authorizing a conviction if prosecutrix was over 15 years old at the time, or if there was a reasonable doubt that she was under 15 years old. Banton v. State, 109 S. W. 159, 160, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 167.

Statutory definitions

Pen. Code 1895, art. 634, provides that "'rape' is constituted by the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud." Cotton v. State, 105 S. W. 185, 187, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 55.

According to Rev. St. 1899, § 1837, "rape" consists in forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of 14 years or upward. To "ravish" a woman is to have carnal connection with her forcibly, and without her consent, or against her consent. State v. Welch, 89 S. W. 945, 947, 191 Mo. 179, 4 Ann. Cas. 681.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. (Wash.) § 7062, defines "rape" as follows: "A person shall be deemed guilty of 'rape' who: (1) Shall by force and against her will ravish and carnally know any female of the age of 18 years or more. (2) Shall by deceit, deception, imposition, or fraud induce a female to submit to sexual intercourse. (3) Shall carnally know any female child under the age of 18 years." State v. Roller, 71 Pac. 718, 720, 30 Wash. 692.

As expressly defined by Bal. Codes & St. § 7062, one commits "rape" who forcibly, and against the will of a female 18 or more years old, ravishes and carnally knows her, or who carnally knows any female child under 18 years of age. State v. Adams, 83 Pac. 1108, 41 Wash. 552.

An information charging that defendant feloniously assaulted one named, a female child under 18, and feloniously ravished and carnally knew and abused her, does not charge more than one offense, but falls squarely within 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7062 (3), making the carnal knowledge of a female child under 18 "rape." State v. Priest, 72 Pac. 1024, 1025, 32 Wash. 74.

On a prosecution for an assault with intent to rape a female under 14 years of age, an instruction defining "rape" as carnally and unlawfully knowing a female child under 14 years was not erroneous; it conforming to Rev. St. 1899, § 1837, defining "rape." State v. Riseling, 85 S. W. 372, 373, 186 Mo. 521.

To constitute "rape," carnal knowledge is essential, while any defilement of the person would be sufficient to constitute the offense denounced by Code, § 4756, defining rape to be the ravishment and carnal knowledge of any female of the age of 15 years or more by force and against her will. State v. Hromadko, 99 N. W. 560, 561, 123 Iowa, 665.

Under Code 1883, § 1101, defining "rape" as "ravishing and carnally knowing any female of the age of 10 years or more, forcibly and against her will," an indictment failing to charge that the act was done "forcibly" and "against her will" is fatally defective. State v. Marsh, 43 S. E. 828, 829, 132 N. C. 1000, 67 L. R. A. 179.

Where the court charged in the language of Rev. Laws 1905, § 4926, that "'rape' is an act of sexual intercourse with a female not the wife of the perpetrator and against her will and without her consent," failure to charge in the language of the remainder of the section was fully supplied by a further charge that: "In order that an act of sexual intercourse constitute rape, there must be force and violence on the part of the man, and there must be actual resistance and opposition on the part of the woman to the full extent of her ability under the circumstances, until the sexual act is accomplished. Her resistance must be proportionate to the occasion and to the strength and opportunities of the woman." State v. Zempel, 115 N. W. 275, 276, 103 Minn. 428.

Cr. Code, § 11, provides that, if any person shall have carnal knowledge of his daughter or sister forcibly and against her will, he shall be deemed guilty of rape, etc. Section 12 declares that if any person shall have forcible carnal knowledge of any woman or female child other than a daughter or sister, or if any male person of the age of 18 years or upwards shall carnally know and abuse any female child under the age of 18 years with her consent, unless such female child is over 15 years of age and previously unchaste, every such person shall be deemed guilty of rape. Held, that these sections prescribe three classes of crimes, each of which is totally distinct from the other two. Hubert v. State, 104 N. W. 276, 277, 74 Neb. 220.

Rev. St. 1887, § 6765, as amended, defines "rape" as follows: "Rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: First, where the female is under the age of 18 years; second, where she is incapable, through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind, whether temporary or permanent, of giving legal consent; third, where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence; fourth, where she is prevented from resistance by threats of immediate and great bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution, or by any intoxicating narcotic, or anæsthetic substance administered by or with the privity of the accused; fifth, where she is at the time unconscious of the nature of the act, and this is known to the accused; sixth, where she submits under a belief that the person committing the act is her husband, and the belief is induced by artifice, pretense, or concealment practiced by the accused, with intent to induce such belief." State v. Simes, 85 Pac. 914, 12 Idaho, 310, 9 Ann. Cas. 1216.

An information for statutory "rape" charged that defendant, on the person of the prosecutrix, a female under 18, to wit, the age of 16, did forcibly and feloniously make an assault and did then and there forcibly and feloniously ravish and carnally know her. Held, that the words "forcibly" and "ravish" were surplusage, and that the information sufficiently charged statutory rape. McQuary v. People, 110 Pac. 210, 212, 48 Colo. 214, 21 Ann. Cas. 560.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 38, § 237, defining rape as the carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will, and providing that every male of the age of 17 years and upwards, who shall have carnal knowledge of any female under the age of 16 years, and not his wife, shall be guilty of rape, provided that every male person under the age of 16 years and upwards, who shall have carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will, shall be guilty of rape, changes the common-law rule that the carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will, by a male 14 years of age or upwards is rape, and introduces the new element that, where a male, who is 17 years old or upwards, has intercourse with a female under 16, who is not his wife, without force and by her consent, he is guilty of rape, and raises the age at which a male may be guilty of rape from 14 years at common law to 16 years; and no one under the age of 16 years can commit the crime. People v. Stowers, 98 N. E. 986, 987, 254 Ill. 588.

Under Shannon's Code, §§ 7077, 7080, 7083, providing that the statement of facts constituting the offense shall be in ordinary language, etc., an indictment, alleging that accused on a designated date did have carnal knowledge of a designated female, forcibly and against her will, charges "rape," defined by section 6451 as the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will, though it does not charge that accused "ravished" the female; the word "ravish" implying no more than that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the female. Palmer v. State, 118 S. W. 1022, 1029, 121 Tenn. 465.

Under an information which charges that the defendant "did commit the crime of rape in the first degree as follows, to wit, that at said time and place said defendant, A., in and upon B., violently and feloniously did make an assault, and her, the said defendant, then and there violently, by force, overcoming her resistance and against her will, feloniously did ravish and carnally know, and did then and there have sexual intercourse, and she, the said B., did then and there make resistance against the aforesaid acts of said defendant, and said resistance was by the defendant overcome by force, she, the said B., being then and there a female, and not then and there the wife of said defendant," a verdict of guilty of rape in the second degree, or of assault with intent to commit rape, may be returned; and such an information will sustain such a verdict even though section 8890 of the Codes of 1905 classifies the various ways in which the crime may be committed, and provides that rape in the first degree exists where the female "resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence," and that the crime of rape in the second degree exists where "she is prevented from resisting by threats of immediate and great bodily harm accompanied by apparent power of execution." State v. Bancroft, 137 N. W. 37, 38, 23 N. D. 442.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 1063, defining "rape" as the carnal knowledge of a female person under the age of 15 years other than the wife of the person, with or without her consent, and article 1008, defining "assault" as any unlawful violence on the person of another with intent to injure him and that any attempt to commit a battery or any threatening gesture showing an immediate intention coupled with an ability to commit a battery, an assault to rape a child under 15 may be committed without force, and proof that accused lay in wait for prosecutrix, a child under 15, as she was going to school, and after making an indecent proposal to her chased her until she outran him, was sufficient to sustain a conviction of assault with intent to rape. Gage v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 565, 567.

Adultery distinguished

See Adultery.

Age of prosecutrix

Rev. Code 1852, as amended to 1893, p. 924, c. 127, § 10, making every person committing rape or carnally knowing and abusing a female child under the age of seven years guilty of felony, is not impliedly repealed by 18 Del. Laws, p. 951, c. 686, as amended by 20 Del. Laws, p. 192, c. 127, punishing the harboring or using a male or female under the age of 18 years for the purpose of sexual intercourse, and a man who has sexual intercourse with a female over the age of seven and under the age of 18 by force and against her will may be prosecuted for rape or for using a female for the purpose of sexual intercourse. Sigerella v. State, 74 Atl. 1081, 1082, 1 Boyce, 157.

Assault and battery included

The word "rape" implies an assault. State v. Sullivan, 84 S. W. 105, 109, 110 Mo. App. 75.

"Rape," as defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 4964, punishing one having carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will, or of a woman under the age of 18 years either with or without her consent, includes assault as defined by section 4957, punishing one who, having the present ability to do so, attempts to commit a violent injury on the person of another, and where a woman over the age of 18 years, not under duress, and mentally competent, consents to sexual intercourse, there is no assault, but carnal knowledge of a female under the statutory age is conclusively presumed to have been committed with force and against her consent, and her acts constitute no defense to a charge of rape. Ross v. State, 93 Pac. 299, 303, 16 Wyo. 285.

Consent

Carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent is rape, whether committed with or without her consent. Cromeans v. State, 129 S. W. 1129, 1131, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 611.

Sexual intercourse with a female less than 18 years of age constitutes "rape," as defined by section 2016, Gen. St. 1901, whether it is accomplished by force or with consent. State v. Hansford, 106 Pac. 738, 739, 81 Kan. 300.

An act of sexual intercourse must necessarily be either with or without the consent of the female. If it is accomplished forcibly and without her consent, the act is "rape." Whidby v. State, 49 S. E. 811, 121 Ga. 588.

An act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, under the age of 16 years, is "rape in the second degree," whether such act is accomplished by force or with consent. Myers v. State, 119 Pac. 136, 137, 6 Okl. Cr. 389.

An act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, over the age of 14 years and under the age of 16 years, is rape in the second degree, whether such act is accomplished by means of force or violence sufficient to overcome any resistance she might make or with her consent. Wines v. State, 124 Pac. 466, 470, 7 Okl. Cr. 450.

"Rape" is the having of unlawful carnal knowledge by a man of a woman, forcibly, and against her will. The carnal abuse of children is an offense in the nature of "rape," wherein the want of consent is not an element. A female child under the statutory age is conclusively presumed to be incapable of consenting to sexual intercourse, or, in other words, her consent is no defense. State v. Mehovich, 43 South. 660, 663, 118 La. 1013 (quoting and adopting definition in Bish. New Cr. Law, 2, §§ 1112, 1113; Elliott, Evid. 4, § 3095).

The phrase "with her consent," as used in Rev. St. 1892, § 6816, providing that "whoever has carnal knowledge of a female person, forcibly and against her will, or, being 18 years of age, carnally knows and abuses a female person under 16 years of age, with her consent, is guilty of 'rape,'" does not define an essential element of the crime charged. So on the trial of an indictment under Rev. St. 1892, § 6816, for carnally knowing and abusing a female person under the age of 16 years, with her consent, the evidence having established the carnal knowledge and the alleged ages of the parties, evidence tending to show that the act was committed without consent does not constitute a fatal variance. State v. Carl, 73 N. E. 463, 464, 71 Ohio St. 259.

Under Mills' Ann. St. § 1211, declaring that every male person over a certain age who shall have carnal knowledge of a female under a certain age, with or without her consent shall be guilty of rape, and section 1215, punishing an assault with intent to commit rape, an information charging an assault with intent to rape a female under the age of consent need not allege that the assault was made with the intent to carnally know the female forcibly and against her will; for, in rape of a female under the age of consent, force on the part of the accused and want of consent on part of the female are immaterial. Gibbs v. People, 85 Pac. 425, 36 Colo. 452.

Fear

While to constitute rape the act must be committed by force and against the will of the female, if she is rendered insensible through fright, or ceases resistance under fear of death or great bodily harm, the consummated act is rape. Loescher v. State, 125 N. W. 459, 460, 142 Wis. 260.

"Rape" is carnal knowledge of a female, forcibly and against her will, and where threats of personal violence are made to overcome her will, and she believes her person is in great danger from such threats, and is induced thereby to submit to the will of the person making such threats, and he has sexual connection with her under such circumstances, then the law considers such carnal knowledge as having been forcibly had and against the will of the female. State v. Miller, 90 S. W. 767, 770, 191 Mo. 587.

"In criminal law, 'rape' is the act of having carnal knowledge of a woman against her will or without her conscious permission, or where her permission has been extorted by force or fear of immediate bodily harm" (quoting and adopting definition in Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary, and citing Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 119 Ga. 418, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182). "The law requires that the unlawful carnal knowledge shall be against her will. She must resist, and her resistance must not be a mere pretense, but must be in good faith. She must not consent. If she consents before the act, it will not be rape. But, as to this consent, we may observe that it must be a consent not controlled and dominated by fear. * * * A consent induced by fear of bodily harm or personal violence is no consent, and though a man lay no hands on a woman, yet if, by an array of physical force, he so overpowers her mind that she dare not resist, he is guilty of rape by having the unlawful intercourse" (quoting and adopting definition in Bailey v. Commonwealth, 82 Va. 107, 3 Am. St. Rep. 87, and citing discussion of Blackburn in 13 Crim. Law Mag. 503 et seq., and People v. Dohering, 59 N. Y. 374, 17 Am. Rep. 349). Hence, under Pen. Code 1895, § 93, defining the crime of rape as the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will, force is an element of the crime, and it may be exerted, not only by physical violence, but by threats of serious bodily harm which overpowers the female and causes her to yield against her will. Vanderford v. State, 55 S. E. 1025, 1027, 126 Ga. 753.

As felony

See Felony.

Force

The derivation of the word "rape" indicates the use of force and violence. Hubert v. State, 106 N. W. 774, 775, 74 Neb. 220.

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a woman by force and against her will; force, either actual or presumptive, being an indispensable element. State v. Brown (Del.) 83 Atl. 1083, 1084.

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a woman, forcibly and against her will, the force overcoming her resistance being an indispensable element of the offense, unless she is an idiot or is subdued by fraud, or is overcome by drugs or drinks, or their equivalent; and acquiescence obtained through duress, or by putting a woman in fear, is sufficient force. Herndon v. State, 56 South. 85, 87, 2 Ala. App. 118.

The law recognizes no intermediate degree of force in the accomplishment of an illegal act of sexual intercourse which is sufficient to accomplish the act contrary to the consent of the female, and yet not constitute the crime of "rape." Whidby v. State, 49 S. E. 811, 121 Ga. 588.

Under Rev. Codes, § 8336, defining "rape" as sexual intercourse with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by violence or force, the gist of the offense is force; and if there is consent, although reluctant and accompanied by verbal protests and refusals, at any time during the intercourse, the act is not accomplished by force, and is not rape. State v. Needy, 117 Pac. 102, 43 Mont. 442.

Upon proof in a prosecution for "rape" of penetration of a female of the age of consent, the burden is on the prosecution to prove force or fear, but the law implies force from connection without consent. State v. Sigerella (Del.) 82 Atl. 31, 32, 7 Pennewill, 311; Sigerella v. State (Del.) 74 Atl. 1081, 1 Boyce, 157.

Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 1995, declares that whoever perpetrates an assault or an assault and battery on any human being, with intent to commit a felony, shall, on conviction, be imprisoned, etc.; and section 2004 declares that whoever unlawfully has carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly against her will or of a female child under 14 years of age is guilty of "rape." Held, that force, actual or constructive, is an essential element of assault to "rape" committed on a female over 14 years of age. Rahke v. State, 81 N. E. 584, 585, 168 Ind. 615.

The mere carnal knowledge of a female child under the age of consent is "rape," whether the act be committed with or without force, or with or without consent, and the nature of the crime, or the proof required or permitted to sustain it, is not changed by the fact that the information charges the unlawful act to have been committed by force. State v. Fetterly, 74 Pac. 810, 811, 33 Wash. 599.

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will, and it is uniformly held that one who carnally knows a woman while she is in a state of stupefaction is guilty of rape. Her power of resistance may be removed without physical force or violence, and, where it is so removed, carnal knowledge is rape. Only such force as is necessary to overcome woman's resistance is required, and the degree of force required, depends upon the circumstances of each case. A very little force would be required to overcome the resistance of a woman who is recovering from the effects of chloroform, while a great deal might be required to remove the resistance of a robust and active woman. One who administers chloroform to a woman for a lawful purpose, and afterwards formed the design and purpose to have sexual intercourse with her while she was under the influence of chloroform and while she was in such a condition from the effects of the chloroform that she was unable to remonstrate or resist, and that while harboring such intention he undertook to have sexual intercourse with her, he was guilty of an assault with intent to commit rape, although the assault was one without violence, and although he desisted before accomplishing his purpose. Harlan v. People, 76 Pac. 792, 794, 32 Colo. 397.

The force necessary to constitute rape may be either actual or presumptive; but, if carnal penetration of a female of the age of consent is relied on, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the penetration was consummated by force and against her will, or by putting her in fear and terror. State v. Colombo, 75 Atl. 616, 618, 1 Boyce, 96.

In a prosecution for rape, where the indictment alleged assault by force, threats and fraud, and the proof excluded any question of fraud, and presented mainly an assault to rape by force, a charge that rape is the carnal knowledge of a woman without her consent, obtained by force, threats, or fraud, or the carnal knowledge of a woman so mentally diseased as to have no will to oppose the act, or the carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 15 years, while including matters having no relation to the offense charged in the indictment or the evidence adduced, was not prejudicial, where the court correctly charged as to what constituted rape by force and instructed that the facts must exist which show an assault by accused upon the injured female, coupled with an intention to commit rape by force, that there must be the use by accused of unlawful violence, that accused's intent must be shown to have been to accomplish his purpose by force and against the female's will, and that the assault must have been accompanied by the specific intent to rape, to have carnal knowledge of the woman without her consent, by force, and by means sufficient to overcome all resistance within her power and accomplish his purpose at all hazards. Rallsback v. State, 110 S. W. 916, 917, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 542.

Forcible defilement distinguished

See Forcible Defilement.

Fornication distinguished

See Fornication.

Incest distinguished

The distinctive feature of the crime of incest is the relationship of the parties, while in "statutory rape" the youthfulness of the female is the distinctive ingredient and evidence necessary to convict of incest would be insufficient to convict for statutory rape, and hence though the crimes are committed by the same act, they are independent. State v. Learned, 85 Pac. 293, 294, 73 Kan. 328.

Under Rev. St. § 7019, declaring it to be incest where persons nearer of kin by consanguinity or affinity than cousins, having knowledge of the relationship, commit adultery or fornication together, a father may be convicted of incest with his daughter under 14 years of age, though his offense may also be rape, under Rev. St. § 6816. Straub v. State, 27 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 50, 52.

As infamous crime

See Infamous Crime.

Legal status of prosecutrix

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2251, defines "rape" as an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, and an indictment for "rape" must aver that the female on whom the crime was committed was not the wife of the accused. Smythe v. State, 101 Pac. 611, 616, 2 Okl. Cr. 286, 139 Am. St. Rep. 918 (citing Young v. Territory, 58 Pac. 724, 8 Okl. 525; Parker v. Territory, 59 Pac. 9, 9 Okl. 109).

An indictment under the clause of the statute, declaring that every male person of the age of 17 years and upwards, who shall have carnal knowledge of any female under the age of 16 years, and not his wife, either with or without her consent, shall be guilty of "rape," must aver that the female was not the wife of accused. People v. Stowers, 98 N. E. 986, 987, 254 Ill. 588.

Under Pen. Code, § 261, defining "rape" as an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, etc., an information for an assault with intent to rape, failing to charge that prosecutrix was not defendant's wife, was fatally defective, nor was the omission cured by the allegation that defendant committed the assault with intent to feloniously ravish and carnally know, which only described the manner in which the intercourse was sought to be accomplished. People v. Everett, 101 Pac. 528, 529, 10 Cal. App. 12.

Pen. Code, § 261, defines "rape" as "an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator where she resists but her resistance is overcome by force or violence." Held, that an indictment under such section, failing to charge that prosecutrix was not defendant's wife, was fatally defective, nor was the omission cured by the allegation that defendant "violently did 'ravish' and carnally know" prosecutrix, as those words only described the manner by which the intercourse was accomplished. People v. Miles, 101 Pac. 525, 526, 9 Cal. App. 312.

Mental capacity of prosecutrix

"Rape" is the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will. Pen. Code 1895, § 93. It is the act of having carnal knowledge by a man of a woman forcibly and against her will, or without her conscious permission, or where permission has been extorted by force or fear of immediate bodily harm. 13 Cr. Law Mag. 503. A man, having sexual intercourse with an imbecile female, mentally incapable of intelligently expressing any assent or dissent, or of exercising any judgment in the matter, is guilty of rape, although he uses no more force than is necessary to accomplish the carnal act, and although the woman offers no resistance. Gore v. State, 46 S. E. 671, 672, 674, 119 Ga. 418, 100 Am. St. Rep. 182.

Under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1906, § 2353, providing that rape is an act of sexual intercourse with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, either (3) where she is incapable through lunacy or any other unsoundness of mind of giving legal consent, or (4) where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force and violence, an indictment charging that the defendant by means of force and violence, overcoming the resistance of prosecutrix, who was incapable through lunacy and other unsoundness of mind of giving legal consent, etc., sufficiently charges the crime as defined in the third subdivision of the section; the allegation of force and violence and want of consent being immaterial and mere surplusage. Adams v. State, 114 Pac. 347, 348, 5 Okl. Cr. 847.

Penetration

Under Pen. Code, § 261, par. 1, defining "rape" as sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, where the female is under the age of 16 years, it is essential to conviction that sexual penetration be proved, or that facts be proved from which it may be inferred. People v. Howard, 76 Pac. 1116, 1117, 143 Cal. 316.

Physical capacity

The crime of "rape" involves physical capacity to commit the offense. Hence, in a prosecution of persons between the ages of 7 and 14, for rape or an attempt to commit rape, the burden is upon the state to show the mental and physical competency of the defendant. In the absence of such proof, the presumption of incompetency must prevail. State v. Flisk, 108 N. W. 485, 486, 15 N. D. 589, 11 Ann. Cas. 1061.

Resistance

"Rape" is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force and violence. Harmon v. Territory, 79 Pac. 765, 770, 15 Okl. 147.

To constitute "rape," the will of the female must be overcome by force, and intercourse had entirely against her will, and, if she consents in the least during any part of the act, there is not such an opposing will as the law requires. State v. Whimpey, 118 N. W. 281, 282, 140 Iowa, 199.

Kirby's Dig. § 2005, defines "rape" as "the carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will." The fact that the act was committed against the will of the female is an essential element of the crime, and must be charged in the indictment. Beard v. State, 95 S. W. 995, 997, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

"Rape," as used in the statute defining the offense, means sexual intercourse with a female over the designated age by force, without her consent and against her will. Voluntary submission by the woman while she has power to resist, no matter how reluctantly yielded, removes from the act an essential element of rape. If the carnal knowledge was with the voluntary consent of the woman, no matter how tardily given, or how much force had been theretofore employed, there is no rape. Devoy v. State, 99 N. W. 455, 456, 122 Wis. 148 (quoting Connors v. State, 2 N. W. 1143, 47 Wis. 523).

RAPID

RAPID TRANSIT

A term "rapid transit," which antedates Rapid Transit Acts 1875, suggests the desire of the public for swift transportation impeded as little and as seldom as may be, necessitating the elimination of unnecessary stops and the continuance of a rate of high speed, and making it incumbent on the passenger that he cause no unnecessary hindrance thereto. Baron v. New York City Ry. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 746, 749, 52 Misc. Rep. 581 (dissenting opinion of McClain, J.).

RAPIDLY

The word "rapidly" is to be construed in the light of the circumstances of the particular situation, and a car is running rapidly, if, while running at its usual speed, it attempts to pass a wagon in the middle of a block, so close to the track as to threaten a collision, without reducing speed. Vessels v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 108 S. W. 578, 580, 129 Mo. App. 708.

RAPPER

The word "rapper," in criminal circles, means the complaining witness. People v. Madden, 105 N. Y. Supp. 554, 556, 120 App. Div. 338.

RAPUIT

"Rapuit," at common law, did not necessarily mean carnal knowledge, even much less carnal knowledge against the will of the female. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409 (citing Hale P. C. pp. 628-634; 3 Coke, Inst. 60).

RASCAL

See Damn Rascal.

RASH*RASHLY, RECKLESSLY, OR WANTONLY

An instruction, in an action involving willful negligence, that the phrase "rashly, recklessly, or wantonly" meant something more than mere inadvertence, or inattentiveness, or want of ordinary care, and meant an indifference to obvious consequences and the rights of others, or whether an injury would result or not, and that the wrongful conduct must indicate such a disregard of consequences as to evince little short of actual intent to inflict injury, a willingness to perpetrate injury or to take known chances of doing so, and must constitute the equivalent, so far as consequences are concerned, of actual intent and willingness to perpetrate injury, was correct. Barlow v. Foster, 136 N. W. 822, 827, 149 Wis. 613.

RATCHET PULLER

A "ratchet puller" is a borer or drillor of holes for the reception of charges of dynamite to be exploded in the process of mining ore. Northern Ala. Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Beachman, 37 South. 227, 140 Ala. 422.

RATE

See At the Rate of; Continuous Mileage Rate; Contract Rate; Double-Line Rates; Established Rate; Flat Rate; Frontage Rate; Greater Rate; Joint Rate; Legal Rate; Maximum Rate; Payable at the Rate of $50 Per Month; Prevailing Rate of Wages; Reasonable Rate; Rebiling Rate; Reduced Rate; Single-Line Rates; Standard Schedule Rate; Tariff Rate; Unlawful Rate; Usual Short Rate; Voluntary Rate Reduction.

Increase of rate of fare, see Increase.

Rates in force, see In Force.

See, also, Rebate.

The word "rate," as used in Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, 32 Stat. 847, means the net amount the carrier receives from the shipper and retains, and any device by which such amount is reduced below the rate given in the published schedule is one for the giving of a rebate. United States v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 148 Fed. 646, 647.

The word "rate," in a constitutional provision requiring the Legislature to provide law for uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation, is used in a somewhat different sense when applied to the assessment from that when applied to taxation. The term "rate" may apply either to the percentage of taxation or to the value of property, and is used in the constitutional provision in each sense, and the former sense to the taxation, and in the later sense to the assessment. Equality in the rate of assessment means proportional valuation, relative, not absolute, equality, while equality in the "rate" of taxation means that the percentage shall be the same, or absolutely equal. Lake County v. Schroder, 81 Pac. 942, 944, 47 Or. 136.

Brooklyn School Board By-Laws, § 329, provides that the salaries of teachers and clerks in the high schools shall be at the same "rate" as paid April 1, 1899, in accordance with a progressive schedule giving an annual increase of $100, in force April 1, 1899. Laws 1900, p. 1607, c. 751, § 4, provides for the salary of high school teachers, fixing them specifically the same as in the schedule referred to, and in all cases providing for an annual increment of $110. Held, that the word "rate," as used in the by-law, was not intended to mean a fixed amount, but a progressive salary; and hence the by-law did not make the rates recited in the schedule fixed and unchangeable. Holmes v. Board of Education of City of New York, 120 N. Y. Supp. 284, 287.

As including demurrage

The provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, §§ 1, 3, 24 Stat. 379, requiring rates for the transportation and for the "receiving, delivering, storage or handling" of property by an interstate carrier to be reasonable, and prohibiting discrimination, are sufficiently broad to cover demurrage charges. Michie v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 151 Fed. 694, 695.

As valuation

In U. S. Comp. St. 1901, § 5219, providing that the taxation of national bank stock shall not be at a greater rate than shall be assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, etc., the term "rate" has relation to the assessment as a whole, and does not signify the mere percentage or levy upon any valuation adopted. Ankeny v. Blakley, 74 Pac. 485, 488, 44 Or. 78.

As used in U. S. Rev. St. § 5219, declaring that shares of national banks may be taxed by state authority at a "rate" not greater than is assessed on other money or capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state, "rate" does not mean the tax rate imposed on other property alone, but implies that the assessment, the rate of assessment, and the valuation must all be taken together when considering the question whether an act imposing a tax on bank shares operated as a discrimination. People ex rel. Bridgeport Sav. Bank v. Feltner, 105 N. Y. Supp. 993, 996, 120 App. Div. 838.

RATABLE DISTRIBUTION

A "ratable distribution" is one which is made at proportionate rates. State ex rel. Carroll v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 103 N. W. 97, 99, 127 Iowa, 198.

RATED CAPACITY

The term "rated capacity," as used in a contract guarantying payment for a heating plant which provided that the company furnishing the same should in no way be held responsible, except as to the rated capacity of the boiler, referred, not to the efficiency of the boiler to satisfactorily warm the house, but merely to its theoretical capacity according to the customary way of rating such articles by dealers to the trade. United States Heater Co. v. Jenss, 107 N. W. 293, 294, 128 Wis. 162.

RATIFY

To "ratify" means to confirm or approve of, and ratification may be signified by acts of omission as well as of commission. Colb v. Simon, 97 N. W. 276, 280, 119 Wis. 597, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909.

The highest lexicographic authority exists for the interchangeable use of the terms "approve" and "ratify." Baker v. Hammett, 100 Pac. 1114, 1116, 23 Okl. 480.

To "ratify" a fraudulent contract means something more than merely standing on the contract, or affirming it; meaning an "affirmance" of the contract after full knowledge of the fraud, intention to abide by the contract notwithstanding, and a waiver of all claim for damages. Potts v. Lambie, 121 N. Y. Supp. 384, 385, 65 Misc. Rep. 334.

Const. art. 20, § 1, requiring "a majority of the electors" to ratify an amendment to the Constitution, requires a majority of the electors to adopt an amendment, and not merely a majority of those actually voting thereon; the word "electors" meaning as defined by article 6, § 2, those entitled to vote, and the word "ratify" meaning to affirm. State ex rel. Blair v. Brooks, 99 Pac. 874, 875, 17 Wyo. 344, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478.

In Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 31, providing that a town, by the action of its selectmen, "ratified" by a majority of its voters present and voting thereon at a town meeting, may purchase the works of a water company, the word "ratified" means that, when the selectmen issue the warrant, they are supposed to have taken appropriate precedent action, otherwise there is no proposal of purchase in existence which can be made the subject of ratification, and which, by the ratifying act, thereupon becomes an existing contract. Revere Water Co. v. Inhabitants of Town of Winthrop, 78 N. E. 497, 501, 192 Mass. 455.

RATIFICATION

See, also, Confirmation.

A "ratification" is defined to be a "confirmation of a previous act done either by the party himself or by another. It is the confirmation of a voidable act." Russell v. Erie R. Co., 59 Atl. 150, 153, 70 N. J. Law, 808, 67 L. R. A. 433, 1 Ann. Cas. 672.

Where the rights of third parties are not involved, "ratification" of an unauthorized act is predicated upon an actual and existing purpose to approve the act, and depends upon the fact, and not upon appearances. Manning v. Heidelberg, 138 N. Y. Supp. 750, 754, 153 App. Div. 790.

"Ratification" means confirmation. To ratify is to give sanction and validity to something done without authority. The underlying principle on which liability by "ratification" attaches is that he who has commanded is legally responsible for the direct results and for the natural and probable consequences of his conduct, and that it is immaterial whether that command was given before or after the conduct. Steffens v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 871, 872, 94 Minn. 365 (quoting in part definition in Evans, Prin. & Ag. [Bedford's Ed.] 90).

"A 'ratification' may be defined to be an acceptance or an adoption of an act performed by another as agent or representative in particular confirmation of what has been done without original authority." A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its officers which are within the scope of the corporate powers. The principle as to ratification is the same with corporations as with individuals. Dougherty v. City of Excelsior Springs, 85 S. W. 112, 113, 110 Mo. App. 623 (citing Dill. Corp. § 463).

"Ratification" is "the adoption of a previously formed contract, notwithstanding a vice which rendered it relatively void. By the very nature of the act of ratification, confirmation, or affirmance, the party confirming becomes a party to the contract. He that was not bound becomes bound by it and entitled to all the benefits of it." "'Ratification,' like prior authority, by agreement rests on assent. The assent of the agent is already given by his assuming to act. The assent of the third party is already given by his entering into the contract. The assent of the principal is therefore all that is required to make the contract binding on him on the third person. Much the same considerations govern the doctrine of assent in ratification as govern the assent of an acceptance of an offer." Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Roe, 102 S. W. 343, 348, 118 Tenn. 601 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Huffcut, Ag. p. 46, and Herman on Estoppel, § 1029).

"The gist of a ratification is the deliberate admission by the proper authority of a liability to pay for that for which it may lawfully contract.' If one says, 'I will pay A. or B., to one or the other of whom I admit I am liable, as the court may adjudge,' this is as much a ratification, a formal acknowledgment, of a liability to pay as if he said, 'I promise to pay A.,' or 'I promise to pay B.'" Borough of East Newark v. New York & N. J. Water Supply Co., 57 Atl. 1051, 1055, 87 N. J. Eq. 265.

"Ratification" is the election by a person, and the expression of such election in words or conduct, to accept an act or contract previously done or entered into in his behalf by another who had at the time no authority to do the act or make the contract on his behalf. If the acts have been performed or contracts made without his authority on his behalf, he has, when he obtains knowledge thereof, an election either to accept or repudiate them. If he accepts them, his acceptance is a "ratification" of the previously unauthorized acts or conduct and makes them as binding on him from the time they are performed as if originally authorized. Gallup v. Liberty County, 122 S. W. 291, 296, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 175.

"Ratification" is equivalent to original authority. It validates what would otherwise be an invalid act, and attaches to it those incidents and consequences it would have had if previously authorized. Beagles v. Robertson, 115 S. W. 1042, 1049, 135 Mo. App. 306.

"Ratification" of the act of another is equivalent to an original grant of authority. The situation of the parties is the same as if the plaintiff had induced the contract in the first instance through an agent duly appointed for the purpose. Proof of ratification includes proof of agency and authority and may be made under a pleading charging the ratified act to be that of the principal. Aultman Threshing & Engine Co. v. Knoll, 79 Pac. 1074, 1077, 71 Kan. 109.

"Ratification" is a form of authorization, and ratification by a principal of an unauthorized act of an agent has a retroactive efficacy and is equivalent to an original authority; and hence an allegation that there was no authorization is an allegation of the absence of the authorization in any form, whether previously or subsequently given. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Grannis, 107 N. Y. Supp. 926, 927, 57 Misc. Rep. 174.

"A 'ratification,' when fairly made, will have the same effect as an original authority, as to agent and principal, not only in regard to the agent himself, but in regard to third persons. * * * In short, the act is treated throughout as if it were originally authorized by the principal, for the ratification relates back to the time of the inception of the transaction, and has a complete retroactive efficacy." Sims v. State (Tex.) 87 S. W. 689, 691 (quoting and approving Story, Ag.).

"Ratification," as applied to the act of municipal authorities ratifying an act of a committee, is equivalent to previous authority, and makes such act become the act of the municipality. Dorsey v. Town of Henderson, 62 S. E. 547, 548, 148 N. C. 423.

"Ratification" operates upon the act ratified precisely as though authority to do the act had been previously given, except where the rights of third parties have intervened between the act and the ratification. The retroactive efficacy of the ratification is subject to this qualification. The intervening rights of third persons cannot be defeated by the ratification. Facts showing that the maker of certain notes, and after his death his executrix, paid to another, with the consent and knowledge of the indorsee, one of such notes, and also paid two others to the same person, which neither the indorsee nor his executrix ever afterwards claimed, but treated, to all intents and purposes, as paid, and that his executrix, on receiving payment of interest on the remaining notes, gave a receipt in full to date, are sufficient to show such knowledge of an acquiescence in the payment of the two notes as to constitute a ratification of the act of the person receiving payment thereof, binding on the indorsee and his successors in interest. Platt v. Schmitt, 94 N. W. 345, 347, 348, 117 Wis. 489 (quoting and adopting definition in Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall [85 U. S.] 338, 21 L. Ed. 933).

"Any conduct by the principal which would lead a reasonable man to conclude that the principal is manifesting an intent to be bound by the agent's contract will be deemed a 'ratification.' * * * Where the attorneys for plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, effected a settlement with defendant by misleading defendant by a power of attorney forged by the attorneys, and on learning of the facts plaintiff in the action instituted criminal proceedings against the attorneys to force them to pay over the money obtained from defendant by them or suffer the penalty for the crime, the indictment in the criminal prosecution charging that defendant had obtained the money in full satisfaction of the suit, and that it was the property of prosecutor, in a subsequent action for the injuries, the facts showed a ratification of the settlement, precluding recovery. Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Roe, 102 S. W. 343, 348, 118 Tenn. 601 (quoting and adopting definition in Huffcut, Ag. p. 47).

"'Ratification' is in general the adoption of a previously formed contract, notwithstanding a view that rendered it relatively void; and, by the very nature of the act of ratification, confirmation, or affirmation, * * * the party confirming becomes bound by it, and entitled to all the proper benefits of it. * * * If it be merely against conscience, then, if the party, being fully informed of all the circumstances of it and of the objection to it (in his own words, 'with his eyes open'), voluntarily confirms it, he thereby bars himself of that relief, which he might otherwise have." Where, by purchasing a brick machine under a written contract providing that after the machine had been operated for three days, the buyer might accept or return it, and where after such trial, although it did not work successfully, the buyer retained it and gave his notes therefor, and some months afterward, and after the notes had matured they were renewed by the buyer making a cash payment, and the machine was retained several months longer, there was a "ratification" of the sale, though the machine never did work successfully. Schagun v. Scott Mfg. Co., 162 Fed. 209, 219, 89 C. C. A. 189.

"To ratify is to give validity to the act of another. A 'ratification' is equivalent to previous authority. It operates upon the act ratified in the same manner as though the authority had been originally given." The purchasers of a stock of goods insisted, as a condition precedent to their purchase, that the seller deposit in a bank a sum of money sufficient to pay his commercial creditors, which was done; and thereafter a creditor, who was not a commercial creditor, sued the seller and garnished the deposit, whereupon the commercial creditors interpleaded, claiming the fund. Held, that the proceeding in interpleader was a ratification of the conduct of the purchasers, and brought the interpleaders into the same situation as if the contract had originally been made for their benefit between the seller and an authorized agent of the interpleaders. Alexander v. Wade, 80 S. W. 19, 21, 106 Mo. App. 141 (quoting and adopting definition in McCracken v. City of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591).

Acquiescence not synonymous

"Ratification" and "acquiescence" are not synonymous. The latter term is but evidence to be considered in determining the existence of the former. It is only when silence or acquiescence becomes the basis or authority on which another parts with something valuable or incurs a liability that the doctrine applies. The doctrine is that in such case the party is estopped to assert the truth because its assertion would work a fraud on him whose conduct had been influenced thereby. To "acquiesce" is to forbear opposition or complaint, while to "ratify" is to make valid or to confirm. We may acquiesce in an act without approving it. Austin v. Jones, 41 South. 408, 411, 148 Ala. 659.

Contract in ratifier's behalf

"Ratification" signifies the adoption by the principal of that which has been done in his behalf, and the agent or assumed agent must have acted as agent, and not as principal. Linn v. Alameda Min. & Mill. Co., 104 Pac. 668, 669, 17 Idaho, 45.

"Ratification," as it relates to the law of agency, is the express or implied adoption of the acts of another, for whom the other assumes to be acting, but without authority; so that, where a contract under seal purports to be that of the person executing it, ratification of it by another does not make it his contract. Stanton v. Granger, 109 N. Y. Supp. 134, 137, 125 App. Div. 174.

"Ratification," as it relates to the law of agency, is the express or implied adoption of the acts of another by one for whom the other assumed to be acting, but without authority. The doctrine properly applies only to cases where one has assumed to act as agent for another, and then a subsequent ratification is equivalent to original authority. Minder & Jorgenson Land Co. v. Brustuen, 124 N. W. 723, 727, 24 S. D. 537 (citing and quoting Hamlin v. Sears, 82 N. Y. 327).

"Ratification," as it relates to the law of agency, is the express or implied adoption of the acts of another by one for whom the other assumes to be acting, but without authority." The act must be done by the agent on account of some principal, not on his own account or on account of some third person. A contract made by a person in his own name and on his own behalf cannot be made the contract of another as principal by an attempted ratification of the act as that of an agent. In re Roanoke Furnace Co., 166 Fed. 944, 953.

"Ratification" is an agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us." Where a grantee obtained a conveyance by falsely representing to the grantor that he was the agent of a third person, and the conveyance was made to the grantee in his own name for his own benefit, and the purchase price was paid by his own money, the third person was not entitled to the benefit of the conveyance on the ground that he had a right to and did ratify the purchase. Virginia Pocahontas Coal Co. v. Lambert, 58 S. E. 561, 562, 107 Va. 368, 122 Am. St. Rep. 860, 13 Ann. Cas. 277.

Estoppel in pais distinguished

A "ratification" of the unauthorized act of an agent or of a stranger who claims to act as such is a confirmation of the act which must be found in the intention of the principal, either expressed or implied. The distinction between "ratification" and "estoppel in pais" being that, in the former case, the party is bound because of his intention, assent, or ratification in fact, while in the latter, he is bound notwithstanding there was no such intention, because, unless the law treated him as legally bound, the other party would be prejudiced and defrauded by his conduct. Where a stockbroker's customer, dealing through an instructed employé, received monthly accounts from February to October, which he did not protest, because he did not want to injure the employé, who had been guilty of fraud to his injury, and with knowledge of all the facts, admitted his indebtedness and promised to pay it, he thereby ratified the account, so that the broker could recover thereon. Stiebel v. Haigney, 119 N. Y. Supp. 455, 458, 134 App. Div. 516.

Formality

"Ratification" is equivalent to original authority and nothing more, and, where the statute requires the original authority to be in writing, it would, on principle, require the ratification to be made with equal ceremony. Brandon v. Pritchett, 55 S. E. 241, 245, 126 Ga. 286, 7 Ann. Cas. 1093 (quoting and adopting the definition in Long v. Poth, 37 N. Y. Supp. 672, 16 Misc. Rep. 85, and citing Haydock v. Stow, 40 N. Y. 370, 371; Whitlock v. Washburn, 17 N. Y. Supp. 60, 62 Hun, 374; Stetson v. Patten, 2 Me. [2 Greenl.] 360, 11 Am. Dec. 111; McDowell v. Simpson [Pa.] 3 Watts, 129, 27 Am. Dec. 338; Parrish v. Koons [Pa.] 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 95; Videau v. Griffin, 21 Cal. 389).

Knowledge

"Ratification" presumes the existence of knowledge of all the facts, and one not informed of the whole transaction is not in a position to ratify the same. Miller v. Ahrens, 163 Fed. 870, 877 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5930).

"In order to constitute a 'ratification,' there must be an acceptance of the result of the act with an intent to ratify and with full knowledge of all the circumstances." Russell v. Erie R. Co., 59 Atl. 150, 153, 70 N. J. Law, 808, 67 L. R. A. 433, 1 Ann. Cas. 672.

"Ratification" involves knowledge of the facts, on the part of the person ratifying at the time when the ratification is made; but, if an agent exceeds his authority, the principal cannot ratify in part and repudiate in part. He must adopt either the whole or none. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co., 54 S. E. 706, 709, 125 Ga. 699, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785.

The "ratification" of the acts of an agent by his principal will not be inferred until the principal has full knowledge of the breach of duty on the part of the agent and with such knowledge remains inactive. Belcher v. Manchester Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 67 Atl. 399, 401, 74 N. J. Law, 833 (citing Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. Law, 463, 471, 97 Am. Dec. 728; Dowden v. Cryder, 26 Atl. 941, 55 N. J. Law, 329).

"'Ratification' cannot take place without full knowledge of all the material facts."

Where a person assumes to act as agent in making a contract, and the person with whom such contract is made proceeds to a performance of the same under protest from the principal, and during such performance is advised and notified by the principal that such person is not in his employ, and that no one had authority to employ him, and that he does not desire or need his services, the mere fact that, after the cessation of such labor, the principal pays to such person an amount which he deems such service is worth will not alone amount to a ratification of the contract made by the person assuming to act as such agent, and will not support an action based upon such contract, upon the ground that the contract was ratified. Findlay v. Hildenbrand, 105 Pac. 790, 793, 17 Idaho, 403, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (citing 31 Cyc. p. 1253; Bohart v. Oberne, 13 Pac. 388, 36 Kan. 284; Brown v. Rouse, 38 Pac. 507, 104 Cal. 672; 1 Clark & S. Ag. § 106).

The failure of a creditor to demand and collect, with promptness, the money due to her upon certain matured shares in a mutual building and loan association does not warrant an inference of "ratification" of the act of another in drawing and using the money, while she is without full knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the case. Ryle v. Manchester Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 67 Atl. 87, 89, 74 N. J. Law, 840 (citing Gulick v. Grover, 33 N. J. Law, 463, 471, 97 Am. Dec. 728; Titus v. Cairo & Fulton R. R. Co., 46 N. J. Law, 393).

If an agent, having unwritten authority to make leases of real property, executes a lease for more than three years, the knowledge of his principal that the tenant is in possession and paying rent is not sufficient to work either "ratification" or estoppel. If an agent, having unwritten authority to make leases of real property, executes a lease for more than three years, "ratification" or estoppel will not be inferred against his principal from knowledge that the tenant was making trade improvements, unless the improvements of which he had notice were such as indicated possession under a lease beyond the agent's authority. Clement v. Young-McShea Amusement Co., 67 Atl. 82, 85, 70 N. J. Eq. 677, 118 Am. St. Rep. 747.

"Ratification" implies a conscious and intended approval of the act done. It rests upon the actual and existing purpose to make such approval, and, to meet these requirements, it must be made with full knowledge of all the facts. Plaintiff opened an account with defendant stockbrokers, and arranged to have his transactions cared for by them during his absence on a vacation, and left with them sufficient collateral to protect his account. They made an unauthorized sale of certain of the securities, and immediately sent notice to him in the country, not stating the price, but indicating that there had been a flurry in the market, that there had been failures, and that the sale was made "to protect your account, as this stock moves very fast." Plaintiff remained silent where he was for a week or 10 days, then started home, stopping a day and a half at an intermediate point, where he received notice of sale of other securities, and the next day went home, and repudiated the transactions. There was not a "ratification" of the first sale by his silence in the meantime; he not having known of the price at which the sale was made. Burnham v. Lawson, 103 N. Y. Supp. 482, 483, 118 App. Div. 389 (citing Glenn v. Garth, 133 N. Y. 18, 35, 30 N. E. 649, 31 N. E. 344).

To establish a "ratification" by a cestui que trust, the fact must not only be clearly proved, but it must be shown that the ratification was made with a full knowledge of all the material particulars and circumstances, and also, in a case like the present, that the cestui que trust was fully apprised of the effect of the acts ratified and of his or her legal rights in the matter. "Confirmation" and "ratification" imply, to legal minds, knowledge of a defect in the act to be confirmed and of the right to reject or ratify it. To render the act of "ratification" effective and conclusive, certain considerations are necessary. At the time of the supposed ratification, the principal must have been fully aware of every material circumstance of the transaction, the real value of the subject of the contract, and his act of ratification must have been an independent and substantive act, founded on complete information and perfect freedom of volition, and, in addition to this, the cestui que trust must not only have been acquainted with the fact, but apprised of the law; how those facts could be dealt with if brought before a court of equity. Where, after arriving at his majority, a ward executed a mortgage on his real estate to reimburse his guardian for moneys expended by the latter during the guardianship in excess of the income of the estate, though for the benefit of the ward, the execution of such mortgage did not constitute a ratification of the expenditures by the guardian; it appearing that the ward acted entirely on his guardian's advice in making the mortgage, and without any knowledge of his rights, under the express provisions of Ky. St. 1903, § 2034, exempting his real estate from liability for such expenditures. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Butler (Ky.) 91 S. W. 676, 681 (quoting and adopting Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 539; Hoffman Steam Coal Co. v. Cumberland Coal & Iron Co., 16 Md. 456, 77 Am. Dec. 320; and citing and adopting Boyd v. Hawkins, 17 N. C. 195; Butler v. Haskell [S. C.] 4 Desaus. 709; Felder v. Harbison, 20 S. W. 508, 93 Ky. 490).

Unauthorized act presupposed

though it may not in itself be ratification, is nevertheless evidence of it." Allen v. Corn Exchange Bank, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1001, 1004, 87 App. Div. 335.

"'Ratification,' as it relates to the law of agency, is the express or implied adoption of the acts of another by one for whom the other assumes to be acting, but without authority; and this results as effectually to establish the duties, rights, and liabilities of an agency as if the acts ratified had been fully authorized in the beginning." Larsen v. Thuringia American Ins. Co., 70 N. E. 31, 32, 208 Ill. 166.

Waiver not synonymous

"Ratification" and waiver are not synonymous. To approve is the gist of ratification, while to abandon or relinquish is the gist of waiver. Holloway v. Darden, 53 South. 187, 188, 168 Ala. 256 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5928 et seq.).

RATIO

In the absence of express ratios in a legislative apportionment act, the "ratios" are the number of the inhabitants of the state divided by the number of senators fixed by the act, and the same number of inhabitants divided by the number of representatives fixed by the act. State ex rel. Sullivan v. Schnitger, 95 Pac. 698, 703, 16 Wyo. 479.

RATIO DECIDENDI

The principle established by a case is sometimes called its "ratio decidendi." Kleybolte v. Block Mountain Timber Co., 66 S. E. 663, 664, 151 N. C. 635.

RATIONAL

See Irrationality—Irrational.

The word "rational" has no legal or technical meaning, and is defined by Webster as having reason, faculty of reasoning, endowed with reason and understanding, agreeable to reason; not absurd, preposterous, extravagant, foolish, fanciful, or the like; judicious—as rational conduct; a rational man. An instruction on a will contest, defining soundness of mind of a testator to be sufficient mind and memory to know the natural objects of his bounty and his obligations to them, and "to take a rational survey of his property," and to dispose of that estate according to a fixed purpose of his own, was not erroneous, because not including the language that testator must have mind and memory sufficient "to know the character and value of his estate." Bottom v. Bottom (Ky.) 106 S. W. 216, 217.

A question to a witness as to whether a person was acting "rational" or "irrational" did not call for the opinion of the witness as to the mental sanity of the defendant, but for the result of his observations, at the various times he came in contact with the defendant, as to his appearance in the respects suggested. "To say that a man acts 'rational' or 'irrational' is but to describe an outward manifestation drawn from observed facts. It is the last analysis, the ultimate fact deduced from evidentiary facts coming under observation, but so transitory and evanescent as to be like drunkenness; easy of detection and difficult of explanation." People v. Manoogian, 75 Pac. 177, 179, 141 Cal. 592.

As reasonable

An instruction that if the accused killed decedent in sudden passion, and not in defense against an attack "reasonably producing a rational fear" of death or serious injury, he should be found guilty of manslaughter was not erroneous in using the word "rational" rather than "reasonable," especially where a subsequent charge fully submitted the issue of self-defense. The word "rational," in the connection here used, is more favorable than the word "reasonable." A fear might be rational and not reasonable. Christian v. State, 79 S. W. 562, 563, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 47.

RATIONAL VOLITION

An instruction that recovery could be had of a railroad company for death of one injured by its negligence, who committed suicide during insanity caused by the accident, if he had not the power of rational volition, is misleading; the term "rational volition" being likely to be understood to mean volition attended by powers of reason, to consider and judge of the act in all its relations, moral as well as physical. Daniels v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 67 N. E. 424, 426, 183 Mass. 393, 62 L. R. A. 751.

RATTLER

A machine used to test bricks by the abrasion test is called a "rattler." City of Chicago v. Singer, 66 N. E. 874, 875, 202 Ill. 75.

RAVINE

As water course, see Water Course.

RAVISH

The word "ravish," used in an indictment for rape, means "to seize" or "to snatch by force." State v. Peyton, 125 S. W. 416, 417, 93 Ark. 406, 137 Am. St. Rep. 93.

The word "ravish" presupposes force, and is indispensable in a common-law indictment for rape, but is surplusage in an information charging assault with intent to rape a child under the age of consent. Ross v. State, 93 Pac. 299, 302, 16 Wyo. 285.

The word "ravishment," at common law, was equally as applicable to abduction as to rape, and to males as females. Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409 (citing 1 Coke, 137; 3 Black. Com. 141; Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, 190, note 1).

An indictment charging that the accused feloniously and violently assaulted a female, and violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know, charges rape, the word "violently," being equivalent to the term "forcibly," or "by force," and the word "ravish" importing the employment of force. State v. Rohn, 119 N. W. 88, 90, 140 Iowa, 640.

Where an indictment charged that defendant made an assault on B., a female not his wife, under 15 years of age, with intent to ravish, it was not defective for failure to allege her want of consent and that he intended to commit rape by force, since the word "ravish" implies both force and want of consent. Alexander v. State, 127 S. W. 189, 190, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 621.

Pen. Code, § 261, defines rape as "an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator where she resists but her resistance is overcome by force or violence." Held, that an indictment under such section, failing to charge that prosecutrix was not defendant's wife, was fatally defective, nor was the omission cured by the allegation that defendant "violently did 'ravish' and carnally know" prosecutrix, as those words only described the manner by which the intercourse was accomplished. People v. Miles, 101 Pac. 525, 526, 9 Cal. App. 312.

Under Shannon's Code, §§ 7077, 7080, 7083, providing that the statement of facts constituting the offense shall be in ordinary language, etc., an indictment, alleging that accused on a designated date did have carnal knowledge of a designated female, forcibly and against her will, charges rape, defined by section 6451 as the carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly and against her will, though it does not charge that accused "ravished" the female; the word "ravish" implying no more than that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the female. Palmer v. State, 118 S. W. 1022, 1029, 121 Tenn. 465.

As carnally know

The word "ravish," under the statute of Westminster II, means "having carnal knowledge of a woman by force." Beard v. State, 97 S. W. 667, 671, 79 Ark. 293, 9 Ann. Cas. 409.

According to Rev. St. 1899, § 1837, "rape" consists in forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of 14 years or upward. To "ravish" a woman is to have carnal connection with her forcibly, and without her consent, or against her consent. State v. Welch, 89 S. W. 945, 947, 191 Mo. 179, 4 Ann. Cas. 681.

RAW

In a statute making a place where articles in a raw, unfinished, or incomplete state are converted into a new, improved, or different form a manufacturing establishment, the word "raw" is a relative term, and means not yet changed by some process of treatment or fabrication. The words "unfinished" and "incomplete" likewise refer to a state or condition not yet attained and mean not fully fashioned to meet some design. Factory Act (Laws 1903, c. 356) § 7, provides that an establishment wherein any natural products or other articles, in a raw, incomplete, or unfinished condition, are converted into a new improved or different form, is a manufacturing establishment, within the act. Held, that an establishment wherein railroad iron, old stoves, waste and scrap iron of every description, is cut into lengths, known as grade No. 1, grade No. 2 and busheling scrap, by machines known as alligator shears, operated by power, to meet standing specifications of mills which purchase the product, is a manufacturing establishment within the act. Caspar v. Lewin, 109 Pac. 657, 659, 82 Kan. 604.

An indictment under Rev. St. § 3279, which charges that the accused "unlawfully and knowingly did carry and deliver, to wit, 'raw material,' to a distillery," on which no sign was placed and kept as required by law, but which does not state that such distillery was one for the production of spirits, nor set forth the kind of raw material which was furnished, is insufficient, as not describing the offense with the particularity required. Terry v. United States, 120 Fed. 483, 486, 56 C. C. A. 633.

The term "raw prairie land," as used in a contract for the exchange of land in which one party describes his land as being "raw prairie land," means that the land was a treeless tract covered with coarse grass and fertile soil, in its natural or uncultivated state. Gardner v. Mann, 70 N. E. 417, 418, 36 Ind. App. 694.

Where a contract for the purchase of defendant's stock in plaintiff corporation provided that defendant should not concern himself in the manufacture of resistance wire, but might experiment in making such goods, and, if the results of such experiments should meet plaintiff's approval, plaintiff would manufacture the goods and pay for selling the same, and the profits thereon, after paying for the raw material, should be divided between the parties, the words "raw material" obviously mean the several articles of which the alloy is to be composed, and do not mean the billets or rods ready to be drawn into wires, which must be understood to be the "raw product" which defendant offers to furnish. Driver-Harris Wire Co. v. Driver, 62 Atl. 461, 463, 70 N. J. Eq. 34.

Raw tussah silk, in the same condition as when reeled from cocoons, except that it has been transferred from the large reels on which it was taken from the cocoons to smaller reels, the result of this process not being any change in the condition of the silk other than to adapt the skeins thus produced to American spinning machines, is held not to be dutiable as "silk partially manufactured from cocoons," under paragraph 384, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 185, but to be free of duty under paragraph 660, as "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in any way" (chapter 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201). United States v. Stewart, 133 Fed. 811.

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 660, 30 Stat. 201, for "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in manufacture in any way," held: (1) That the provision does not cover any form of raw silk advanced beyond the condition of skeins; (2) that silk known as "singles" or "silk on tubes," which has been wound from the skeins onto tubes, the effect of this process being to advance the silk a stage in preparation for its ultimate use, has been "advanced in manufacture"; and (3) that silk in this form is not free of duty under this provision, but dutiable under paragraph 384 (section 1, Schedule L, of said act, 30 Stat. 185), as "silk * * * not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." Klots v. United States, 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

Where "raw silk" has been re-reeled from skeins upon cops or tubes, thus permitting the operation of doubling or twisting to be omitted in the process of finishing the silk, and thus bringing the article one step nearer the condition of finished silk, held, that this removes the article from the provision in paragraph 660, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 201, for raw silk not "advanced in manufacture in any way," and brings it within the provision in paragraph 384 of said act (chapter 11, § 1, Schedule L, 30 Stat. 185), for "silk partially manufactured from cocoons, * * * and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." United States v. Klotz, 133 Fed. 808, 809.

REACH

The remedy given to a judgment creditor by Act Pa. July 12, 1842 (P. L. 339), by the arrest and imprisonment of the defendant on a showing of fraudulent removal or concealment of his property, is one "to reach the property of a judgment debtor," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 916, and under said section is available in the federal courts. Ex parte Crawford, 154 Fed. 769, 770, 83 C. C. A. 474 (citing Curtis v. Feste, 6 Fed. Cas. 1004; Commonwealth v. O'Hara [Pa.] 6 Phila. 402).

READY

To be "ready" to purchase is to be completely prepared as for immediate use or for present requirement. McDermott v. Mahoney, 115 N. W. 32, 40, 139 Iowa, 292 (quoting and adopting definition in Cent. Dict.).

"Ability to purchase property" means "ready" to do so, which, according to Webster, is "equipped or supplied with what is needed for some act or event." Colburn v. Seymour, 76 Pac. 1058, 1060, 32 Colo. 430, 2 Ann. Cas. 182.

In a prosecution for assault charged to have been committed by one as principal and by two others as aiders and abettors, the jury were instructed that if they found one of the defendants actually assaulted the prosecuting witness with intent to kill him, or do him great bodily harm, and further found that the other defendants were present, aiding, abetting, encouraging, or ready, if necessary, to aid, assist, or encourage the defendant actually making the assault, then such defendants so present and ready to aid and abet therein might be found guilty with the one actually making the assault. Held, that the word "ready" conveys substantially the same meaning as the phrase ordinarily used, "for the purpose and with the intent to aid and assist if necessary," as the word "ready" is defined as "prepared in mind or disposition, not reluctant, willing, free, inclined, disposed." State v. Ostman, 126 S. W. 961, 964, 147 Mo. App. 422.

Ready for distribution

An estate is "ready to be distributed," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2743, when its resources have been gathered and marshaled so that their extent and nature are known and its expenses and obligations have been ascertained, and it is not necessary that it should be wholly reduced to money. In re Snedeker, 114 N. Y. Supp. 936, 937, 61 Misc. Rep. 216.

Ready for loading

A sailing ship was ready to load on the date required by her charter, except that she had taken in mud ballast which would require to be removed before one of the hatches could be used. Ballast of some kind was necessary to stiffen the ship and render her seaworthy after removal of her prior cargo, and the master had applied to the charterers to know the character of her next cargo, but had not been informed, and had put in the mud ballast temporarily. Held, that the same being necessary, its presence did not prevent her from being "ready for loading" nor entitle the charterers to cancel. Ruprecht v. Delacamp, 165 Fed. 381, 382.

The steamship Eva was chartered to carry a cargo of coal to be loaded at Philadelphia; the charter party providing for "customary steamer dispatch loading, steamer to take turn with other steamers loading coal." By the rules of the Greenwich coal pier, where she was to load, each vessel was required to register when "ready" to load, and was loaded in turn, unless she failed to dock when her berth was ready, in which case she lost her place and must re-register. The Eva registered, and her master was told by the charterer's agent that she could not be loaded for about a week. She then went to a shipyard to have some changes made in her bulkheads, which, however, were not necessary for her coal cargo, and could be suspended at any time on notice, and she could have reached the coal dock within an hour. When her turn for loading was reached, she was not notified; but another vessel was given her place, apparently at the instance of the charterer, and she was delayed for several days. Held, that she was "ready," within the meaning of the rules, and hence the charterer was liable for demurrage for the time she was delayed. Bull v. United States Shipping Co., 173 Fed. 46, 49, 97 C. C. A. 364.

Ready for occupancy

Premises leased consisted of a store, basement, and conservatory, to be used for selling flowers, and were part of the lessor's building; and the lease recited that the building was in process of construction, and intended to be of the general character shown in certain plans, and provided that, in case the premises should be "ready for occupancy" at the beginning of the term, possession should be delivered as soon as completed, and that rent should be computed only from the time the premises should be ready for occupancy. Held, that the phrase "ready for occupancy" did not mean fitted by the lessor with fixtures, rendering it ready for the lessee's business. Gerry v. Siebrecht, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1034, 1035.

Where the lease of a building for a moving picture show provided that the lessees should furnish all fixtures needed by them in their business, and that they should make all necessary alterations, and that rent should commence when the premises were "ready for occupancy," it was proper to admit parol evidence to show that it was agreed prior to the written lease that the lessors should put a certain addition on the building, but should not place any front thereon; the front being one of the fixtures, and to be put up by the lessees. The term "ready for occupancy" which is not exactly defined by the law, meant that the lessors should put the premises in such a condition that the lessees could take possession and install the fixtures and appliances peculiar to the moving picture show. As the lease did not particularly state what was required to render the premises ready for occupancy, parol evidence must be admitted to show that fact. Murphy v. Schwaner, 80 Atl. 295, 297, 84 Conn. 420.

Ready to discharge

A charter party of a ship to carry a cargo of coal from New Castle, Australia, to San Francisco, there to be discharged "as customary, in such customary berth as consignees shall direct," lay days to commence when the vessel was "ready to discharge," on written notice by the master, gave the consignee the right to designate any customary place for discharging, and the ship did not reach her destination, and was not ready to discharge, so as to be entitled to give the notice, until she was in the berth assigned; and where the master was promptly notified on arrival in port that the cargo had been sold to a fuel company and was to be discharged at its bunkers, which were customary places for discharging coal, a delay of 42 working days while awaiting her turn to discharge at such bunkers, which was required by the custom of the port, was at her own risk, and did not entitle her to recover demurrage, the delay being without fault of the charterer, but caused by a congestion of coal vessels in the port at the particular time. Anderson v. J. J. Moore & Co., 179 Fed. 68, 70, 102 C. C. A. 362.

While under the modern rule, which gives the charterer of a vessel for the carriage of coal, ore, grain, or other like commodities, for which special facilities for loading and discharging are in general use, the option to select the berth at which the vessel shall load or discharge within reasonable limitations, and which subjects her to the necessary delay in awaiting her return without demurrage, the customary charter provisions that lay days shall commence when the vessel is "ready to unload and discharge" and "written notice is given" have no effect, except from the time the vessel reaches the precise berth where she is ordered; but a provision in a coal charter that the time for discharging should commence when the vessel was ready to unload and written notice given, "whether in berth or not," was evidently intended to relieve the vessel from the burden of such rule, and the clause must be given effect in accordance with its plainly expressed meaning, and the lay days for discharging commenced when the vessel gave notice that she was ready to unload and was ready, whether at her designated berth or not. W. K. Niver Coal Co. v. Cheronea S. S. Co., 142

REAL

The use of the word "apparent," in a charge that no one is justified in taking the life of another, unless the necessity for doing so is apparent, as the only means, etc., held objectionable on account of the dual meaning of the term; it being synonymous with actual or "real." State v. Jones, 60 Atl. 396, 397, 71 N. J. Law, 543.

REAL ACTION

"Real actions" at common law were those by which all disputes concerning corporeal hereditaments were decided. Brown v. Martin, 73 S. E. 495, 497, 137 Ga. 338, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16 (quoting and adopting the definition in Will's Gould, Pleading, 6).

REAL AND SUBSTANTIAL DISPUTE

A contention by importers that the treasury regulations respecting the polariscopic test for sugar assumed to add something to the dutiable standard prescribed by Tariff Act, and that the Secretary of the Treasury thus exercised legislative power confided by the Constitution solely to Congress, does not constitute a "real and substantial dispute" or controversy concerning the construction or application of the federal Constitution within the meaning of Act March 3, 1891, c. 517, § 5, so as to sustain a direct appeal from a federal Circuit Court to the Supreme Court. American Sugar Refining Co. of New York v. United States, 29 Sup. Ct. 89, 91, 211 U. S. 155, 53 L. Ed. 129.

REAL CHATTELS

See Chattels Real.

REAL DANGER

"Real danger" is danger such as is manifest to the physical senses. Byers v. Territory, 100 Pac. 261, 267, 1 Okl. Cr. 677.

REAL ESTATE

See Real Property.

REAL ESTATE BROKER

As regular real estate business, see Regular Real Estate Business.

A "real estate broker," strictly speaking, is but a middleman whose office it is to bring the principals together, with the understanding that they are to negotiate with each other, and trade upon such terms as may be mutually satisfactory. Handley v. Shaffer (Ala.) 59 South. 236, 290; Shannon v. Lee (Ala.) 60 South. 99, 100.

"A 'real estate broker or agent' is one who negotiates the sale of real property. His business, generally speaking, is only to find a purchaser who is willing to buy the land upon the terms fixed by the owner. He has no authority to bind the principal by signing a contract of sale." Brown v. Gilpin, 90 Pac. 267, 270, 75 Kan. 773 (quoting and adopting definition in McCullough v. Hitchcock, 42 Atl. 81, 71 Conn. 401); Larson v. O'Hara, 107 N. W. 821, 822, 98 Minn. 71, 116 Am. St. Rep. 342, 8 Ann. Cas. 849 (quoting and adopting definition in McCullough v. Hitchcock, 42 Atl. 81, 71 Conn. 401).

REAL ESTATE BUSINESS

See Regular Real Estate Business.

REAL ESTATE DEALER

As mercantile pursuit, see Mercantile.

REAL LACE

The distinction between "real lace" and imitation lace is that the former is made by hand and the latter upon machines. The provision in Tariff Act for articles of lace and of imitation lace does not include women's collars and cuffs, composed of braids sewn together by hand, and ornamented with threads and other materials. D. S. Hesse & Bro. v. United States, 154 Fed. 171, 172 (citing Kleeberg v. United States, 72 Fed. 252, 254; Sidenberg v. Robertson, 41 Fed. 763).

REAL OR PERSONAL PROPERTY

Any real or personal property, see Any.

REAL OWNER

One to show that he is the "real owner," and therefore authorized under Code 1892, § 500, to maintain a bill to remove clouds from his title, must allege and show that he has a perfect legal or equitable title. Jones v. Rogers, 38 South. 742, 744, 85 Miss. 802.

The phrase "real owner," as used in the statement of the rule that Rev. St. c. 84, § 146, providing that an assignee of a chose in action, not negotiable, may sue in his own name, means that the real owner may meet his adversary face to face on the record, is not employed in the sense that the real owner need be the sole beneficial owner. He may be the owner of a part interest only and trustee for the balance, or trustee for the whole; the phrase "real owner" being used as contradistinguished from colorable assignee, one made an assignee solely for the purpose of bringing an action. Coombs v. Harford, 59 Atl. 529, 531, 99 Me. 426.

REAL PARTY IN INTEREST

The test of whether one is the real party in suit is, does he satisfy the call for the person who has the right to control and receive the fruits of the litigation? The rule is stated in a recent ably written work thus: "The real party in interest, within the meaning of this provision of the Code, is the person who will be entitled to the benefits of the action if successful; one who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal, or technical interest in or connection with it." Gross v. Heckert, 97 N. W. 952, 954, 120 Wis. 314.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 18, providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the "real party in interest," section 19 providing that an action by the assignee of a chose in action is without prejudice to any discount, set-off, or defense allowed, and if the assignment be not authorized by statute the assignor must be made a party, and section 21 providing that a personal representative, guardian, curator, committee, trustee of an express trust, or a person with whom or in whose name a contract is made may bring an action without joining with him the person for whose benefit it is prosecuted, a shipper of hogs which had been injured while being carried by a railroad company, who, after the carriage began, sold his interest in the hogs, is not the real party in interest, and so cannot appeal from a judgment denying a recovery in favor of himself and the purchaser against the railroad company. Lampkin v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 142 S. W. 1037, 1038, 146 Ky. 514.

The courts will determine who is the "real party in interest" in an action, by reference, not merely to the name in which the action is brought, but to the facts as they appear of record. Eastern State Hospital v. Graves' Committee, 52 S. E. 837, 838, 105 Va. 151, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 8 Ann. Cas. 701.

The holders of bonds illegally issued by a school district stand in the place of the original purchasers of the bonds, and may maintain a suit in their name as the "real party in interest" to recover from the proceeds of the property purchased by the proceeds of the sale of the bonds the amount due them. Board of Trustees of Fordsville v. Postel, 88 S. W. 1065, 1067, 121 Ky. 67, 123 Am. St. Rep. 184.

Where a contract shows its clear intent and purpose to be a direct and substantial benefit to third parties, and not merely that third parties might be benefited by it, or that third parties are indirectly or incidentally benefited by it, the third parties, who are directly and substantially benefited by the performance of the contract, may maintain an action for its breach under the statute as the "real parties in interest." Woodbury v. Tampa Water Works Co., 49 South. 556, 560, 57 Fla. 243, 249, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 449, permitting actions in the name of the "real party in interest," a publisher of a periodical owned by an unincorporated association having thousands of members could sue for printing an advertisement under a contract in the form of a written authority on a printed blank addressed to "the publishers" of such periodical. Eilert v. Gordon, 121 N. Y. Supp. 604.

"The 'real party in interest' is the party who is to be benefited by the judgment in the case." Code Civ. Proc. § 367, requires actions to be brought by the real party in interest, in order to protect a defendant from loss by future suits; and hence plaintiff may not bring an action for property, the title of which has previously vested in his trustee in bankruptcy, where a judgment either for or against plaintiff would not bar a subsequent suit by such trustee for the same cause of action. Simpson v. Miller, 94 Pac. 252, 255, 7 Cal. App. 248 (quoting definition in Bliss, Code Pl. § 45).

In an action for sawing lumber, the evidence showed that the contract therefor was made by plaintiff and defendant, and that no third person was known as having any interest therein. A third person testified that he was interested in the job because he owned the engine operating the mill sawing the timber and for which he should receive one-half of the proceeds and furnish one-half of the expense, but stated that nothing was said about his being entitled to any part of plaintiff's recovery. Plaintiff testified that he had no partner in the work. Held not to show as a matter of law that plaintiff and the third person were partners in the work, or that the third person was a real party in interest within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 251, and the court, submitting to the jury the issue whether the third person was interested in the contract, properly refused to grant a new trial on that ground. Delphos Hoop Co. v. Smith, 95 N. E. 309, 310, 176 Ind. 29.

A party to be "interested" in an action need not be one who may gain or lose something therein. The word has a broad meaning, and includes all those who, as parties, have some control over the action, whether they will be personally affected thereby or not. Thus an administrator, a trustee, or an executor is a real party in interest when he is bringing or defending a suit for the estate which he represents. Such a party brings or defends the suit, employs counsel, and is directly responsible for going on with the litigation. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Phillips, 176 Fed. 663, 668, 100 C. C. A. 215.

Agent

An agent to whom a deed, absolute in form, was executed as security for a debt to the principal was not a necessary party to an action to have the deed declared a mortgage and foreclosed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, providing that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the "real party in interest." Churchill v. Woodworth, 84 Pac. 155, 156, 148 Cal. 669, 113 Am. St. Rep. 324.

Assignee

An assignee of a note given to a building and loan association by a member was the "real party in interest" within the statute requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, even though by such assignment it did not become the owner of the note. Leon v. Citizens' Building & Loan Ass'n, 127 Pac. 721, 722, 14 Ariz. 294.

The assignee or pledgee of a negotiable bond is the "real party in interest," within the meaning of Mills' Ann. Code, § 3, and may maintain suit upon the same in his own name, irrespective of the nature of his title, or the consideration paid by him for the transfer. Board of Com'rs of Lake County v. Schradsky, 71 Pac. 1104, 1105, 31 Colo. 178.

Under Mills' Ann. Code, § 3, requiring every action to be brought in the name of the "real party in interest," the assignee of a grantee's claim against his grantor for taxes which the latter should have paid could sue the grantor thereon in his own name. Rambo v. Armstrong, 100 Pac. 586, 588, 45 Colo. 124.

Under Code 1907, § 2489, providing that actions on contracts for the payment of money must be prosecuted in the name of the party really interested, an action for breach by a vendor of his contract to erect a building on the premises sold need not be brought in the name of the real owner of the contract, but may be brought by the purchaser, though he has assigned the contract. Bohanan v. Thomas, 49 South. 308, 309, 159 Ala. 410.

Where executors by a written assignment transferred a note payable to testator, the assignee was the "real party in interest" and entitled to maintain an action on the note, though one of the executors testified that the estate was still interested in the note, and that, if a recovery should be had, it would inure to the benefit of the estate. The plaintiff may be the "real party in interest" if he have the legal title either by written transfer or delivery, whatever may be the equities between him and his assignor. To be entitled to sue, the plaintiff must have the right of possession, and ordinarily the legal title. The ownership may be as equitable trustee; it may have been acquired without adequate consideration, but must be sufficient to protect the defendant upon a recovery against him from a subsequent action by the assignor. Huck v. Kraus, 99 N. Y. Supp. 490, 491, 50 Misc. Rep. 528 (citing Sheridan v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 68 N. Y. 30; Hays v. Hathorn, 74 N. Y. 486, 490).

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 449, requiring the "real party in interest" to sue in his own name, means the person solely interested in the recovery, so that, where a judgment against an administrator was assigned to plaintiff, he thereby became the real party in interest and was required to bring the proceedings for the enforcement thereof in his own name. Bamberger v. American Surety Co. of New York, 96 N. Y. Supp. 665, 666, 109 App. Div. 917.

Executor

In an action against a conservator for fraudulently selling land of her ward, afterward deceased, brought by the ward's residuary legatees, one of whom was also her executor, plaintiffs were named in the suit as individuals, but the complaint averred the probate of the ward's will and the qualification of said plaintiff as her executor. There was no demurrer on the ground that the executor had no right of action individually; the only objection being taken orally on final argument. Held that, in view of Gen. St. 1902, § 621, authorizing the court to determine the controversy as between the parties before it where it can do so without prejudice to the rights of others, and where other parties are necessary to a complete determination to order them to be brought in, section 622, providing that no action shall be defeated by nonjoinder of parties, and that new parties may be added at any time, and section 623, providing that, where an action has been commenced in the name of the wrong plaintiff, the court may allow another to be substituted or added as plaintiff, the trial court was warranted in disposing of the case upon its merits, and regarding the executor as a party of the record, both as an executor and individually, as he, being one of the residuary legatees, was a real party in interest within Rules of Court, Practice Book 1908, p. 238, § 128, and, if defendant had desired that he be made a party in his representative capacity, she could have moved to that effect. Appeal of Dunn, 70 Atl. 703, 705, 81 Conn. 127.

Partner

In actions prosecuted by copartnership, the "real parties in interest" are the individuals composing the copartnership, and the action is properly brought in their name and not in the name of the firm. Edmonson v. Loran Carriage & Harness Co., 130 S. W. 64, 66, 149 Mo. App. 128 (citing Conrades v. Spink, 38 Mo. App. 309; Mitchell v. Rallton, 45 Mo. App. 282; Orr v. How, 55 Mo. 328).

Pledgor

That one had pledged a special tax bill sued on by him as collateral security for a note for a less sum, there being no default in the payment of the note, did not prevent him from suing to enforce the bill, under Rev. Stat. 1899, § 540, requiring actions to be prosecuted in the name of the "real party in interest"; the "real party in interest" being the party who is to be benefited or injured by the judgment in the case, and the phrase, as used in the statute, meaning the person who is actually and substantially interested in the subject-matter, as distinguished from one who has only a nominal, formal, or technical interest in it or connected with it. Dickey v. Porter, 101 S. W. 586, 593, 203 Mo. 1.

Receiving carrier

The delivering carrier was not a necessary party to an action by the initial carrier against the consignor to recover a part of the freight charges which its agent by mistake failed to collect, where the delivering carrier was only the agent for the receiving carrier;

the receiving carrier being the "real party in interest" within Kirby's Dig. § 5999. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Gramling, 133 S. W. 1129, 1130, 97 Ark. 353.

State

The state is the "real party in interest," in a suit when the relief sought is that which inures to it alone, or when the action will have the effect of depriving the state of funds or property in its possession. That the state has a governmental interest in the welfare of its citizens in enforcing the legal orders of its officers, made for the benefit of the public at large, does not make the state a party in interest to the litigation, since the interest which will render a state the "real party in interest" must be its interest as an artificial person, as distinguished from that of a government for the benefit of its citizens. That the state voluntarily assumes the defense in the cause or litigation does not make it the "real party in interest," as this is simply an incidental matter and does not determine its relation to the suit. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Andrews, 154 Fed. 95, 106.

Trustee

The holder of the legal title to property is the "real party in interest" within Mills' Ann. Code, § 3, requiring actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, and one holding the legal title to property as trustee may sue to enjoin injuries to it without alleging the beneficiary's name or the nature of the trust, even if the averment as to holding it in trust could not be disregarded as surplusage, as it could be. Koch v. Story, 107 Pac. 1093, 1095, 47 Colo. 335.

REAL POSSESSION

See, also, Actual Possession.

Under Code Prac. art. 49, plaintiff cannot maintain a possessory action unless he has had real and actual possession of the property at the instant the disturbance occurred, and mere legal or civil possession is not sufficient, and there can be no real possession unless there is a corporeal detention and use of the thing according to its nature and destination. Albert Hanson Lumber Co. v. Baldwin Lumber Co., 52 South. 537, 538, 126 La. 347.

"The term 'real estate' is very comprehensive and signifies the quantity of interest which a person has, from absolute ownership down to naked possession. It is the possession of the lands which renders them valuable, and the quantity of interest is determined by the duration and extent of the right therein. 'Real estate' therefore includes every possible interest in lands except a mere chattel interest." Jones v. State, 70 N. E. 952, 954, 70 Ohio St. 36, 1 Ann. Cas. 618 (quoting and adopting definition in Jackson ex dem. Cary v. Parker [N. Y.] 9 Cow. 73, 81).

"'Real property' is land, and, generally, whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed to land." State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 740, 6 Pennewill, 323.

"Real property," within the condemnation law, includes any right, interest, or easement therein or appurtenance thereto. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Mathews, 129 N. Y. Supp. 828, 830, 144 App. Div. 732.

The words "real estate" in the taxing statutes do not include land or appurtenances necessary to the exercise of a franchise of a public corporation. Conoy Tp. Sup'rs v. York Haven Electric Power Plant Co., 71 Atl. 207, 208, 222 Pa. 319.

The term "real estate" in Const. art. 8, § 10, limiting municipal indebtedness to a specified per cent. of the assessed valuation of the real estate of the municipality, subject to taxation, as it appeared by the assessment rolls of the municipality, comprehends all property which the statute makes taxable as real estate, and the assessment rolls are conclusive on the subject. Levy v. McClellan, 89 N. E. 569, 571, 196 N. Y. 178.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 492, subsec. 1, providing that no sale shall be ordered if forbidden by the trust deed, and section 493, subsec. 5, and Ky. St. § 4706 (Russell's St. § 4168), requiring the court ordering a sale of trust lands to retain control of the fund realized by the sale, until the same is invested in "real estate," and authorizing such investment, the court may order the sale of land in Kentucky conveyed to a trustee with power to sell and reinvest in any property in Kentucky, and may permit a reinvestment in real estate in a sister state. Ridley v. Dedman, 119 S. W. 756, 757, 134 Ky. 146.

The term "real estate," within the statute making "all of the real estate of the defendant" subject to a judgment against him, means a freehold, which is either an estate for life or in fee simple, and not a mere chattel interest in land, nor a simple contract right to perform conditions, aside from the payment of the purchase price and demand a conveyance of the title. Bourn v. Robinson, 107 S. W. 873, 876, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 157.

The words "real property" are coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. §§ 4333, 4334, providing that a railroad may appropriate "any land, real estate, or premises" for right of way, etc., such a corporation may appropriate the interest of parties in tidelands held under a contract from the state, and subject only to forfeiture for failure to pay the balance of the purchase price. State ex rel. Trimble v. Superior Court of King County, 72 Pac. 89, 92, 93, 31 Wash. 445, 66 L. R. A. 897 (quoting and adopting definition in Fish v. Fowle, 58 Cal. 373; citing and adopting Calhoun v. Leary, 32 Pac. 1070, 6 Wash. 17; People ex rel. Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 579, Storey v. New York E. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146).

Statutory definition

Gen. St. 1901, § 7342, defines the word "land" and the phrases "real estate" and "real property" as including lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interest therein, equitable as well as legal. Clarke v. City of Lawrence, 88 Pac. 735, 738, 75 Kan. 26.

According to Kirby's Digest, § 737, the term "real estate" is coextensive in meaning with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and so embraces all chattels real. Moore v. Sharpe, 121 S. W. 341, 346, 91 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 937.

Under the direct provisions of the Real Property Law (Laws 1896, p. 607, c. 547) § 240, the term "real estate" includes chattels real, except a lease for a term not exceeding three years. Westchester Trust Co. v. Keliy, 92 N. Y. Supp. 482, 102 App. Div. 464; Westchester Trust Co. v. Hobby Bottling Co., 78 N. E. 1114, 185 N. Y. 577.

"Real property" for the purpose of taxation is defined by Rev. St. 1895, art. 5062, to include the land itself, whether laid out in town lots or otherwise, and all the buildings, structures, and improvements, or other fixtures of whatsoever kind thereon, and all the rights and privileges belonging to or in any wise pertaining thereto. State v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., 97 S. W. 71, 76, 100 Tex. 153.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 2990, provides that the real and personal property of any person dying intestate shall descend to his or her children in equal proportions. Section 1353 declares that the phrase "real property" shall include lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Held, that the word "property," as used in section 2990, as applicable to lands, includes every species of title inchoate or complete, and embraces the rights which lie in contract, whether executory or executed. Adams v. Merrill, 85 N. E. 114, 118, 45 Ind. App. 315.

"Real estate" as used in the statutes relating to taxation means and includes the ownership or claim to or possession of or right of possession to any land within the territory. Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. v. Territorial Board of Equalization, 84 Pac. 511, 518, 9 Ariz. 383.

Bridge

Gen. St. 1902, §§ 2331 and 2332, providing for the taxation of bridge companies on their stock, less the amount of taxes paid on their real estate, "which shall be assessed and taxed in the town where located," uses the term "real estate" in the sense in which it is employed in section 2322, authorizing the taxation of real estate owned by private individuals, and hence does not authorize the taxation as real estate of a bridge structure. Middletown & P. Bridge Co. v. Town of Middletown, 59 Atl. 34, 35, 77 Conn. 314.

Buildings

Building as including, see Building.

A building is not necessarily part of the "real estate." Marshall v. Moore, 124 S. W. 585, 586, 146 Mo. App. 618.

An insurance policy upon a building used for a theater, stores, and offices, providing that, in the event of a fire, the insurer's liability should be measured by the loss of rent until the building was rebuilt or repaired, is a policy written upon "real property" within the meaning of Laws 1897, c. 142 (Gen. St. 1909, §§ 4260-4263), relating to description of the premises by a company insuring real property. Amusement Syndicate Co. v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 116 Pac. 620, 624, 85 Kan. 367.

A building on leased land, held under an unrecorded lease, is not "real estate," within Gen. Laws 1909, c. 57, § 2, providing that buildings on leased lands, the leases whereof are recorded, shall be deemed real estate for purposes of taxation. Lindgren v. Doughty, 80 Atl. 125, 126, 32 R. I. 524.

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 61, § 21, providing that any separate interest in land and buildings standing on the land shall be taken to be real estate, an icehouse erected on leased land is taxable as "real estate" within chapter 60, § 13, providing for the foreclosure of tax lien on real estate by sale. O'Donnell v. Town of Meredith, 73 Atl. 32, 75 N. H. 272.

Chattel real

A lease for five years is a chattel real until the expiration of the term, and is therefore "real property" within Mortgage Tax Law, Laws 1906, p. 1448, c. 532, providing that such words shall include a conveyance or mortgage which can be recorded as such under the laws of the state. People ex rel. Henry Elias Brewing Co. v. Gass, 104 N. Y. Supp. 884, 885, 53 Misc. Rep. 363.

A lease for 99 years, not assignable except with the written consent of the lessor, is a chattel real and real property, within Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50)

§§ 290, 291, defining the term "real property" as including chattels real, and providing for the recording of conveyances of real property, and an assignee of the lease with the lessor's consent is protected by the recording acts and acquires a valid title as against a prior assignee holding under an unrecorded assignment and of which he had no notice. Merrill v. Hodgkins, 134 N. Y. Supp. 166, 169.

Coal

"Coal underlying land in its natural deposit is 'real estate,' and any foreclosure or execution sale of it is subject to redemption to the same extent as a foreclosure or execution sale of any other 'real estate.'" Traer v. Fowler, 144 Fed. 810, 815, 75 C. C. A. 540.

Coal in place is "real estate" within the meaning of the statute giving the wife dower in all her husband's real estate of which he was seised in fee at any time during coverture. Reynolds v. Whitescarver, 66 S. E. 518, 519, 66 W. Va. 388.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 10,143, defining "real property," for the purposes of taxation, as all land and all buildings and fixtures thereon and appurtenances thereto; section 10,256, providing for the valuation of land and the improvements and buildings thereon or affixed thereto at their full cash value, taking into consideration the fertility of the soil and proximity to market, with local advantages, upon actual view of the premises; section 10,257, exempting the owner of land occupied by a highway or railroad right of way from taxation thereof; and section 10,263, providing that the assessor's return book shall contain a description of each parcel of real estate listed, and the value of such separate parcel as determined by the assessor from actual view—hidden, undeveloped coal or other minerals are not subject to taxation. Board of Com'rs of Greene County v. Lattas Creek Coal Co. (Ind.) 96 N. E. 633, 636.

Crop

Crops immature and growing on real estate when the successful party in an action of ejectment is placed in possession of the premises are part of the "real estate," and, in the absence of proof showing any right of severance, belong to such successful party. Harrod v. Burke, 92 Pac. 1128, 1129, 76 Kan. 909, 123 Am. St. Rep. 179.

Where the tenant of a farm, on leaving the state, sold to plaintiffs the right to graze their stock on grass and stalks growing on the farm, plaintiffs to care for the leased premises during the tenant's absence, it did not convert the stalks and grass into "real estate," and hence the landlord, in turning out the stock and locking the gates of the premises, was guilty of a conversion of the stalks and grass, which were "personal property." Ledy v. Carson, 90 S. W. 754, 755, 115 Mo. App. 1.

Equitable interest

The equitable interest vested in a testatrix by virtue of her possession as mortgagee and purchaser under the execution sale before the time for redemption expired was "real estate," so as to pass under a devise of such. Morgan v. Joslyn, 97 N. W. 449, 450, 91 Minn. 60, 103 Am. St. Rep. 474.

An equitable interest of a purchaser of state school lands evidenced by a certificate of purchase is real estate subject to sale on execution, in view of Gen. St. 1909, § 9037, subd. 8, providing that the phrase "real estate" includes all rights thereto and interests therein equitable as well as legal. Robertson v. Howard, 109 Pac. 696, 699, 82 Kan. 588.

Under the statutes declaring that the word "land," and the phrases "real estate," and "real property," shall include lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein equitable as well as legal, and providing that lands not exempt by law shall be liable to be taken on execution, land held by an equitable title may be levied upon and sold by virtue of an execution. Poole v. French, 80 Pac. 997, 1000, 71 Kan. 391.

Under Gen. St. 1894, § 253, subd. 8, and section 6842, subd. 14, providing that the terms "lands" and "real estate" include lands, tenements, hereditaments and all rights thereto and interest therein, an owner of a right or interest in land legal or equitable may be properly spoken of as the owner of such land, so that under section 5425, providing that judgments when duly docketed become a lien on all real property of the debtor, the interest of a vendee under an executory contract for the sale of lands is bound by such a judgment and may be sold under an execution thereon. Hook v. Northwest Thresher Co., 98 N. W. 463, 91 Minn. 482.

The vendee's right to specific performance of a contract to convey land is "lands" and "real estate" within the statute definition. Rev. St. § 4971, subd. 9. The lands, on the vendee's death, descend at once, by operation of law, to his children. Rev. St. § 2270, subd. 1. An administrator cannot sue to compel specific performance of a contract to convey land to his decedent, the price for which has been paid, where it does not appear that the administrator is in possession, or that the personal assets of the estate are insufficient to pay the debts. Carpenter v. Fopper, 68 N. W. 874, 94 Wis. 146.

As estate

See Estate.

Estate for years, or leasehold

A leasehold interest in land is "real estate" within Incorporation Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 32) §§ 1, 26, prohibiting the organization of corporations to hold real estate. Imperial Bldg. Co. v. Chicago Open Board of Trade, 87 N. E. 167, 169, 238 Ill. 100.

Within a statute providing that "real property," for the purpose of taxation, shall be construed to include the land itself and all rights and privileges thereto belonging, or in any wise appertaining, a leasehold is assessable as "real property." Moeller v. Gormley, 87 Pac. 507, 508, 44 Wash. 465 (citing and adopting Reiley v. Anderson, 73 Pac. 799, 33 Wash. 58; Chicago Attachment Co. v. Davis Sewing Mach. Co., 31 N. E. 438, 142 Ill. 171, 15 L. R. A. 754; Sanford v. Johnson, 24 Minn. 172; McKee v. Howe, 31 Pac. 115, 17 Colo. 538).

The term "real property," as used in Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 671, making a judgment a lien on all the "real property" of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution in the county, owned by him at the time, or any which he may afterwards acquire, does not include a leasehold estate acquired by the debtor under a lease executed subsequent to the judgment. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 76 Pac. 243, 246, 142 Cal. 529.

Under Civ. Code Alaska, § 181, which defines "real property" as including "all lands, tenements and hereditaments and rights thereto, and all interests therein, whether in fee simple or for the life of another," a lease of a mining claim for years conveys a chattel interest only and not an interest in the land, and is not a "conveyance," within the meaning of section 98, the recording of which will protect the lessee against a prior unrecorded deed; nor is such lessee an innocent purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration within such section, where he is to work the same and pay the lessor a royalty. Eadie v. Chambers, 172 Fed. 73, 78, 96 C. C. A. 561, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 879, 18 Ann. Cas. 1096.

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 458, providing that "the words 'real estate,' or 'land' shall be construed to mean lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interests therein other than a chattel interest; and the words 'personal estate' shall include chattels real, and other estate, such as, on the death of the owner intestate, would devolve on his personal representatives." A leasehold interest in a store building is "personal estate" rather than "real estate" or "land." Combs Lumber Co. v. Ohinn (Ky.) 90 S. W. 251.

The interest of a tenant of real estate under a lease for six years is property within Code Civil Proc. § 3358, relating to condemnation proceedings, and defining "real property" as any right, interest, or easement therein, and Code, § 1430, providing that the expression "real property" includes leasehold property, where the lessee is possessed of at least five years' unexpired term of the lease, and also of the buildings, if any, erected thereon. Baker v. State, 118 N. Y. Supp. 618, 620, 63 Misc. Rep. 549.

Laws 1901, p. 312, c. 128, making it a misdemeanor in certain cities to offer for sale any "real property" without written authority of the owner of the property, etc., does not apply to leases for a term exceeding three years. Lovejoy v. Weil, 95 N. Y. Supp. 552, 553, 48 Misc. Rep. 611.

The definition of "real estate" in Rev. St. 1899, § 936 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 850), concerning conveyances of real estate, declaring that the term "real estate" shall be coextensive in meaning with lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and shall embrace all chattels real, does not attempt to convert what was personal property at common law into real estate, but means only that a leasehold is to be assigned or conveyed by a quitclaim or warranty deed or mortgage as any other interest in land is to be conveyed, and, so construed, is in harmony with section 3415 (page 1949), declaring that no leases, estates, or interests, either of freehold or term of years, shall at any time be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless by deed or note in writing. And the provisions in Rev. St. 1899, § 3172 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1807), providing that every lease on lands for an unexpired term of three years or more shall be subject to execution and sale as real property, and section 3173, declaring that the term "real estate," as used in the chapter, shall include all estates and interests in lands, tenements, and hereditaments, merely mean that the sheriff in levying on and selling a leasehold, shall proceed as though he were selling land; the leasehold being considered as real property only for the purpose of levy and sale under execution. A provision in a will devising all testator's real estate to his wife and children in equal parts did not pass testator's interest in a leasehold for 20 years. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 493, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

Estates less than a freehold are "real property," and, if taxable, the owners are properly assessed as owners of real property for the value thereof. An assessment of taxes against a lessee on account of his interest in land held under a so-called lease for 99 years, renewable to the lessee, his heirs and assigns forever, where the rent reserved is grossly disproportionate to the value of the land, is not invalid. Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Ass'n v. Reeves, 75 Atl. 782, 784, 79 N. J. Law, 334.

Under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 120, § 60, providing that where real estate which is exempt from taxation is leased to another whose property is not exempt, and the leasing of which does not make the real estate taxable, the leasehold estate shall be listed as lessee's property, a leasehold estate in a railroad company's right of way held by one whose property is taxable is subject to taxation as the lessee's property. And by the express provisions of the statute, when a lease-hold estate in exempt property is taxable to the lessee, it must be taxed as real estate and not as personal property. People v. International Salt Co., 84 N. E. 278, 279, 233 Ill. 223.

Fishery

"As a right of property, a fishery is 'real' and not personal property." Hume v. Rogue River Packing Co., 92 Pac. 1065, 1068, 51 Or. 237, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 396, 131 Am. St. Rep. 732.

Fixtures

See Fixtures.

Franchise

See, also, Special Franchise.

A "franchise" does not involve an interest in land. Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 61 Atl. 532, 534, 101 Md. 541, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 109 Am. St. Rep. 584.

The original Rapid Transit Law, Laws 1891, p. 3, c. 4, contemplated that a city having over 1,000,000 inhabitants, by its rapid transit commissioners, should establish routes, obtain the necessary consents, make plans and specifications for a subway, and sell to the highest bidder for the benefit of the city the privilege and franchise to construct and operate it. Laws 1894, p. 1896, c. 752, § 35, in amendment thereof, permitted a vote of the people to determine that the subway should be constructed for and at the city's expense, and provided that, if so constructed, it should remain the absolute property of the city, and be deemed a part of the public streets. Laws 1902, pp. 1610-1614, c. 584, permitted the contractor to assign his contract, with the commissioners' consent, for the construction and operation of the subway separately, and pursuant thereto the provision of the contract for operation of the subway was assigned. Tax Law, Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, provides that the term "real estate" shall include tangible property of a railroad and also the value of all franchises to construct and operate the same over, on, or under public streets. Subdivision 3 also exempts municipal corporations from special franchise taxes, and subdivision 4 exempts property of a municipal corporation held for public use. Laws 1894, p. 1884, c. 752, § 35, in amendment of the original Rapid Transit Law, Laws 1891, p. 3, c. 4, § 35, substantially re-enacted in Laws 1900, p. 1360, c. 616, § 4, exempts the operator of such subway from taxation in respect to his interest therein under the contract with the city for its operation, and in respect to the rolling stock and other equipment of the subway. Held, that the special franchise to operate the subway acquired under assignment of the contract, with the city is exempt from a special franchise tax by the exemption of the tax law of a municipality from a special franchise tax; since, if the city had been given the power to operate the road, no special franchise tax could be imposed on it, and, as the city can only operate it through another, the operator for the city is also exempt, which exemption from a special franchise tax is not only confirmed by the rapid transit law, but that law also makes exempt the rolling stock and equipment. People ex rel. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 110 N. Y. Supp. 577, 579, 126 App. Div. 610.

Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, § 2, subd. 3, defines the terms "lands," "real property," and "real estate," as including, besides the tangible property enumerated, the value of all franchises, rights, authority, or permission to construct, maintain, or operate in, under, above, upon, or through any streets, highways, or public places, mains, pipes, etc. The term "real property" for the purposes of taxation seems to be limited to such intangible right or franchises as relate to public streets or highways and to exclude by inference such as relate to public waters. Under the statute taxable property of an electric light company situated in or under public waters, in connection with a special franchise, cannot be assessed by the commissioners of taxes in the city of New York, but is to be taxed only as a part of a special franchise assessment made by the state board of tax commissioners under section 47. People ex rel. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. Commissioners of Taxes, 110 N. Y. Supp. 833, 58 Misc. Rep. 249.

Under Tax Law (Consol. Laws, c. 60) § 2, subd. 3, defining the terms "land," "real estate," and "real property" to include land, underground railroads, including the valuation of franchises to construct and operate the same, and defining a "special franchise" to include the value of the tangible property of a corporation situated in or under or above any street, a corporation owning special franchises to operate an underground railroad under city streets owns special franchises subject to taxation, though only so small a part of the railroad is constructed and in operation as is insufficient to meet operating expenses, taxes, and interest, and the franchises, if possessing a value, are taxable, though they are not used. People ex rel. Hudson & M. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 127 N. Y. Supp. 918, 925, 143 App. Div. 26.

The tax law (Laws 1881, c. 293), defining the terms, "land," "real estate," and "real property" as including "all surface, underground or elevated railroads," and the value of all franchises to construct or operate railroads, in, under, above or through streets, is not limited to street surface railroads only, but includes long distance surface steam railroads, and hence a franchise granted by the state to a steam surface railroad for its road in, under, above, or through streets is property, and a special franchise, and taxable. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 133 N. Y. Supp. 135, 139, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 145.

Growing trees

Growing trees are a part of the "realty." Heflin v. Bingham, 56 Ala. 566, 574, 28 Am. Rep. 776.

Growing fruit trees are considered as part of the land. Griffing Bros. Co. v. Winfield, 43 South. 687, 691, 53 Fla. 589.

A contract of sale of timber allowing the purchaser 15 years to remove it is a "contract for the sale of real estate" within the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1895, art. 2543, subd. 4), and must be in writing. Adams v. Hughes (Tex.) 140 S. W. 1163, 1168.

The growing timber on the premises at the testator's death was "real estate" owned by him, and he had an interest in so much of the soil as was necessary to sustain it. Williams v. Jones, 111 N. W. 505, 507, 131 Wis. 361.

A suit to enjoin defendant from interfering with plaintiff in his right to cut and remove standing timber does not involve title to or possession of real estate within Rev. St. 1909, § 1753, providing that suits for possession of real estate, or whereby title thereto may be affected, shall be brought in the county within which it is situate, and is properly brought in the county where the parties reside, though the land is situated in another county. State ex rel. Cooper v. Goodrich, 142 S. W. 300, 301, 238 Mo. 720.

Where a minor owned an undivided half interest in the timber growing on certain land, such timber constituted real estate, and was not subject to sale by the minor's guardian without a decree of the court, as provided by Ky. St. 1903, § 2034. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Witherspoon's Adm'r (Ky.) 100 S. W. 259, 261.

Growing timber is a part of the "realty," and deeds and contracts concerning it are governed by the laws applicable to that kind of property. Hawkins v. Goldsboro Lumber Co., 51 S. E. 852, 853, 139 N. C. 160.

Standing timber is a part of the "realty," and can be conveyed only by such an instrument as is sufficient to convey any other realty. Tremaine v. Williams, 56 S. E. 694, 695, 144 N. C. 114 (citing Ward v. Gay, 49 S. E. 884, 137 N. C. 399; Drake v. Howell, 45 S. E. 539, 133 N. C. 165; Green v. North Carolina R. Co., 73 N. C. 524; Mizell v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 249, 69 Am. Dec. 744).

Standing timber is "realty," and a contract for the sale thereof affects realty.

Growing trees are part of the "realty," so that a contract of sale thereof must be in writing. Childers v. Wm. H. Coleman Co., 118 S. W. 1018, 1021, 122 Tenn. 109.

Improvements

Under the statutory provisions declaring improvements to be "real estate," and that, upon sale of real estate for delinquent taxes, the owner has the right to retain possession until the expiration of the three years for redemption, improvements upon a mining claim become upon a sale thereof for taxes so associated with the realty as to constitute an incumbrance thereon within the meaning of C. L. § 2304, allowing the holder of an incumbrance to perform the annual labor so as to prevent relocation. McVeigh v. Veig, 117 Pac. 857, 859, 16 N. M. 453.

Homestead right

The homestead right of minors in land of their deceased father is "real estate" within Rev. St. 1899, § 3504, permitting the probate court to order the sale of a minor's real estate when the personal estate is insufficient for his maintenance, etc., and section 3510, permitting the court to order a sale of a ward's real estate when it would be for his benefit; the homestead being an estate in land. Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co., 122 S. W. 709, 711, 223 Mo. 209.

Incorporeal hereditaments

An easement is "real estate," so that a suit for damages for trespass to an easement to use a waterway over defendant's land to carry waters from an irrigation ditch, and for an injunction to restrain defendant from interfering with the waterway, involves title to "real estate" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1022, subd. 5, declaring that costs are allowed to plaintiff on a judgment in his favor in an action involving title to real estate, and plaintiff, on obtaining a judgment, is entitled to costs. Hoyt v. Hart, 87 Pac. 569, 572, 149 Cal. 722 (citing and adopting Schmidt v. Klotz, 62 Pac. 470, 130 Cal. 224; Sierra Union Water & Mining Co. v. Wolf, 77 Pac. 1038, 144 Cal. 430; Gibson v. Hammang, 78 Pac. 953, 145 Cal. 454; 11 Cyc. pp. 49, 50).

An easement is "real estate" and is embraced in the words "real property" in Code Civ. Proc. § 3252, providing that, where the action is brought to compel the determination of a claim to real property, the plaintiff, if a final judgment is rendered in his favor and he recovers costs, is entitled to recover, in addition to the costs prescribed in the last section, the following percentages, to be estimated upon the value of the property, the claim to which is determined. And so, in a case wherein an easement is claimed and its value found, the clerk should tax an item for an allowance under section 3262, prescribing the method of arriving at the allowance.

Furniss v. Fogarty, 117 N. Y. Supp. 385, 386, 63 Misc. Rep. 527 (citing Slingerland v. International Contracting Co., 60 N. Y. Supp. 12, 43 App. Div. 215; 3 Kent's Com. 401, 419, 427; Jones v. Metropolitan El. R. R., 59 N. Y. Super. 437, 14 N. Y. Supp. 632; Saunders v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 38 N. E. 992, 144 N. Y. 75, 87, 26 L. R. A. 378, 43 Am. St. Rep. 729).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 20, declaring an action of ejectment to be an action to recover immediate possession of "real property," an owner may maintain ejectment against one who has taken possession of the space above the surface of the land to the extent of stretching wires across it. Butler v. Frontier Telephone Co., 95 N. Y. Supp. 684, 686, 109 App. Div. 217; Id., 79 N. E. 716, 718, 186 N. Y. 486, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 920, 116 Am. St. Rep. 563, 9 Ann. Cas. 858 (citing Co. Litt. 4a; 2 Blackstone's Comm. 18; 3 Kent's Com. [14th Ed.] 401; Warvelle, Eject. 34; Crabb, Real Prop., 710; Butler's Nisi Prius, 99; Jackson v. Buel [N. Y.] 9 Johns. 298; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382, 389; Patch v. Keeler, 27 Vt. 252, 255; Nichols v. Lewis, 15 Conn. 137).

Lands synonymous

The word "land," as used in Va. Code 1904, § 1105f (3-6), authorizing the condemnation of lands or any interest or estate therein, includes easements, and other incorporeal hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, and is synonymous, with the terms "real estate" and "real property." Swann v. Washington Southern R. Co., 61 S. E. 750, 751, 108 Va. 282 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 306).

Under Code, § 785, requiring a city changing an established grade of a street to the injury of abutting property to pay the damages to the owner, and section 48 (8, 10), defining "real property" as including lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, and the word "property" as including real property, a tenant for life or for years of a city lot is an "owner" to the extent of his interest, and may sue the city for injuries sustained by a change in the established grade of the street in front of the property. Chiesa & Co. v. City of Des Moines (Iowa) 138 N. W. 922, 924.

The terms "property sold," "real estate," "premises," and "land" are used interchangeably. The phrase "upon the property sold," in the statutory definition of a redemptioner as being one holding "a lien by judgment or mortgage upon the property sold," applies to the land or premises, as those words are commonly used. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 463, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

Leasehold

An unexpired three-year lease on premises condemned was "personal property," and not "real estate," within the constitutional provision conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases involving title to real estate. Springfield S. W. Ry. Co. v. Schweitzer, 151 S. W. 128, 131, 246 Mo. 122.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 1656 (Pierce's Code, § 8592), providing that real property for the purpose of taxation shall be construed to include the land itself, "and all rights and privileges thereto belonging," a leasehold should be assessed as real estate and not as personal property. State v. Rourke, 87 Pac. 507, 508, 44 Wash. 465 (citing Reilly v. Anderson, 73 Pac. 799, 33 Wash. 58; Chicago Attachment Co. v. Davis Sewing Mach. Co., 31 N. E. 438, 142 Ill. 171, 15 L. R. A. 754; Sanford v. Johnson, 24 Minn. 172; McKee v. Howe, 31 Pac. 115, 17 Colo. 538).

An oral contract, whereby defendant agreed to execute to plaintiff a written conveyance of her whole life estate in certain property, agreeing not to claim any right or interest therein, except to cut such firewood as she needed for her own use, plaintiff to pay her a certain sum per year for the land as long as she lived, was one for the sale of land, and void under Ky. St. 1903, § 458, providing that the words "real estate or land" shall be construed to mean any interest therein, other than a chattel interest, and section 470 (statute of frauds), providing that no action shall be brought to charge any person on any contract for the sale of real estate unless the contract is in writing. Miller v. Hart, 91 S. W. 698, 700, 122 Ky. 494.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 458, providing that the words "real estate" or "land" shall be construed to mean any interest other than a chattel interest, and section 470, providing that no action shall be brought upon a contract relating to real estate unless in writing, a parol contract to board and care for the owner of a life estate in land in consideration of the use of the land is void, though board was furnished in reliance on the contract. Hampton v. Glass (Ky.) 116 S. W. 243, 244.

Meteorite or aerolite

A "meteorite" or "aerolite," though not buried in the earth, is nevertheless real estate, belonging to the owner of the land, and not personal property, in the absence of proof of severance. Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 81 Pac. 572, 573, 47 Or. 313, 8 Ann. Cas. 556.

Mining claim

Unpatented lode mining claims are "real property," and as such are subject to the lien of a judgment recovered against their owner when docketed pursuant to Laws Ariz. 1891, Act No. 50, § 4; the term being defined by a territorial statute in force when the judgment in question was rendered and docketed as coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments. Bradford v. Morrison, 86 Pac. 6, 7, 10 Ariz. 214; Id., 29 Sup. Ct. 349, 351, 212 U. S. 389, 53 L. Ed. 564 (quoting and adopting definitions in Ariz. St., pars. 2708, 2948).

Under Pol. Code, § 3617, defining the term "real estate" as including the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to, the possession of land, and all mines, minerals, and quarries in and under the land, all timber belonging to individuals or corporations growing or being on the lands of the United States, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto, the possessory right to a mining claim is "real estate," and as such may be sold and transferred, and is subject to taxes like other property. Bakersfield & Fresno Oil Co. v. Kern County, 77 Pac. 892, 894, 144 Cal. 148 (quoting the definition in Pol. Code, § 3617).

Mineral

Minerals in the earth are part of the "real estate," and an instrument by which they are conveyed must be executed with the formalities of a conveyance of land. Brooks v. Cook, 38 South. 641, 643, 141 Ala. 499.

Minerals in the earth are "real estate," and when the owner of them has not the fee to the surface of such land they should be separately assessed and taxed. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 752, 75 Kan. 335 (quoting Mining Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Crawford County, 80 Pac. 601, 71 Kan. 276).

As money

See Money.

Oil and gas

Oil before its extraction is a mineral and is a part of the "realty." Swayne v. Lone Acre Oil Co., 86 S. W. 740, 742, 98 Tex. 597, 69 L. R. A. 986, 8 Ann. Cas. 1117; Isom v. Rex Crude Oil Co., 82 Pac. 817, 318, 147 Cal. 659.

Petroleum oil and natural gas are minerals and in their place are "real estate" and part of the land. Preston v. White, 50 S. E. 236, 237, 57 W. Va. 278.

Petroleum oil is a mineral, and while it is in the earth it forms a part of the "realty"; and, when it reaches a well and is produced on the surface, it becomes personal property and belongs to the owner of the well. If it moves from place to place by percolation, or otherwise, it forms a part of the tract of land in which it tarries for the time being, and, if it moves to the next adjoining tract, it becomes a part and parcel of that tract, and it forms a part of the same tract, until it reaches a well and is raised to the surface and then for the first time it becomes the subject of distinct ownership separate from the "realty." It becomes the property of and belongs to the person who reaches it by means of a well and severs it from the realty. Nonamaker v. Amos, 76 N. E. 949, 951, 73 Ohio St. 163, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 4 Ann. Cas. 170 (citing Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co., 49 N. E. 399, 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 63 Am. St. Rep. 721; Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Co. v. Ullery, 67 N. E. 494, 68 Ohio St. 259).

Rights of a company under a lease to take a stratum of oil or oil-bearing sand, and convert it to its own use, with the right to possession of the surface so far as necessary to enable it to bore for and extract the oil, constitute a claim to the possession of land, and hence are "real estate" within Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 2, cl. 1, providing that the term "real estate," as used in connection with taxation, shall include a claim to the possession of land, so that they can be assessed separately from the ownership of the other parts of the land when held separately. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County, 99 Pac. 483, 486, 155 Cal. 140, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211.

Oyster bed

The right to plant and take oysters in a bed in front of land is nothing but a mere license or privilege, and is not "real estate" within the meaning of Code, § 550, providing that the owner of real estate may file a bill to remove a cloud from his title. Catchot v. Zeigler, 45 South. 707, 92 Miss. 191.

Pipe line

A pipe line permanently placed in the soil, in which the company has acquired an interest by deed, is "real estate," within the meaning of Tax Law, 1866, Revision p. 1150, § 62, defining "real estate" to include all lands, all water power thereon or appurtenant thereto, and all buildings or erections thereon or affixed to the same, trees and underwood growing thereon, and all mines, quarries, peat, and marl beds, and all fisheries. State v. Berry, 19 Atl. 605, 606, 52 N. J. Law, 308.

Wells, conduits, flumes, and pipe lines affixed and attached to the soil for the purposes of a water company are entitled to be taxed as real estate; Pol. Code, § 3617, providing that the term "real property" includes the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land. California Domestic Water Co. v. Los Angeles County, 101 Pac. 547, 548, 10 Cal. App. 185.

As property

See Personal Property; Property.

Railway property

It has been uniformly held that the words "real estate" in a tax act will not be construed to include land necessary to the franchises of a public corporation. Under Act April 2, 1858 (P. L. 385), providing that real property of corporations—the superstructure of the road and water stations alone excepted—shall be subject to taxation for city purposes, a power house for the manufacture of electricity, owned and used by a traction motor company operating street railways, is exempt from taxation. City of Philadelphia v. Electric Traction Co., 57 Atl. 354, 355, 208 Pa. 157.

Rapid Transit Act (Laws 1891, c. 4) § 35, as amended by Laws 1900, c. 616, § 4, exempting the operator of subway roads from taxation as to the rolling stock and all other equipment, but not as to "real property," exempts machinery installed in permanent power houses to generate motive power, but not the power houses. People ex rel. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. O'Donnel, 95 N. E. 762, 764, 202 N. Y. 313.

Lien law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418; Gen. Laws c. 49) § 2, makes "real property" include "real estate, lands, tenements and hereditaments corporeal and incorporeal, fixtures and all bridges and trestle work, and structures connected therewith, erected for the use of railroads. * * *" Section 3 of the same law provides that a contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, who performs labor, or furnishes material for the improvement of "real property," shall have a lien. Held, that the term "real property" is not restricted in case of labor performed and material furnished to a railroad company to bridges and trestle work and the structures connected therewith erected for the use of railroads, but the term includes not only real estate, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, and fixtures, but in addition thereto all bridges, trestle work, and structures connected therewith, for the use of railroads, as the Legislature, in specifically referring to bridges and trestle work and structures connected therewith for the use of railroads, intended to remove them from the realm of uncertain classification and place them unmistakably in the general category of "real property." Schaghticoke Powder Co. v. Greenwich & J. Ry. Co., 76 N. E. 153, 156, 183 N. Y. 306, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 111 Am. St. Rep. 751, 5 Ann. Cas. 443.

Railway roadbed

In view of prior judicial decisions and the construction of Act Jan. 4, 1859 (P. L. 828) § 3, relating to taxation of railroad property in the city of Pittsburgh, as shown by the fact that, for nearly 50 years after its passage, no attempt was made by the city to assess the rights of way of a railroad for taxation, the words "real estate," as used in such act, cannot be considered to include the rights of way. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, 70 Atl. 271, 273, 221 Pa. 80.

The roadbed of a public railroad is not "real estate" within the meaning of Act June 4, 1901 (P. L. 364), and is not subject to assessment for local taxation or municipal claims. City of Philadelphia v. Fairhill R. Co., 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 245.

Acts 1895, p. 243, c. 123, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 5123), provides that waterworks companies may condemn lands for the source of supplies, pumping stations, settling basins, filtering basins or tanks, storage reservoirs, supply mains, delivery reservoirs, tank or stand pipes, and delivery mains, and the necessary lines of pipe connecting them. Acts 1905, p. 398, c. 129, § 256 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8941), provides that any corporation engaged in the business of providing any city or town and its inhabitants with water, as provided for in the previous two sections, may condemn such real estate and rights of way as may be necessary for its business. Section 254, p. 396 (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8939), authorizes a city or town to contract with any person or corporation to furnish it and its inhabitants with water, etc. Held, that the phrase "real estate and rights of way" means such only as may be reasonably necessary to such companies for construction and maintenance of its works, laying and maintenance of pipe lines, mains, and conduits, and for the erection and maintenance of poles, wires, and other proper structures and appliances, and not such ways of railway communication as might become expedient and desirable because of an unfavorable location of the power plant, voluntarily chosen, and hence a right of way for a stub switch connecting its plant with a railroad could not be condemned by such a company. Kinney v. Citizens' Water & Light Co. of Greenwood, 90 N. E. 129, 131, 173 Ind. 262, 263, L. R. A. (N. S.) 195.

Several tracts

Where property consisting of separate parcels situated in different counties was not originally held in common by all the co-tenants of the various parcels, or their predecessors in title, there was no such unity of title as authorized the joinder of all the parcels in one suit for partition under Code Civ. Proc. § 752, authorizing co-tenants in possession of "real property" to sue for a partition thereof; the words "real property" referring to such as to which such unity of title exists as authorizes a single action. Middlecoff v. Cronise, 100 Pac. 232, 235, 155 Cal. 185, 17 Ann. Cas. 1159.

Street

The words "real property," in Comp. Laws 1907, § 313x, providing that any city council may aid the building of railroads by granting real property not necessary for municipal or public purposes on such limitations as the council shall prescribe, etc., include the city streets of which the fee is in the city. Knight v. Thomas, 101 Pac. 383, 384, 85 Utah, 470.

Telegraph or telephone property

Under Pol. Code, §§ 3617, 3663, defining "real estate" for taxable purposes as land including the improvements, except telegraph lines, which shall be assessed as personalty, and Bridgeford Act (St. 1897, p. 267, c. 189) § 39, providing that, on refusal of the directors to make the assessments in irrigation districts, the assessment made by the county assessor and the state board of equalization shall be the basis of assessment, an irrigation district cannot assess for revenue purpose the poles and wires of a telegraph company placed on the land of a railway company under a contract reserving such property as personalty. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Modesto Irr. Co., 87 Pac. 190, 192, 149 Cal. 662, 9 Ann. Cas. 1190.

Tax Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 60) § 2, subd. 3, defines land and real estate to include all bridges or telegraph lines, wires, poles, and appurtenances, and also all mains, pipes, and tanks laid or placed in any place for conducting electricity or any substance or product capable of transmission or conveyance therein. Held that, where a telephone company maintained a switchboard and appliances essential for its business in a building in a village on which it had a lease for 10 years, the switchboard, for the purposes of taxation, was properly regarded as "real property" and taxable in the village, though the company's main office was in another city. People ex rel. Federal Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Longwell, 131 N. Y. Supp. 361, 363.

Tunnel

Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 120, § 202, par. 12, declares that intangible property of corporations similar to telegraph and telephone companies shall be assessed by the state board of equalization, and that tangible property including real and personal property of such corporations shall be assessed by the board of local assessors. The statute defines "real property" for the purpose of taxation as not only the land itself with all things contained therein, but also all permanent fixtures of whatsoever kind and all rights and privileges belonging or in any way pertaining thereto, except as otherwise denominated by the act. Held, that the rights of certain telephone, telegraph, and tunnel companies to use tunnels constructed by them in the streets of Chicago authorizing the maintenance thereof for 30 years were assessable for taxation against such companies as "real property." People ex rel. City of Chicago v. Upham, 77 N. E. 931, 932, 221 Ill. 555 (citing People ex rel. New York & H. R. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Taxes, 4 N. E. 127, 101 N. Y. 322).

Turnpike

Where a turnpike company did not own the fee in the land on which its pike was constructed, but owned a continuing easement therein for the maintenance of the pike during the life of the company's franchise, such easement, together with the corporation's tangible property, consisting of bridges, culverts, ditches, prepared roadbeds, and structures on the soil, were taxable to it as "real property," under Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, subd. 3, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, providing that the term "real property" shall include not only the land itself, above and under water, but all buildings and other articles and structures, and superstructures erected upon or under the same, etc. In re President, etc., of Albany & B. Turnpike Road, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1104, 1107, 94 App. Div. 509.

Water and ice

The right conferred on a landowner by his contract with a water company to have water flow from its canal, through a lateral ditch, to his land, for its irrigation, for a term of years, is a servitude on the ditch and canal, and an appurtenance to the land, and so is "real property." Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 93 Pac. 858, 862, 152 Cal. 716, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359.

"Water rights" are regarded as "real property," and therefore an agreement in respect thereto must be in writing, in order to comply with the statute of frauds. Bree v. Wheeler, 87 Pac. 255, 4 Cal. App. 109 (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 1971; Civ. Code, § 1624; Hayes v. Fine, 27 Pac. 772, 91 Cal. 391; Blankenship v. Whaley, 57 Pac. 79, 124 Cal. 304).

A right to use water for irrigation is deemed "real property," and is the subject of a grant, either with or without the land for which it was appropriated. Davis v. Randall, 99 Pac. 322, 324, 44 Colo. 488.

The right to the use of water for irrigation is real estate, and the proper method of conveying title thereto is by deed. Bates v. Hall, 98 Pac. 3, 4, 44 Colo. 360.

Under the Constitution and statutes of this state, a water right is "real property," and is an appurtenance to the land irrigated by the use of such water. Paddock v. Clark, 126 Pac. 1053, 1054, 22 Idaho, 498.

A water permit is not "real property" under Rev. Codes, § 3056. Speer v. Stephenson, 102 Pac. 365, 368, 16 Idaho, 707.

A water right is "real property" under the express provisions of Rev. Codes 1905, § 3056, and one who has actually diverted the water of a stream to a beneficial use is in actual possession of such property; such possession constituting actual notice to any person who subsequently applies to the state engineer for a permit to appropriate and divert the water of the same stream. Nielson v. Parker, 115 Pac. 488, 490, 19 Idaho, 727.

A water right is real estate, and must be conveyed as real estate; and, where one has a valid water permit issued to him by the state engineer, he cannot convey the water right secured thereby by simply handing the permit to a would-be purchaser. Gard v. Thompson, 123 Pac. 497, 502, 21 Idaho, 485.

A "water right" is the legal right to the use of any unappropriated water of any natural stream, water course, or source of supply, and exists only in contemplation of law, and is for purposes of taxation "personal property," within Const. art. 12, § 17, and Pol. Code, 1895, §§ 16, 3680, defining "property" as including money, franchises, and other things capable of private ownership, and defining "real estate" as including the possession or ownership of land, mines, minerals, and quarries, and "improvements," as including all buildings, structures, etc., and "personal property" as including everything which is the subject of ownership, not included within real estate or improvements, so that under section 3716, providing that the personal property and franchises of water companies must be assessed in the district where the principal works are located, a water company owning a water right without the limits of a school district and conveying water by pipe lines into the district, where it is distributed to the inhabitants thereof, is properly assessed in the district; that being the place of business and principal works of the company. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Settles, 95 Pac. 838, 37 Mont. 237.

REAL RIGHTS

See Contracts Concerning Real Rights.

REAL VALUE

Act May 20, 1890 (Ky. St. 1903, § 3915), prohibiting trusts to regulate the price of any article or to limit the amount of any article, and Acts 1906, p. 429, c. 117, legalizing the pooling of farm products, when construed in connection with Const. § 198, requiring the Legislature to pass laws to prevent trusts, pools, etc., to depreciate any article below its "real value," or to enhance its cost above its real value, are not invalid because uncertain, for the standard fixed is "real value," which is "market value," at a sale under normal conditions, unaffected by any combination of producers or dealers whose object is to create an abnormal condition in the market, and is susceptible of proof by proof of preexisting facts. The court, in distinguishing this holding from a previous decision declaring a statute prohibiting railroads from charging "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll" unconstitutional, because of uncertainty in determining what would be a just and reasonable rate of toll, said: "There is a marked difference between the qualities of the 'real value' of an article, and 'reasonable compensation' for a service. The latter may depend alone upon the opinion of the trier of the fact; the former is itself a fact susceptible of proof and exact ascertainment." Commonwealth v. International Harvester Co., 115 S. W. 703, 711, 712, 131 Ky. 551, 133 Am. St. Rep. 256.

REALIZE

There is no material difference between the words "apparent" and "reasonably apparent," as used in an instruction, in an action for injuries sustained in a railroad crossing accident, making the doctrine of discovered peril applicable if the employees on the engine saw the person injured on the track, and it was apparent, or reasonably apparent, that he would not get off, and the words "realized his peril." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 115 S. W. 340, 343.

REALTY

See Real Property.

REALTY COMPANY

As trading corporation, see Trading Corporation.

REAMING MACHINE

A "reaming machine" is a heavy, cumbersome device, which reams or enlarges bolt holes already drilled. American Car & Foundry Co. v. Thornton, 183 Fed. 114, 115, 105 C. C. A. 33.

REASON

See By Reason of; Dethronement of Reason; Good and Lawful Reasons; Good Reason to Believe; If for any Reason; Sound Reason.

Any reason, see Any.

Reason for appeal

The "reasons of appeal," in a patent appeal, are in the nature of the ordinary assignments of error in actions at law or in equity. Horne v. Wende, 29 App. D. C. 415, 422.

Reason for dismissal

The term "reasons for dismissal," in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 77, § 53, authorizing the board of school trustees to remove teachers at their election, after notice in writing, giving, when required by the teacher, the reasons for dismissal, is not satisfied where the letter notifying the teacher states that the trustees believe it for the best interest of the school that her services be dispensed with, and is insufficient. Underwood v. Board of County School Com'rs of Prince George's County, 63 Atl. 221, 223, 103 Md. 181.

REASONABLE

See If Reasonable.

"The Standard Dictionary gives a definition of 'reasonable' which includes five different meanings. The first is: 'Conformable to reason; such as is rational, fitting, or proper; sensible; as a reasonable view.'" Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 86 S. W. 17, 18.

An act is "reasonable" when it is conformable or agreeable to reason. A "reasonable act" signifies such an act as the law requires or permits. McCarty v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 81 N. E. 549, 553, 189 N. Y. 40, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 12 Ann. Cas. 840 (citing 1 Blackstone's Com. 70; 2 Bouv. [Rawle's Rev.] 828).

What is reasonable is not necessarily what is best, but what is fairly appropriate to the purpose under all the circumstances. The scope of the term "reasonable" as regards any situation must be measured, having regard to the fundamental principles of human liberty as understood at the time of the formation of the Constitution, adapting the same to modern conditions. Bonnett v. Vallier, 116 N. W. 885, 888, 136 Wis. 193, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061.

The word "reasonable" is a term difficult of definition, and usually it must be considered with the facts of the particular controversy in determining its force and latitude. It is sometimes used to express that which is appropriate and necessary. It imports what is ordinary or usual under the circumstances of the case. Rexroth v. Holloway, 90 N. E. 87, 88, 45 Ind. App. 36.

In an action for personal injuries from a defective sidewalk, there was no error in refusing an instruction in which the word "reasonable" was defined to mean "in a reasonable manner; consistent with reason; in a moderate degree; tolerably." The definition seems to have been taken from the dictionaries, which are not always reliable when used in a court of law. It is true "tolerably" is treated by such authors or synonymous with "reasonable," but it is not always, if ever, so understood. As used by the people it does not mean "reasonable," but on the contrary to indicate an indifferent condition or state. The word "reasonable" was sufficient in itself for the purpose, and did not require definition. York v. City of Everton, 97 S. W. 604, 607, 121 Mo. App. 640.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger by the starting of a train while he was alighting, an instruction that it was the duty of the carrier to stop the train a sufficient time to permit passengers to leave the car with safety was properly modified by changing the word "sufficient" to "reasonable." A "sufficient" time, where the passenger acts with "reasonable" diligence, is but tantamount to giving the passenger a reasonable opportunity to alight. Barringer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 85 S. W. 94, 95, 87 S. W. 814, 73 Ark. 548.

The word "reasonable" is generic, and difficult of adequate definition. As used in Greater New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 500, c. 378) § 1406, relating to the power of certain judges to certify that it is reasonable that a charge of misdemeanor should be prosecuted by indictment, the word should be construed as equivalent to just, proper, fair, or equitable. People v. Butts, 105 N. Y. Supp. 677, 678, 121 App. Div. 226.

As used in the Greater New York charter providing that if, before the commencement of any trial in the Court of Special Sessions, certain judicial officers, including a judge authorized to hold a Court of General Sessions of the Peace for the county of New York, shall certify that it is reasonable that such charge shall be presented by indictment, the court of Special Sessions shall be divested of jurisdiction thereof, the word "reasonable" means "just, proper, fair, equitable." People v. Rosenberg, 112 N. Y. Supp. 316, 318, 59 Misc. Rep. 342.

The constitutional provision that duties and excises must be "reasonable" was not designed to give the judicial department the right to revise the decisions of the Legislature as to the policy and expediency of an excise. The court cannot declare a tax or excise illegal and void, as being unreasonable, unless it is unequal, or plainly and grossly oppressive, and contrary to common right. Minot v. Winthrop, 38 N. E. 512, 516, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 133 Mass. 161, 163).

The word "reasonable" limits the police power, both as to subjects to be regulated and the character of the regulation, by express constitutional inhibition and the judgment of the judiciary as to what is within the realm of such subjects, and reasonable and fair doubts in all cases are sufficient to turn the scales in favor of legislative authority whenever it shall have been asserted. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medicinal College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 517, 127 Wis. 468.

As just or honest

"Reasonable" means just, honest. State v. Churchill, 100 Pac. 309, 314, 52 Wash. 210.

The word "reasonable," as used in an instruction, means governed by reason; agreeable to reason; and its synonyms are just and honest. "Satisfactory" means relieving the mind of doubt or uncertainty, and enabling it to rest with confidence. "Probable" means capable of being proved; having more evidence for than against. And the instruction is erroneous, for accused's explanation of the possession of stolen property may or may not be reasonable, probable, satisfactory, or true, yet if in the minds of the jury it creates a reasonable doubt of his guilt, he is entitled to an acquittal, and the burden is thrown on the prosecution to establish the falsity of it beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Trospen, 109 Pac. 858, 859, 41 Mont. 442.

As rational

An instruction that if the accused killed decedent in sudden passion, and not in defense against an attack "reasonably producing a rational fear" of death or serious injury, he should be found guilty of manslaughter, was not erroneous in using the word "rational," rather than "reasonable," especially where a subsequent charge fully submitted the issue of self-defense. The word "rational," in the connection here used, is more favorable than the word "reasonable." A fear might be rational, and not reasonable. Christian v. State, 79 S. W. 562, 563, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 47.

Tolerably not synonymous

The dictionary definition of "reasonable" as synonymous with "tolerably" is not always reliable when the term is used in law. York v. City of Everton, 97 S. W. 604, 607, 121 Mo. App. 640.

REASONABLE ACCOMMODATIONS

The word "reasonable," as used in Civ. Code 1902, § 2157, requiring every railroad to furnish "reasonable" accommodations for the convenience and safety of passengers, was intended to have a broad meaning, and signifies that the accommodations shall be reasonable, as distinguished from extreme luxury or scantiness—that is, sufficient for all reasonable purposes—and further conveys the meaning that reasonable efforts, considering all the circumstances, must be made to provide such sufficient accommodations. In an action by a passenger against a railroad company for injury, caused by the negligent and wanton breach of duty by the defendant to provide for the safety of its passengers, an instruction requiring the carrier to use "sufficient" accommodations, instead of "reasonable" accommodations, as required by statute, was not erroneous, where from another instruction given it was manifest that the court did not intend to convey to the jury by use of the word "sufficient" any meaning beyond that intended by "reasonable" as used in the statute, and in that connection read to the jury the section of the statute requiring railroad companies to furnish "reasonable" accommodations. Anderson v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 61 S. E. 1096, 1098, 81 S. C. 1.

REASONABLE AMOUNT

Under a requirement that a health officer's salary shall be fixed at a reasonable amount, it was held that a "reasonable amount" meant an amount commensurate with the services, estimated from past experience and present conditions which he would be required to perform during the year. Butler County v. Gardner (Ky.) 96 S. W. 582, 583 (citing Center's Adm'r v. Breathitt County, 90 S. W. 1054, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 1003).

REASONABLE AND ORDINARY CARE

"Reasonable and ordinary care" depends largely on the circumstances of each particular case, and is such care as a person of reasonable and ordinary prudence and skill would reasonably exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Cousineau v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co., 108 N. W. 720, 722, 145 Mich. 314.

REASONABLE AND WELL-GROUND-ED BELIEF

The phrase a "reasonable and well-grounded belief," in an instruction that a homicide is justifiable by one without fault who is attacked by another, where the circumstances furnish reasonable ground for apprehending a design to take life, provided the belief is a reasonable and well-grounded belief, etc., means that accused actually and in good faith believed that he was then in danger, and that he had reason and cause for such belief. Wells v. Territory, 78 Pac. 124, 130, 14 Okl. 436.

REASONABLE ATTORNEY'S FEE

See, also, Reasonable Compensation.

The statute allowing a reasonable attorney's fee in an action on a fire policy means such a fee as would be reasonable to pay an attorney for prosecuting the action. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co. v. McAdams, 115 S. W. 175, 178, 88 Ark. 550.

REASONABLE CARE

See Reasonable Diligence and Care.

See, also, Reasonable Exertion.

The standard of "reasonable care" is that of the man of average foresight and prudence, and is to be determined by that which is usual and ordinary. Sharpsburg Sand Co. v. Monongahela R. Consol. Coal & Coke Co., 145 Fed. 424, 426.

"Reasonable care" is such care as an ordinarily prudent person will usually exercise under like circumstances. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. McElroy, 142 S. W. 1009, 1011, 146 Ky. 668; Northern Alabama R. Co. v. Mansell, 36 South. 459, 463, 138 Ala. 548 (citing Holland v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 8 South. 524, 91 Ala. 444, 12 L. R. A. 232; Dresser on Employers' Liability, pp. 194, 195).

"Reasonable care" is the care which a prudent person would use in like agencies and under like circumstances. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Webb, 97 S. W. 1010, 1012, 8 Ind. T. 280.

"Reasonable care" is such care as may be reasonably expected of a person of ordinary prudence under like circumstances. Reason to know a fact is such as would apprise a person of ordinary prudence of it." Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 519, 140 Ky. 652.

"Reasonable care" is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would take under similar circumstances to avoid accidents, in view of the risks incurred. Reiss v. Wilmington City Ry. Co. (Del.) 67 Atl. 153, 154; Smithers v. Wilmington City Ry. Co. (Del.) 67 Atl. 167, 168, 6 Pennewill, 422.

"Reasonable or ordinary care" is such care as an ordinarily prudent person will usually use under circumstances the same or similar to those proven in a particular case. West Kentucky Coal Co. v. Davis, 128 S. W. 1074, 1077, 138 Ky. 667.

"Reasonable care" is that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would exercise taking into consideration the dangers to be apprehended and guarded against which a statute intended to obviate. Richardson v. El Paso Consol. Gold Mining Co., 118 Pac. 982, 986, 51 Colo. 440.

"Reasonable care," as applied to the care to be used in respect to carpets by one who received them to be cleaned, was such care as an ordinarily prudent man would take under like circumstances with respect to his own property. Bowen v. Isenberg Bros. Co. (Del.) 67 Atl. 152, 153, 6 Pennewill, 230.

The "reasonable care" which an employer is obligated to use is that care which a man of ordinary prudence in the same line of business would be expected to exercise to secure his own safety were he doing the work. Sterne v. Mariposa Commercial & Mining Co., 97 Pac. 66, 69, 153 Cal. 516 (citing Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Helmlich, 127 Fed. 94, 62 C. C. A. 92).

Whether an injured servant was guilty of contributory negligence depends upon whether he was exercising "reasonable care," which is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same conditions and circumstances. Jenney Electric Mfg. Co. v. Flannery (Ind.) 98 N. E. 424, 428.

In an action for injuries to an employee caused by the negligence of his employer, "reasonable care," as used in the instructions defining the obligations of the parties, is such care as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under like circumstances and conditions to those shown in the evidence. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Norgate, 141 Fed. 247, 259, 72 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 5 Ann. Cas. 448.

Plaintiff, who was working on defendant's building, was injured while riding on a freight elevator, owing to the same tipping to one side. There was a sign clearly visible, which stated that passengers were not allowed to ride on the elevator. It had been inspected and found in good condition a week before the accident, and was found in good condition immediately after the accident, and plaintiff was told to get upon the elevator by a servant of defendant, who was an "oiler" and had no authority to give such directions. Held, that there was no absence of "reasonable care" on the part of defendant. McGuirk v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 536, 537, 50 Misc. Rep. 590 (citing Hubener v. Heide, 76 N. Y. Supp. 758, 73 App. Div. 200).

As governed by circumstances

What is "reasonable care" largely depends on the peculiar circumstances of the given situation. Feeney v. Wabash R. Co., 99 S. W. 477, 479, 123 Mo. App. 420.

"Reasonable care" is a relative term. What constitutes its exercise by a motorman in the middle of a block may be entirely inadequate at a street intersection. The necessity for its exercise by the motorman, however, is present over his entire route, but in varying degree, depending upon circumstances, and the absence or presence of peril to travelers in the street. Solomon v. Buffalo R. Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 99, 101, 96 App. Div. 487.

What constitutes "reasonable care" in a particular case depends on the circumstances, on the nature of the company's undertaking, on the confidence which it invites, and on the value and character of the deposit intrusted to its care. Masonic Temple Safety Deposit Co. v. Langfelt, 117 Ill. App. 652, 658.

The "reasonable care" which persons are bound to take, in order to avoid injury to others, is proportionate to the probability of injury that may arise to others. And where a person does what is more than ordinarily dangerous, he is bound to use more than ordinary care. J. G. Christopher Co. v. Russell, 58 South. 45, 47, 63 Fla. 191, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 564.

"Reasonable care" demands increased watchfulness and greater caution in proportion to the dangerous nature of the instrumentality employed; that is, "due care" means care which is reasonably commensurate with a known danger and the seriousness of the consequences which are liable to follow its omission. Brown v. West Riverside Coal Co., 120 N. W. 732, 734, 143 Iowa, 662, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1260.

"Reasonable care" is such care as an ordinarily reasonable and prudent person exercises with respect to his own affairs under like circumstances. The term is a relative one and what under one set of circumstances would be due care would under other circumstances be negligence. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 604, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

The terms "reasonable care" and "ordinary care" are often used as convertible terms and are generally so understood. Hence an instruction using the term "reasonable care" instead of "ordinary care" in explaining the quantum of care to be exercised by the employer to make rules and regulations for the protection of its employes did not tend to confuse and mislead the jury. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Walker (Tex.) 125 S. W. 99, 100, 106.

"Reasonable care" under existing circumstances is what a person has the right to require of another, and the degree of care required increases with any increase of the apparent danger involved in its absence, or with the increased power of control of one of the parties whose conduct is in question. Gardner v. Boston Elevated Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 534, 535, 204 Mass. 213.

"Reasonable care," which a street car passenger is required to exercise in alighting from a car, is such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances; such care being proportioned to the risk incurred. Elliott v. Wilmington City Ry. Co. (Del.) 73 Atl. 1040, 1042, 6 Pennewill, 570.

By "reasonable or ordinary care," which is the care the master is required to exercise toward his servant, is meant such care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise under similar circumstances. Zels v. St. Louis Brewing Ass'n, 104 S. W. 99, 101, 205 Mo. 638.

A master is bound to use "reasonable care" in securing the employe a reasonably safe place to work and to be reasonably careful in warning the servant of any special and peculiar dangers incident to some particular locality concerning which the master is advised, or should be advised, if he has been reasonably careful; the word "reasonable" being one of no precise definition, but varying in signification with the circumstances of each particular case. Co-operant Telephone Co. v. St. Clair, 168 Fed. 645, 647, 94 C. C. A. 109.

"Reasonable care" is a relative term, to be determined by the surroundings of each case and the dangers to be apprehended and avoided. The construction of a platform may be such that a very high degree of care will be required in its construction and maintenance. * * * There are depressions and steps in sidewalks which the law recognizes as not negligent and the risk of which the traveler must assume and guard against. We are not prepared to say that a hole six inches deep and containing a loose obstacle in its bottom would not constitute negligence even in a sidewalk. We think it evidently would constitute negligence when existing in a platform upon which passengers are invited to step when alighting from cars. A passenger has a right to assume that such platform is reasonably safe. He must alight with reasonable expedition. Others may alight before him and partially obstruct his view. He may be holding his traveling bag or packages, which may also somewhat interfere with his vision. Crowe v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 106 N. W. 396, 397, 142 Mich. 692 (citing St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Barnett, 45 S. W. 550, 65 Ark. 255; Johns v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co., 17 S. E. 698, 29 S. C. 162, 20 L. R. A. 520, 39 Am. St. Rep. 709).

"Reasonable and ordinary care," which in law have the same meaning, is the care which reasonable and prudent men use under like circumstances, and must be measured by the character, risk, and exposure of the business; and the degree required is higher where life or limb is endangered. Reasonable or ordinary care cannot be determined abstractly, for what would be such care in one case might be gross negligence in another, and therefore whether such care has been exercised depends upon, and can only be determined by, the facts in each particular case, and is generally a question of fact for the jury to determine. Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 76 Pac. 1089, 1090, 28 Utah, 46, 67 L. R. A. 508 (citing Cayzer v. Taylor [Mass.] 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 817; Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, 538, 21 L. Ed. 206; Boyle v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 71 Pac. 988, 991, 25 Utah, 422, 430; Shearman & Redfield, Neg. § 195; Bailey's Mast. Liab. p. 101; Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co., 20 Atl. 517, 518, 136 Pa. 618, 626, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944; Dickert v. Salt Lake City Ry. Co., 59 Pac. 95, 20 Utah, 394).

Electric companies are bound to use "reasonable care" in the construction and maintenance of their lines and apparatus. This care varies with the risks to be apprehended from negligence. Where the wires carry strong and dangerous currents of electricity, and the result of negligence may be exposure to death or serious accident, a high degree of care is required. Under such circumstances "reasonable care" and a "high degree of diligence" may be deemed to be synonymous. Gilbert v. Duluth General Electric Co., 100 N. W. 653, 655, 93 Minn. 99, 106 Am. St. Rep. 430.

The better doctrine is that care or the want of it is not to be measured arbitrarily according to fixed definitions as "slight care," "ordinary care," or "extraordinary care," or "slight negligence" or "gross negligence," although all these phrases are used somewhat loosely by courts and law writers, but it is to be measured by reasonableness, under all the circumstances of the particular inquiry. The only true measure is "reasonable care." And that expression has been declared by the courts in England and elsewhere to be synonymous with "ordinary care." "Reasonable care" is a relative term, and what is reasonable care in a given case depends upon many considerations. What would be reasonable care under some conditions would clearly be negligence in others. Reasonable care and vigilance vary according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention. They relate to the work to be done, to the instrumentalities to be used, to the dangers that may result from their use, to the varying duties owed by those who supply or use them. And in all cases "reasonable care" means such care as reasonable and prudent men used under like circumstances. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278 (citing Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. R. [Mass.] 1 Allen, 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Palmer v. Penobscot Lumbering Ass'n, 38 Atl. 108, 90 Me. 193; Sawyer v. J. M. Arnold Shoe Co., 38 Atl. 333, 90 Me. 369; Cayzer v. Taylor [Mass.] 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 817; Cunningham v. Hall [Mass.] 4 Allen, 268; Holly v. Boston Gaslight Co. [Mass.] 8 Gray, 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233).

One operating an automobile and a pedestrian using the streets must exercise "reasonable care" to prevent accidents, and such care must be in proportion to the danger or the peculiar risks in each case. The operator of an automobile must use ordinary care in its operation and move it at a reasonable rate of speed and slow it up or stop, if need be, where danger is imminent; and greater caution is required at crossings and in the more thronged streets of a city than in the less obstructed streets in the open or suburban parts, and there is a like duty to exercise reasonable care on the part of the pedestrians. Hannigan v. Wright (Del.) 63 Atl. 224, 236, 5 Pennell, 537.

As high degree of care

The term "high degree of care," when used in an instruction which gave no standard of care, and thus deprived a comparison between "ordinary care," and a "high degree of care," held not to be the legal equivalent of "reasonable care." Van Blarcom v. Central Ry. Co. of New Jersey, 60 Atl. 182, 72 N. J. Law, 33.

An instruction that the law is well settled, and that "reasonable care" on the part of a common carrier towards its passengers is a high degree of care, is correct. Camden & S. Ry. Co. v. Rice, 137 Fed. 326, 327, 329, 69 C. C. A. 656.

Ordinary care and due care synonymous

Ordinary care means "reasonable care." Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co., 107 N. W. 593, 594, 133 Iowa, 326.

"To use reasonable care" is equivalent to the expression "to use or exercise ordinary care." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536.

"Ordinary care" and "reasonable care," as applied to the duty of a master to provide rules for the regulation of his activities, are, ordinarily, convertible terms. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Walker (Tex.) 125 S. W. 99, 106.

The phrase "reasonable care" has been declared by the courts of England to be synonymous with ordinary care. Caven v. Bodwell Granite Co., 59 Atl. 285, 287, 99 Me. 278.

"Reasonable care" is only such care as a reasonably prudent person would use under the circumstances, and whether under given circumstances a person used reasonable care, or was guilty of contributory negligence, is generally left to the jury." Watt v. Mishawaka Paper & Pulp Co. (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1029.

An instruction that a telegraph company must use "reasonable care" in transmitting and delivering messages imposes no higher degree of care on the company than "ordinary care," as the two terms are synonymous. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Guinn (Tex.) 130 S. W. 616, 618.

An instruction, in an action for negligent delay in transmission and delivery, on the measure of the telegraph company's duty in delivering, was not erroneous for requiring it to transmit in "due time (that is, such time as it would have been delivered by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence in getting it through and delivered)," on the ground that it was only required to use "ordinary care," in the absence of a request for a more specific charge; the terms "reasonable care" and "ordinary care" having substantially the same meaning. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vance (Tex.) 151 S. W. 904, 907 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5955).

Where the court in its charge used the terms "ordinary care," "reasonable diligence," and "reasonable care," it should, in an instruction defining ordinary care, have also told the jury that reasonable diligence or reasonable care is ordinary care. Greene v. Louisville Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 1154, 1156, 119 Ky. 862, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 316, 7 Ann. Cas. 1126.

The use of the words "reasonable care," instead of "ordinary care," in an instruction in an action for injuries, is not such a defect as will invalidate a judgment for plaintiff. Spaulding v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 107 S. W. 1049, 1051, 129 Mo. App. 607.

The rule of law now generally recognized is that the legal measure of duty, except that made absolute by law, is better expressed by the phrase "due care," "reasonable care," or "ordinary care," used interchangeably. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 604, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

The terms "ordinary care" and "reasonable care" are, in law, practically synonymous. In their ordinary use in connection with the subject in hand, they are also substantially synonymous. Hence an instruction that, "if you believe from the evidence that at the time the accident occurred said stone was unsafe, dangerous, and liable to fall, and that the section foreman knew, or by the exercise of a reasonable care and prudence in the inspection of the cut could have known," etc., is not erroneous, because the court used the words "reasonable care" instead of "ordinary care." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pointer's Adm'r., 69 S. W. 1108, 1112, 113 Ky. 952.

Children

The term "ordinary or reasonable care," applied to the conduct of a child, means such care as may reasonably be expected of children of similar age, judgment, and experience under similar circumstances. Rohloff v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 58 Atl. 5, 7, 76 Conn. 689.

Management of steamboat

"Reasonable care," when applied to the control and management of a steamboat in motion, embraces all the care which the particular circumstances of the place and occasion reasonably require, which will be increased or diminished according as the liability of danger and accident and injury to others is increased or diminished in the movement and management of the steamer. Bowen v. Baltimore & Philadelphia Steamboat Co. (Del.) 84 Atl. 1022, 1025.

Policemen

"Reasonable care," as applied to a policeman who in pursuing an escaping prisoner shoots him by the alleged accidental discharge of his pistol, is such care as may be reasonably expected of a person of ordinary prudence, and reason to know a fact is such as would apprise a person of ordinary prudence of it. Lewis v. Commonwealth, 131 S. W. 517, 519, 140 Ky. 652.

Street car motormen

The "reasonable care" which a motorman must use to avoid injuring a traveler on a street is the great care and foresight which a reasonable and competent motorman should use to avoid such an injury when the danger thereof was apparent to him. Barry v. Burlington Ry. & Light Co., 93 N. W. 68, 69, 119 Iowa, 62.

REASONABLE CARE AND DILIGENCE

"Reasonable care and diligence" means such care and diligence as an ordinarily prudent and careful man would usually exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Phippin v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 93 S. W. 410, 413, 196 Mo. 321.

The Standard Dictionary defines "reasonable care and diligence" as such degree of attention and painstaking as is fitting and proper under the circumstances; such care and attention as a person of prudence would exercise. Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 86 S. W. 17, 18.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2266, requiring carriers of passengers to exercise extraordinary diligence to protect the lives of passengers, the words "reasonable care and diligence," used in section 2321, declaring that a railroad company shall be liable for any damage done to persons by the running of locomotives, cars, etc., unless the railroad company shows that its agents have exercised all reasonable care and diligence, means extraordinary care and diligence. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Gilleland, 66 S. E. 944, 948, 183 Ga. 621.

Upon proof of injury to a passenger of a railroad company by the running of its locomotives, cars, or other machinery, or by any person in its employment, there is a presumption of the railroad company's negligence, under Civ. Code 1910, § 2780, providing that a railroad company shall be liable for damage to persons by the running of the locomotives, cars, or other machinery of such company, unless the company shall make it appear that their agents had exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company; and as such section must be construed with section 2714, providing that a carrier of passengers is bound to extraordinary diligence to protect its passengers, but is not liable for injuries to the person after having used such diligence, so that the phrase "reasonable care and diligence," in section 2780, must be deemed to mean "extraordinary" care and diligence, the presumption of negligence is not rebuttable by a showing that the railroad company exercised only ordinary care and diligence. Douthitt v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 71 S. E. 470, 136 Ga. 351.

REASONABLE CAUSE

Other reasonable cause, see Other.

By "reasonable or probable cause" is meant such evidence as would lead a reasonable person to believe that the accused has probably or likely committed the offense charged. In re Squires, 92 Pac. 754, 755, 13 Idaho, 624.

The term "reasonable cause," as used in Code, § 4007, authorizing discharge of a juror for reasonable cause, means such as will probably prevent a fair and impartial trial to the party challenging, or prevent the juror looking alone to the evidence for his verdict. Williams v. Godfrey (Tenn.) 1 Helsk. 299, 300.

"Reasonable cause," sufficient to justify seizure under the revenue laws, means probable cause; it imports a seizure under circumstances which warrant suspicion. United States v. One Sorrel Horse, 27 Fed. Cas. 315, 317, 22 Vt. 655.

"Reasonable cause" which will justify a wife or husband in quitting or abandoning each other, without constituting desertion within the statute relating thereto, is only that which will entitle the party to a divorce. Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 329, 336.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the use in the charge of the term "reasonable cause" for "probable cause" was not error, the terms being practically synonymous, though it is better to use the latter term. McCall v. Alexander, 65 S. E. 1021, 1022, 84 S. C. 187.

A finding in an action for malicious prosecution based on defendant procuring the arrest of plaintiff on the ground that there was danger that he would leave the state to avoid examination of proceedings in aid of execution, that defendant had "reasonable cause" to believe there was danger that plaintiff was about to leave the state to avoid examination, is the same thing as probable cause to procure his arrest on that ground. Bank of Miller v. Richmon, 94 N. W. 998, 999, 68 Neb. 731.

There is a marked difference between "reasonable cause to believe" and "reasonable cause to suspect." Third Nat. Bank of Columbus v. Poe, 62 S. E. 826, 829, 5 Ga. App. 113.

On judgment for claimant of property seized by officers of the customs service for forfeiture, on the ground that it was fraudulently imported, a certificate of reasonable cause should be entered by the court as provided by Rev. St. § 970, although the verdict of the jury was clearly right, under the evidence, where it is affirmatively shown that the officers who instituted the proceedings acted in good faith and on reasonable ground of suspicion. The term "reasonable cause" does not differ in meaning from the term "probable cause" found in section 909, Rev. St. As stated in Averill v. Smith, 17 Wall. 82, 21 L. Ed. 613: "Proof of probable cause, if shown by the certificate of the District Court which rendered the decree discharging the property, is a good defense to an action of trespass brought by the claimant against the collector who made the executive seizure, provided it appears that judicial proceedings were instituted, and that the charge against the property was prosecuted to a final judicial determination. Where the respondent prevails in such an information, the court, says Mr. Parsons, gives to the prosecuting or seizing officers a certificate of probable cause, if in their judgment he had such cause for the seizure, and that, he says, protects the officer who made the seizure from prosecution for making the same; and he adds that the final decree of the court in a case of forfeiture regularly before the court is conclusive. * * * Probable cause, he says, means less than evidence which would justify a condemnation, and the same author says, if the court before whom the cause is tried shall cause a certificate of entry to be made that there appeared to be a reasonable cause of seizure, the seizing officer shall be protected from all costs, suits, and actions on account of the seizure and prosecution. Differences of opinion existed for a time as to the legal meaning of the term 'probable cause,' but it is settled that it imports circumstances which warrant suspicion, and that a doubt respecting the true construction of the law is as reasonable a cause of seizure as a doubt respecting the fact." United States v. 83 Sacks of Wool and 5,974 Sheepskins, 147 Fed. 747-749 (citing Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. [16 U. S.] 246, 4 L. Ed. 881; Locke v. United States, 7 Cranch [11 U. S.] 339, 3 L. Ed. 364; Munns v. De Nemours, 17 Fed. Cas. 993).

The phrase "reasonable cause to believe," in Bankr. Act, § 60b, providing that, if one receiving a preference has "reasonable cause to believe" that it is intended to give one, it shall be voidable by the trustee, means such a knowledge of facts as to induce a reasonable belief of the debtor's insolvency, and it is not enough that a creditor has some cause to suspect the insolvency of his debtor. He may have grounds of suspicion that his debtor is failing, and yet have no cause for a belief of the fact. He may feel anxious about his claim and desire to secure it, and yet such belief as the statute requires be wanting. Stevenson v. Milliken-Tomlinson Co., 59 Atl. 473, 475, 99 Me. 320.

Under Bankr. Act, § 60b, a creditor of an insolvent debtor, charged with receiving a preference within four months prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, with knowledge of some fact or facts, at the time of receiving the preference, calculated to put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if pursued, would lead to the belief that the debtor was insolvent, is within the rule of "reasonable cause to believe," although he may not have absolute knowledge of the ultimate fact. Capital Nat. Bank v. Wilkerson, 76 N. E. 258, 261, 262, 36 Ind. App. 550.

It is not necessary for the committing magistrate to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that one accused of crime is guilty thereof; but if from all of the evidence he has reasonable or probable cause to believe, and does believe, that the accused is guilty it is his duty to hold him for trial, since the words "reasonable and probable cause" as used in the statute are not equivalent to the phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt." State v. Layman, 125 Pac. 1042, 1043, 22 Idaho, 387.

"Reasonable cause to believe," in Bankr. Act, § 60b, covers substantially the same field as "notice" in determining whether a person is a bona fide purchaser of property. Stern v. Paper, 183 Fed. 228, 234.

Under Bankr. Act, § 60b, the "reasonable cause" must not be a guess or a mere suspicion of insolvency, but must consist of such facts as would put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry. Starbuck v. Gebo, 96 N. Y. Supp. 781, 783, 48 Misc. Rep. 333.

Knowledge is not necessary, nor even belief, that it is intended to give a preference, but only "reasonable cause to believe," which is a very different thing. Pratt v. Columbia Bank, 157 Fed. 137, 139 (citing Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Cook, 95 U. S. 343, 24 L. Ed. 412).

The words "reasonable cause to believe" that one is insolvent, as used in the Bankruptcy Act in relation to preferences, have not the same meaning as the phrase "reasonable cause to suspect." It is not sufficient that the creditor has some cause to suspect the insolvency of the debtor, but he must have such a knowledge of facts as to induce a reasonable belief of his debtor's insolvency in order to invalidate a security taken for a debt. Gnitchel v. First Nat. Bank (N. J.) 57 Atl. 508, 509.

A "reasonable cause to believe" that a debtor intended to give a preference to a creditor receiving a payment within four months of the bankruptcy of the debtor arises where the creditor had at the time of the payment knowledge of facts which would put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry as to whether the debtor was then solvent and intended to make a preference, and if such inquiry, if made, would have probably disclosed to the creditor the fact of the debtor's insolvency and intention to make a preference. Walker v. Tenison Bros. Saddlery Co. (Tex.) 94 S. W. 166, 168.

"Reasonable or probable cause" warranting a commitment means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and consciously entertain a strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty. There must be a probability that a crime has been committed by the person named in the commitment, and not only that a crime has been committed, but that it is one that has not become barred by the statute of limitations. Ex parte Vice, 89 Pac. 983, 985, 5 Cal. App. 153.

REASONABLE CERTAINTY

See Reasonably Certain.

In all likelihood equivalent, see In All Likelihood.

Moral and reasonable certainty, see Moral Certainty.

Reasonable probability not synonymous, see Reasonable Probability.

"Reasonable certainty" is the quality of being established beyond a reasonable doubt, and "reasonable and moral certainty" may be said to be that degree of probability which exists with such strength as to justify human action upon it. Austin v. State, 64 S. E. 670, 6 Ga. App. 211.

"Reasonable certainty" as applied to the ascertainment of damages means reasonable probability. Where the losses claimed are contingent, speculative, or merely possible, they cannot be allowed. Wilkinson v. Dunbar, 62 S. E. 748, 750, 149 N. C. 20 (citing Hale, Dam.).

"There are no words plainer than 'reasonable doubt,' and none so exact to the idea meant." "Reasonable hypothesis," or "reasonable or moral certainty," may be logically the equivalent of "reasonable doubt"; but these expressions are not so easily understood by the ordinary lay mind. In every criminal case the presiding judge should charge the jury that, to authorize conviction, guilt must be proved "beyond a reasonable doubt," and, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered, his failure to do so will be reversible error. Norman v. State, 74 S. E. 428, 10 Ga. App. 802.

"Certainty," as applied to the law of damages, means freedom from doubt, and as "reasonable certainty" and "reasonable probability" bear no resemblance to each other, plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, while entitled to recover for such future suffering and injury as she proves to be reasonably probable, is not required to prove such future injuries and suffering by testimony reasonably certain or free from doubt. Johnson v. Connecticut Co., 83 Atl. 530, 531, 85 Conn. 438.

To say that proof of the fact must be made reasonably certain is, by literal import of the words, tantamount to saying that the proof must be made beyond a reasonable doubt. This has been expressly held as to the phrase "moral certainty," which is equivalent to the words "reasonable certainty." A charge that if a passenger's sickness was not the result of her being put off the train, and that it was "reasonably certain" to have resulted from other causes, the carrier is not liable, is erroneous as requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt. St. Louis, A. & T. B. Co. v. Burns, 9 S. W. 467, 468, 71 Tex. 479, 481.

REASONABLE CHARGE

In determining what is a "reasonable" and what an oppressive charge, "ordinarily, that is a 'reasonable charge or system of charges' which yields a fair return upon the investment. Fixed charges and the costs of maintenance and operation must first be provided for. Then the interests of the owners of the property are to be considered. They are entitled to a rate of return if their property will earn it, not less than the legal rate of interest; and a system of charges that yields no more income than is fairly required to maintain the plant, pay fixed charges and operating expenses, provide a suitable sinking fund for the payment of debts, and pay a fair profit to the owners of the property, cannot be said to be unreasonable. * * * The reasonableness of the charges must be determined with reference to the expenditure in obtaining the supply, and providing for a fund to maintain the plant in good order, and pay a fair profit upon the money invested by the owners, and that a rate which did no more than this was neither excessive nor unjust. * * * The cost of the water to the company includes a fair return to the persons who furnished the capital for the construction of the plant, in addition to an allowance annually of a sum sufficient to keep the plant in good repair, and to pay any fixed charges and operating expenses. A rate of water rents that enables the company to realize no more than this is reasonable and just. Some towns are so situated as to make the procurement of an ample supply of water comparatively inexpensive. Some are so situated as to make the work both difficult and expensive. What would be an extortionate charge in the first case might be the very least at which the water could be afforded in the other." Long Branch Commission v. Tintern Manor Water Co., 62 Atl. 474, 478, 70 N. J. Eq. 71 (quoting and adopting the definition in Brymer v. Butler Water Co., 179 Pa. 231, 36 Atl. 249, 36 L. E. A. 290).

REASONABLE COMPENSATION

See, also, Reasonable Amount; Reasonable Price.

The term "reasonable compensation," as used in Mills' Ann. St. § 2298, providing that the county commissioner shall, on the application of the water consumers of any ditch or of the parties owning the same, fix a "reasonable compensation" for water, implies that something must be given for the service. Board of Com'rs of Montezuma County v. Montezuma Water & Land Co., 89 Pac. 794, 796, 39 Colo. 166.

"Reasonable compensation," as used in Rev. St. 1895, art. 253, providing that, where a garnishee is discharged, the costs, including reasonable compensation to the garnishee, shall be taxed against plaintiff, includes a reasonable attorney's fee for services rendered to a garnishee in preparing and defending the garnishee's answer after it had been controverted. Maury v. McDonald, 118 S. W. 812, 817, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 50.

The term "reasonable compensation," in St. 1898, § 4870, providing that physicians and surgeons subpoenaed to perform a post mortem examination shall receive instead of witness fees such "reasonable compensation" as may be allowed by the county board of supervisors, provided that such additional compensation shall not be less than $5 for each examination, contemplates that the physician or surgeon so subpoenaed shall be paid reasonable compensation for his services in lieu of witness fees, and the county board may not fix the compensation for the services at an unreasonable amount, and a physician must be allowed a reasonable fee, and section 683, providing for an appeal to the circuit court from the disallowance in whole or in part of any claim by the county board, authorizes an appeal by a physician and review of a disallowance in whole or in part of his claim for services under section 4870. Quigg v. Monroe County, 113 N. W. 723, 725, 134 Wis. 122.

Under a statute authorizing the allowance of a "reasonable compensation" to the receiver of a bank, an allowance of $7,500 to receiver for his services is a "reasonable compensation," where the assets of the bank amounted to $2,783,590.30, consisting of loans on mortgages and other securities, and discounted paper, and in stock, bonds, and deposits upon which the receiver, during the year for which such sum was allowed, realized the sum of $1,554,148.83 and disbursed to depositors the sum of $1,406,515.31. Special Bank Com'rs v. Franklin Inst. for Sav., 11 R. I. 557, 560.

Real value distinguished

See Real Value.

REASONABLE COMPETITION

The statutory provision which authorizes the Legislature to provide by law for the regulation, prohibition, or reasonable restraint of common carriers, partnerships, trusts, etc., so as to prevent them from making scarce articles of necessity, trade, or commerce, or from increasing unreasonably the cost thereof to the consumer or preventing "reasonable competition" in any calling, trade, or business, is aimed at combinations of capital to prevent them from making scarce articles of necessity and to prohibit anything which prevents "reasonable competition" in any calling or business. The section is not aimed at everything which restricts competition. Its purpose is not to abolish restraints of competition arising from the workings of the laws of trade, but only that whatever is done in trade must leave the field open to "reasonable competition." The indirect effects of fair competition by lessening the number who compete, or in some instances throwing all the trade in the hands of one man, are not outlawed as going beyond the limits of "reasonable competition." Citizens' Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Montgomery Light & Water Power Co., 171 Fed. 553, 562.

REASONABLE CONTROL

Where plaintiff contracted to construct a steel tower complete and ship within 45 working days from the date of the contract, but was not to be responsible for "delays in transportation, strikes, fires, floods, storms, nor any other circumstance beyond its reasonable control," a delay occasioned by inability to get material was not "beyond its reasonable control," within the contract, under the rule that the general limitation will include only causes similar to those specifically mentioned. American Bridge Co. of New York v. Glenmore Distilleries Co. (Ky.) 107 S. W. 279, 283.

REASONABLE DANGER

"Reasonable danger" is something to be judged of by an exercise of reason and judgment, an exercise upon facts which require a construction to render their meaning apparent. Byers v. Territory, 100 Pac. 261, 267, 1 Okl. Cr. 677.

REASONABLE DEMAND

See Just and Reasonable Demand.

REASONABLE DILIGENCE

See Reasonable Care and Diligence.

The words "reasonable diligence" have a meaning well understood by the average jurymen; they have no such technical meaning as to call for their definition when used in a charge. Texas Midland R. R. v. Ritchey, 108 S. W. 732, 734, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 409.

"Reasonable diligence" is such diligence as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise over his own affairs under like circumstances. Haines v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 89 N. W. 349, 350, 129 Mich. 475.

"Reasonable diligence" means such diligence as a prudent man could exercise or employ in or about his own affairs. Glassey v. Sligo Furnace Co., 96 S. W. 310, 312, 120 Mo. App. 24.

"Reasonable diligence" is such diligence as a man of ordinary care and prudence would take under the circumstances. Gillespie v. Ashford, 101 N. W. 649, 650, 125 Iowa, 729.

The words "ordinary care" embody the same degree of diligence as the words "ordinary and reasonable care and diligence," and have substantially the same significance. The words "ordinary" and "reasonable," descriptive of diligence, are synonymous, and are used interchangeably in statutes and by the courts. Goodwyn v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 58 S. E. 688, 2 Ga. App. 470.

"Reasonable diligence required of city officers having charge of its public streets" means such diligence as like officers of like responsibilities usually and ordinarily employ in the discharge of their duties. Pumoro v. City of Merrill, 103 N. W. 464, 467, 125 Wis. 102.

In any business involving the personal safety and lives of others, nothing less than the most watchful care and the most active diligence constitutes "reasonable diligence." Anything short of that is negligence. Stanley v. Steele, 60 Atl. 640, 641, 77 Conn. 688, 69 L. R. A. 561, 2 Ann. Cas. 343.

"Reasonable diligence" of a master to guard against injuries to employees implies such watchfulness, caution, and foresight as, under all the circumstances of the particular service, a master ought to exercise. Sandidge v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 193 Fed. 867, 872, 113 C. C. A. 653.

"Reasonable diligence," as between employer and employé, implies such watchfulness, caution, and foresight as under all the circumstances of the particular service ought to be exercised by careful and prudent men. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Willhoit, 98 S. W. 341, 344, 6 Ind. T. 534.

"Reasonable diligence" to which a tug is obligated means very great diligence, in view of the nature of the service, and also in view of the fact that the tow is a stranger and the tug is at home. Winslow v. Thompson, 134 Fed. 546, 549, 67 C. C. A. 470.

Where the object of the operations contemplated by an oil and gas lease is to obtain a benefit or profit for both lessor and lessee, neither is, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect, the arbiter of the extent to which or the diligence with which the operations shall proceed; but both are bound by the standard of what, in the circumstances, would be reasonably expected of operators of ordinary prudence, having regard to the interests of both. An oil and gas lease contained a covenant, which was also made a condition, that the lessee would continue with "reasonable diligence" the work of development and production after the expiration of the period allowed for original exploration and development, if during that period oil and gas, one or both, were found in paying quantities. The lease covered two tracts, owned by the lessor, which were widely separated and embraced 232.50 acres. Both were within a recognized oil and gas field. These minerals were being produced in paying quantities from the lands surrounding each tract. Near the expiration of the period allowed for original exploration and development the lessee drilled a single well on one of the tracts, in which gas was found in paying quantity, and thereafter took and maintained the position that by drilling that well and paying the stipulated price for gas used therefrom it acquired the right to hold the lease indefinitely without further development. This situation continued for 14 months, when the lessor elected to terminate the lease for breach of the covenant and condition for the exercise of reasonable diligence. Held, that in these circumstances the prolonged failure of the lessee to continue the work of development and production, though due to a mistaken view of the obligations imposed by the lease, was a plain and substantial breach of the covenant and condition and entitled the lessor to terminate the lease. Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co., 140 Fed. 801, 802, 72 C. C. A. 213.

As ordinary care

Where the court in its charge used the terms "ordinary care," "reasonable diligence," and "reasonable care," it should in an instruction defining ordinary care, have also told the jury that reasonable diligence or reasonable care is ordinary care. Greene v. Louisville Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 1154, 1156, 119 Ky. 862, 27 Ky. Law Rep. 316, 7 Ann. Cas. 1126.

REASONABLE DILIGENCE AND CARE

The exercise of "reasonable diligence and care" by a telegraph company, in sending and delivering a message, is the exercise of no greater care than the exercise of "ordinary care." Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Gilliland (Tex.) 130 S. W. 212, 215.

REASONABLE DISPATCH

Where an appraisalment in mortgage foreclosure sale was made on one day and a copy was not filed until the next day, there was nothing to show that the copy was not filed with "reasonable dispatch." Wheldon v. Cornett, 94 N. W. 626, 627, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 421

REASONABLE DOUBT

See, also, Well Founded.

The doctrine of "reasonable doubt" is a legal right almost as old as law itself. Its purpose is to shield the innocent, and not a cloak for the guilty. United States v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808, 815.

The guilt of accused must be established by evidence to the exclusion of a "reasonable doubt"; and, where the evidence taken as a whole creates only a suspicion of accused's guilt, there is nothing to submit to the jury. Sprouse v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 122 S. W. 134, 135.

The term "reasonable doubt" has no other or different meaning in law than in ordinary affairs of life. People v. Barkas, 99 N. E. 698, 702, 255 Ill. 516.

In a preliminary examination, the state is not required to establish the guilt of the accused "beyond a reasonable doubt." The phrase "reasonable or probable cause," as used in the statute relating to the holding of the accused for trial, is not equivalent to the phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt" as applied to the degree of proof on the trial. In re Squires, 92 Pac. 754, 755, 13 Idaho, 624.

It was proper to refuse a requested instruction that a reasonable doubt is that want of repose and confidence which an honest man has in the correctness of a conclusion which he is about to make, after giving the question his best thought. Brown v. State, 43 South. 194, 196, 150 Ala. 25.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as a doubt which would exist when the judgment of a jury, after careful review of all the evidence, finds itself unconvinced of the guilt of the prisoner, was correct; the word "convince" being used in the sense of an abiding conviction. State v. Leo, 77 Atl. 523, 525, 80 N. J. Law, 21.

The phrase, "although the fact may be in a degree surrounded by a doubt," embraced in a charge on circumstantial evidence, is improper as tending to confuse the meaning of "reasonable doubt." State v. Marren, 107 Pac. 993, 1001, 17 Idaho, 766.

Where the court charged that accused was presumed to be innocent until proven guilty, and that the presumption of innocence attended him through the case until the testimony tore it away, a further statement that "no man can be convicted of crime in this jurisdiction until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt," and "a reasonable doubt is what the word implies; a doubt founded in reason; a doubt for which you can give a reason; a doubt growing out of the testimony in the case, or the lack of testimony; a doubt which would cause you to hesitate in the ordinary affairs of life," was not error. People v. Davis, 137 N. W. 61, 64, 171 Mich. 241.

The court instructed that it was the state's duty to establish accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, such a doubt as honest men would have in their mind, honest jurors under oath after considering all the evidence, and if, after considering all the evidence, the jury had an honest doubt as to accused's guilt, he was entitled to the benefit of such doubt, and should be acquitted, but, if the jury had no such reasonable doubt, they should convict. Held, that such charge sufficiently defined the meaning of a reasonable doubt. State v. Codrington, 78 Atl. 743, 745, 80 N. J. Law, 496.

An instruction defining the term "reasonable doubt" in the language of the instruction given in Barney v. State, 49 Neb. 515, 68 N. W. 636, together with the additional sentence, "You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if from all the evidence you believe as men," is not erroneous, though the instruction is not to be commended. Lillie v. State, 100 N. W. 316, 322, 72 Neb. 228.

An instruction that the meaning of "reasonable doubt" is that it is such a doubt from all the evidence that remains unsatisfied and unconvinced, after a full consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case, was properly refused as not correctly defining "reasonable doubt." Smith v. State, 101 Pac. 848, 849, 17 Wyo. 481.

Where the court, in a prosecution for robbery, in charging the jury defined a "reasonable doubt" as "that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence in the cause, leaves the minds of the jurors," etc., an objection to the instruction on the ground that a "reasonable doubt" obviously is not a "state of the case," but rather a condition of the mind, is untenable. People v. Lewandowski, 77 Pac. 467, 470, 143 Cal. 574.

One on trial for a crime is not denied the benefit of a "reasonable doubt" by the instruction to the jury that there should be a verdict of guilty if a full and candid consideration of the evidence produces a conviction of guilt and satisfies the mind to a reasonable certainty, but that there should be an acquittal if the evidence establishes only strong probabilities of guilt. State v. Allen, 67 N. E. 1053, 1054, 68 Ohio St. 516.

A charge that "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt; that it must be founded upon reason and must grow out of the evidence in the case; that it is a doubt for which a reason can be assigned, and which leads one to entertain a conscientious belief that there is an absence of necessary proof of guilt; that it is an honest, fair doubt, raised, not from an outside source, but by the evidence given in open court, and which appeals to the sound judgment of the jury—is not erroneous, when considered with a further charge that it is presumed that defendant is innocent, that such presumption continues throughout the trial until satisfactory evidence of guilt is produced, that the burden of establishing guilt rests upon the people, and that the prosecution must prove defendant's guilt in all its elements. People v. Hoffmann, 105 N. W. 838, 839, 142 Mich. 531.

An instruction that every material allegation of an indictment must be proved beyond a "reasonable doubt" and to a "moral certainty"; that defendant is presumed to be innocent until, taking the evidence altogether, there remains no reasonable doubt as to his guilt; that mere probabilities or a mere preponderance of evidence against him would not satisfy the law; that before defendant could be found guilty his guilt must be established beyond reasonable doubt; that such doubt might arise from the evidence actually offered, or from a lack of evidence; that "the doubt, however, must be real, not chimerical or fanciful, not a doubt which is sought for, but one which arises naturally from the case, and which is not a doubt produced by undue sensibilities on the part of the jurors as to the consequence of their verdict"; that it was not necessary that defendant's guilt be established beyond all doubt; that the fact that the question of guilt or innocence is difficult of solution does not constitute a reasonable doubt if by a careful consideration that solution may be established according to law; that if, after a careful scrutiny of the whole case and a careful consideration of the evidence, and conscientious consideration of the law, there arises spontaneously and naturally, without being sought after, an uncertainty concerning the guilt or innocence of defendant, which uncertainty is of the weight and quality that if interposed in any of the graver transactions of life would check the final judgment, causing the jury to pause and hesitate, then such uncertainty amounts to a reasonable doubt; that unless there was an abiding conviction of defendant's guilt he must be acquitted; that if proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt he must be convicted even though doubts remained not amounting to reasonable doubts—while disapproved as being lengthy, is free from reversible error. People v. Buettner, 84 N. E. 218, 219, 220, 233 Ill. 272, 13 Ann. Cas. 235 (citing and adopting Morello v. People, 80 N. E. 903, 226 Ill. 388).

"A 'reasonable doubt' is not such a doubt as any man may start by questioning for the sake of a doubt; nor a doubt suggested or surmised without foundation in facts or testimony. It is such a doubt only as in a fair, reasonable effort to reach a conclusion upon the evidence, using the mind in the same manner as in other matters of importance, prevents the jury from coming to a conclusion in which their minds rest satisfied. If, so using the mind and considering all the evidence produced, it leads to a conclusion which satisfies the judgment and leaves upon the mind a settled conviction of the truth of the fact, it is the duty of the jury so to declare the fact by the verdict. It is possible always to question any conclusion derived from testimony, but such questioning is not what is a reasonable doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge." Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577, 592, 72 C. C. A. 145.

Absolute certainty

A "reasonable doubt" does not mean an absolute certainty. Parham v. State, 42 South. 1, 6, 147 Ala. 57.

To give rise to a "reasonable doubt" the evidence need not amount to an absolute certainty. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" does not require that guilt be established with the absolute certainty of a mathematical demonstration. State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 150, 2 Boyce, 405.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" does not mean that the guilt of accused or any other fact shall be established with the absolute certainty of a mathematical demonstration, but the facts must be proved to a moral certainty. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 541, 7 Pennewill, 479.

A reasonable possibility of defendant's innocence is not a proper predicate for an acquittal, nor is the jury required to acquit, if one of them has a "reasonable doubt" of defendant's guilt, but defendant is entitled to acquittal if his conduct upon a reasonable hypothesis is consistent with his innocence. It is not necessary, in order to convict, to prove to an exact or mathematical certainty that defendant is guilty, but only that each juror believes him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Howard v. State, 44 South. 95, 96, 151 Ala. 22.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" does not mean that the guilt of accused must be established with the absolute certainty of a mathematical demonstration, and it is sufficient that any disputed fact is established by that amount of competent evidence which will satisfy a fair and unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt; and the term does not mean a vague, speculative, or whimsical doubt, or a mere possible doubt, but a substantial doubt. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 311, 2 Boyce, 140.

A charge that the law does not require absolute certainty, but is based rather upon the doctrine of reasonable probability, and if the evidence leaves in the jury's minds an abiding conviction of accused's guilt they would be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, fairly stated the law of "reasonable doubt," and was not misleading, though the statement that the law of reasonable doubt is based upon the doctrine of reasonable probability is objectionable in law, and, if standing alone, would be prejudicial. State v. Quinn, 105 Pac. 818, 821, 56 Wash. 295.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt based on reason, and which is reasonable in view of all the evidence. It is not a whimsical, arbitrary, or purely speculative doubt, nor a mere conjecture or guess. If after an impartial comparison and consideration of the evidence jurors can candidly say that they are not satisfied of the defendant's guilt they have a "reasonable doubt"; but if, after such impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence, they can truthfully say that they have a fixed conviction of the defendant's guilt, such as they would be willing to act upon in the more weighty and important matters relating to their own affairs, they have no reasonable doubt, and in that case should find a verdict of guilty. Absolute certainty is not required for such a verdict. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt as above defined is sufficient. United States v. Giuliani, 147 Fed. 594, 597.

"Proof beyond a 'reasonable doubt' does not mean that the guilt of the accused or any other fact shall be established with the absolute certainty of a mathematical demonstration. Matters of fact are required to be proved merely to a moral certainty. To require more in dealing with human conduct and the ordinary affairs of life would be impracticable and therefore unreasonable. It is sufficient that any disputed fact relating to these shall be established by that amount of competent or appropriate evidence which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. The circumstances which will amount to this degree of proof can never be previously defined. The only legal test of which they are susceptible is their sufficiency to satisfy the mind and conscience of a man of common sense and ordinary discretion, and so to convince him that he would act upon that conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to his own interest. 'Reasonable doubt,' in the legal sense, therefore, does not mean a vague, speculative, or whimsical doubt or uncertainty, nor a merely possible doubt of the truth of the fact to be proved." State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 264, 4 Pennewill, 551.

Captious or imaginary doubt

"Reasonable doubt" is not a mere fanciful doubt. State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 149, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 789, 6 Pennewill, 435; State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 205, 6 Pennewill, 343; State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532; Bannen v. State, 91 N. W. 107, 109, 115 Wis. 317.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a mere captious or imaginary doubt. Bell v. State, 98

S. W. 705, 707, 81 Ark. 16; State v. Logan, 85 Pac. 798, 799, 73 Kan. 730.

A "reasonable doubt" does not mean an imaginary doubt. Furlow v. State, 81 S. W. 232, 233, 72 Ark. 384.

"Reasonable doubt" does not mean a whimsical doubt. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 311, 2 Boyce, 140; State v. Brown, 80 Atl. 146, 150, 2 Boyce, 403.

A "reasonable doubt" should not be a mere whim or surmise. Commonwealth v. Campbell, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 9, 14.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a fanciful or imaginary doubt. State v. Fagan (Del.) 74 Atl. 692, 696, 1 Boyce, 45; State v. Dlugozima (Del.) 74 Atl. 1086, 1088, 7 Pennewill, 151; State v. Luff (Del.) 74 Atl. 1079, 1081, 1 Boyce, 152; State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1099, 1 Boyce, 135.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a trivial or fanciful doubt. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 152, 6 Pennewill, 160; State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 742, 6 Pennewill, 323; State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 157, 6 Pennewill, 401; State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 205, 6 Pennewill, 343; State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123.

"Reasonable doubt" does not mean a fanciful or whimsical doubt. State v. Davenport (Del.) 77 Atl. 967, 968, 2 Boyce, 12.

A "reasonable doubt" must not be a fanciful or visionary doubt. State v. Fleetwood (Del.) 65 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 153.

A "reasonable doubt" does not mean a fanciful or indefinable doubt. State v. Rash (Del.) 78 Atl. 405, 407, 2 Boyce, 77; State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 3, 4, 1 Boyce, 28.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere imaginary, whimsical, or even possible doubt of the guilt of the accused. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1039, 5 Pennewill, 126; State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 231, 5 Pennewill, 77.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere conjectural doubt. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a fanciful doubt or a doubt growing out of conjecture. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866, 869, 4 Pennewill, 580.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant a strained or whimsical conjecture. United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant a mere caprice or conjecture or groundless possibility. Turley v. State, 104 N. W. 934, 938, 74 Neb. 471.

An instruction in a criminal case that "by the term 'reasonable doubt' is meant not a capricious doubt, but a substantial doubt—a doubt that you can give a reason for if the court called on you to give one—" held not erroneous. Marshall v. United States, 197 Fed. 511, 512, 117 C. C. A. 65.

Proof to warrant a "reasonable doubt" should not be a mere conjecture, a fancy, a trivial supposition. Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a whimsical, arbitrary, or purely speculative doubt, nor a mere conjecture or guess. United States v. Giuliani, 147 Fed. 594, 597.

"Reasonable doubt" in respect to the sufficiency of evidence in a criminal case does not mean a captious quibble suggested to evade the performance of an honest duty. Saunders v. State, 111 Pac. 965, 971, 4 Okl. Cr. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 766.

A juror cannot create for himself a doubt and act on it. He cannot raise an artificial or captious doubt in order to acquit. Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt, but a fair doubt based on reason and common sense. People v. Burke, 121 N. W. 282, 157 Mich. 108; State v. Levy, 75 Pac. 227, 230, 9 Idaho, 483.

A "reasonable doubt" is not any possible or imaginary doubt, because everything that depends upon human testimony is susceptible to some possible or imaginary doubt. To be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after an entire consideration and comparison of all the testimony, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Snyder v. State, 111 S. W. 465, 466, 86 Ark. 456.

The "reasonable doubt" of defendant's guilt, which, being entertained by the jury, should inure to his acquittal, is not a vague, fanciful, whimsical, or even possible doubt, but such a doubt as naturally arises out of the evidence, and may reasonably be entertained by men of ordinary intelligence, impartiality, and judgment, after a careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Cole (Del.) 78 Atl. 1025, 1026, 2 Boyce, 184.

By the term "reasonable doubt" is not meant every possible or fanciful doubt or conjecture that may suggest itself or be suggested to the mind. It is not a mere guess or surmise, because everything relating to human affairs and dependent upon moral evidence is open to some fanciful doubt or conjecture. A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt based upon reason, and growing out of the testimony and evidence in the case. A reasonable doubt is that state of the case, which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the mind in that condition that jurors cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a certainty, that the accused committed the offense. People v. Yun Kee, 96 Pac. 95, 96, 8 Cal. App. 82.

Accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt; but a "reasonable doubt" does not mean a vague, speculative, or possible doubt, but such a substantial doubt as will remain in the minds of reasonable fair-minded men after a consideration of all the evidence. State v. Brelawski (Del.) 84 Atl. 950, 953.

A statement in an instruction on reasonable doubt that everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt, and that the "reasonable doubt" referred to was that state of the case, etc., did not render the instruction erroneous. People v. Verduzco, 110 Pac. 970, 972, 13 Cal. App. 789.

Concurrence of all jurors

If a "reasonable doubt" arises from a single jurymen, the other jurymen should come to the mind of that one. Commonwealth v. Campbell, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 9, 15, 17.

In a prosecution for murder, the jury are not required to acquit the defendant if one of them has a "reasonable doubt" of his guilt. Howard v. State, 44 South. 95, 96, 151 Ala. 22.

An instruction on reasonable doubt was not erroneous because its concluding clause directed that, while each juror should decide for himself, it was his duty to consult with the other jurors with the view of reaching an agreement if they could without violence to their individual understanding of the evidence and instructions of the court, and that they should not hesitate to sacrifice their views or opinions of the case when convinced that they were erroneous, even though in so doing they deferred to the views or opinions of others. People v. Verduzco, 110 Pac. 970, 972, 13 Cal. App. 789.

As doubt arising from evidence

A "reasonable doubt" must be based on the evidence in the case. Walker v. State, 35 South. 1011, 1012, 1014, 139 Ala. 56.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt growing out of the testimony and evidence in the case. People v. Yun Kee, 96 Pac. 95, 96, 8 Cal. App. 82.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt of guilt arising upon consideration of all the evidence, facts, and circumstances presented at trial. Dobbs v. State, 115 Pac. 370, 373, 5 Okl. Cr. 475.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt derived from the evidence or lack of evidence in the case. United States v. Post, 128 Fed. 950, 957.

A "reasonable doubt" must arise from the evidence or lack of evidence in the case. Cannon v. Territory, 99 Pac. 622, 626, 1 Okl. Cr. 600.

A "reasonable doubt" may arise from want or lack of evidence, and need not be founded upon evidence in the case. State v. Andrews, 71 Atl. 109, 110, 77 N. J. Law, 108.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt growing out of the evidence, and such as would control reasonable men in the ordinary affairs of life. State v. Coates (Del.) 79 Atl. 213, 215, 2 Boyce, 424.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt arising out of the evidence, and the jury may not go outside of the evidence to hunt up doubts on which to acquit accused. State v. Trapp, 109 Pac. 1094, 1097, 56 Or. 588.

The jury are not to go beyond the evidence to hunt for doubt. A "reasonable doubt" must arise from a candid and impartial consideration and investigation of all the evidence in the case. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

"Reasonable doubt" beyond which guilt must be affirmatively proved to justify a conviction is a doubt of guilt reasonably arising from all the evidence or want of evidence in the case. Baker v. State, 97 N. W. 566, 568, 120 Wis. 135.

"Reasonable doubt" to which a defendant is entitled is not one raised by the juror's personal information from hearsay or otherwise, or from his bias or prejudice, but must grow out of and be founded upon the evidence adduced on the trial. Commonwealth v. Di Silvestro, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 537, 555.

While a "doubt" arising out of evidence which will justify an acquittal in a criminal case is a mental operation for which it may often be very difficult and indeed impossible to assign any reason, yet it is not reversible error to define reasonable doubt as a doubt arising from the evidence or lack of evidence and for which some reason can be given. Griggs v. United States, 158 Fed. 572, 577, 85 C. C. A. 596.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is one that is based upon some ground in the testimony or the want of testimony in the case, and that, if a juror has not a doubt of that gravity, he ought to convict, is proper. O'Dell v. State, 47 S. E. 577, 578, 120 Ga. 152.

The definition of a "reasonable doubt" by the court in charging the jury as "such a doubt as grows out of the testimony and leaves a reasonable mind wavering and unsettled" is probably too narrow and restricted. A reasonable doubt may arise, not only out of the testimony, but from the want of testimony, or it may be created by the statement of the defendant, or the manner and conduct of the witnesses in testifying, or the credibility of the witnesses, and other facts and circumstances connected with the case. Governor v. State, 63 S. E. 241, 244, 5 Ga. App. 357.

A charge that the state has the burden of proving every fact necessary to a conviction beyond a reasonable doubt, that the expression "reasonable doubt" means a doubt founded on some good reason, and must not arise from sympathetic feelings, but must arise from the evidence or lack of evidence, etc., correctly charges on "reasonable doubt." State v. Harsted, 119 Pac. 24, 26, 66 Wash. 158.

A "reasonable doubt" is a fair doubt growing out of the testimony in the case. It is not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt, but a fair doubt based upon reason and common sense. It is such a doubt as may leave the minds of the jury, after a careful examination of all the evidence in the case, in that condition that they cannot say they have an abiding conviction of a moral certainty of the truth of the accusation. The proposition that a "reasonable doubt" must be an insurmountable doubt is not approved. People v. Burke, 121 N. W. 282, 284, 157 Mich. 108 (quoting with approval from People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482, 483).

The term "reasonable doubt," as defined by text writers and decisions of courts of last resort, is a fair doubt growing out of the testimony in the case. It is not a mere imaginary, captious, or possible doubt, but a fair doubt, based upon reason and common sense. It would be possible to raise an imaginary or captious doubt in any case, no matter how strong, direct, and positive the evidence might be. For instance, a jury might imagine, in a case where two uncontradicted eye-witnesses to a crime testified to its commission, that such witnesses might be mistaken, and thus entertain a captious or imaginary doubt. But such a doubt is not a "reasonable doubt," within the legal definition of that phrase. State v. Levy, 75 Pac. 227, 230, 9 Idaho, 483 (citing 3 Rice, Ev. § 268).

To convict a person of an offense charged, it is incumbent upon the state to prove every material element of the crime to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Such a doubt must be a reasonable one under all the circumstances of the case, and must grow out of the evidence. It must not be a fanciful doubt, a visionary, speculative, or sympathetic one, but such a doubt as upon careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence the jury feels constrained to entertain. State v. Fleetwood (Del.) 65 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 153.

The "reasonable doubt" which entitles defendant in a criminal case to an acquittal is a doubt of guilt, reasonably arising from all the evidence in the case, and it must be such a doubt as the juror is able to give a reason for. A "reasonable doubt" is that state of a case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the mind of the juror in that condition that he cannot say and feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the guilt of defendant as charged in the information. State v. Grant, 106 N. W. 97, 99, 26 S. D. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 1017.

A "reasonable doubt" is one that grows out of the testimony or from the absence of testimony, and leaves a reasonable mind wavering and unsettled and not satisfied from the evidence. A juror cannot create for himself a doubt and act upon it. He cannot raise an artificial or captious doubt in order to acquit. The doubt should be real and honestly and fairly entertained after all reasonable efforts to find out the facts. The proof should be such as to control and decide the conduct of men in the highest and most important affairs of life, and not a mere conjecture, a fancy, a trivial supposition, a bare possibility of innocence. Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336.

A charge in a criminal case defining a "reasonable doubt," that "a doubt, to justify an acquittal, must be reasonable and arise from a candid and impartial consideration of all the evidence in the case," is not erroneous, as precluding a reasonable doubt arising from a want of evidence. Moore v. State, 111 Pac. 822, 824, 4 Okl. Cr. 212.

A prisoner in a criminal trial has no ground to complain of a charge as follows: "The presumption is that the defendant is innocent, and the presumption continues up until the moment that you are satisfied by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of his guilt. This reasonable doubt is such a doubt that fully arises from the evidence. It should not be a mere whim or surmise. There should be such a doubt as there is a reason for and which fully arises out of the evidence. * * * We would say further that the doubt arises from all of the evidence, and if the doubt arises from a single jurymen the other eleven jurymen should come to the mind of that one. It of course takes twelve jurymen to arrive at the verdict." Commonwealth v. Campbell, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 9, 15, 17.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" sufficient to justify an acquittal is a doubt arising from all the evidence or from a want of evidence, and that evidence is sufficient to remove a reasonable doubt when sufficient to convince the judgments of ordinarily prudent men of the truth of a proposition with such force that they would act upon that conviction without hesitation in their most important affairs when not compelled to act, was proper. Weigand v. State, 99 N. E. 999, 178 Ind. 623.

An instruction is correct which reads: "A 'reasonable doubt,' as used in these instructions, to justify an acquittal, must be a reasonable one arising from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence in the case. A doubt produced by an undue sensibility in the mind of any juror in view of the consequences of his verdict is not a reasonable doubt, and the jury is not allowed to create sources of materials of doubt by resorting to trivial or fanciful suppositions and remote conjectures as to a possible state of facts differing from these established by the evidence. You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if from all the evidence you believe as men. Your oath imposes on you no obligation to doubt, where no doubt would exist if no oath had been administered. If, after a careful and impartial examination and consideration of all the evidence, in the case, you can say that you feel an abiding conviction of the guilt of the defendant, and are fully satisfied to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge made against him, then you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt." Mays v. State, 101 N. W. 979, 980, 72 Neb. 723.

To instruct the jury as follows: "By the term 'reasonable doubt,' as used in these instructions, is meant that state of the case which, after a full consideration of all the evidence, leaves your minds in that condition that you cannot say that you feel an abiding conviction of the guilt of the defendant. You should not go beyond the evidence to hunt for doubt, or entertain doubt from mere caprice or conjecture. Such doubt should arise only from a candid and impartial and honest consideration of all the evidence and the facts and circumstances presented upon the trial, and if, upon such consideration, doubt does so arise, and by reason of it you cannot say that you are satisfied to a moral certainty of the guilt of the defendant, you should return your verdict of not guilty"—will not warrant a reversal on the ground that it does not authorize the jury to find the defendant not guilty on account of the lack of evidence against him. Dobbs v. State, 115 Pac. 370, 373, 5 Okl. Cr. 475.

A charge that a "reasonable doubt" was such a doubt as arose from the evidence either from the want of evidence or conflict in the evidence was not error because the court failed to charge that such doubt might arise from the defendant's unsworn statement, in view of other charges that defendant had a right to make such statement which should be considered by the jury in connection with the sworn testimony and given such weight as the jurors thought it entitled to, that if the jury had a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt they should acquit, and that they should take the state's theory, the evidence, the defendant's statement, view the whole field of evidence, and determine what the truth of the case was. Harris v. State, 70 S. E. 952, 953, 136 Ga. 107.

An instruction that "a reasonable doubt requires that there should be more than a mere possibility of the defendant's innocence. You must have, in order to justify acquittal, a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt growing out of the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence against him. This doubt must be such a one as would induce a reasonable man to say, 'I am not satisfied that the defendant is guilty'—was erroneous, as the expression "the evidence against him" had a tendency to lead the jury to believe that they were to determine the question of reasonable doubt from a consideration of the state's evidence alone. People v. Lee, 93 N. E. 321, 323, 248 Ill. 64.

The court charged that reasonable doubt must be a rational doubt, fairly arising from the testimony and the circumstances surrounding the case; that the burden was on the state to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the existence of any fact and circumstance necessary to form a conclusion of defendant's guilt which must be affirmatively proven to a moral certainty; and that the presumption of innocence attends the accused from the beginning to the end of the trial, and prevails unless overcome by evidence sufficiently strong to convince and satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. Held, that such charge was not objectionable as depriving accused of the benefit of reasonable doubt arising from insufficiency or lack of evidence, in that the court in certain excerpts stated that a reasonable doubt which entitled accused to an acquittal was one arising from "all the evidence in the case." Hedger v. State, 128 N. W. 80, 90, 144 Wis. 279.

The court instructed that the term "reasonable doubt" meant a doubt having some good reason for it arising out of evidence in the case; such a doubt as the jury could find a reason for in the evidence, and, as applied to the evidence in criminal cases, meant an actual and substantial doubt growing out of the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence, and the entire evidence should be considered, and the jury should entertain only such doubts as arise from the evidence and are reasonable. Held, that objection to the charge that the doubt must arise out of the evidence, on the ground that it might arise from want of evidence, was hypercritical, it simply meaning that the jury could not go out of the record to hunt for a pretext to acquit, nor was the instruction that the jury could only act upon such doubt as they were able to find a reason for in the evidence objectionable, when properly construed, as the reason for a reasonable doubt could come from no other source. People v. Del Cerro, 100 Pac. 887, 890, 9 Cal. App. 764.

An instruction, on a trial for murder, that in whatever form the question of a reasonable doubt may be couched, and however it may be twisted by words, a reasonable doubt is no more than a reasonable doubt, and that in considering the case the jury were not to go beyond the evidence to hunt up a doubt, nor must they entertain such doubts as were merely imaginary or conjectural; that a doubt, to justify an acquittal, must be reasonable and arise from an impartial investigation of the evidence; and that if, after considering all the evidence, the jury had a fixed conviction of the truth of the charge, they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt—was not erroneous. Bluett v. State, 44 South. 84, 87, 89, 151 Ala. 41.

Where the court had defined what was a "reasonable doubt," an addendum to the effect that the "reasonable doubt" of the law is one that grows out of the evidence was not subject to the criticism that it excluded the inference that such a doubt may arise from the want of evidence or the conflict in evidence. Thomas v. State, 59 S. E. 246, 248, 129 Ga. 419.

In a criminal prosecution, an instruction, defining a "reasonable doubt" as "not a mere imaginary or possible doubt, but a substantial doubt, based upon reason and common sense, and induced by the facts and circumstances attending the particular case and growing out of the testimony. It is such a doubt as will leave one's mind, after a careful examination of all the evidence, in such condition that he cannot say that he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the defendant's guilt as charged"—is not subject to the objection that by it the jury were confined to a consideration of the evidence, whereas a reasonable doubt may arise from the lack of evidence. State v. De Lea, 93 Pac. 814, 816, 36 Mont. 531.

As not including every doubt

To give rise to a "reasonable doubt" justifying an acquittal, the evidence need not exclude all doubt. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

A request to charge in a criminal case, using the expression "all doubt," in place of "a reasonable doubt," was properly refused. Gordon v. State, 41 South. 847, 849, 147 Ala. 42.

"Reasonable doubt" is not any doubt which might cause any juror to hesitate to act in the most important business affairs of his own. Nelms v. State, 51 S. E. 588, 589, 123 Ga. 575.

The doubt as to accused's guilt that authorizes an acquittal must be a "reasonable one"; a mere doubt being insufficient. Davis v. State, 44 South. 561, 562, 152 Ala. 25.

A request to charge the jury to discharge defendant if they had a doubt of his guilt was objectionable for failure to require that the jury have a "reasonable doubt." Green v. State, 53 South. 284, 285, 168 Ala. 104.

It was proper to refuse a requested instruction that if, after subjecting the facts to the test of reason, there remained a doubt of guilt, the jury should acquit. Brown v. State, 43 South. 194, 196, 150 Ala. 25.

In a prosecution for homicide, instructions that the jury must construe every doubt in favor of the accused were properly refused; such duty being limited to "reasonable" doubts. Thomas v. State, 43 South. 371, 376, 150 Ala. 31.

Defendant's requested instruction that if the jury should be in doubt as to defendant's guilt he should be acquitted, and that all doubts should be resolved in his favor, was patently bad. Kirby v. State, 44 South. 38, 40, 42, 151 Ala. 66.

A requested instruction that if the evidence leaves in the mind of the jury any doubt as to the guilt of the defendant, or if after a fair consideration of the facts the guilt of the accused remains in doubt, they should acquit, ignored the question of reasonable doubt and was properly refused. Prior v. Territory, 89 Pac. 412, 11 Ariz. 169.

On a trial for murder in the first degree, a refusal to charge that, if the jury is in doubt as to what actually happened in the room where the homicide was committed, they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, is not ground for reversal, as the request included any doubt, however slight, which the jury might have as to what actually occurred, especially where the court has charged fully as to the right of the accused to the benefit of every reasonable doubt. People v. Boggiano, 72 N. E. 101, 102, 179 N. Y. 267.

As excluding every hypothesis but guilt

The rule that, to warrant conviction, the evidence must in every case be of such a character as to exclude every reasonable hypothesis of innocence, is but another way of saying that the defendants must be proved guilty beyond a "reasonable doubt." If a reasonable doubt exists, there must be a reasonable hypothesis of innocence; and where such hypothesis does not exist there can be no reasonable doubt. Marrash v. United States, 168 Fed. 225, 229, 93 C. C. A. 511.

In a murder trial, it was not fair to refuse to instruct that defendant could not be convicted unless the evidence against him excluded to a moral certainty every hypothesis or supposition but that of his guilt.—Young v. State, 43 South. 100, 101, 149 Ala. 16.

It was error to refuse to instruct that the jury should acquit defendant unless the evidence excluded every reasonable supposition but that of his guilt. Griffin v. State, 43 South. 197, 199, 150 Ala. 49.

A charge that the jury should acquit unless the evidence excludes every reasonable supposition but that of defendant's guilt was properly refused. Bell v. State, 37 South. 281-284, 140 Ala. 57.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is one that excludes every reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt of the defendant, and that when no other supposition will reasonably account for all of the conditions of the case can the conclusion of guilt be adopted, was properly refused. Thayer v. State, 35 South. 408, 408, 409, 138 Ala. 39 (citing Yarbrough v. State, 16 South. 758, 105 Ala. 45, 56).

It was proper to refuse a requested instruction that, before defendant could be convicted, the jury must be satisfied to a moral certainty, not only that the proof was consistent with his guilt, but wholly inconsistent with every other rational supposition, and that, unless the jury should be so convinced that each member would venture to act on the decision in matters of the highest importance to their own interest, they should acquit. Brown v. State, 43 South. 191, 196, 150 Ala. 25 (citing Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 140 Ala. 70).

An instruction that, to sustain a conviction, the state must introduce testimony so strong and convincing as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of the defendant's guilt, and must convince the jury beyond all reasonable doubt that he could not be innocent, or he must be acquitted, was properly refused, as leading the jury to believe that a higher degree of proof was required than that to satisfy belief beyond a reasonable doubt; and also as requiring the jury to convict defendant, if at all, on the state's testimony. Rigsby v. State, 44 South. 608, 610, 152 Ala. 9.

A charge that if the jury were not satisfied beyond a "reasonable doubt," to a moral certainty, and to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis that the defendant was guilty they should find him not guilty, and that it is not necessary to raise a reasonable doubt that the jury should find from all the evidence a probability of defendant's innocence, but that such doubt may arise even when there is no probability of the innocence from the testimony, and that if the jury have not an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of his guilt it is their duty to acquit, and that they must find the defendant not guilty if the conduct of the defendant, upon a reasonable hypothesis, is consistent with his innocence, was properly refused. Bell v. State, 37 South. 281-284, 140 Ala. 57.

As incapable of explanation

The phrase "reasonable doubt" is self-explanatory, and simplicity would be rendered confusing and meaning obscure by any elaboration. James v. State, 57 S. E. 959, 960, 1 Ga. App. 779.

The meaning of the phrase "reasonable doubt" is obvious; and for the courts to attempt to explain it to the jury is to "gild refined gold," or add another ray unto the sunlight. Barker v. State, 57 S. E. 989, 990, 1 Ga. App. 236.

"There are no words plainer than 'reasonable doubt,' and none so exact to the idea meant." "Reasonable hypothesis," or "reasonable or moral certainty," may be logically the equivalent of "reasonable doubt"; but these expressions are not so easily understood by the ordinary lay mind. In every criminal case the presiding judge should charge the jury that, to authorize conviction, guilt must be proved "beyond a reasonable doubt," and, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered, his failure to do so will be reversible error. Norman v. State, 74 S. E. 428, 10 Ga. App. 802.

Bishop says that there are no words plainer than "reasonable doubt" and none so exact to the idea meant, but, in respect to definitions, says, "we have not seen one which can safely be pronounced both helpful and accurate." Another authority says "that the words are of plain and unmistakable meaning and any definition on the part of the court tends only to confuse the jury and to render uncertain an expression, which, standing alone, is certain and intelligible." State v. Blay, 58 Atl. 794, 795, 77 Vt. 56 (citing Blah. Cr. Proc. § 1199).

It is difficult, if not impossible, to so define the term "reasonable doubt" as to satisfy a subtle and metaphysical mind, bent on the detection of some point, however attenuated, upon which to hang a criticism. McCue v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 623, 629, 103 Va. 870.

It is difficult to give a definition more easily comprehended by juries than the words themselves. They convey their own unmistakable meaning. Certainly the cumulative effect resulting from the reiteration of the same idea by the use of such words and phrases as "well-founded doubt," "substantial doubt," and others of like meaning, is well calculated to fritter away and destroy all benefit to be derived from this important rule of law. Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 103, 117 Tenn. 430.

The phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt," used in the statute in establishing the measure of proof necessary to warrant a conviction in a criminal case, is not a technical term, and needs no explanation from the courts in instructing juries. An instruction on this subject in the language of the statute is all that the court is required to give.

It is a dangerous thing for the courts to attempt to go further. Douglas v. Territory, 98 Pac. 1023, 1024, 1 Okl. Cr. 588 (quoting and adopting definition in Price v. State, 98 Pac. 447, 1 Okl. Cr. 358).

There have been many attempts to define and interpret the term "reasonable doubt," but it is apprehended that such attempts are futile, that the words are of plain and unmistakable meaning, and that any definition on the part of the court tends only to confuse the jury and to render uncertain an expression which standing alone is certain and intelligible. Nelms v. State, 51 S. E. 588, 589, 123 Ga. 575.

May be raised by evidence of good character

Evidence of previous good character as to the trait involved in the accusation may, in the absence of other evidence, raise a reasonable doubt, and entitle accused to an acquittal. United States v. Wilson, 176 Fed. 806, 810.

Evidence of good character is a species of circumstantial evidence to be considered the same as all other evidence, together with all the facts in the case; and, while it alone may cause a reasonable doubt, it does not necessarily do so. People v. Fisher, 120 N. Y. Supp. 659, 661, 136 App. Div. 57.

In a murder trial, an instruction that the fact that defendant is a man of good character may be sufficient to generate in the jury's minds a reasonable doubt of his guilt was properly refused. Davis v. State, 44 South. 561, 562, 152 Ala. 25.

A charge that if the defendant had proved a good character as a man of peace such good character may be sufficient to create or generate a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although no such doubt would have existed except but for such good character, was properly refused. Bell v. State, 37 South. 281-284, 140 Ala. 57.

While it is immaterial that accused has a good reputation, if he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, good reputation raises a presumption of innocence, weighty according to the circumstances of the case, and where there is evidence of good reputation, accused is not proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, unless the evidence is so conclusive of guilt as to overcome the improbability that one of good reputation would commit the offense; and hence the jury must consider the evidence of reputation, though they have no doubt of guilt. People v. Blatt, 121 N. Y. Supp. 507, 509, 136 App. Div. 717.

As one sufficient to cause hesitation in important affairs

The proof to warrant a "reasonable doubt" should be such as to control and decide the conduct of men in the highest and most important affairs of life. Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336.

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man to pause before acting in a matter of grave importance to himself. Chandler v. State, 105 Pac. 375, 378, 3 Okl. Cr. 254.

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as would cause a reasonably prudent man to pause before acting in the highest affairs of life. State v. Raice, 123 N. W. 708, 710, 24 S. D. 111.

"Reasonable doubt" is not any doubt which might cause any juror to hesitate to act in the most important business affairs of his own. Nelms v. State, 51 S. E. 588, 589, 123 Ga. 575.

Guilt is proven beyond a "reasonable doubt" when all the evidence, impartially considered, impresses the judgment of ordinarily reasonable and prudent men with a conviction on which they would act without hesitation in the most important affairs of life. Miller v. State, 119 N. W. 850, 861, 139 Wis. 57.

If after an impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence jurors can truthfully say that they have a fixed conviction of defendant's guilt such as they would be willing to act on in the more weighty and important matters relating to their own affairs, they have no "reasonable doubt," and in that case they should convict. United States v. Giuliani, 147 Fed. 594, 597.

A "reasonable doubt" must be such a doubt existing in the mind as, in his own affairs, would cause a reasonably prudent or careful man to pause or hesitate to act in grave or important affairs of life; and it must be a doubt for which a good reason exists, arising out of the testimony or the want of testimony. A reasonable doubt is not a mere possible doubt; it is that state of the case, which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the mind in such a condition that it cannot be said that there is an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. The law does not require a demonstration—that is, such a degree of proof as, excluding the possibility of error, produces absolute certainty—because such proof is rarely possible. Moral certainty only is required, or that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind. State v. Armstrong, 73 Pac. 1022, 1026, 43 Or. 207.

A "reasonable doubt" which will justify an acquittal in a criminal case is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man to pause or hesitate in the most important affairs and concerns of his life. An instruction that it is such a doubt as would "govern and control" a reasonably prudent man and "deter" him from acting in his most important affairs and concerns of life was erroneous as requiring an actual belief as distinguished from a doubt. An instruction that the jury should not go beyond the evidence to hunt up doubts nor entertain merely chimerical doubts or matters of conjecture; but that a doubt, to justify acquittal, must be reasonable and arise either negatively or positively from a candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence; that unless the same kind of a doubt, interposed in the graver transactions of life, would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause, it was insufficient; and that if, after considering all the evidence, the jury had an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, they would be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt—was erroneous because the expression "the graver transactions of life" is not the legal equivalent of "the most important affairs of life," and also because it apparently assumed that the jury were to start their deliberations upon the basis that conviction was to be the result unless a reasonable doubt had been proved, thus requiring accused to assume the burden of establishing a reasonable doubt, instead of requiring the state to prove his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. McAllister v. State, 88 N. W. 212, 214, 112 Wis. 496.

In an instruction wherein it is said, in speaking of the law as to reasonable doubt, that unless it is such that, were the same kind of doubt interposed in the graver transactions of life, it would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause, "it is insufficient to cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause," it is insufficient to authorize a verdict of not guilty, the interpolation of the words quoted did not, we apprehend, confuse the jury as to the main idea sought to be conveyed by the instruction, nor was it prejudicial to the accused. Martin v. State, 93 N. W. 161, 162, 67 Neb. 36.

An instruction, that proof is said to be "beyond a reasonable doubt" when the evidence is sufficient to impress the judgment of ordinarily prudent men with a conviction on which they would act without hesitation in their own important concerns of life, was not erroneous. Frank v. State, 68 N. W. 657, 660, 94 Wis. 211.

An instruction as to "reasonable doubt," which, after defining such doubt as an actual doubt which a juror is conscious of after reviewing in his mind the entire case, giving consideration to all the testimony, and one which he believes would cause a reasonable man in any matter of like importance to hesitate to act, denies the notion that any mere possibility is sufficient ground for such a doubt, and adds that, in the performance of jury service, jurors should decide controversies as they would any important question in their own affairs, is good as against a general exception. Holt v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 2, 6, 218 U. S. 245, 54 L. Ed. 1021, 20 Ann. Cas. 1138.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to so define the term "reasonable doubt" as to satisfy a subtle and metaphysical mind, bent upon the detection of some point, however attenuated, upon which to hang a criticism. But a requested instruction that "the court instructs the jury that by 'reasonable doubt' is meant such doubt as would cause a man of average prudence to hesitate about a matter of his own of like importance to himself as the case on trial is to the accused" is obviously inadequate, since it would be impossible for the jury to make any practical application of the proposition sought to be formulated in the instruction. There could be no case of importance to a man such as "the case on trial was to the accused" unless he himself stood upon his deliverance before a jury charged with a capital offense. McCue v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 623, 629, 103 Va. 870.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, but it is such a doubt as arises from such a candid consideration of all the evidence as will cause a reasonable man to pause in the graver transactions of life; and a juror is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, where, from a candid consideration of all the evidence, he has an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge. Dempsey v. State, 102 S. W. 704, 706, 83 Ark. 81.

It was proper to refuse a requested instruction that, before defendant could be convicted, the jury must be satisfied to a moral certainty, not only that the proof was consistent with his guilt, but wholly inconsistent with every other rational supposition, and that, unless the jury should be so convinced that each member would venture to act on the decision in matters of the highest importance to their own interest, they should acquit. Brown v. State, 43 South. 194, 150 Ala. 25 (citing Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 140 Ala. 70).

As not arising from ingenuity of counsel or jury

A "reasonable doubt" must be based upon the evidence in the case, and not upon the arguments of counsel to authorize an acquittal, and an instruction that a reasonable doubt is such as in the graver affairs of life would cause a prudent and reasonable man to pause and hesitate before acting upon the truth of the matter charged was properly refused. Walker v. State, 35 South. 1011, 1012, 1014, 139 Ala. 56.

As requiring moral certainty

The terms "reasonable doubt" and "moral certainty" may be used interchangeably. Hendrix v. United States, 101 Pac. 125, 130, 2 Okl. Cr. 240.

The expressions "beyond a reasonable doubt" and "to a moral certainty" are synonymous, and each simply means that the proof must be such as would satisfy the judgment and consciousness of the juror that the crime charged had been committed by the defendant and that no other reasonable conclusion was possible. People v. Bonifacio, 82 N. E. 1098, 1100, 190 N. Y. 150 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1, and citing Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 439, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708).

The phrases "to a moral and reasonable certainty" and "beyond a reasonable doubt," as applied to the quality of proof in a case, are identical in meaning. "Reasonable and moral certainty" may be said to be that degree of probability which exists with such strength as to justify human action upon it. Whatever exists to a moral and reasonable certainty of necessity exists beyond a reasonable doubt. Austin v. State, 64 S. E. 670, 6 Ga. App. 211.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" requires that the facts must be proved to a moral certainty. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 541, 7 Pennewill, 479.

If after considering all the testimony a juror is morally sure of defendant's guilt, he has no "reasonable doubt." Chandler v. State, 105 Pac. 375, 378, 3 Okl. Cr. 254.

A juror is understood to entertain a "reasonable doubt" when he has an abiding conviction of mind founded on the evidence to a moral certainty that the defendant is not guilty as charged. State v. Paulsgrove, 101 S. W. 27, 30, 203 Mo. 193.

"Reasonable doubt" means that state of mind of a juror, where, after having carefully considered all the evidence, he cannot say that he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the guilt of the accused. Davis v. State, 36 South. 170, 172, 47 Fla. 26.

A "reasonable doubt" is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Bridgeman v. United States, 140 Fed. 577, 592, 72 C. C. A. 145; State v. Grant, 105 N. W. 97, 99, 20 S. D. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 1017; Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 103, 117 Tenn. 430 (citing Chief Justice Shaw in Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. [59 Mass.] 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711); Snyder v. State, 111 S. W. 465, 468, 86 Ark. 456; People v. Burke, 121 N. W. 282, 284, 157 Mich. 108; Vance v. Territory, 105 Pac. 307, 311, 3 Okl. Cr. 208.

A "reasonable doubt" is that state of the case which, after full, fair, and impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge; that is, to a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of the jurors. But the doubt must arise from the evidence or lack of evidence in the case. Cannon v. Territory, 99 Pac. 622, 626, 1 Okl. Cr. 600.

"Reasonable doubt" in respect of the sufficiency of evidence in a criminal case does not mean a possible doubt, a mere speculation, or a captious quibble suggested for the purpose of evading the performance of an honest duty, but means that state of mind which, after a fair comparison and consideration of all the evidence, both for the state and for accused, leaves the minds of the jury in that condition where they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Saunders v. State, 111 Pac. 965, 971, 4 Okl. Cr. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 766.

The term "reasonable doubt" does not denote a mere possible doubt. "It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge." Consequently, it is erroneous to charge that by the term "reasonable doubt" is meant a doubt that has a reason for it, a doubt for which a reason can be given. Abbott v. Territory, 94 Pac. 179, 180, 20 Okl. 119, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200, 129 Am. St. Rep. 818 (quoting and adopting Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. [Mass.] 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711).

An instruction was not objectionable because it used the words "morally certain" as equivalent to "beyond a reasonable doubt"; such terms being the legal equivalents of each other.—State v. Wappenstein, 121 Pac. 989, 998, 67 Wash. 502.

In a murder trial, it was not fair to refuse to instruct that defendant could not be convicted unless the evidence against him excluded to a moral certainty every hypothesis or supposition but that of his guilt.—Young v. State, 43 South. 100, 101, 149 Ala. 16.

It was not error to strike out the words quoted, in an instruction that the jury must be satisfied to a "moral certainty," beyond a reasonable doubt as to accused's guilt before they could convict, since the words stricken were synonymous with the phrase "beyond a reasonable doubt." Stewart v. State, 115 S. W. 374, 375, 88 Ark. 602 (citing Commonwealth v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1; Jones v. State, 14 South. 772, 100 Ala. 88; Woodruff v. State, 12 South. 653, 31 Fla. 320; Carlton v. People, 37 N. E. 244, 150 Ill. 181, 41 Am. St. Rep. 346).

An instruction to the jury that they must be satisfied to a "moral and reasonable certainty" is the same in effect as saying that they must be satisfied "beyond a reasonable doubt." Warren v. Gay, 51 S. E. 302, 303, 123 Ga. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Dwight v. Jones, 42 S. E. 48, 115 Ga. 744).

An instruction defining reasonable doubt, that if "the jury are fully satisfied to a moral certainty" they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, is not prejudicial because of the use of the word "fully." Wheeler v. State, 113 N. W. 253, 255, 79 Neb. 491.

A requested instruction that one of the correct definitions of beyond a "reasonable doubt" is to be wholly satisfied, or satisfied to a moral certainty, was properly refused as such instruction executed too high a degree of proof. Thayer v. State, 35 South. 406, 408, 409, 138 Ala. 39 (citing Griffith v. State, 8 South. 812, 90 Ala. 583).

It is error to instruct that, before the jury can convict, they must believe defendant guilty "beyond a moral certainty"; but it is error to refuse to charge that the jury must be satisfied "beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty" of defendant's guilt before they can convict. Sykes v. State, 44 South. 398, 399, 151 Ala. 80.

The refusal to charge the jury that, before they can convict, they must be satisfied to a moral certainty, not only that the proof is consistent with the guilt of the defendant, but that it is wholly inconsistent with every other rational conclusion, was not error. Griffin v. State, 43 South. 197, 199, 150 Ala. 49 (citing Nevill v. State, 32 South. 596, 133 Ala. 99).

It was proper to refuse a requested instruction that, before defendant could be convicted, the jury must be satisfied to a moral certainty, not only that the proof was consistent with his guilt, but wholly inconsistent with every other rational supposition, and that, unless the jury should be so convinced that each member would venture to act on the decision in matters of the highest importance to their own interest, they should acquit. Brown v. State, 43 South. 194, 196, 150 Ala. 25 (citing Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 140 Ala. 70).

The court having charged that by "reasonable doubt" is not meant a possibility of a doubt or a speculative imaginary, or forced doubt, but it must be a doubt naturally arising from the evidence, and, as the words themselves import, it must be a reasonable doubt, one conformable to reason, may refuse to add thereto that "if after a consideration of all the evidence submitted in the case both by the state and the defendant, including the statement of the defendant himself, you cannot say you have an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the guilt of the defendant, it will be your duty to acquit." The necessity of proof beyond a reasonable doubt in order to convict sufficiently embraces the idea that a belief in innocence is not essential to an acquittal. McDuffee v. State, 46 South. 721, 724, 55 Fla. 125 (citing Woodruff Case, 12 South. 653, 31 Fla. 320).

In a prosecution for homicide, the state relied on evidence that the fatal shot was fired by accused, and also on a common understanding between accused and his brother to kill or injure deceased, while defendant claimed that his brother fired the shot, and that defendant did not participate in the difficulty. Held, that an instruction that, if there existed a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant shot and killed deceased, then the jury should find him not guilty unless they were convinced from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that he aided and abetted, or advised and encouraged the commission of the crime, etc., was correct. People v. Verduzco, 110 Pac. 970, 972, 13 Cal. App. 789.

An instruction that if the evidence did not establish the truth of the charge in the indictment beyond a "reasonable doubt" as to a moral certainty, to wit, a certainty that convinced and directed the jury's understanding and satisfied their reason and judgment, they must acquit, was properly refused as requiring too high a degree of proof. Gordon v. State, 41 South. 847, 849, 147 Ala. 42 (citing Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. [5 Cush.] 295, 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Griffith v. State, 8 South. 812, 90 Ala. 583, 588).

A charge that before the jury can convict they must find accused guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and that a "reasonable doubt" is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge—that is, to a certainty that causes and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it—is ordinarily a sufficient admonition as to the separate individual duty of each juror. State v. Smith, 114 Pac. 1074, 84 Kan. 646.

Defendant's requested instruction that, if the jury are not satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt to a moral certainty, and to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis but that of his guilt, they should acquit, and it is not necessary to raise a reasonable doubt that they should find from all the evidence a probability of his innocence, but such a doubt may arise even when there is no probability of his innocence in the testimony, and if they have not an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of his guilt, it is their duty to acquit, should be given. Bally v. State, 53 South. 296, 299, 390, 168 Ala. 4.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, but a fair doubt, growing out of the evidence or lack of evidence, and exists when each juror is unable to say that he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge, etc., was not objectionable as in effect charging that such doubt exists only when all the jurors have a reasonable doubt. The fair and only meaning of the instruction is that a "reasonable doubt" exists only when each juror is unable to say that he has an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. "Each" as used in the instruction is a distributive adjective, and means "when the same thing is to be predicated of all the individuals considered distributively, or one by one." It denotes or refers to either one of the persons mentioned, or every one of any number separately considered. State v. Thompson, 87 Pac. 709, 712, 31 Utah, 228 (citing Standard Dict.; 3 Words and Phrases, p. 2299).

An instruction that the term "reasonable doubt" does not mean a "mere possible doubt, a conjectural doubt," nor "a doubt which is merely capricious," when read in connection with a preceding instruction that a reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty that defendant committed the offense, was entirely correct. People v. Botkin, 98 Pac. 861, 867, 9 Cal. App. 244.

To justify a conviction of crime, the evidence must establish the guilt of accused beyond all reasonable doubt, which is accomplished if, after consideration of all the evidence, the truth of the facts is shown to a reasonable and moral certainty and satisfies the judgment of those bound to act conscientiously on it. State v. Samuels (Del.) 67 Atl. 164, 166, 6 Pennewill, 36.

A "reasonable doubt" is that state of the case which, after a full comparison and consideration of all the evidence and circumstances of the case, leaves the minds of the jury in that condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction, amounting to a moral certainty, from the evidence of the case, that accused is guilty of the charge laid in the indictment. A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible or conjectural doubt and the jury are not to go beyond the evidence to hunt for doubt. A "reasonable doubt" must arise from a candid and impartial consideration and investigation of all the evidence in the case. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after full consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in such a condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Flickinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 1, 9, 79 C. C. A. 515.

"A 'reasonable doubt' is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in such a condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. By 'reasonable doubt' is not meant a strained or whimsical conjecture, but an actual, sincere, mental hesitation caused either by insufficient evidence or by unsatisfactory evidence." United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

A reasonable doubt is one growing out of all the circumstances of the case as disclosed by the evidence, such as would prevent reasonable and conscientious men from reaching a conclusion to a moral certainty, but not a fanciful doubt, or one growing out of conjecture, speculation, or sympathy. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866, 869, 4 Pennell, 580.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending upon moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after full consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in such a condition that they cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. Every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If, upon such proof, there is reasonable doubt remaining, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it by acquittal. It is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than otherwise, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty, a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it, and, in order to find the defendant guilty, the evidence must be such as to exclude every single reasonable hypothesis, except that of the guilt of the defendant. In other words, all of the facts proved must be consistent with, and point to, the guilt of the defendant, not only, but the facts must be inconsistent with her innocence. It matters not how clearly the circumstances point to guilt, still, if they are reasonably explainable on a theory which excludes guilt, then it cannot be said that the facts in the case are sufficient to satisfy the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the defendant, and in that event she should be acquitted. If, after consideration of the whole case, any one of the jury should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror not to vote for a verdict of guilty, and if after a consideration of the whole case, fully, carefully, and honestly made after comparison, still one of the jury should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it would then be the duty of such juror not to vote for a verdict of guilty. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 228, 72 C. C. A. 343.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is not a mere captious or imaginary doubt, but a doubt voluntarily arising after a fair and impartial consideration of the evidence, and which leaves the minds of the jury in that condition that they do not feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the letter of the charge, is sufficient, and an instruction that if the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt it is not necessary to be able to point out the particular evidence that convinces the jury is improper as having a tendency to convey the idea that the jury may convict without being able to say what it is that convinces them of guilt, and is prejudicial, especially in a case where the evidence consisted of a mass of circumstances having little or no tendency to connect accused with the crime, and where his connection with it was shown mainly by a confession proved by a witness of doubtful character. Bell v. State, 98 S. W. 705, 707, 81 Ark. 16.

As doubt not arising from oath

An instruction, on the subject of "reasonable doubt," that if the jury believe as men their oath imposes on them no obligation to doubt where no doubt would exist if no oath had been administered, was proper. Perry v. People, 87 Pac. 796, 797, 38 Colo. 23 (citing Blashfield's Instructions to Jurors, § 304).

An instruction on reasonable doubt is not to be condemned because it omitted the clause that the jury were not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if from all the evidence they believed as men and that their oath imposed on them no obligation to doubt, when no doubt would exist had no oath been administered. Holmes v. State, 118 N. W. 99, 101, 82 Neb. 406.

An instruction correctly defining "reasonable doubt" was not erroneous in that it charged that the jury were not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if they believed as men, that their oath imposed no obligation on them to doubt where no doubt would exist, if no oath had been administered, in that it relieved the jury from the obligation of their oath and permitted them to return a verdict of guilty, based on their belief as men that accused was guilty, without regard to the evidence. McQueary v. People, 110 Pac. 210, 214, 48 Colo. 214, 21 Ann. Cas. 560.

In defining the words "reasonable doubt," as used in the court's instructions, it is not error as a part of such definition to use the following language: "You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors, if from the evidence you believe as men. The oath which you have taken imposes upon you no obligation to doubt when no doubt would exist, if no oath had been administered." State v. Moon, 117 Pac. 757, 760, 20 Idaho, 202, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 724.

An instruction on reasonable doubt that: "You are not at liberty to disbelieve as jurors if you believe as men; your oath imposes on you no obligation to doubt where no doubt would exist if no oath had been administered"—is erroneous, as it omits the essential element of the necessity for evidence on which to base a verdict, as a lack of evidence to prove guilt cannot be supplied by what the juror knows or believes, regardless of his oath. Robinson v. State, 106 Pac. 24, 27, 18 Wyo. 216.

As not arising from obstinacy or sympathy

A "reasonable doubt" must not be a sympathetic doubt. State v. Fleetwood (Del.) 65 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 153; State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866, 869, 4 Pennewill, 580; State v. Harsted, 119 Pac. 24, 26, 66 Wash. 158.

A "reasonable doubt" is not merely such a doubt as may be engendered by pity or sympathy for the accused. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 917.

As not a bare possibility

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt. State v. Truitt (Del.) 62 Atl. 790, 792, 5 Pennewill, 466; State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 231, 5 Pennewill, 77; State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 844, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 883, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123; State v. Fagan (Del.) 74 Atl. 692, 696, 1 Boyce, 45; State v. Diugozima (Del.) 74 Atl. 1086, 1088, 7 Pennewill, 151; State v. Luff (Del.) 74 Atl. 1079, 1081, 1 Boyce, 152; State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1099, 1 Boyce, 135; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 747, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 311, 2 Boyce, 140; State v. Effler (Del.) 78 Atl. 411, 420, 2 Boyce, 92; State v. Cole (Del.) 78 Atl. 1025, 1026, 2 Boyce, 184; State v. Holden (Del.) 79 Atl. 215, 217, 2 Boyce, 429; State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 222, 2 Boyce, 434; State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 150, 2 Boyce, 405; State v. Honey (Del.) 80 Atl. 240, 241, 2 Boyce, 324; State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006; State v. Lyons (Del.) 80 Atl. 976, 978; State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1088; Holt v. United States, 31 Sup. Ct. 2, 6, 218 U. S. 245, 54 L. Ed. 1021, 20 Ann. Cas. 1138, affirming judgment United States v. Holt, 168 Fed. 141; United States v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808, 816; Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 573, 14 Okl. 477; Abbott v. Territory, 94 Pac. 179, 180, 1 Okl. Cr. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260, 129 Am. St. Rep. 818; Saunders v. State, 111 Pac. 965, 971, 4 Okl. Cr. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 766; Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 103, 105, 140 Ala. 70; Wright v. State, 42 South. 745, 746, 148 Ala. 596; Gregory v. State, 42 South. 829, 831, 148 Ala. 566; Bluett v. State, 44 South. 84, 87, 151 Ala. 41; Dempsey v. State, 102 S. W. 704, 706, 83 Ark. 81.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possibility of innocence. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532; State v. Raice, 123 N. W. 708, 710, 24 S. D. 111; Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336; State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1113, 181 Mo. 192; State v. Miller, 90 S. W. 767, 771, 191 Mo. 587; State v. Bond, 90 S. W. 830, 831, 191 Mo. 555; State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 687, 194 Mo. 717; State v. Temple, 92 S. W. 869, 873, 194 Mo. 237, 5 Ann. Cas. 954; State v. Platner, 93 S. W. 403, 405, 196 Mo. 128; State v. Maupin, 93 S. W. 379, 383, 196 Mo. 164; State v. Spough, 98 S. W. 55, 63, 200 Mo. 571; Dobbs v. State, 100 S. W. 946, 948, 949, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 113.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possibility of innocence is correct. Territory v. Price, 91 Pac. 733, 735, 14 N. M. 262 (citing State v. Garrison, 49 S. W. 508, 147 Mo. 548; State v. Darrah, 54 S. W. 226, 152 Mo. 522; Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 329; Smith v. People, 74 Ill. 144; Blashfield, Inst. to Juries, 847, 852).

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. Chadwick v. United States, 141 Fed. 225, 228, 72 C. C. A. 343; Flickinger v. United States, 150 Fed. 1, 9, 79 C. C. A. 515; Wright v. State, 42 South. 745, 746, 148 Ala. 596.

In a prosecution for murder, a "reasonable possibility" of defendant's innocence is not a proper predicate for an acquittal. Howard v. State, 44 South. 95, 96, 151 Ala. 22.

In a prosecution for burglary, a charge that, if there is "reasonable possibility" of defendant's innocence, from the evidence, the jury should acquit, was properly refused. Leonard v. State, 43 South. 214, 216, 150 Ala. 89.

A "reasonable doubt" sufficient to entitle accused to an acquittal is not a mere possible doubt that is sought after in the evidence, or arises out of sympathy or ingenious suggestion not warranted by the evidence or lack of evidence, but such as naturally arises upon an impartial consideration of all the evidence. United States v. Dexter, 154 Fed. 890, 894.

It was not error to charge, at the state's request, that a "reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on mere evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt," though objectionable as argumentative. Knight v. State, 49 South.

764, 765, 160 Ala. 58 (citing Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 140 Ala. 70).

A statement in an instruction on "reasonable doubt" that everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt, and that the "reasonable doubt" referred to was that state of the case, etc., did not render the instruction erroneous. People v. Verduzco, 110 Pac. 970, 972, 18 Cal. App. 789.

A jury in a criminal case is required to decide the questions submitted to them from the strong probabilities of the case, and such probabilities need not be so strong as to exclude all possible doubt, but only sufficiently strong to exclude every reasonable doubt. United States v. Wilson, 176 Fed. 806, 809.

The following charge is not erroneous: "The defendant is presumed to be innocent until he is proven to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. He is entitled to every reasonable doubt arising from the evidence, and a reasonable doubt is one conformable to reason, a doubt which a reasonable man would entertain. It does not mean a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case, which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge." Vasquez v. State, 44 South. 739, 741, 54 Fla. 127, 127 Am. St. Rep. 129.

Since the prosecution is not required to establish guilt in a criminal case beyond the possibility of a doubt, an instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as a "serious, substantial doubt, and not a mere possibility of a doubt," and further stating that a reasonable doubt must not be based on a mere possibility that defendant may be innocent, since it may be possible that defendant is innocent and yet at the same time there may be no reasonable doubt but that he is guilty, was not erroneous. People v. Lucas, 91 N. E. 659, 664, 244 Ill. 603.

An instruction that the term "reasonable doubt" does not mean a "mere possible doubt, a conjectural doubt," nor "a doubt which is merely capricious," when read in connection with a preceding instruction that a reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty that defendant committed the offense, was entirely correct. People v. Botkin, 98 Pac. 861, 867, 9 Cal. App. 244.

Preponderance of evidence distinguished

In a criminal case, the burden is on the government to establish defendant's guilt beyond all "reasonable doubt" by full and satisfactory proof; a mere preponderance of evidence being insufficient. United States v. Dexter, 154 Fed. 890, 891.

As probability of innocence

A charge that if the jury were not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, to a moral certainty, and to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis that the defendant was guilty they should find him not guilty, and that it is not necessary to raise a reasonable doubt that the jury should find from all the evidence a probability of defendant's innocence, but that such doubt may arise even when there is no probability of the innocence from the testimony, and that if the jury have not an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of his guilt it is their duty to acquit, and that they must find the defendant not guilty if the conduct of the defendant, upon a reasonable hypothesis, is consistent with his innocence, was properly refused. Bell v. State, 37 South. 281-284, 140 Ala. 57.

In a criminal prosecution, a requested instruction that if, from the evidence, there was "a reasonable probability" of defendant's innocence, then that was a just foundation for a reasonable doubt, and would authorize an acquittal, was not erroneous because of the use of the word "reasonable" as qualifying the word "probability." Mims v. State, 37 South. 354, 141 Ala. 93.

"Reasonable doubt" is not equivalent to probability of innocence, and the former may exist though the latter does not. Nordan v. State, 39 South. 406, 411, 143 Ala. 13.

A request to charge that, if there was a probability of defendant's innocence, the jury should acquit him, was improperly refused. Fleming v. State, 43 South. 219, 221, 150 Ala. 19 (citing Bones v. State, 23 South. 138, 117 Ala. 138; Whitaker v. State, 17 South. 456, 106 Ala. 30; Croft v. State, 10 South. 517, 95 Ala. 3).

Defendant's requested instruction that, though there be no probability of his innocence, yet, if there is in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt of his guilt, it is their duty to give him the benefit of the doubt, and acquit him, should be given. Bailey v. State, 53 South. 296, 298, 390, 168 Ala. 4.

A charge, in a prosecution for burglary of a railway car, that a probability that some person may have entered the car and taken the goods in question is sufficient to create a "reasonable doubt" of the defendant's guilt, was properly refused. Leonard v. State, 43 South. 214, 216, 150 Ala. 89.

A probability of innocence is the equivalent of a "reasonable doubt" of guilt. San- ders. v. Davis, 44 South. 979, 983, 153 Ala. 375.

If there is a probability that accused is innocent, there is "reasonable doubt" as to his guilt. Brown v. State, 35 South. 82, 84, 46 Fla. 159.

A charge that the law does not require absolute certainty, but is based rather upon the doctrine of reasonable probability, and, if the evidence leaves in the jury's minds an abiding conviction of accused's guilt, they would be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, fairly stated the law of reasonable doubt, and was not misleading, though the statement that the law of reasonable doubt is based upon the doctrine of reasonable probability is objectionable in law, and, if standing alone, would be prejudicial. State v. Quinn, 105 Pac. 818, 821, 56 Wash. 295.

As a real and substantial doubt

The term "reasonable doubt" means a substantial doubt. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 311, 2 Boyce, 140.

A "reasonable doubt" is an actual and substantial doubt, and not a mere possibility or speculation. Bluett v. State, 44 South. 84, 87, 89, 151 Ala. 41; Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 103, 105, 140 Ala. 70.

A charge in a murder trial was correct which stated that the doubt that will justify the acquittal must be an actual and substantial, and not a mere possible, doubt. Gregory v. State, 42 South. 829, 831, 148 Ala. 566.

The doubt should be real and honestly and fairly entertained after all reasonable efforts to find out the facts. Parker v. State, 59 S. E. 823, 825, 3 Ga. App. 336.

A "reasonable doubt" is an actual, substantial doubt of guilt arising from the evidence or want of evidence. Johnson v. State, 130 N. W. 282, 284, 88 Neb. 565, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 965.

A "reasonable doubt" must be an actual and substantial doubt, arising out of the evidence which is consistent with sound reason. United States v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808, 816.

The term "reasonable doubt" means a substantial doubt arising from the evidence in the case, and not a mere possibility of innocence. State v. Platner, 93 S. W. 403, 405, 196 Mo. 128; State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1113, 181 Mo. 192; State v. Miller, 90 S. W. 767, 771, 191 Mo. 587; State v. Temple, 92 S. W. 869, 873, 194 Mo. 237, 5 Ann. Cas. 954; State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 687, 104 Mo. 717; State v. Maupin, 93 S. W. 379, 383, 196 Mo. 164.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a mere fanciful, vague, speculative, or possible doubt, but a reasonable, substantial doubt, remaining in the minds of the jury after careful consideration of all the evidence, and such as reasonable, fair-minded, and conscientious men would entertain under all the circumstances and facts of the case as shown by the evidence. State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 747, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775, 778, 6 Pennewill, 212; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 883, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1079, 5 Pennewill, 538; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 54; State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 11, 1 Boyce, 33; State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 972, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 149, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174.

A "reasonable doubt" of guilt, requiring acquittal, is not a vague, fanciful, or speculative doubt, but a substantial doubt, arising out of the case as presented, and such a doubt as reasonable, fair-minded, and honest men would entertain under all the facts and circumstances of the case. State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349; State v. Powell (Del.) 76 Atl. 601, 602, 7 Pennewill, 2; State v. Short (Del.) 75 Atl. 787, 789, 7 Pennewill, 295; State v. McCallister (Del.) 76 Atl. 226, 230, 7 Pennewill, 301; State v. Curdy (Del.) 75 Atl. 868, 869, 1 Boyce, 208; State v. Ryan (Del.) 75 Atl. 869, 872, 1 Boyce, 223.

A "reasonable doubt," entitling accused to an acquittal, is not a mere fanciful, vague, or speculative doubt, but a reasonably substantial doubt, arising from the evidence and remaining after a careful consideration of the testimony, such as reasonable, fair-minded, and conscientious men would entertain under all the circumstances of the case. State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 4, 1 Boyce, 28; State v. Lee (Del.) 74 Atl. 4, 6, 1 Boyce, 18; State v. Gam (Del.) 74 Atl. 7, 8, 1 Boyce, 25; State v. Hartnett (Del.) 74 Atl. 82, 84, 7 Pennewill, 204; Brantley v. State, 65 S. E. 426, 133 Ga. 264; United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532; State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 789, 6 Pennewill, 435.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague, fanciful, imaginary, or even possible doubt, but such a substantial doubt as fair-minded, intelligent jurors may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all the evidence in the case before them. State v. Fagan (Del.) 74 Atl. 692, 696, 1 Boyce, 45; State v. Dlugozima (Del.) 74 Atl. 1086, 1088, 7 Pennewill, 151; State v. Luff (Del.) 74 Atl. 1079, 1081, 1 Boyce, 152; State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1099, 1 Boyce, 135.

A "reasonable doubt" of defendant's guilt is not a trivial, fanciful, or speculative one, or a mere possible doubt, but is such a substantial doubt as intelligent, fair-minded jurors may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all relevant evidence in the case. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 152, 6 Pennewill, 160; State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 742, 6 Pennewill, 323; State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 157, 6 Pennewill, 401; State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 205, 6 Pennewill, 348.

A "reasonable doubt" is a substantial doubt based on the evidence, or want of evidence in the case, and not a bare possibility of defendant's innocence; such a doubt as would cause a reasonably prudent man to pause before acting in the highest affairs of life. State v. Raice, 123 N. W. 708, 710, 24 S. D. 111.

A "reasonable doubt," authorizing acquittal, does not mean a speculative or possible doubt, but a real and substantial doubt, which remains in the minds of reasonable men after carefully considering all the evidence. State v. Effler (Del.) 78 Atl. 411, 420, 2 Boyce, 92.

The "reasonable doubt" beyond which one accused of crime must be proved guilty is not a mere fanciful, vague, or speculative doubt, but such a substantial doubt as fair-minded men would entertain under all the facts in the case. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 720, 2 Boyce, 164.

The term "reasonable doubt" means, not a vague, fanciful, or speculative doubt, but a substantial doubt, such as intelligent and impartial men might entertain after fully considering the evidence. State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 404, 2 Boyce, 71.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a mere possible doubt, but is a real and substantial doubt, founded in reason, and such as intelligent and impartial men would reasonably entertain upon a careful consideration of all the evidence in a case. State v. Lyons (Del.) 80 Atl. 976, 978.

"Reasonable doubt" is a substantial doubt, such as intelligent, reasonable, and impartial men may entertain, after due consideration of all the evidence, and is not a vague, speculative, or mere possible doubt. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1088.

By "reasonable doubt," in a criminal case, is not meant a vague, speculative, or mere possible doubt, but a real, substantial doubt, such as remains in the minds of the jury after a careful consideration of all the evidence. State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant a speculative, fanciful, or even possible doubt, but a real, substantial doubt, such as will remain in the minds of the jury after a careful consideration of all the evidence in the case. State v. Holden (Del.) 79 Atl. 215, 217, 2 Boyce, 429.

The "reasonable doubt" of guilt must not be a mere fanciful, vague, indefinable, or speculative doubt, but a reasonable, substantial doubt, remaining in the minds of the jury after careful consideration of all the evidence. State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 3, 4, 1 Boyce, 28.

"Reasonable doubt" on the part of a jury in a criminal case does not mean a vague, speculative, fanciful, or whimsical doubt, but a substantial doubt, remaining in the minds of the jury after a careful consideration of all the testimony in the case. State v. Davenport (Del.) 77 Atl. 967, 968, 2 Boyce, 12.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a vague, fanciful, or mere possible doubt, but is a real, substantial doubt, such as an intelligent, impartial, and conscientious man would entertain after a careful consideration of all the evidence. State v. Honey (Del.) 80 Atl. 240, 241, 2 Boyce, 324.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a vague, fanciful, or merely possible doubt, but such a substantial doubt as intelligent, reasonable, or impartial jurors may honestly and justly entertain after a careful examination and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 844, 6 Pennewill, 497.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague, fanciful, trivial, or mere possible doubt, but such a substantial doubt as intelligent, impartial, and conscientious jurors may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all the evidence in the case. State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a whimsical, imaginary, or possible doubt, but a substantial doubt, such as intelligent men may reasonably entertain upon a careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Emory (Del.) 58 Atl. 1036, 1039, 5 Pennewill, 126.

A "reasonable doubt" within the meaning of the law "is not a vague, fanciful, or whimsical doubt, but a substantial doubt, naturally arising out of all the evidence in the case, and such a doubt as intelligent, impartial, and fair-minded jurors may reasonably entertain after a careful consideration of all the relevant evidence." State v. Seeney (Del.) 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142.

"A 'reasonable doubt' is not a mere imaginary, whimsical, or even possible doubt of the guilt of the accused, but is such a real and substantial doubt as intelligent and impartial men may reasonably entertain upon a careful consideration of all the relevant facts proven in the case." State v. Wilson (Del.) 62 Atl. 227, 231, 5 Pennewill, 77.

A "reasonable doubt" of the guilt of accused should not be a vague, fanciful, or merely possible doubt, but such a real and substantial doubt as intelligent and impartial men may reasonably entertain upon a careful consideration of the evidence. State v. Truitt (Del.) 62 Atl. 790, 792, 5 Pennewill, 466.

"By a 'reasonable doubt' is meant an actual, substantial doubt, that arises and rests in the mind as testimony is heard and considered; that results after the exercise of judgment and reason, when fairly and candidly applied to an investigation of the evidence." United States v. Richards, 149 Fed. 443, 454.

"Reasonable doubt," justifying acquittal, must be substantial, in view of all the evidence, and not a mere possibility of innocence. It must be a doubt arising out of the evidence, for which a reason can be given, and such as would exist in the mind of a reasonable man after free, full, and careful consideration of all the evidence, though the evidence need not exclude all doubt and amount to absolute certainty. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant a vague, speculative, or mere possible doubt, but a real, substantial doubt, that remains after a careful consideration of all the evidence, and such a doubt as reasonable, fair-minded, and conscientious men would entertain under all the facts and circumstances of the case. State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006.

"Reasonable doubt" is an honest, substantial doubt, actually existing in the minds of the jury, and arising either from the evidence favorable to the defendant or from a want of evidence on behalf of the government. It is not merely such a doubt as may be conjured up in the mind of one desirous of escaping the responsibility of decision, or such as may be engendered by pity or sympathy for the accused. United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 917.

A "reasonable doubt" is an actual, substantial doubt arising from the evidence or want of evidence in the case. By such term is not meant a mere caprice, conjecture, or groundless possibility. It is an actual, substantial doubt, based on a reason arising either from the evidence or want of evidence in the case, and sufficient to cause an ordinarily prudent man to hesitate and refuse to act in the most important affairs and concerns of life. The guilt of an accused person is proved beyond a reasonable doubt when, upon the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, the minds of the jurors are in that condition that they can say from the evidence they have an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. Turley v. State, 104 N. W. 934, 938, 74 Neb. 471.

A "reasonable doubt" to authorize an acquittal on that ground alone should be a substantial doubt of guilt, and not a mere possibility of defendant's innocence. An instruction that the law presumes defendant innocent until the state has proved his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and that unless the state has so proven his guilt he should be acquitted, but such a doubt should be a substantial doubt of guilt and not a mere possibility of innocence, sufficiently covered a request declaring a reasonable doubt to exist when the evidence does not satisfy the jury of the truth of the charge with such certainty that a prudent man would feel safe in acting on it in his own most important affairs and dearest personal interests. State v. Bond, 90 S. W. 830, 831, 191 Mo. 555.

Since the prosecution is not required to establish guilt in a criminal case beyond the possibility of a doubt, an instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as a "serious, substantial doubt, and not a mere possibility of a doubt," and further stating that a reasonable doubt must not be based on a mere possibility that defendant may be innocent, since it may be possible that defendant is innocent and yet at the same time there may be no reasonable doubt but that he is guilty, was not erroneous. People v. Lucas, 91 N. E. 659, 664, 244 Ill. 603.

A charge that a doubt to justify an acquittal must be reasonable, must be an actual and substantial doubt, not a mere possibility or speculation, and that a reasonable doubt is not a mere possible doubt, because most things relative to human affairs and depending on moral evidence are open to some possible or imaginary doubt is proper. Wright v. State, 42 South. 745, 746, 148 Ala. 596.

An instruction in a criminal case, requiring a "reasonable doubt" to be a "substantial and well-founded doubt," was erroneous. Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 102, 103, 117 Tenn. 430.

A "reasonable doubt" means a substantial well-founded doubt, arising from a candid and impartial consideration of all the evidence, or want of evidence. State v. Wright (Del.) 79 Atl. 399, 400, 2 Boyce, 393.

An instruction that "reasonable doubt" is a real substantial doubt existing after a fair consideration of the testimony, and such as would cause a reasonable and prudent man to pause before acting in a matter of grave importance to himself, and that if, after considering all the testimony, a juror is morally sure of the guilt of the defendant, then he has no reasonable doubt, is a correct definition of the term. Chandler v. State, 105 Pac. 375, 378, 3 Okl. Cr. 254.

An instruction that the "reasonable doubt" of the guilt of defendants which would warrant the jury in acquitting them on the ground of reasonable doubt of their guilt should be a substantial doubt of their guilt, upon a full and fair consideration of all the evidence, facts, and circumstances in the case, and not a mere possibility that they may be innocent, was not objectionable. State v. Spough, 98 S. W. 55, 63, 200 Mo. 571.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" of guilt of defendants or either of them to authorize an acquittal of them or either of them on the ground of such reasonable doubt of guilt must be a substantial doubt of the guilt of the defendants or of the defendant as to whose guilt you have such reasonable doubt formed by you on a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances proven in the case, and not a mere possibility of the innocence of the defendants or of that of either of them, was not obnoxious to the criticism that it was not unintelligible. State v. Brooks, 100 S. W. 416, 419, 202 Mo. 106.

As doubt influencing reasonable men

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as reasonable, fair-minded, and conscientious men would entertain under all the facts and circumstances of the case. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 972, 5 Pennewill, 460; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1079, 5 Pennewill, 339; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147-149, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 774; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Gam (Del.) 74 Atl. 7, 8, 1 Boyce, 25; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775, 778, 6 Pennewill, 212; State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 11, 1 Boyce, 33; State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 789, 6 Pennewill, 435; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 883, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349; State v. Powell (Del.) 76 Atl. 601, 602, 7 Pennewill, 2; State v. Short (Del.) 75 Atl. 787, 789, 7 Pennewill, 295; State v. McCallister (Del.) 76 Atl. 226, 230, 7 Pennewill, 301; State v. Curdy (Del.) 75 Atl. 868, 869, 1 Boyce, 208; State v. Ryan (Del.) 75 Atl. 869, 872, 1 Boyce, 223; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 748, 747, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006; State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 4, 1 Boyce, 28; State v. Lee (Del.) 74 Atl. 4, 6, 1 Boyce, 18; State v. Hartnett (Del.) 74 Atl. 82, 84, 7 Pennewill, 204; Brantley v. State, 65 S. E. 426, 133 Ga. 264; United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532; State v. Fitzsimmons (Del.) 82 Atl. 598, 600.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt which a reasonable man may have. United States v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808, 816.

It is error to charge the jury that a "reasonable doubt" is "a doubt which would satisfy a reasonable man." Vaughn v. State, 41 South. 881, 52 Fla. 122 (citing Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 50 Fla. 55).

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as would control reasonable men in the ordinary affairs of life. State v. Coates (Del.) 79 Atl. 213, 215, 2 Boyce, 424.

"Reasonable doubt" as to accused's guilt is such a doubt as would prevent reasonable men from reaching a conclusion to a moral certainty. State v. Morahan (Del.) 77 Atl. 488, 489, 7 Pennewill, 494.

A "reasonable doubt" means not a vague, fanciful, or indefinable doubt, but such doubt as reasoning men would have under all the circumstances of the case. State v. Rash (Del.) 78 Atl. 405, 407, 2 Boyce, 77.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is such as in the graver affairs of life would cause a prudent and reasonable man to pause and hesitate before acting on the truth of the matter charged, was properly refused. Walker v. State, 35 South. 1011, 1012, 1014, 139 Ala. 56.

A "reasonable doubt" must be a doubt arising out of the evidence for which a reason can be given, and such as would exist in the mind of a reasonable man after free, full, and careful consideration of all the evidence, though the evidence does not exclude all doubt and amount to absolute certainty. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

By "reasonable doubt" is not meant a vague, speculative, or mere possible doubt, but such a doubt as a reasonable man would entertain under all the evidence. State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 222, 2 Boyce, 434.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" does not require that guilt be established with the absolute certainty of a mathematical demonstration, nor does it mean a vague, speculative, or whimsical doubt, nor a mere possible doubt, but such a doubt as an intelligent, reasonable, and impartial man may honestly entertain after a careful examination and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 150, 2 Boyce, 405.

A portion of a charge that: "The defendant is entitled to every 'reasonable doubt' arising from the evidence, or from the lack of evidence in the case; a 'reasonable doubt' being such a doubt as a reasonable man would entertain, not a mere possible or speculative doubt"—is not erroneous when taken with other portions of the charge that correctly state the law. Sims v. State, 44 South. 737, 738, 54 Fla. 100.

There was no error in the following charge defining "reasonable doubt": "It means the doubt of a reasonable man and juror, who is honestly in search after the truth of the case, and which doubt grows out of evidence, want of evidence, or circumstances in the case." The court having instructed the jury fully and correctly upon the law relative to the prisoner's statement, the omission to state that a reasonable doubt might arise from the statement was not prejudicial; nor is the charge subject to the criticism that the jurors were permitted to consider "circumstances in the case" not developed by the evidence. Lewis v. State, 74 S. E. 708, 11 Ga. App. 102.

As doubt founded on reason

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt based on reason. People v. Yun Kee, 96 Pac. 95, 96, 8 Cal. App. 82.

A "reasonable doubt" should be such a doubt as there is reason for. Commonwealth v. Campbell, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 9, 14.

A "reasonable doubt" means a doubt founded on some good reason. State v. Harsted, 119 Pac. 24, 26, 66 Wash. 158.

A "reasonable doubt" is a fair doubt based on reason and common sense. People v. Burke, 121 N. W. 282, 284, 157 Mich. 108; State v. Levy, 75 Pac. 227, 230, 9 Idaho, 483.

"Reasonable doubt" is one founded in reason and one for which a good reason can be given, and cannot be said to be a "painful anxiety." State v. Ferguson, 74 S. E. 502, 505, 91 S. C. 235.

A doubt, however honest, may be, and often is, very unreasonable. From the standpoint of a juror, in considering a case on the evidence, a doubt however honest is not "reasonable" unless based on reason and common sense as applied to such evidence. Buel v. State, 80 N. W. 78, 85, 104 Wis. 132.

"Reasonable doubt" is a doubt based upon reason, and growing out of the testimony and evidence in the case. It is erroneous to instruct the jury that a "reasonable doubt" is such a one that the jury should be able to assign a reason for the doubt. People v. Manasse, 94 Pac. 92, 94, 153 Cal. 10.

An instruction that by a "reasonable doubt" is not meant that the accused may possibly be innocent of the crime charged, but it means some actual doubt having some reason for it, is erroneous. Burnett v. State, 124 N. W. 927, 929, 86 Neb. 11.

It is not error to instruct that "reasonable doubt" means a doubt based upon reason for whose existence the juror could give a reason founded upon the evidence or a want of evidence in the trial of the case. Mundy v. State, 72 S. E. 300, 9 Ga. App. 835.

It is not error to include in an instruction defining "reasonable doubt" the statement that it is a doubt for which there is some good reason arising out of the evidence or the lack of evidence. State v. Wolfey, 89 Pac. 1046, 1048, 75 Kan. 406, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 12 Ann. Cas. 412.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" to be a doubt that has a reason for it, and one for which a reason may be given, is erroneous, as the words "reasonable doubt" are used in their ordinary sense, and an instruction in the language of the statute is sufficient. Gragg v. State, 106 Pac. 350, 3 Okl. Cr. 409.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt based on reason, and which is reasonable in view of all the evidence. It is not a whimsical, arbitrary, or purely speculative doubt, nor a mere conjecture or guess. If after an impartial comparison and consideration of the evidence jurors can candidly say that they are not satisfied of the defendant's guilt they have a reasonable doubt, but if, after such impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence they can truthfully say that they have a fixed conviction of the defendant's guilt, such as they would be willing to act upon in the more weighty and important matters relating to their own affairs, they have no reasonable doubt, and in that case should find a verdict of guilty. Absolute certainty is not required for such a verdict. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt as above defined is sufficient. United States v. Giuliani, 147 Fed. 594, 597.

As doubt for which reasons could be given

A "reasonable doubt" must be a doubt arising out of the evidence for which a reason can be given. United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

A "reasonable doubt" must be such as a juror is able to give a reason for. State v. Grant, 105 N. W. 97, 99, 20 S. D. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 1017.

"Reasonable doubt" is one for which a good reason can be given. State v. Ferguson, 74 S. E. 502, 505, 91 S. C. 235.

It is proper to instruct that a "reasonable doubt" is one for which a reason can be given. State v. Raice, 123 N. W. 708, 710, 24 S. D. 111.

A "reasonable doubt" is not every doubt that may flit through the minds of the jury in considering a case, but is a doubt for which the jurors can give a reason if called on to do so. United States v. Wilson, 176 Fed. 806, 809.

A charge that a "reasonable doubt" is one for which a juror can give a reason, if called upon to do so, is defective. Darden v. State, 84 S. W. 507, 508, 73 Ark. 315.

A charge that a "reasonable doubt" is a doubt for which a reason can be given was properly refused. Beil v. State, 37 South. 281, 284, 140 Ala. 57.

In a prosecution for burglary, a charge that it is not necessary to a "reasonable doubt" that the jury should be able to give a reason therefor was properly refused, as argumentative. Leonard v. State, 43 South. 214, 216, 150 Ala. 89.

To instruct in a criminal case that "a reasonable doubt is such doubt as you are able to give a reason for" is erroneous, and might be so prejudicial as to require a reversal of the conviction. Blue v. State, 125 N. W. 136, 138, 86 Neb. 189.

It is error to instruct that a "reasonable doubt" is "a doubt for which the jury can give a reason." Price v. State, 98 Pac. 447, 457, 1 Okl. Cr. 353; People v. Manasse, 94 Pac. 92, 94, 153 Cal. 10.

A requested charge that a "reasonable doubt" is a doubt for which a reason can be given is misleading. Mitchell v. State, 37 South. 76, 77, 140 Ala. 118, 103 Am. St. Rep. 17 (citing Avery v. State, 27 South. 505, 124 Ala. 20).

In a prosecution for murder, an instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is a doubt for which a reason can be given is erroneous. Smith v. State, 39 South. 329, 334, 142 Ala. 14 (citing Avery's Case, 27 South. 505, 124 Ala. 20; Cawley's Case, 32 South. 227, 133 Ala. 128; Bell's Case, 37 South. 281, 140 Ala. 57).

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as a doubt that has a reason for it; "a doubt that you can give a reason for"—is reversible error. Gibbons v. Territory, 96 Pac. 466, 468, 1 Okl. Cr. 198.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" to be a doubt that has a reason for it, and one for which a reason may be given, is erroneous, as the words "reasonable doubt" are used in their ordinary sense, and an instruction in the language of the statute is sufficient. Gragg v. State, 106 Pac. 350, 3 Okl. Cr. 409.

An instruction that a reasonable doubt is a doubt for which a good reason can be given is not reversible error, when given in connection with other instructions intended to impress upon the jury the distinction between a reasonable doubt and a vague, imaginary doubt. State v. Newman, 101 N. W. 499, 500, 93 Minn. 393.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" is not a mere imaginary or captious doubt, but one for which a good and valid reason should be given, erroneously qualifies the definition of "reasonable doubt," in that it puts on accused the burden of furnishing to every juror a reason why he is satisfied of his guilt before there can be an acquittal. Bennett v. State, 128 S. W. 851, 854, 95 Ark. 100.

An instruction defining "reasonable doubt" as one arising out of the case either from the want, weakness, insufficiency, or conflict in testimony, and which leaves the mind of an honest juror wavering and in doubt as to defendant's guilt, a doubt which is not a mere conjecture, but one for which the jury can assign a reason, having heard the whole case, was not erroneous because characterizing such a doubt as one for which a reason can be assigned. Jordan v. State, 60 S. E. 1063, 1064, 130 Ga. 406.

A charge that a "reasonable doubt" is just such a doubt as its name implies, not a vague conjecture nor fanciful doubt, but such a doubt that the jury, as such, can give a reason for having, was not open to the objection that it was calculated to impress the jury that they must have a sufficient reason for doubting defendant's guilt, whereas the true rule is that, if the evidence leaves the mind wavering and unsettled, defendant should be given the benefit of such a doubt. Arnold v. State, 62 S. E. 806, 807, 131 Ga. 494.

An instruction that it makes no difference in what language the definition of a "reasonable doubt" is clothed, but that when it is boiled down and brought to its last analysis it means no more or less than a doubt growing up out of all the evidence for which the jury can give a reason, as contradistinguished from a mere possibility, was not reversible error, although calculated to mislead and confuse the jury. Hammond v. State, 41 South. 761, 765, 147 Ala. 79 (citing Caddell's Case, 34 South. 191, 138 Ala. 9).

An instruction: "Now by 'reasonable doubt,' gentlemen of the jury, is not meant some mere possibility or imaginary doubt, because everything relating to human affairs and depending on moral evidence is open to some possible or imaginary doubt, and to remove all 'reasonable doubt' from the minds of jurors, and to warrant a conviction, the evidence must be such as to satisfy the minds and consciences of the jurors of the facts necessary to be established to constitute the offense to a reasonable and moral certainty, and so convince the jurors that they would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to their own interests, and absolute certainty is not required if there be that amount and kind of evidence that will so convince the jury that they would venture to act upon that conviction in matters of the highest concern and importance to their own interests, there is sufficient evidence, under the law, to remove all reasonable doubt and to warrant a conviction, and that a more concise and perhaps a clearer definition can be formulated than that which is usually given as a 'reasonable doubt' is a doubt for which a good reason can be given"—is correct. State v. Newman, 101 N. W. 499, 500, 93 Minn. 393.

A "reasonable doubt" is a doubt which is reasonable in view of all of the evidence and such as arises upon an impartial comparison and consideration of all of it and prevents the jury from being able candidly and truthfully to say that they have an abiding conviction of defendant's guilt. An instruction that a reasonable ground of doubt is one which is reasonable from the evidence or want of evidence, and must be a ground of doubt for which a reason can be given, based on the evidence or want of evidence, was objectionable since a doubt arising out of the evidence is a mental operation for which it may be difficult or impossible to assign a reason. Owens v. United States, 130 Fed. 279, 283, 64 C. C. A. 525.

A doubt arising out of evidence is a mental operation for which it may often be very difficult and indeed impossible to assign any reason, and yet, if honestly entertained, by the jury, in a criminal case, must be acted upon; for they are only authorized to bring a verdict of guilty when satisfied and convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. Such a doubt has been often and correctly defined as a doubt which is reasonable in view of all the evidence and such as arises upon impartial comparison and consideration of all of it and prevents the jury from being able candidly and truthfully to say that they have an abiding conviction of the defendant's guilt. An instruction in a criminal case that by "reasonable doubt" is not meant any doubt or conjecture which may occur to your mind or may be imagined by you; but it is a doubt which must arise from the evidence or lack of evidence and for which some reason can be given, while objectionable as conveying the impression that the reason for the doubt must be one that can be expressed in words, and while not to be approved, is not reversible error. Griggs v. United States, 158 Fed. 572, 577, 85 C. C. A. 596 (quoting and adopting Owens v. United States, 130 Fed. 283, 64 C. C. A. 529).

As simple doubt

A "simple doubt," as contradistinguished from an "intricate" or "complicated" doubt, may be such a "reasonable doubt" as would require an acquittal; indeed, every reasonable doubt may be accurately said to be a simple doubt, and it is error to instruct a jury that it must not acquit if it has a simple doubt. Hampton v. State, 39 South. 421, 429, 50 Fla. 55.

As doubt spontaneously arising

A "reasonable doubt" is such as naturally arises upon an impartial consideration of all the evidence. United States v. Dexter, 154 Fed. 890, 894.

A "reasonable doubt" is one that naturally arises out of the evidence and may be reasonably entertained by men of ordinary intelligence, impartiality, and judgment after a careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence. State v. Wright (Del.) 66 Atl. 364, 365, 6 Pennewill, 251; State v. Cole (Del.) 78 Atl. 1025, 1026, 2 Boyce, 184.

As state of uncertainty

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague and uncertain doubt. State v. Abbott, 62 S. E. 693, 694, 64 W. Va. 411.

By "reasonable doubt" is meant an actual, sincere, mental hesitation caused by insufficient or unsatisfactory evidence. United States v. Greene, 146 Fed. 803, 824.

A "reasonable doubt" is that state of the case which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the mind in that condition that a jury cannot say that they feel an abiding conviction to a certainty that accused committed the offense. People v. Yun Kee, 96 Pac. 95, 96, 8 Cal. App. 82.

An instruction, in a prosecution for murder, defining "reasonable doubt" as "such a doubt as will create in the mind a feeling of unrest or misgiving on the part of the jury, and which will not permit their minds to rest upon a verdict of guilty," was not prejudicial, especially where the undisputed facts, including the statements of defendant, clearly show guilt. Wilson v. State, 70 S. W. 57, 58, 109 Tenn. 167.

As not vague or speculative

"Reasonable doubt" is not a mere speculation. Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 103, 105, 140 Ala. 70; Wright v. State, 42 South. 745, 746, 148 Ala. 596; Bluet v. State, 44 South. 84, 87, 89, 151 Ala. 41; Saunders v. State, 111 Pac. 965, 971, 4 Okl. Cr. 264, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 766.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a vague doubt. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 844, 6 Pennewill, 497; State v. Cole (Del.) 78 Atl. 1025, 1026, 2 Boyce, 184; State v. Honey (Del.) 80 Atl. 240, 241, 2 Boyce, 324.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a speculative doubt. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 152, 6 Pennewill, 160; State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 742, 6 Pennewill, 323; State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 157, 6 Pennewill, 401; State v. Effler (Del.) 78 Atl. 411, 420, 2 Boyce, 92; State v. Fitzsimmons (Del.) 82 Atl. 598, 600; United States v. Giuliani, 147 Fed. 594, 597; United States v. Chisholm, 163 Fed. 808, 816.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a fanciful or speculative doubt. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866, 869, 4 Pennewill, 580; State v. Fleetwood (Del.) 65 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 153; State v. Fitzsimmons (Del.) 82 Atl. 598, 600.

"Reasonable doubt" is not a vague or speculative doubt. State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 890, 883, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 747, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Davenport (Del.) 77 Atl. 967, 968, 2 Boyce, 12; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 311, 2 Boyce, 140; State v. Holden (Del.) 79 Atl. 215, 217, 2 Boyce, 429; State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 222, 2 Boyce, 434; State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 150, 2 Boyce, 405; State v. Williams (Del.) 80 Atl. 1004, 1006; State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1088; State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123; State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 4, 1 Boyce, 28; State v. Lee (Del.) 74 Atl. 4, 6, 1 Boyce, 18; State v. Gam (Del.) 74 Atl. 7, 8, 1 Boyce, 25; State v. Hartnett (Del.) 74 Atl. 82, 84, 7 Pennewill, 204; Brantley v. State, 65 S. E. 426, 133 Ga. 264; United States v. Guthrie, 171 Fed. 528, 532.

"Reasonable doubt" in a criminal cause does not mean a vague, speculative, or mere possible doubt, but such a doubt as reasonable, fair-minded, conscientious men would entertain after a careful consideration of all the evidence in the case. Same v. Johnson (Del.) 84 Atl. 1040, 1041; State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 229; State v. Dryden (Del.) 84 Atl. 1037, 1038; State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 215.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a fanciful, vague, or speculative doubt. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 972, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1079, 5 Pennewill, 389; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147-149, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 774, 6 Pennewill, 54; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Gam (Del.) 74 Atl. 7, 8, 1 Boyce, 25; State v. Uzzo (Del.) 65 Atl. 775, 778, 6 Pennewill, 212; State v. Miele (Del.) 74 Atl. 8, 9, 11, 1 Boyce, 33; State v. Tyre (Del.) 67 Atl. 199, 205, 6 Pennewill, 343; State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 789, 6 Pennewill, 435; State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349; State v. Powell (Del.) 76 Atl. 601, 602, 7 Pennewill, 2; State v. Short (Del.) 75 Atl. 787, 789, 7 Pennewill, 295; State v. McCallister (Del.) 76 Atl. 228, 230; 7 Pennewill, 301; State v. Curdy (Del.) 75 Atl. 868, 869, 1 Boyce, 208; State v. Ryan (Del.) 75 Atl. 869, 872, 1 Boyce, 223; State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 720, 2 Boyce, 164; State v. De Luca (Del.) 77 Atl. 742, 743, 2 Boyce, 158; State v. Coverdale (Del.) 77 Atl. 754, 756, 1 Boyce, 555; State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 404, 2 Boyce, 71.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague or fanciful doubt. State v. Truitt (Del.) 62 Atl. 790, 792, 5 Pennewill, 466; State v. Fulman (Del.) 74 Atl. 1, 7 Pennewill, 123; State v. Fagan (Del.) 74 Atl. 692, 696, 1 Boyce, 45; State v. Dlugozima (Del.) 74 Atl. 1086, 1088, 7 Pennewill, 151; State v. Luff (Del.) 74 Atl. 1079, 1081, 1 Boyce, 152; State v. Anderson (Del.) 74 Atl. 1097, 1099, 1 Boyce, 135.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague, fanciful, or whimsical doubt. State v. Sweeney (Del.) 59 Atl. 48, 49, 5 Pennewill, 142.

A "reasonable doubt" does not mean a vague or indefinable doubt. State v. Rash (Del.) 78 Atl. 405, 407, 2 Boyce, 77.

A "reasonable doubt" is not a vague or uncertain doubt; and what the jury believe from the evidence as men they should believe as jurors. State v. Abbott, 62 S. E. 693, 694, 64 W. Va. 411.

A "reasonable doubt" must not be a mere fanciful, vague, indefinable, or speculative doubt. State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 3, 4, 1 Boyce, 28.

By a "reasonable doubt" is not meant a vague, speculative, possible, or indefinable doubt, but it is a reasonable doubt growing out of the evidence and such a doubt as would control reasonable men in the ordinary affairs of life. State v. Coates (Del.) 79 Atl. 213, 215, 2 Boyce, 424.

"A mere fanciful or speculative doubt, such as a skeptical mind may suggest, does not amount to a 'reasonable doubt' within the meaning of the law. A doubt such as this—one that ignores a reasonable construction of the whole evidence, and proceeds upon mere speculation or suspicion—is unreasonable, and would acquit one proven guilty as easily as one not so proven, and so does not justify a verdict of not guilty."

Bannen v. State, 91 N. W. 107, 109, 115 Wis. 817 (citing and adopting Emery v. State, 78 N. W. 145, 101 Wis. 627, 650-655; Butler v. State, 78 N. W. 590, 102 Wis. 364, 368-372; Buel v. State, 80 N. W. 78, 104 Wis. 132, 151-153; Murphy v. State, 83 N. W. 1112, 108 Wis. 111, 119, 120).

As well-founded doubt

A "reasonable doubt" means a substantial well-founded doubt, arising from a candid and impartial consideration of all the evidence, or want of evidence. State v. Wright (Del.) 79 Atl. 399, 400, 2 Boyce, 396.

An instruction in a criminal case, requiring a "reasonable doubt" to be a "substantial and well-founded doubt," was erroneous. Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 102, 103, 117 Tenn. 430.

The term "well-founded doubt" means "reasonable doubt," and hence the refusal to give an instruction using the term "well-founded doubt" was not erroneous, where the same instruction was given, substituting the words "reasonable doubt" for the words "well-founded doubt." Greagh v. State, 43 South. 112, 114, 149 Ala. 8 (citing Turner v. State, 27 South. 272, 124 Ala. 59; Stewart v. State, 31 South. 944, 133 Ala. 109).

As doubt arising from the whole evidence

A "reasonable doubt" arises from all the evidence. Commonwealth v. Campbell, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 9, 14.

In determining the question of "reasonable doubt," the jury must consider all the evidence, that given against accused as well as that in his favor. People v. Lee, 93 N. E. 321, 323, 248 Ill. 64.

Every material element of the offense charged must be proved by the state beyond a "reasonable doubt." State v. Hartnett (Del.) 74 Atl. 82, 84, 7 Pennewill, 204.

Since an accused is presumed to be innocent, until his guilt is proved beyond a "reasonable doubt," the jury must acquit if they have a reasonable doubt on any material element of the offense. State v. Effier (Del.) 78 Atl. 411, 420, 2 Boyce, 92.

To convict one of crime, it is incumbent on the state to prove beyond a "reasonable doubt" every material element thereof. State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 152, 6 Pennewill, 160; State v. Briscoe (Del.) 67 Atl. 154, 157, 6 Pennewill, 401.

Where the doctrine of "reasonable doubt" is applied in the charge of the whole case, it is not essential that it should in terms be applied to every feature of the case or fact raised by the testimony. Edwards v. State, 125 S. W. 894, 895, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 342.

Proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" of guilt is such evidence as establishes beyond a "reasonable doubt" every fact necessary to constitute guilt, and unless the defendant has been so proved guilty the jury should find him not guilty. Hoeker v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 111 S. W. 676, 680.

While the law requires the guilt of accused to be proved beyond "reasonable doubt," it does not require that each fact which may aid the jury in reaching the conclusion of guilt shall be clearly proven, but that on the whole evidence the jury must be able to pronounce that guilt is proved to a moral certainty. Pitts v. State, 37 South. 101, 103, 105, 140 Ala. 70.

An instruction in a criminal prosecution is improper which requires proof beyond a "reasonable doubt" of every fact essential to establish guilt. Olson v. People, 125 Ill. App. 460, 463.

It was error to refuse to charge that, "if there is one single fact proven to the satisfaction of the jury which is inconsistent with defendant's guilt, this is sufficient to raise a 'reasonable doubt,' and the jury should acquit." Simmons v. State, 48 South. 606, 607, 158 Ala. 8.

A charge that if the jury were reasonably doubtful as to the proof in the case of any material allegation in the indictment they should acquit the defendant was properly refused. Bell v. State, 37 South. 281-284, 140 Ala. 57.

In a criminal prosecution, it was proper to refuse an instruction that, if the jury have a "reasonable doubt" as to any material facts in the case, they should find defendant not guilty. Leonard v. State, 43 South. 214, 216, 150 Ala. 89.

In a murder trial, it was not error to refuse an instruction that, if the jury, upon the whole evidence, should have "reasonable doubt" whether the defendant was guilty of the crime charged, they should acquit. Young v. State, 43 South. 100, 101, 149 Ala. 16.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, it was error to refuse to instruct that, if the jury have a "reasonable doubt" of defendant's guilt arising out of any part of the evidence, they must not find him guilty. Griffin v. State, 43 South. 197, 199, 150 Ala. 49.

By the term "reasonable doubt," beyond which the state must prove its case in a criminal proceeding, a mere vague, fanciful, or speculative doubt is not meant, but a reasonable doubt remaining in the minds of the jury after a careful consideration of all the testimony. State v. De Luca (Del.) 77 Atl. 742, 743, 2 Boyce, 158.

It is not error to instruct that, if there is any evidence which raises a "reasonable doubt" as to the presence of defendant at the time and place where the crime is alleged to have been committed, he should be acquitted. State v. Davis, 85 S. W. 354, 356, 186 Mo. 533.

Instructions that the jury must give accused the full benefit of all "reasonable doubts" arising from any part of the evidence were properly refused, as misleading the jury to give accused the benefit of doubts which were dissipated by other evidence, or which did not exist on a consideration of the whole evidence. Thomas v. State, 43 South. 371, 377, 150 Ala. 31.

In a prosecution for receiving stolen property, it was error to refuse to charge that if "the minds of the jury or of any jurymen is left in a state of 'reasonable doubt' and uncertainty, by the evidence or any part of the evidence, of defendant's guilt, then you cannot convict the defendant." Boyd v. State, 43 South. 204, 205, 150 Ala. 101.

A charge in a homicide case that if the jury found that accused was not guilty of murder in the first or second degree, but believed that he killed decedent, but without deliberation or malice, they should find him guilty of manslaughter, either voluntary or involuntary, "unless you should find that the defendant was of unsound mind," was erroneous, in that the quoted clause deprived accused of the benefit of any evidence introduced by him which merely created a "reasonable doubt" as to his sanity, when accused was entitled to an acquittal, if, under all the evidence, a "reasonable doubt" existed as to his sanity. Pribble v. People, 112 Pac. 220, 222, 49 Colo. 210.

An instruction in a criminal prosecution "that a 'reasonable doubt,' within the meaning of the law, does not mean an imaginary doubt, but it does mean that before you can convict you must have considered all the evidence in the case, giving to each witness such credit and their evidence such weight as in view of all the evidence in the case you may deem it entitled to, and if after hearing all the evidence in the case both for the state and the defendant your mind is left in an unsatisfactory condition with reference to the defendant's guilt or innocence, either from the contradictory evidence in the case or from any other cause, you must resolve that doubt in favor of the defendant and return a verdict of not guilty," is a correct statement of the law. Furlow v. State, 81 S. W. 232, 238, 72 Ark. 384.

An instruction that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, and by a "reasonable doubt" is meant that "unless you have a firm and abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge, you must acquit the defendant"; that this benefit of a reasonable doubt is a substantial right of the defendant, and applies to the whole case, and also to each and every phase of the case, and, "if you have such reasonable doubt, you should find the defendant not guilty," ~~was properly modified~~ by striking off the provision that such doubt applied to every phase of the case. Mitchell v. State, 83 S. W. 1050, 1051, 73 Ark. 291.

Guilt of crime cannot be established beyond a "reasonable doubt" unless every essential fact constituting the offense is established by that measure of proof, and an instruction on a trial for larceny that reasonable doubt does not mean that the jury should acquit accused because one or more material allegations of the indictment have not been established beyond a reasonable doubt, but it means that, if after a fair consideration of the case the jury have a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of accused, they should acquit him, is erroneous because authorizing a conviction, though the jury entertains a reasonable doubt on the issues whether the property had been stolen, or whether, if stolen, it was the property of prosecutor, or whether the taking was with a felonious intent. State v. Kimes, 124 N. W. 164, 165, 145 Iowa, 346.

An instruction that a "reasonable doubt" does not mean a reasonable doubt that any one point or proposition necessary for the state to establish has not been so established, but that it means a reasonable doubt of the guilt of accused after a careful consideration of the entire case, and authorizing a conviction if upon a careful consideration of the entire case the jury entertain any reasonable doubt of his guilt, is erroneous. State v. Ottley, 126 N. W. 334, 335, 147 Iowa, 329.

As every essential element of the crime must be established beyond a "reasonable doubt," the correct formula for the instructions should be, "if the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the facts are as testified," etc., and where by an inadvertence the trial judge uses the terms "if the jury believe the evidence," he must add "if the jury believe the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt," etc. State v. Starnes, 66 S. E. 347, 151 N. C. 724, 19 Ann. Cas. 448.

An instruction, in a prosecution for homicide, which, after stating the theory of the state, charged that, if the jury should find the contention of the state to be true, defendants would be guilty of murder in the first degree, and they should so find, was erroneous for failure to require that the jury must find every element necessary to constitute the offense of which they might convict to have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Frazier v. State, 100 S. W. 94, 102, 117 Tenn. 430.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that defendant is presumed to be sane, and that the burden of proof is on him in the first instance to produce evidence of insanity at the time of the homicide sufficient notwithstanding all the evidence to the contrary to raise a reasonable doubt of his insanity was erroneous, it not being necessary that accused should produce either evidence of insanity or evidence sufficient to raise a "reasonable doubt." And where the court also charged on the presumption of innocence, and, after defining reasonable doubt, required that the jury, in order to convict, should find the various elements of the several offenses to have been established beyond a "reasonable doubt," but nowhere expressly charged that it was the duty of the jury to acquit if they entertained a reasonable doubt of any of the phases of homicide submitted to them, the court should have given such instruction on a request therefor being submitted. Duthey v. State, 111 N. W. 222, 228, 131 Wis. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

REASONABLE EFFORT

A "reasonable effort" which a master is required to exercise to guard against injuries to a servant by the use of electricity is nothing short of the utmost effort to use every protection which is reasonably accessible to insulate its wires and keep them insulated. Clonts v. Laclede Gaslight Co., 129 S. W. 238, 240, 144 Mo. App. 582 (citing Geismann v. Missouri Edison Electric Co., 73 S. W. 654, 173 Mo. 654; Winkelman v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 85 S. W. 99, 110 Mo. App. 184; Hovarka v. St. Louis Transit Co., 90 S. W. 1142, 191 Mo. 441; Booker v. Southwest Missouri R. Co., 128 S. W. 1012, 144 Mo. App. 273).

REASONABLE EXERTION

In an action for injuries to plaintiff by the alleged negligent operation of defendant's street roller, causing plaintiff's horse to become frightened and unmanageable, the use of the words "reasonable exertion on his part," in an instruction declaring that, if the engineer in charge of the roller, on seeing that plaintiff was being placed in a position of peril, by reasonable exertion on his part could have stopped or checked the puffing and noise of the roller and prevented plaintiff's horse from becoming unmanageable and running away, and prevented the injury, etc., should be construed to mean merely by the exercise of reasonable care. Phelen v. Granite Bituminous Paving Co., 91 S. W. 440, 444, 115 Mo. App. 423.

REASONABLE FACILITIES

While a railroad company is bound to furnish "reasonable facilities" for the accommodation of travel from a certain station, the term "reasonable facilities" is a relative one and must be determined by the facts surrounding the requirements of travel at the place named, and a railroad company cannot be required to stop a passenger train engaged in interstate commerce at a given point where eight passenger trains daily stop at that point. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. State, 107 S. W. 989, 991, 85 Ark. 284.

REASONABLE FEAR

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction that "if, at the time the deadly blow was inflicted, the person who inflicts has well-founded reasons to believe himself in imminent peril without having, by his fault, produced the exigency, then such killing will not be murder," is not subject to the objection that the words "has well-founded reason to believe" state the rule too strongly against the right of a person to kill as the result of "reasonable fear." Long v. State, 56 S. E. 444, 447, 127 Ga. 350 (citing Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 134, 148, 149).

REASONABLE GROUND

Under the national bankruptcy act, what constitutes "reasonable ground" that a preference is intended by the bankrupt must depend on facts and circumstances. Whitwell v. Wright, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1065, 1069, 136 App. Div. 246.

Under a chattel mortgage, which stipulates that whenever the mortgagee may deem himself insecure the debt shall become due and the property taken possession of, "reasonable grounds" for deeming the debt insecure are such facts and circumstances as would lead a reasonably prudent man acting in good faith to believe himself insecure under the circumstances. Feller v. McKillip, 81 S. W. 641, 643, 109 Mo. App. 61.

REASONABLE GROUND OF SUSPICION

The words "not knowing" or "having no reasonable grounds to suspect," or "knew" or "know," or "had reasonable grounds to suspect," when used in an instruction in an action for injuries to a passenger while attempting to board a train in consequence of the starting of the train, relating to the knowledge or want of knowledge of the conductor in starting the train before the passenger had boarded it, are legal equivalents. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Hickey, 99 S. W. 839, 842, 81 Ark. 579.

REASONABLE GROUND TO BELIEVE

"Reasonable grounds to believe" a thing, are such grounds as would induce one of ordinary prudence to believe it under the circumstances. Hovius v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (Ky.) 107 S. W. 214, 216.

An instruction that if deceased began the fight, and defendant had "reasonable grounds to believe," and did believe, that he was in imminent danger, and he shot to avert it, he was entitled to an acquittal, embraces the idea that, if there were such appearance of danger as to beget in defendant's mind a reasonable belief of actual danger, he was entitled to an acquittal, whether the appearances were real or not. Rowsey v. Commonwealth, 76 S. W. 409, 411, 116 Ky. 617.

REASONABLE HOURS

The business hours of a corporation are "reasonable hours" in which to inspect its books, within the meaning of section 329, Rev. St. 1898, providing that the books of every corporation organized in this state shall at all reasonable hours be subject to the inspection of any bona fide stockholder of record. Clawson v. Clayton, 93 Pac. 729, 731, 33 Utah, 266.

REASONABLE HYPOTHESIS

"There are no words plainer than 'reasonable doubt,' and none so exact to the idea meant." "Reasonable hypothesis," or "reasonable or moral certainty," may be logically the equivalent of "reasonable doubt"; but these expressions are not so easily understood by the ordinary lay mind. In every criminal case the presiding judge should charge the jury that, to authorize conviction, guilt must be proved "beyond a reasonable doubt," and, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered, his failure to do so will be reversible error. Norman v. State, 74 S. E. 428, 10 Ga. App. 802.

REASONABLE INQUIRY

Under Revisal 1905, § 2088, which declares that every register of deeds shall, on application, issue a marriage license, provided it shall appear to him probable that there is no legal impediment to such marriage, and that where either party to the proposed marriage is under 18 years no license shall be issued without the written consent of the parent, guardian, etc., and section 2090, which provides a penalty for issuing a license unlawfully, without "reasonable inquiry," the inquiry to be made is such as makes it probable that there is no legal objection to the marriage, and involves at least the idea that it should be made of some person known by him to be a reliable party, or, if unknown to him, information as to his reliability should be obtained from some person known by the officer to be reliable. Joyner v. Harris, 72 S. E. 970, 971, 157 N. C. 295.

The act of 1877, imposing a penalty for issuing a license for the marriage of a girl under 18 without the consent of her father, etc., and declaring that the register shall have power to make inquiry by examination of the witnesses under oath, does not render an inquiry under oath a prerequisite to a "reasonable inquiry." In an action against a register of deeds to recover the statutory penalty for issuing, without plaintiff's consent, a license for the marriage of his daughter under 18 years of age, the court correctly charged that it was the duty of the register, in issuing a marriage license, to make such inquiry for legal objections to the marriage and as to the age of the parties as a prudent business man, acting in the most important affairs of life, would make, and to exercise his duties in such respect carefully.

and conscientiously, and not as a mere matter of form, and that, if the defendant failed so to do, he did not make reasonable investigation. It was proper for the court to instruct the jury that if they found that the prospective groom told defendant that the girl was 18, that he had seen her age in the Bible, and that she had told him she was 18, and should find that defendant knew the witness well, and knew him to be a man of good character, and that he stated to defendant that the girl was 18, and that he lived just across the street from her family, and defendant honestly believed such statements, he made "reasonable inquiry." Where there is a conflict of evidence, the question of reasonable inquiry is for the jury. As stated in Trolinger v. Borroughs, 45 S. E. 662, 133 N. C. 312: "While we may not prescribe any rule for the guidance of the register, it would seem that 'reasonable inquiry' involves at least an inquiry made of, or information furnished by, some person known to the register to be reliable, or, if unknown, identified and approved by some reliable person known to the register. This is the rule upon which banks act in paying checks, and surely in the matter of such grave importance as issuing a marriage license the register should not be excused upon a less degree of care." Furr v. Johnson, 52 S. E. 664, 665, 140 N. C. 157 (citing Joyner v. Roberts, 19 S. E. 645, 114 N. C. 369; Harcum v. Marsh, 41 S. E. 6, 130 N. C. 154; Agent v. Willis, 32 S. E. 322, 124 N. C. 29).

REASONABLE KNOWLEDGE

Within the rule that condonation may be implied if the husband, after "reasonable knowledge" of his wife's infidelity, continues to live with her, "reasonable knowledge" may be said to have been had, when information of a fact is given by credible persons speaking of their own knowledge, particularly if the same facts are afterwards proved and they become instrumental in the proof. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 75 Pac. 524, 527, 30 Mont. 36.

REASONABLE LAWS AND REGULATIONS

See Under Reasonable Laws and Regulations.

REASONABLE MAN

Fears of a reasonable man, see Fear.

The words "reasonable man," within the rule that one attacked may resist by the use of such force as a reasonable man would use under the circumstances, means a man of ordinary reason. Hoard v. State, 95 S. W. 1002, 1003, 80 Ark. 87.

REASONABLE MEANS

A clause, in a policy against the accidental discharge of an automatic sprinkler, providing that insurer should not be liable for loss caused by assured's neglect to use all "reasonable means" to preserve the property insured thereunder, referred to means to be used after the accidental discharge of the machine and had no reference to the care required to prevent the accident. Werthelmer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. United States Casualty Co., 72 S. W. 635, 639, 172 Mo. 135, 61 L. R. A. 766, 95 Am. St. Rep. 500.

REASONABLE NOTICE

There is no definite rule as to what constitutes "reasonable notice" within the rule that such notice must be given to the guarantor of the amount advanced, and of demand for payment, without effect on the principal debtor. Hence the question of what constitutes "reasonable notice" in such cases is for the jury under the facts of each particular case. Howe v. Nickels, 22 Me. 175, 177.

When four secular days' notice of the time of taking a deposition were given, and it would take less than 24 hours, by the ordinary means of travel, to get from the place of notice to the place for taking the deposition, the notice was a "reasonable notice" within the requirement of Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 10, 136, and the deposition was admissible. McCall Co. v. Jacobson, 102 N. W. 969, 970, 139 Mich. 455.

Where lessor made written demand of lessee for possession of the premises before suing, and more than 40 days before making such written demand gave lessee notice that the premises had been sold and that he would require their possession, it was a "reasonable notice," within a requirement that, in case the premises should be sold during the term, lessee would give possession after "reasonable notice" of the sale. Gambill v. Cooper, 48 South. 691, 693, 159 Ala. 637.

Civil service rule 7 requires the civil service commission to give all persons whose applications are on record five days' notice to appear for examination. Rule 28, subd. 5, requires the commissioner to direct a competitive examination under the provisions of this rule, and to publish the same by notice to those eligible, giving the time, etc., of the examination, and subdivision 7 thereof provides that the examination shall be subject to the general provisions of rule 13, etc., subdivision 6 of which requires notice of an examination for making a new eligible list to be given to those whose names remain on the former eligible list which has expired. Held, that five days' notice required by rule 7 was applicable to examinations for promotions by virtue of the reference in rule 28 to rule 13, but, even if rule 7 was not applicable, rule 28, subd. 5, required that applicants be given at least reasonable notice of examination, and, construing the rule in the light of the previous practice of the local and state commission under similar rules, where relator was given notice at 7 p. m. on one day to appear for examination at 7 p. m. the next day, he being on duty from 6 p. m., on the day of receiving notice to 5 p. m. the next day; was not a reasonable notice, and relator was entitled to have another opportunity for examination. People v. Neville, 109 N. Y. Supp. 640, 643, 58 Misc. Rep. 279.

REASONABLE NUMBER

The question of what is a "reasonable number" of skins to test in ascertaining the quantity of wool thereon is one that is to be determined by the testimony of men qualified by experience and knowledge to pass upon that subject. Without such evidence, it will not be held to be self-evident that an estimate based on an examination of 8 out of 20,000 skins was inadequate. United States v. J. B. Thomas & Co., 178 Fed. 602, 604.

REASONABLE PLACE

A clause in a fire insurance policy, requiring the insured to produce for examination all books of account, etc., as often as required at such "reasonable place" as may be designated by the company or its representative, means a reasonable place in the locality where the insured's property was situated and the absence of the conditions rendering such place unreasonable. Tucker v. Colonial Fire Ins. Co., 51 S. E. 86, 90, 58 W. Va. 30.

In a proceeding to condemn a railway right of way, an instruction that a crossing to be furnished by the company might necessarily be overhead or underground was properly refused, where the necessity of such kind of crossing was speculative; so, also, an instruction that the law requires a company, where one owns land on both sides of the right of way, to furnish him a crossing at such "point" as he may designate was properly refused, since the statute (Code, § 2022) uses the term "reasonable place" instead of "point"; as well as an instruction that damages should be assessed on the theory that the company would be compelled to furnish a crossing regardless of "expense," since under Code, § 2022, the company can only be required to locate it at a "reasonable place," and "expense" is an important consideration in determining the reasonableness of the place. Klopp v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 119 N. W. 373, 376, 142 Iowa, 474.

REASONABLE PRICE

See Fair and Reasonable Price.

"In the absence of any contract for property or services, the law allows only a reasonable price or compensation; but what is a 'reasonable price' in any case will depend upon a variety of considerations, and is not a matter for legislative determination." Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 153, 24 L. Ed. 77 (Field, J., dissenting).

REASONABLE PROBABILITY

The term "reasonable probability" is equivocal, and is not synonymous with reasonable certainty. Hallum v. Omro, 99 N. W. 1051, 1053, 122 Wis. 387.

"Certainty," as applied to the law of damages, means freedom from doubt, and as "reasonable certainty" and "reasonable probability" bear no resemblance to each other, plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, while entitled to recover for such future suffering and injury as she proves to be reasonably probable, is not required to prove such future injuries and suffering by testimony reasonably certain or free from doubt. Johnson v. Connecticut Co., 83 Atl. 530, 531, 85 Conn. 438.

REASONABLE PROVOCATION

"Legal," "lawful," "adequate," and "reasonable," when used as adjectives qualifying "provocation," are synonymous, and, as a general rule, with few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation." State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 1019, 177 Mo. 699 (quoting with approval from State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 204).

In speaking of the provocation necessary to arouse the heat of passion, which would result in reducing the crime to manslaughter, "this court has held that 'lawful,' 'legal,' 'adequate,' and 'reasonable,' when used as adjectives qualifying 'provocation,' are synonyms; and as a general rule, with very few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation." State v. Heath, 121 S. W. 140, 154, 221 Mo. 565 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 204).

REASONABLE PRUDENCE

See Reasonably Prudent.

The terms "reasonable prudence," "ordinary care," and such like terms, as applied to the conduct and affairs of men, have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined. What may be ordinary care in one case may under different surroundings and circumstances be gross negligence. The policy of the law has relegated the determination of such questions to the jury, under proper instructions from the court. It is their province to note the special circumstances and surroundings of each particular case, and then say whether the conduct of the parties in that case was such as would be expected of reasonably prudent men under a similar state of affairs. Hainlin v. Budge, 47 South. 825, 832, 56 Fla. 342 (quoting and adopting definitions in 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5976); Swift & Co. v. Sandy, 165 Fed. 622, 623, 92 C. C. A. 56; Hone v. Mammoth Min. Co., 75 Pac. 381, 383, 27 Utah, 168; Knoxville Traction Co. v. Brown, 89 S. W. 319, 320, 115 Tenn. 323 (citing Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 417, 36 L. Ed. 485); Meng v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 84 S. W. 213, 215, 108 Mo. App. 553 (citing Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 417, 36 L. Ed. 485; Baltimore & O. Ry. Co. v. Griffith, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 159 U. S. 603, 40 L. Ed. 274; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 163 U. S. 353, 41 L. Ed. 186; Warner v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 18 Sup. Ct. 68, 168 U. S. 339, 42 L. Ed. 491; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McPade, 135 U. S. 554, 10 Sup. Ct. 1044, 34 L. Ed. 235); Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Lukert, 84 Pac. 1076, 1084, 16 Okl. 397 (quoting and adopting definition in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 682, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. Ed. 485); Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Williams, 48 South. 93, 96, 158 Ala. 381 (citing Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485); Southern R. Co. v. McGowan, 43 Sou. h. 378, 382, 149 Ala. 440; Sans Bois Coal Co. v. Janeway, 99 Pac. 153, 156, 22 Okl. 425; Worth Bros. Co. v. Kallas, 162 Fed. 306, 308, 89 C. C. A. 186 (quoting with approval from Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 682, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. Ed. 485).

"Reasonable prudence" as applied to a master is such care as reasonable and prudent men use under similar circumstances in providing safe and suitable appliances and instrumentalities for the work to be done and in providing generally for the safety of the servant in the course of his employment; regard being had to the work and difficulties and dangers attending it. The term has a relative significance, and its definition must depend on the surrounding circumstances of the particular case, the determination of which, when a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question of negligence, is for the jury. Fisher's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 52 S. E. 373, 374, 104 Va. 635, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954 (citing Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 22 S. E. 869, 93 Va. 804, 70 L. R. A. 999; Richlands Iron Co. v. Elkins, 17 S. E. 890, 90 Va. 261).

REASONABLE QUANTITIES

The expression "reasonable quantities," in an instruction in a prosecution for violating the local option law, to the effect that, if the beverage sold was not intoxicating liquor "if drank in reasonable quantities," defendant should be acquitted, is not equivalent to saying "when drank in such quantities as may practically be drank." Hence the instruction was erroneous, because intoxicating liquor is defined to be any liquor intended for use as a beverage, or capable of being so used, which contains alcohol in such a proportion that it will produce intoxication when taken in such quantities as may be practically drank as an intoxicant. Murry v. State, 79 S. W. 568, 570, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 128.

REASONABLE RATE

In determining what is a reasonable price to be charged for the services of a public corporation, the question must be considered, not only from the viewpoint of the corporation, but also from that of the public, and a "reasonable rate" cannot be ascertained solely from considering the bearing of the facts upon the profits of the corporation. The effect of the rate upon persons to whom services are rendered is as material in affecting the rate as its effect upon stockholders or bondholders, and a "reasonable rate" is one which is as fair as possible to all whose interests are involved. Salt River Valley Canal Co. v. Neilsen, 85 Pac. 117, 119, 10 Ariz. 9, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711, 16 Ann. Cas. 796.

The word "reasonable," within Laws Wis. 1905, pp. 556, 559, c. 362, §§ 12, 14, requiring railroads to charge reasonable rates is used in its ordinary and usual acceptation, such that its antithesis is "unreasonable." Any rate which is not unreasonable is reasonable and permissible and whether any given rate is unreasonable is to be determined by a process similar to that pursued by the courts which, however, may be exercised by any one or by any official. The conclusion is reached by ascertaining the highest rate which can be considered reasonable. Only when an existing rate exceeds that is it unreasonable. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, 116 N. W. 905, 914, 136 Wis. 146, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821 (citing Madison, City of, v. Madison Gas & Electric Co., 108 N. W. 65, 129 Wis. 249, 8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 529, 9 Ann. Cas. 819).

The word "reasonable," in the statement of the principle that a water company should be entitled to charge reasonable rates, is a relative term, for what is reasonable depends upon many varying circumstances. An equivalent to the prevailing rate of interest might be reasonable and might not; "It might be too high or too low." It might be reasonable, owing to peculiar hazards or difficulties in one place to receive greater returns there than it would in another upon the same investment. Then, their reasonableness relates to both the company and the customer. Rates must be reasonable to both, and, if they cannot be to both, they must be to the customer. Brunswick & T. Water Dist. v. Maine Water Co., 59 Atl. 537, 540, 99 Me. 371 (citing San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, 23 Sup. Ct. 571, 189 U. S. 439, 47 L. Ed. 892; Stanislaus County v. San Joaquin, & K. River Canal & Irrig. Co., 24 Sup. Ct. 241, 192 U. S. 201, 48 L. Ed. 406).

Acts 1882, No. 36 (V. S. 3902-3904 [P. S. 4486-4488]), requiring railroads to give all persons "reasonable and equal terms, * * * facilities and accommodations" for the transportation of freight, etc., must be construed in the light of Acts 1882, No. 37 (V. S. 3896), authorizing a railroad corporation to establish rates, etc., and, when so done, it requires a railroad corporation to make rates reasonable and equal as required by the common law, and it is but declaratory of the common law defining the rights and obligations of carriers; the words "facilities and accommodations" relating to the incidents of transportation, the word "terms" signifying rates. State v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 71 Atl. 194, 196, 81 Vt. 463, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065.

REASONABLE REGULATION

Under Const. Ala. 1901, § 239, which provides that "any * * * corporation organized for the purpose * * * shall have the right to construct and maintain lines of telegraph and telephone within this state, * * * and the Legislature by law of uniform operation shall provide reasonable regulations to give full effect to this section," a foreign corporation which has constructed and is operating telegraph lines in the state cannot be deprived of the right thereby given to maintain the same by any act of the Legislature, because it exercises also the right, given it by the Constitution and laws of the United States, to maintain suits in the federal courts or to remove causes thereto from the state courts, which is not within the power given to the Legislature by such section to regulate the business. Forfeiture of a right to do business because the owner resorts to the courts is not "reasonable regulation" of the telegraph business. It is not regulation of the business in any sense. It is destruction of the right to do the business. The power to destroy a business never exists when the only grant of authority over the subject is to regulate the carrying on of the business. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Julian, 169 Fed. 166, 167, 173.

REASONABLE REPAIR

A city was not shown to have failed to perform its duty to keep a paved street in reasonable repair by reason of the fact that it permitted a saucer-shaped depression three inches deep and the size of a washtub, to remain in the asphalt surface. Jones v. City of Detroit, 137 N. W. 513, 514, 171 Mich. 608.

REASONABLE SATISFACTION

Under Code 1907, § 7175, fixing the degree of proof of the affirmative on an issue of insanity, in a criminal case to the "reasonable satisfaction of the jury," an instruction requiring accused to establish insanity "to the satisfaction of the jury" was erroneous as requiring too high a degree of proof. James v. State, 52 So. 840, 842, 167 Ala. 14.

REASONABLE SELLING VALUE

The two expressions "reasonable selling value" and "market value" are in some measure synonymous, but the usage of trade has affixed a technical meaning to "market value." The selling value of an article is often equivalent to its actual value and should be so regarded in the case of a seller suing to recover for stoves specially made for a buyer, and which the latter refused to accept; that being necessary in order that the seller may be reimbursed fully. St. Louis Steel Range Co. v. Kline-Drummond Mercantile Co., 96 S. W. 1040, 1043, 120 Mo. App. 438.

REASONABLE STATE OF USEFULNESS

The phrase "reasonable state of usefulness," when applied to a finding in mandamus to compel a railroad company to restore a highway to its former state, that the court was not convinced that the highway could be restored to a reasonable state of usefulness only by the construction of an undercrossing, is equivalent to a state as not to have unnecessarily impaired its usefulness as a highway. People ex rel. Town of Colesville v. Delaware & H. Co., 69 N. E. 651, 652, 177 N. Y. 337.

REASONABLE TERMS

See On Reasonable Terms.

REASONABLE TIME

See, also, As Soon as Possible; At Once.

What is a "reasonable time" in any case depends on the circumstances of that particular case. Smith v. Pelton Water Wheel Co., 90 Pac. 934, 935, 151 Cal. 394; Salmon v. Helena Box Co., 147 Fed. 408, 410, 77 C. A. 586.

"Reasonable time" means such time as a prudent man could exercise or employ in or about his own affairs. Glassey v. Sligo Furnace Co., 96 S. W. 310, 312, 120 Mo. App. 24.

"Reasonable time" is such promptitude as the situation of the parties and the circumstances of the case will allow. It never means an indulgence in unnecessary delay or in a delay occasioned by a vain and fruitless effort to do the act required. Frech v. Lewis, 67 Atl. 45, 46, 218 Pa. 141, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 948, 120 Am. St. Rep. 864, 11 Ann. Cas. 545 (citing Leedom v. Phillips [Pa.] 1 Yeates, 527).

"Reasonable time" is defined to be "so much time as is necessary, under the circumstances, to do conveniently what the contract or duty requires should be done in a particular case. * * * In determining what is a reasonable time or an unreasonable time, regard is to be had to the * * * facts of the particular case. * * * A reasonable time when no time is specified is a question of law, and depends on the subject-matter and the situation of the parties." Colfax County v. Butler County, 120 N. W. 444, 446, 83 Neb. 803 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5977).

"Reasonable time" means that a party shall do an act as soon as he conveniently can. What is a 'reasonable time' is generally a mixed question of law and fact, not only where the evidence is conflicting, but even in some cases where the facts are not disputed and the matter should be decided by the jury on proper instructions, on the particular circumstances of each case. The term is a technical and legal expression, which in the abstract involves matters of law as well as fact, and the law cannot prescribe what shall be 'reasonable time' by any defined combination of facts, so much does the question depend on the situation of the parties and the minute and peculiar circumstances incident to each case." Claus-Shear Co. v. E. Lee Hardware House, 53 S. E. 433, 434, 435, 140 N. C. 552, 6 Ann. Cas. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Murry v. Smith, 8 N. C. 42; Starkie, Ev. pp. 769, 774; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 612).

An instruction defining "reasonable time" to be such length of time as may fairly, properly, and reasonably be allowed or required, having regard to the nature of the act or duty and to the attending circumstances, is not erroneous, though unnecessary, since the average juror is supposed to know what the term means. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Roberts, 109 S. W. 982, 983, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 69.

Acceptance of offer

Where a proposition of sale, made by mail, arrived at the buyer's place of business on Saturday and was accepted on Monday, the court, in submitting the question whether this was an acceptance within a "reasonable time" did not err in using the words "within such time as was reasonably in contemplation between the parties at the time the offer was made and delivered," instead of "considering the nature of the case." Paducah Packing Co. v. J. T. Polk Co. (Ky.) 99 S. W. 929, 930.

Alighting from train

"Reasonable time" allowed a passenger for alighting is "the time in which persons of ordinary care and prudence under like circumstances" alight. Atlantic City R. Co. v. Kiefer, 66 Atl. 930, 932, 75 N. J. Law, 54 (quoting and adopting the definition in Imhoff v. Chicago & M. R. Co., 20 Wis. 344).

Allowance or rejection of claim against estate

What is a "reasonable time," when the facts are undisputed, is a question of law for the court. Where it is undisputed that a claim was presented to the executrix by April 1st, and was in her possession six months later, when the action was commenced, it was clearly a reasonable length of time in which to determine whether she would allow or reject it. Goltra v. Penland, 77 Pac. 129, 132, 45 Or. 254.

Applying water for use in irrigation

What is a "reasonable time" in which to apply water originally intended to be used for some beneficial purpose of irrigation depends upon the magnitude of the undertaking and the natural obstacles to be encountered in executing the design; an unexplained delay of over five years being unreasonable. Seaward v. Pacific Livestock Co., 88 Pac. 963, 965, 49 Or. 157 (citing Hindman v. Rizer, 27 Pac. 13; 21 Or. 112; Nevada Ditch Co. v. Bennett, 45 Pac. 472, 30 Or. 59, 60 Am. St. Rep. 777).

Binding municipality by contract

A "reasonable time" during which municipal officers may bind the municipality by contract is limited to their term of office. Wadsworth v. Concord, 45 S. E. 948, 952, 133 N. C. 587.

Demand for performance of contract

What is a "reasonable time" must of necessity depend upon the circumstances of each case. Where plaintiff entered the employment of defendant's company and bought stock therein on agreement by defendant to take it off his hands at any time after 6 months, a request that defendant take the stock, made about 18 months after expiration of the 6 months, and within a month after leaving the service of the company, was in a "reasonable time" within the contract. Moench v. Hower, 115 N. W. 229, 230, 137 Iowa, 621.

Examination of goods by purchaser

The general rule is that on the sale and delivery of goods it is the duty of the purchaser to examine them upon their arrival, or within a "reasonable time" thereafter, and, if they are found not to comply with the same as to kind and quality, to rescind the contract promptly and return the goods, and what is a "reasonable time" is a question of fact to be determined upon the circumstances of the case, including the situation and liability to injury of the vendor by delay in returning the goods, the convenience and necessity of the vendee, and customs of the trade, and, in general, the surrounding facts and circumstances of the case. Defendant bought goods by sample in June, 1901, which were delivered in November of the same year, and defects were not discovered by him until April following, after which the goods were paid for on May 5th following, and defendant having disposed of a portion of the goods, when sued for a debt subsequently contracted, counterclaimed damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of such defects. Defendant failed to inspect the goods within a "reasonable time" and therefore waived the implied warranty that the goods were equal to the sample. Boessneck v. William Taylor Son & Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 360, 361, 46 Misc. Rep. 63.

Filling up instrument delivered in blank

Under Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws, c. 38) § 33, requiring that a negotiable instrument delivered in blank, in order to be enforced, must be filled up within a reasonable time, from October 22, 1907, to June 9, 1908, is unexplained, more than a "reasonable time" within which to fill up a check delivered in blank. Madden v. Gaston, 121 N. Y. Supp. 951, 953, 137 App. Div. 294.

Giving security

The security required by Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2390) § 4343, to be given by a redemptioner in mortgage foreclosure proceedings, must be given within a "reasonable time," which means a period in which the security could be obtained supposing the party to be desirous of obtaining it and able to do so. It means a reasonable time to accomplish that which the party could accomplish at once if it were not for some particular condition hindering, as for example sickness or other adventitious circumstances. The hindering cause to excuse the delay must be such as to prevent the immediate giving of the security which otherwise could and would be given and which would be given as soon as the condition should cease. Moss v. King, 111 S. W. 589, 591, 212 Mo. 578.

Inquiries by assessors

"Reasonable time," to which assessors are entitled in making inquiries as a basis for assessment for money at interest April 1st, under Rev. St. c. 9, §§ 73-75, is such period as may be properly allowed, having regard to the nature of the act and to the attending circumstances; the quoted term being flexible. Powell v. City of Old Town, 81 Atl. 1068, 1070, 108 Me. 532.

Lighting platforms, approaches, and station grounds

What constitutes a "reasonable time" during which platforms, approaches, and station grounds must be kept lighted, within the rule of law that a carrier of passengers by rail is bound to exercise reasonable care to keep its platforms, approaches, and station grounds, so far as passengers would naturally resort to them, properly lighted at night for a "reasonable time," is determined by the circumstances of each particular case and depends upon the size and importance of the station and the number of persons who lawfully visit it at night for the purpose of transacting business with the railroad company. Abbott v. Oregon R. Co., 80 Pac. 1012, 1014, 46 Or. 549, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851, 114 Am. St. Rep. 885, 7 Ann. Cas. 961.

Notice of accident

A notice not given to the insurer until several months after an elevator accident and the bringing of suit against the insured, nor until a few days before the time set for trial, was not notice within a "reasonable time," as required by the terms of the policy insuring the elevator against accident to passengers, and providing that immediate notice of any accident should be given to the insurer. Jefferson Realty Co. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation, 149 S. W. 1011, 1013, 149 Ky. 741.

Objections to sale

Irregularity in selling land without an inquisition must be objected to within a "reasonable time," which time is before the confirmation of the sale and the acknowledgment of the deed. Collins v. Phillips, 84 Atl. 854, 856, 236 Pa. 386.

Payment

One year was a "reasonable time" for the repayment of money loaned to be repaid by defendant "when convenient, or when business picked up." Samuels v. Larrimore, 104 Pac. 1001, 1002, 11 Cal. App. 387.

Where a party in a written contract for sufficient consideration promises to pay another a certain sum of money, when he shall be able to convey by a good and sufficient deed premises of which he then had no title, no action can be maintained upon the promise until the other party has first obtained a title and tendered a good and sufficient deed thereof. This is a condition precedent, and to avail it must be performed, when no time is named, within a "reasonable time"—that is, such time as is necessary conveniently to do what the contract requires should be done—and a delay of one year not satisfactorily explained is an unreasonable time. Saunders v. Curtis, 75 Me. 493, 495.

"Reasonable time" within which payment of a demand note must be made is a question of law to be determined under all the circumstances. Thus, where a demand note provided for less than a legal rate of interest, and the holder did not make a demand for 3½ months before he died, and there was no demand made thereafter for 4½ months, though during the first two months of the latter period there were no administrators or any one authorized to make demand, demand subsequently made was within a reasonable time, so that indorsers were not relieved. Yates v. Goodwin, 51 Atl. 804, 805, 96 Me. 90.

A provision in a lease that the lessee shall pay the taxes "promptly when the same become due and payable" does not mean that the taxes shall be paid in a "reasonable time," but the word "promptly" means something more definite and covers a shorter time than a "reasonable time." Metropolitan Land Co. v. Manning, 71 S. W. 696, 699, 98 Mo. App. 248.

Performance of contract

Determination of what is a "reasonable time" in a given case depends on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. A reasonable time is such time as is necessarily convenient to do what the contract requires should be done. Hollis v. Libby, 64 Atl. 621, 624, 101 Me. 302.

Within the rule that if by the terms of a contract each party is to do certain acts upon the happening of a certain event, and no time is fixed, performance or tender of performance must be made within a "reasonable time" after the event happened, "reasonable time" means so much time as is necessary conveniently to do what the contract requires should be done. Howe v. Huntington, 15 Me. 350, 356.

"Reasonable time" for the performance of acts under a contract is such a period of time as would suffice for their performance if the person whose duty it was to perform used in the performance such diligence, care, and prudence as a person of ordinary diligence, care, and prudence, under like circumstances, would use in the performance of a like duty. Herf & Frerichs Chemical Co. v. Lackawanna Line, 73 S. W. 346, 350, 100 Mo. App. 164.

Where no time is fixed for performance, the contract implies performance within a "reasonable time," and what is a reasonable time depends upon the nature of the act to be done, the nature of the contract, and all the circumstances relating to the same. Kelley, Maus & Co. v. Hart-Parr Co., 115 N. W. 490, 491, 137 Iowa, 713 (citing Tufts v. McClure, 40 Iowa, 317).

What constitutes a "reasonable time" for delivery under a contract of sale usually depends upon the circumstances of the case, such as the parties may be supposed to have contemplated in a general way when making the contract. Robinson Clay Product Co. v. American Locomotive Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 69, 71, 56 Misc. Rep. 589.

Where a proposal for bids for the paying of a portion of a city street less than two-thirds of a mile in length required the work to be done within 90 days, but the contract contained no such provision, and the work was not completed for more than a year, it was not completed with a "reasonable time." Turner v. City of Springfield, 93 S. W. 867, 868, 117 Mo. App. 418.

The term "reasonable time" is a relative one, and its meaning depends entirely upon the attendant circumstances. It has been held in one case to mean as soon as convenient; in another, the least possible time after an event; and in many others it was held that such time must be determined according to the circumstances of the case, and with particular reference to the means and ability of the person by whom the contract is to be performed. Neilsen v. Mayer, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1069, 1070.

What is a "reasonable time" must be determined by the circumstances of the case. A delay of a month under some circumstances may be unreasonable, while under others that of a year or more will not be so regarded. Where plaintiff, knowing that the authorities of a city deemed it an imperative necessity to provide at once for a new reservoir for the storage of water, gave the city an option on a tract of land, limiting the option to three days from the date of the offer, and providing that the purchase money shall be paid within 60 days from the date of acceptance, unless further time be required by the city law department to examine the title to the land, in which event further reasonable time should be given for that purpose, and plaintiff had no title which he could convey, and by a decree entered nearly a year after the expiration of the 60 days from the acceptance of the option he was left wholly without interest in the greater part of the tract, and after a further delay of 2 months he succeeded in procuring the consent of the owner to convey to the city, but, 6 months after the time for performance, the city rescinded and plaintiff had notice thereof, plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for specific performance because of his inability to perform within a reasonable time. North Avenue Land Co. v. City of Baltimore, 63 Atl. 115, 118, 102 Md. 475.

Defendants in February, 1905, purchased of plaintiffs 200 barrels of certain flour at $5.35 per barrel, for delivery in fractional lots as requested by defendants within a "reasonable time." Between March 20th and May 16th, defendants accepted 55 barrels, and in July requested further delay. In August plaintiffs notified defendants that if they did not carry out their contract plaintiffs would dispose of the flour on defendant's account, and, receiving no response, plaintiffs tendered the flour to the defendants on September 2, 1905, which defendants refused to receive, whereupon without further notice plaintiffs sold the flour on a produce exchange on September 20th for $4.20 a barrel, which was the best price obtainable. Held, that plaintiffs acted in "good faith" and with "due diligence" and within a "reasonable time," and that the resale fixed the measure of plaintiff's damages. Ford v. Erde, 99 N. Y. Supp. 487, 488, 50 Misc. Rep. 665.

What is "reasonable time" in which to comply with the terms of an oil lease, after notice of intention to forfeit, as a rule, is a question of fact, for its determination largely depends upon the circumstances surrounding the particular case and the means and ability of the person by whom the lease is to be performed. Where the facts are undisputed or admitted or are clearly established, "reasonable time" has been held to be a question of law; but should the question of "reasonable time" depend upon any controverted facts, or where the motives of the party enter into the question, the whole is necessary to be submitted to a jury before any judgment can be formed as to whether the time was reasonable. It has also been defined as the time that preserves to each party the rights and advantages he possesses, and protects each party from the losses that he ought not to suffer. "Reasonable time" will not begin to run until some one interested in the matter calls for something to be done respecting it. American Window Glass Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co., 76 N. E. 1006, 1008, 37 Ind. App. 439 (citing Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Littler, 70 N. E. 363, 162 Ind. 320; Island Coal Co. v. Combs, 53 N. E. 452, 152 Ind. 379, 387; Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 5977).

Performance of covenant

If, in the absence of a limitation as to the time within which a covenant to pay one-half of the mortgage should be performed before title should pass, it should be inferred a "reasonable time" was intended, such time would be one within which it would be equitable for him to do so. Emery v. Dana, 84 Atl. 976, 978, 76 N. E. 483.

Presentation of claim against municipality

Seattle City Charter, art. 4, § 29, requiring claims for damages against the city to be filed with the clerk within 30 days after the time when such claims accrue, is not invalid as not allowing a "reasonable time" within which to present such claims. Postal v. City of Seattle, 83 Pac. 1025, 1026, 41 Wash. 432.

Presentation of bill or note

As to what is a "reasonable time" for the presentation of a check for payment depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. Edmisten v. Henry Herpolshelmer Co., 92 N. W. 138, 141, 66 Neb. 94, 59 L. R. A. 934.

What is a "reasonable time" within which a demand of payment must be made of the maker of an instrument, payable on demand, in order to subject the indorser, is a question of fact as a general rule. Hampton v. Miller, 61 Atl. 952, 954, 78 Conn. 267 (citing Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361, 372; Tomlinson Carriage Co. v. Kinsella, 31 Conn. 268-273; Oley v. Miller, 74 Conn. 304, 310, 50 Atl. 744, 746).

Where a seller of goods accepted a check in payment and did not present the check in the bank on which it was drawn until two weeks after the sale, such presentment was within a "reasonable time" and did not prevent him from reclaiming the goods on non-payment of the check. People's State Bank of Michigan Valley v. Brown, 103 Pac. 102, 104, 80 Kan. 520, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824.

While the liability of an indorser of a note is fixed by law, the question of what is a "reasonable time" to present the note to the maker for payment, when it is indorsed after maturity, is not fixed by law, but depends upon the facts and the understanding and agreement of the parties, Rev. Codes, § 3650, providing that in determining what is a reasonable time regard must be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade or business, if any, with respect to such instrument, and the facts of the particular case. Sheffield v. Cleland, 115 Pac. 20, 21, 19 Idaho, 612.

What is a "reasonable time" for presenting for payment as required by Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, c. 612, § 131, so as to bind an indorser of a note payable on demand, is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of the particular case. The presentation for payment of a note payable on demand is presumptively within a "reasonable time," and an indorser to raise the issue that its presentation was delayed for an unreasonable time must plead and prove such matter as a defense. German-American Bank v. Mills, 91 N. Y. Supp. 142, 143, 99 App. Div. 312.

Under a Negotiable Instruments Law requiring presentment of checks for payment within a "reasonable time," where a check drawn on October 11, 1907, was received through the mail on October 12th, a "reasonable time" for presentation expired at the close of business on October 13th, under the general rule that a reasonable time for presentation of a check ends with the next day after it is dated. Dehoust v. Lewis, 112 N. Y. Supp. 559, 560, 128 App. Div. 131 (citing Eaton & Gilbert, Commercial Paper, § 167; Wood's Byles, Bills, 19; Smith v. Jones [N. Y.] 20 Wend. 192, 32 Am. Dec. 527).

Under Negotiable Instruments Law, Laws 1897, p. 736, c. 612, § 131, providing that where an instrument is payable on demand presentment must be made within a "reasonable time" after its issue or after the last negotiation thereof, and section 4, p. 721, providing that in determining what is a "reasonable time" regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, the usage of trade, and the facts of the particular case, where a demand note was indorsed without consideration for the maker's accommodation, and its payment was secured by the deposit of certain securities, and two years after its making the plaintiff complained to the indorser of its nonpayment, and twice, a year later, wrote that the maker was in default as to the interest, but no steps were taken to charge the indorser by presentment of the note for payment until more than 3½ years had elapsed, such presentment was not within a "reasonable time." Commercial Nat. Bank of Syracuse v. Zimmerman, 77 N. E. 1020, 1021, 185 N. Y. 210.

When the payee to whom a check is delivered receives it in the same place where the bank on which it is drawn is located, he may preserve recourse against the drawer by presenting it for payment at any time before the close of banking hours on the next day. Under B. & C. Comp. § 4455, providing that, where an instrument payable on demand is negotiated an unreasonable length of time after it is issued, the holder is not deemed a holder in due course, a check issued on a certain date, bearing that date and negotiated at noon of the following day, was negotiated within a "reasonable time" so as not to carry to the indorsee notice of its illegality or previous dishonor. Matlock v. Scheuerman, 93 Pac. 823, 826, 51 Or. 49, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747 (citing 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. [5th Ed.] § 1590).

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 322, provides that a check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time after its issue. Section 4 provides that, in determining what is a reasonable time, regard is to be had to the nature of the instrument, any usage of trade or business with respect to such instruments, and the facts of the particular case. Held that, in view of the custom of the New York Clearing House Association, the deposit of a check received after banking hours, on the morning of the day after its receipt, and its presentment for payment in the usual course of business by the bank of deposit on the day following, showed due diligence in presentment; "reasonable" being a relative term to be determined according to the circumstances of the case, "reasonable time" meaning "so much time as is necessary under the circumstances conveniently to do what the contract requires," and "usage of trade" meaning a known, uniform, and reasonable usage, not contrary to law or public policy. Zaloom v. Ganim, 129 N. Y. Supp. 85, 87, 72 Misc. Rep. 36.

Redemption

Where a mortgagor was given a "reasonable time" beyond the statutory period of redemption, an attempt to redeem 5½ years after the foreclosure, and after a large amount had been expended for permanent improvements of the property, was not within a "reasonable time" within the agreement. Mann v. Provident Life & Trust Co., 85 Pac. 56, 58, 42 Wash. 581.

Removal of goods from depot

The period of "reasonable time" for the removal of goods begins when the consignee knows, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should know, that they have arrived. Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 122 S. W. 184, 188, 135 Ky. 361, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 698, 21 Ann. Cas. 527.

Plaintiff's agent learned of the arrival of the goods in question between 4 and 5 o'clock p. m., which was a few hours after the car in which the goods were transported reached destination. The shipping receipt had not arrived, and it was customary for the carrier's office to close at 6 p. m. Plaintiff did not remove the goods that night, during which they were destroyed by fire. Held, that the loss occurred before the expiration of a "reasonable time" for the removal of the goods as a matter of law. McGregor v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 93 Pac. 465, 470, 50 Or. 527, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668.

The "reasonable time" within which a consignee after notice of the arrival of his goods at their destination is required to remove them, before the termination of the liability of the carrier as insurer, is such time as will enable one, residing in the vicinity of the place of delivery, and who is informed of the probable time of arrival of the goods and of the course of the carrier's business, to inspect and remove the goods during business hours." United Fruit Co. v. New York & B. Transp. Co., 65 Atl. 415, 419, 104 Md. 567, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240, 10 Ann. Cas. 437.

Rescission of contract

"The law has not defined reasonable time. It cannot be defined by any prescribed rule. What is reasonable in one case may be unreasonable in another case. What is reasonable in any case must be ascertained by the application of reason to the facts which characterize the particular case. Delay for one week after full discovery may be unreasonable in some cases. A much longer delay may in other cases be reasonable. The injured party should observe ordinary vigilance and good faith. He should not, by culpable negligence or by design, subject the other party to unnecessary inconvenience, loss, or hazard; and, whenever he offers to return the property, it should be in as good condition as it was when he might have first returned it after full discovery of its defectiveness, so as to place both parties as nearly as possible in statu quo. All this may appear in a supposable or possible case, even though months may have interlapsed. It may not appear in another possible case in which one week had evolved. Time, in the abstract, is not essential. It is material so far only as, when associated with other circumstances, it may produce injuries or unjust consequences. The great object of the rule of law on this subject is to prevent injury or wrong to the vendor; and the main question in every such case should be: Has he any just cause to object to the rescission of the contract? Has he been trifled with? Will he have suffered by unnecessary and improper delay?" Hogan v. Tucker, 77 S. W. 197, 199, 116 Ky. 918 (quoting Hoggins v. Becraft, 31 Ky. [1 Dana] 28, 31).

Sale of realty by alien heirs

B. died intestate in 1860, seised of land, and left, him surviving, his mother, two brothers, and two sisters. One brother, a sister, and the mother were residents of the United States. The others resided in Germany, from where they removed to the United States in 1869. The mother died in 1862.

Under the statute prior to 1868, a nonresident alien could not inherit real estate. When B. died, a treaty was in force allowing nonresident alien heirs to sell real estate within a "reasonable time." Held that, in the absence of excusing circumstances, more than a reasonable time had elapsed after the death of the mother, and before the legislation of 1868 and the expiration of such time worked a failure of the condition imposed in the treaty; such failure vesting a fee-simple title in the resident heirs. Ahrens v. Ahrens, 123 N. W. 164, 166, 144 Iowa, 486, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1093.

Suit to set aside orders approving claims against estate

Where orders approving certain claims against a decedent's estate as legal charges against the same were entered, respectively, November 7, 1901, and January 30, 1902, a suit brought to set aside such orders, filed April 24, 1902, was instituted within a "reasonable time." Smart v. Panther, 95 S. W. 679, 681, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 262.

Taking possession by mortgagee of chattels after default

Under Sess. Laws 1899, p. 160, c. 86, declaring that 30 days shall be a reasonable time within which a mortgagee of chattels shall take possession after default, where the first mortgagee permitted the property to remain in the possession of the mortgagor for more than 30 days after maturity of the debt, after which a second mortgagee, who took "subject" to the first mortgage, took possession of the property thereunder though not until more than four months had elapsed after the maturity of his debt, he nevertheless acquired a prior right to the property over the first mortgagee. Cassell v. Deisher, 89 Pac. 773, 774, 39 Colo. 367.

Transportation by carrier

"Reasonable time," as used in Revisal 1905, § 2632, imposing a penalty on a common carrier which shall "omit or neglect to transport within a 'reasonable time' any goods, received for shipment," is the ordinary time required for transporting such articles between the receiving and shipping stations, and a delay of two days at the initial point is not to be charged against the carrier as unreasonable, but is prima facie reasonable, and a failure to transport within such time is prima facie unreasonable. Alexander v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 697, 144 N. C. 93 (citing Walker Bros. v. Southern R. Co., 49 S. E. 84, 137 N. C. 163).

Revisal 1905, § 2682, declares that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to neglect to transport within a reasonable time any goods received for shipment and billed to or from any place in the state, unless otherwise agreed between the parties or unless the same be destroyed, under a penalty. It is further provided that the company shall be deemed to have transported the goods in a reasonable time if it has done so within the ordinary time required for such transportation; and that a delay of two days at the initial point, and 48 hours at one intermediate point for each 100 miles or fraction over which goods are to be transported, shall be held to be prima facie reasonable, and a failure to transport within such time shall be held prima facie unreasonable. The duty imposed by the statute is but declaratory of the common law, and the definition of "reasonable time," "as the ordinary time required" within which an act is to be done, is the regular, customary, and usual time, and is synonymous with "reasonable time," which means "as soon as the party conveniently can." The provision as to the allowance of time at the initial point and intermediate points lowers the standard of duty, as it is not clear that so much time would be given under all circumstances. The last sentence in the statute, "and a failure to transport within such time will be held prima facie unreasonable," is not very clear, and the words cannot refer to the time which "shall not be charged," because to do so would be contradictory and destructive of the immediately preceding sentence. The last sentence should therefore be referred to the terms "ordinary time," thus making the act to read, "A failure to transport within ordinary time shall be held prima facie unreasonable." Stone & Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 56 S. E. 932, 934, 144 N. C. 220 (citing Moore, Car., 188; Tiffany, Sales, 195; Crook v. Cowan, 64 N. C. 743; State v. Patterson, 47 S. E. 808, 134 N. C. 612; Ober v. Smith, 78 N. C. 316).

Working about machine after promise to repair

"Reasonable time," within the rule that a servant will not be negligent in continuing to work about an unsafe machine for a reasonable time after promise to repair, is any period which does not preclude all reasonable expectations that the promise may be kept. Anderson v. Fielding, 93 N. W. 337, 358, 92 Minn. 42, 104 Am. St. Rep. 665.

REASONABLE USE

The "reasonable use" which an owner of land may make of it is such a use as an ordinary man would make of his premises. Hamlin v. Blankenberg, 60 Atl. 1010, 1011, 78 N. H. 258 (citing Horan v. Byrnes, 54 Atl. 945, 72 N. H. 93, 97, 100, 62 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 670; Franklin v. Durgee, 51 Atl. 911, 71 N. H. 186, 58 L. R. A. 112).

Within the rule that one has the right to the "reasonable use" of his own property, it is not a reasonable use of it, if it deprives an adjoining owner of the lawful use and enjoyment of his property. An instruction that if smoke, soot, and ashes are blown on the plaintiff's house in such a manner as to

"reasonably" annoy him, would have been better had it used the expression "necessarily and materially annoy." It is to be presumed that by the word "reasonable" in this connection was meant ordinary and necessary result of the smoke, cinders, and ashes. Junction City Lumber Co. v. Sharp (Ark.) 123 S. W. 372.

When there exists a natural flow sufficient to make a floatable stream, but both parties need the water for their different purposes at the same time, and the use of the water by one injuriously interferes with its use by the other, the maxim or doctrine of "reasonable use" applies. If they cannot both enjoy the same thing at the same time, each must take to himself and concede to the other a "reasonable use" of the common boon. "The reasonableness of the use depends upon the nature and size of the stream, the business or purposes to which it is made subservient, and on the ever-varying circumstances of each particular case. Each case must stand upon its own facts, and can be a guide in other cases only as it may illustrate the application of general principles. Such general rule should be laid down as appears best calculated to secure the entire water of the stream to useful purposes." Pearson v. Rolfe, 76 Me. 380, 390 (quoting and adopting definition in Cool. Torts, 583).

REASONABLE VALUE

The expression "reasonable value" is not so broad as "market value." Alcon v. Koons, 82 N. E. 92, 95, 84 N. E. 1104, 42 Ind. App. 537.

"Reasonable value," like market value, is sometimes difficult to ascertain and fix with certainty, and depends upon the surroundings and conditions existing at the time it is sought to be ascertained. Old River Rice Irr. Co. v. Stubbs (Tex.) 137 S. W. 154, 157.

In the absence of proof that articles furnished by claimant for decedent's funeral were not sold under fair trade conditions, or that competition had been stifled or prices otherwise inflated, their "reasonable value" was their "market value" at the place where they were sold, by which is meant the prices which the articles customarily brought at the time. On a claim against an estate for articles furnished for decedent's funeral, a charge that plaintiff was entitled to recover their "reasonable value" was sufficient; "reasonable value" being used as synonymous with "market value." Wagoner Undertaking Co. v. Jones, 114 S. W. 1049, 1051, 134 Mo. App. 101.

REASONABLE WORTH

The expression "reasonable worth" is not so broad as "market value." "Reasonable worth" imports the conditions of time and terms, and not a sale for cash. Alcon

v. Koons, 42 Ind. App. 537, 82 N. E. 92, 95, 84 N. E. 1104.

"'Reasonable worth' is an elastic term, especially as to farm property. It ordinarily means what may be obtained by one under no pressure or compulsion to sell until he can seek and find a customer desiring to purchase." Rosenheimer v. Krenn, 106 N. W. 20, 25, 126 Wis. 617, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395.

REASONABLY

"The word 'reasonably' has different significations. It sometimes means tolerably or moderate. Its meaning, when applied to a time within which a thing is to be done, has given the courts much trouble in its application to the particular facts of the case. What is reasonable is most generally a question upon which the minds of men do not agree. What one would think was reasonable, another might think unreasonable." Hunt v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 103 S. W. 1088, 1089, 128 Mo. App. 79.

In an instruction that every protection reasonably accessible must be used in the first place in protecting electric wires and the utmost care should be used to keep them so, the words "reasonably" and "utmost care" meant the same thing. Winkelman v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 85 S. W. 99, 100, 110 Mo. App. 184.

Where, on a prosecution for murder, it appeared that defendant went to the house of deceased, and there killed him, and there was a question as to whether he went to the house because the wife of deceased had sent for him on a lawful mission, or whether he went there on an unlawful purpose, an instruction which required accused to "actually" believe that the wife had sent for him on a lawful mission placed too great a burden on accused, and the use of the word "reasonably," instead of "actually," would have been more appropriate. Nicks v. State, 79 S. W. 35, 36, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 241.

REASONABLY APPARENT

There is no material difference between the words "apparent" and "reasonably apparent" as used in an instruction, in an action for injuries sustained in a railroad crossing accident, making the doctrine of discovered peril applicable if the employes on the engine saw the person injured on the track, and it was apparent, or reasonably apparent, that he would not get off, and the words "realized his peril." Webster defines "apparent" as clear or manifest to the understanding; plain; evident; obvious; known; palpable; indubitable. If the danger was apparent or reasonably apparent to the employes operating the engine, it was known to them. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 115 S. W. 340, 343.

REASONABLY CERTAIN

See Reasonable Certainty.

The words "reasonably certain," as used in the rule relating to prospective losses, do not mean that such losses must be absolutely certain, but certain to a reasonable probability. Gallamore v. Olympia, 75 Pac. 978, 980, 34 Wash. 379.

In an action for injuries alleged to be permanent, the question asked of an expert medical witness as to what results were "likely" to follow was competent; the term "likely" being used synonymously with "reasonably expected," which might be substituted for "reasonably certain." Garard v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co., 105 S. W. 767, 771, 207 Mo. 242.

To say that proof of the fact must be made "reasonably certain" is, by literal import of the words, tantamount to saying that the proof must be made beyond a reasonable doubt. This has been expressly held as to the phrase "moral certainty," which is equivalent to the words "reasonable certainty." A charge that if a passenger's sickness was not the result of her being put off the train, and that it was "reasonably certain" to have resulted from other causes, the carrier is not liable, is erroneous as requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Burns, 9 S. W. 467, 468, 71 Tex. 479, 481.

REASONABLY CONVINCING

Where, after sustaining an exception to a master's report, the court in recommitting it said, in respect to the evidence warranting a particular finding, that it must be "reasonably convincing," it was held that the term "reasonably convincing" was liable to lead to a hurtful misconception on the part of the master; that it might mean a mere preponderance of the evidence, a weighing of the relative strength of conflicting testimony, as would be sufficient to reasonably convince the mind that there were gross errors and the like. Whereas, the language of the law is that the evidence which will warrant a disturbance of such an award must be "the most irrefutable proof," "overwhelming," or persuasive "beyond a reasonable doubt," or "free from all doubt and convincing," or "so outrageous, etc." Choctaw & M. R. Co. v. Newton, 140 Fed. 225, 234, 71 C. C. A. 655.

REASONABLY EXPECTED

In an action for injuries alleged to be permanent, the question asked of an expert medical witness as to what results were "likely" to follow was competent; the term "likely" being used synonymously with "reasonably expected," which might be substituted for "reasonably certain." Garard v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co., 105 S. W. 767, 771, 207 Mo. 242.

REASONABLY FIT

An appliance is "reasonably fit" when it can be used by the servant in the course of his employment without danger to himself by exercising ordinary care. The owner of a vessel is not negligent in furnishing, for the use of seamen, a winch in which the cogwheels are not protected so as to prevent the operator's fingers from being caught, where it can be safely used by the exercise of ordinary care. The Chico, 140 Fed. 568.

REASONABLY LIKELY

There is no distinction between such phrases as "reasonably likely to suffer" and "likely to suffer" used in various cases in stating the rule when prospective damages are recoverable. Gallamore v. Olympia, 75 Pac. 978, 980, 34 Wash. 379.

REASONABLY PRACTICABLE

Under P. L. 1895, p. 462, providing that, where the route of a railway crosses an established steam railway, applications shall be made to the chancellor to define the mode, who shall proceed to define it, and shall avoid a grade crossing if, in his judgment, it be reasonably practicable, it is not "reasonably practicable" to avoid a grade crossing of an electric railway or a steam railroad where an overhead or undergrade crossing will cost $100,000 and will materially interfere with the approach on the highway to an important depot, and it appears a grade crossing can be rendered safe by a signal tower and apparatus for stopping an electric car if the motorman disobeys signals to stop. In re Atlantic Highlands, R. B. & L. B. Electric Ry. Co. (N. J.) 35 Atl. 387, 388.

REASONABLY PRUDENT

See Reasonable Prudence.

"A 'reasonably prudent man' may mean the same as an ordinarily prudent man." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Trump, 94 S. W. 903, 906, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 536 (quoting the definition in Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Hannig, 43 S. W. 508, 91 Tex. 350).

A "reasonably prudent man" will neither neglect what he can foresee as probable, nor waste his anxiety on events that are barely possible, but will order his precaution by the measure of what appears likely in the known course of things. Whether or not a defendant is negligent depends on two questions: (1) Whether the particular act or acts charged in the petition were performed or omitted; (2) whether the performance or omission of these acts or some one or more of them was a breach of legal duty. Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 84 S. W. 133, 136, 108 Mo. App. 665 (citing American Brewing Ass'n v. Talbot, 42 S. W. 682, 141 Mo. 685, 64 Am. St. Rep. 538; 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 52).

REASONABLY SAFE

A car stall in which a horse was transported by a carrier is "reasonably safe" when it is such as a person of ordinary prudence would provide. Southern Express Co. v. Fox

& Logan, 115 S. W. 184, 117 S. W. 270, 131 Ky. 257, 133 Am. St. Rep. 241.

An appliance furnished by an employer to his employé is "reasonably safe," where it is in general use among employers of ordinary caution and prudence in the same line of business under the same circumstances. Yazdewski v. Barker, 111 N. W. 689, 691, 131 Wis. 494, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1059 (citing Guillard v. Knapp-Stout and Company, 70 N. W. 671, 95 Wis. 482; Prybyski v. Northwestern Coal R. Co., 74 N. W. 117, 98 Wis. 413; Sladky v. Marquette Lumber Co., 83 N. W. 514, 107 Wis. 251).

A master's duty to furnish "reasonably safe" tools and appliances means reasonably safe under all the circumstances, and does not forbid him from placing a servant at work on a machine which is inherently dangerous. Chandler v. Bowersock, 106 Pac. 54, 55, 81 Kan. 606.

"Reasonably safe" appliances means safe according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of the business. Morton v. William Barr Dry Goods Co., 103 S. W. 588, 592, 126 Mo. App. 377 (quoting and adopting definition in Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co., 20 Atl. 517, 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944); Norfolk & Portsmouth Traction Co. v. Ellington's Adm'r, 61 S. E. 779, 781, 108 Va. 245, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117.

"Reasonably safe," within the rule which requires an employer to furnish reasonably safe appliances, etc., means safe according to the usage, habits, and ordinary risks of the business. A master is bound to use reasonable care to furnish his servants safe appliances, but is not bound to furnish any particular appliances, nor the newest and best appliances; his duty being performed when he furnishes those of ordinary character and of reasonable safety. Brands v. St. Louis Car Co., 112 S. W. 511, 514, 213 Mo. 698, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701 (quoting and adopting Minnier v. Sedalla, W. & S. Ry. Co., 67 S. W. 1072, 167 Mo. 112; and citing and adopting Chrismer v. Bell Telephone Co., 92 S. W. 378, 194 Mo. 189, 6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 492).

"'Reasonably safe' means safe according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of the business. Absolute safety being unattainable, and employers not being insurers, they are liable for the consequences, not of danger but of negligence, and the unheeding test of negligence in methods, machinery, and appliances is ordinary usage of the business." Chrismer v. Bell Telephone Co., 92 S. W. 378, 383, 194 Mo. 189, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492 (quoting and adopting definition in Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co., 20 Atl. 517, 136 Pa. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944).

"In regard to the style of the implement or nature of the mode of performance of any work, 'reasonably safe' means safe according to the usages, habits, and ordinary risks of the business." McManus v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 94 S. W. 743, 745, 118 Mo. App. 152 (quoting and adopting the definition in Titus v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co., 20 Atl. 518, 136 Pa. 626, 20 Am. St. Rep. 944).

"The expression 'reasonably safe place' is quite generally and almost universally used to express the duty of the master to exercise due or reasonable care to provide a safe place." Firment v. Berwind-White Coal Min. Co., 162 Fed. 758, 764.

A reasonably safe place to work, required of the owner or operator of a coal mine with respect to ventilation and the accumulation of dangerous gases, after he has provided ample means of ventilation and employed a competent mine boss and fire boss, as required by Code 1906, §§ 409, 410, means a reasonably safe place in the first instance; and the subsequent negligence of such mine boss or fire boss in allowing the accumulation in the mine of gases in dangerous quantities will be regarded as the negligence of a fellow servant of the miner, and a risk assumed by such miner. Squillache v. Tidewater Coal & Coke Co., 62 S. E. 446, 449, 64 W. Va. 337.

When the character of the work is not complicated or attended with obvious and inherent dangers, or when the general method of doing it, long established and recognized by the employés, does not appear to be unreasonably or unnecessarily dangerous, the master need not provide rules, or command specifically the observance of a system of work which his employés adopt and observe without special instructions; a reasonably safe method of operation, customarily followed, being in effect equivalent to the establishment of reasonable rules, so far as the master's duty in this respect is concerned. Parmaieu v. International Paper Co., 71 Atl. 31, 33, 75 N. H. 69.

The adverb "reasonably" is a qualifying word, and modifies the adjective "safe." It is defined by Webster as meaning moderately or tolerably, and that is its commonly understood meaning. The use of the word in an instruction in a prosecution for homicide that accused had the right to kill, if there was, as it then appeared to him, no reasonably safe means of averting the danger of losing his life or suffering great bodily harm at the hands of decedent, is erroneous, since by such instruction accused would not be compelled to choose an alternative method of escaping danger, unless it promised absolute safety. Tompkins v. Commonwealth, 77 S. W. 712, 713, 117 Ky. 138.

A railroad company, though entitled to equip its switch engines with such appliances as it sees fit, must use reasonable care to furnish its employés safe appliances and to keep them in good condition, but it need not use the newest and best appliances, and in this connection the term "reasonably safe" means safe according to the usages and ordinary risks of the business. Cannon v. South Dakota Cent. Ry. Co., 137 N. W. 347, 350, 29 S. D. 433.

REASONABLY SATISFY

The expression "reasonably satisfies," as used in an instruction defining the term "preponderance of the evidence" as meaning that greater and superior weight of the testimony as reasonably satisfies the minds of the jury, must have been understood by the jury to mean that a preponderance of the evidence was established if, upon consideration of the evidence, the result was to reasonably satisfy their minds that the greater weight of the evidence was with plaintiff, and the use of the words did not, therefore, render the instruction erroneous, as being too great a burden on the party having the burden of proof. Ball v. Marquis, 98 N. W. 496, 497, 122 Iowa, 665.

REASSESSMENT

Under a city charter providing that, when any assessment is set aside or declared void by any court, then the board of public works shall make a "reassessment upon all property which has been or will be benefited by the improvement to the extent of its proportionate part," the term "reassessment" refers to an entirely new apportionment of the benefits. State ex rel. Eaton v. District Court of Ramsey County, 104 N. W. 553, 556, 95 Minn. 503.

REBATE

In carpentry art

In the carpentry art, "rebated," as applied to the mode of joining moldings or strips used in construction, means the same as "rabbeted." Decker v. Sanford, 135 Fed. 112, 117.

In insurance

A life insurance company, issuing contracts providing for a special income in consideration of insured rendering on request services to the company, such as reporting on the fitness of agents or applicants for insurance, does not violate Code 1907, § 4579, prohibiting offering "to pay or allow, as inducement to insurance, any rebate of premiums"; for the services which insured obligates himself to perform afford a consideration for the obligation assumed to allow a special income, though the company has the option to demand the services—"rebate" being deductions from stipulated premiums allowed in pursuance of antecedent contract. Julian Ins. Com'r v. Guarantee Life Ins. Co., 49 South. 234, 235, 159 Ala. 533 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 5986).

Of assessment

An ordinance requiring a street railway company laying its tracks on a paved street to pay into the city treasury the cost of the pavement of the part of the street between the tracks, between the rails, etc., and that the same shall be "rebated" to the owners of the property where the special assessment against the same shall have been paid, applies only to the ordinary case where the owner at the time the assessment was paid was the owner at the time of the payment into the treasury by the company, and it does not provide for a case where the person who paid the assessment sold the premises to a purchaser before the payment into the treasury by the company; the word "rebate" meaning to draw back. Savage-Scofield Co. v. City of Tacoma, 105 Pac. 1032, 1034, 56 Wash. 457.

Of freight rate

A rebate or concession from a part of a single rate whereby property is transported thereunder at a less rate than the established rate is a concession from the entire rate, and renders all transportation thereunder illegal. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 21, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400. See, also, Thomas v. United States, 156 Fed. 897, 908, 84 C. C. A. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720 (quoting with approval from Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 153 Fed. 1, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. [N. S.] 400).

A carrier by water which has not joined in a tariff and division sheet filed and published by connecting railroad carriers for the through carriage of interstate shipments between two points does not become a party to a "common arrangement" for the carriage of such a shipment within the meaning of Elkins Act Feb. 19, 1903, c. 708, § 1, 32 Stat. 847, by accepting and carrying the same under a through bill of lading issued by the initial railroad carrier stating the published tariff rate and the division of the charges in accordance therewith, nor by receiving its divisional part of such rate, where it had previously privately contracted with the shipper to "protect" a lower through rate, pursuant to which contract the shipment was made, and its return to the shipper of a part of its divisional share of the freight paid, in fulfillment of the contract, was not the "giving of a rebate" in violation of the act. Mutual Transit Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 664, 669, 102 C. C. A. 164.

Private tracks built by the owner of a packing plant on its own property, extending from a connection with the tracks of a belt line railroad company to and around its buildings, and used in loading cars for shipment, are not a part of the railroad system, but plant facilities, and the refunding by a railroad company, which made and published a schedule of through rates, including the belt line charge, of $1 per car to such packing company on shipments made by it and paid for at the schedule rate, on the ground that it was a payment for the use of such private tracks, thus making the rate charged $1 per car less than that published and charged to shippers generally from the same point, constituted the giving of a rebate, in violation of section 1 of Elkins Act February 19, 1903, c. 708, 32 Stat. 847. Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. United States, 156 Fed. 558, 562, 84 C. C. A. 324, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 551.

In the federal statutes forbidding carriers to offer, grant, or give, and shippers to solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of transportation, etc., the word "rebate" in and of itself implies a comparison with, a measurement by, and a departure from, a determined standard. Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

REBELLION

See Actual Rebellion.

REBILLING RATE

A true "rebillings rate" is one in which goods received in unbroken car load lots over one line of railway can be rebilled over the same or another line, completing one continuous trip, simply changing the consignee, and altering the destination of the identical shipment, without unloading. A so-called "rebillings rate" adopted by a railroad, which is not applied to consignments arriving over all connecting lines, but is only available to those receiving freight over associate lines, and under which freight reconsigned over the rebilling road does not complete one continuous trip without rehandling, and is not necessarily the identical shipment originally consigned, there being a custom of granting dealers handling freight over the associate line the privilege within 90 days from the date of their "expense bills," or receipts showing the amount of freight received over such line, of shipping an equal amount of freight over the rebilling line at the rate adopted, is not a true rebillings rate. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Mississippi, 38 South. 356, 357, 86 Miss. 607.

REBUILD

Anything which is "built" is formed "by uniting materials into a regular structure," and that which is "rebuilt" is constructed "after having been demolished." United States v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372, 374.

As repair

See Repair—Repairs.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION

A "rebuttable presumption" of law is an inference which obtains until overthrown by proof. Barrow v. Territory, 114 Pac. 975, 976, 13 Ariz. 302.

REBUTTAL

REBUTTING EVIDENCE

"Rebutting evidence" is that which is given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove testimony or facts given in evidence by the adverse party. State v. Silva, 120 Pac. 835, 839, 21 Idaho, 247.

To "rebut" means to contradict by counter proof, or repel by opposing testimony. Thus proof that one was peaceable and quiet does not rebut testimony that he was a large and strong man. Kelly v. People, 82 N. E. 198, 201, 229 Ill. 81, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1169, 11 Ann. Cas. 226.

"Rebutting evidence" is that which is given by a party in a cause to explain, repel, contradict, or disprove the facts given in evidence by the other side. Evidence which shows that the evidence of the opposite party was not entitled to the force and effect which the law imputes to it prima facie must in its strictest sense be rebutting. West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 152 Fed. 1019, 1020 (citing United States v. Holmes, 26 Fed. Cas. 349, 1 Cliff. 98; Davis v. Hamblin, 51 Md. 525, 529; Lux v. Haggin, 10 Pac. 674, 767, 69 Cal. 255; United States v. Gardiner, 25 Fed. Cas. 1245).

"Rebuttal evidence" is that which has become relevant or important only as an effect of some evidence introduced by the other side. The fatal shot having been fired by one of a crowd and killed a bystander, and the question being as to who fired it, and the prosecution having rested its case after offering evidence to show that defendant had fired it, and the defendant having rested his case after offering evidence to show that another member of the crowd had fired it, the prosecution could not offer the confession of defendant that he had fired the fatal shot as rebuttal. The confession was not "rebuttal evidence," but should have been offered as part of the evidence in chief. State v. Smith, 45 South. 415, 120 La. 530 (citing Wigmore on Ev. p. 2474).

"Rebutting evidence" is that evidence which is given by a party to counteract or disprove alleged facts which have been given in evidence by the other party. In an action for malicious prosecution on a charge of larceny by selling a mortgaged horse, plaintiff testified on cross-examination that he had never sold the horse; but, in support of the defense, a witness was permitted to testify that she saw a certain person bring a horse to plaintiff's residence and exchange it with him for the one in question, and plaintiff then was called in rebuttal to state whether he had ever traded horses, and what had been done with the horse in question. Held, that the exclusion of such offered evidence on the ground that it was not proper rebuttal was error. Potter v. Sims, 111 N. W. 29, 30, 135 Iowa, 739 (citing Bouvier's Law Dict.; State v. Gadbois, 56 N. W. 272, 89 Iowa, 25; State

v. Fourchy, 51 La. Ann. 228, 25 South. 109; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674).

Since rebutting evidence is that given by a party to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the other side, more particularly applied to the evidence given by plaintiff to explain or repel evidence given by the defendant, defendant in a suit to restrain it from constructing certain railroad tracks in a street, not having offered in evidence the ordinance granting it the right to do so, plaintiff was not entitled to introduce evidence in rebuttal showing that the ordinance was invalid. Seibel-Suessdorf Copper & Iron Mfg. Co. v. Manufacturers' Ry. Co. (Mo.) 130 S. W. 288, 293.

REBUTTER

In either sort of warranty, lineal or collateral, if the warrantor should implead the warrantee, the latter (the tenant) might show the warranty, and demand judgment whether, contrary to the warranty, the warrantor should be suffered to demand the thing warranted; and this was called a "rebutter." This rebutter was given as a defense to the title, to avoid circuity of action, since, if the demandant were to have recovered contrary to the warranty, the other party would recover the same lands, or lands of equal value, by force of the warranty. While in some of the states this doctrine of rebutter, which sprang from the common-law warranty, has been applied to the modern covenants for title, producing results often incongruous, and at times of greater or less hardship, yet in other states the English statutes have been declared to be in force; in others, they have been re-enacted, either literally or in substance; in others, the whole common-law doctrine of lineal and collateral warranty is deemed inapplicable to our system of jurisprudence; while in others lineal and collateral warranty, with all their incidents, have been abolished by statute. As the statute of Gloucester touching tenants by the curtesy, and that of fourth and fifth Anne (chapter 16) relating to joint tenants and tenants in common, wherein, in section 21, it was declared that all warranties made by any tenant for life of any lands coming to any person in reversion or remainder should be void, and that all collateral warranties of any lands by an ancestor who had no estate of inheritance in possession in the same should be void as against his heirs, are included in a resolution of the General Assembly of the then colony of Rhode Island, passed at a session held on the last Tuesday of February, A. D. 1749, for the purpose of introducing in full force into the colony certain English statutes named therein, the doctrine of "rebutter" probably had little or no application in this colony and state, and may be regarded as foreign to our practice, except in the manner suggested by Judge Story in Sisson et al. v. Seabury, 1

Sumn. 235, at page 263, 22 Fed. Cas. 238. The covenant of warranty may operate as a bar to the title of the heir by way of "rebutter," when it descends upon him from the warranting ancestor. Even the common-law definition of the word "rebutter" is becoming obsolete. It is neither to be found in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, American & English Encyclopedia of Law, nor in the Encyclopedia of Pleading & Practice. Reinhalter v. Hutchins, 60 Atl. 234, 236, 26 R. I. 585 (citing Bigelow, Estop. [5th Ed.] p. 388; Rawle, Cov. [5th Ed.] § 239).

RECALL

As republican government, see Republican Government.

"Repeal" and "recall" are synonymous terms. Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 36 Colo. 418.

RECEIPT

See Postmaster's Receipt; Receiver's Receipt; Tax Receipt; Trust Receipt; Warehouse Receipt.

Any receipt, see Any.

A "receipt" is a written admission of payment. It is a paper given by the creditor to the debtor. Chicago Art Co. v. Thacker, 63 S. E. 770, 777, 778, 65 W. Va. 143. See, also, State v. Scanlan, 94 N. W. 686, 89 Minn. 244.

The word "receipt," as in common use, means no more than a bare acknowledgment of having received something, and, in the absence of evidence to show the contents of a receipt given by a consignee to a railroad company, it was error to permit the jury to assume that the writing contained any special clause enlarging such acknowledgment. Erle R. Co. v. Wanaque Lumber Co., 69 Atl. 168, 75 N. J. Law, 878.

Acceptance distinguished

The term "acceptance" covers more than "receipt," and a receipt of goods without an acceptance is not sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds. Patterson & Holden v. Sargeant, Osgood & Roundy Co., 77 Atl. 338, 339, 83 Vt. 516, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1102.

Baggage check

A railroad baggage check is not a contract, but a "receipt," and is prima facie evidence of a delivery of baggage to the carrier. Park v. Southern Ry., 58 S. E. 931, 932, 78 S. C. 302.

Conclusiveness

A "receipt" has not the force of a written contract, and is open to explanation by parol evidence. Ramapo Foundry & Wheel Works v. Carey, 113 N. Y. Supp. 10, 11.

"Receipts," whether for money or for property, are informal, nondispositive writings, open to explanation, modification, or contradiction by parol evidence. They may be of twofold character. It may be not only an acknowledgment or admission of the receipt of money or property in payment or satisfaction of a debt, but it may contain a contract distinct and independent, or, as expressed by Mr. Greenleaf, "terms, conditions, and agreements or assignments." Willoughby v. Hannon, 47 South. 241, 156 Ala. 585 (adopting definition in Gravlee v. Lamkin, 24 South. 756, 120 Ala. 221).

A "receipt" is only an acknowledgment or admission by the party giving it that he has received the money or property therein named, and, like any other admission or recital, may be controverted or explained by extrinsic evidence. Jersey Island Dredging Co. v. Whitney, 86 Pac. 509, 510, 149 Cal. 269 (citing Greenl. Ev. § 305; 2 Pars. Cont. 555; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 20 Pac. 28, 78 Cal. 15).

A "receipt" is not intended to be an exclusive memorial, and for this reason the authorities all hold that the facts may be shown. A "receipt" is only a written admission of a transaction independently existing, and, like other admissions, it is not conclusive. It is evidence—and often very convincing evidence—against the party who gives it, but it is not conclusive. Being only evidence of a fact, it cannot be held to destroy any existing right, in no way connected with it. California Packers' Co. v. Merritt Fruit Co., 92 Pac. 509, 511, 6 Cal. App. 507.

In an action to recover a deposit, the exclusion of plaintiff's conversation with defendant's representative, when he signed a receipt taken by defendant to show payment, was reversible error, since a "receipt" is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, which may be explained by parol. Gutierrez v. Garcia, 138 N. Y. Supp. 1079.

"A 'receipt in full' given by a creditor to his debtor is prima facie what its language indicates, viz., a complete payment of all that is due the creditor; and, though it may be contradicted, it becomes, in the absence of evidence that full payment was not in fact made, conclusive and cannot be ignored." Wherley v. Rowe, 119 N. W. 222, 223, 106 Minn. 494 (citing Morris v. St. Paul & C. Ry. Co., 21 Minn. 91; Scandinavian Coal & Min. Co. v. Whitaker, 19 Pac. 330, 40 Kan. 123; Gleason v. Sawyer, 22 N. H. 85; New Jersey Flax Cotton Wool Co. v. Mills, 26 N. J. Law, 60; Riley v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 96 N. Y. 331; Cunningham v. Batchelder, 32 Me. 316).

"It is perfectly well settled law that 'receipts,' whether contained in deeds or elsewhere, are not conclusive of the payment of money, but only prima facie proof, and always open to explanation. Thus an acknowledgment of the purchase money in the body of a deed, and a receipt indorsed, are not conclusive evidence of such payment. A receipt for the purchase money indorsed on a deed is only prima facie evidence, and may be rebutted by evidence." In re McPherson's Estate, 61 Atl. 954, 955, 212 Pa. 425 (quoting with approval from Nichols v. Nichols, 19 Atl. 422, 423, 133 Pa. 438, 454).

See Contract.

See Personal Property.

Railroad's per diem sheet

"The term 'receipt' usually implies a formal paper signed by one party and delivered to another." "Receipt," within Code 1902, § 2176, making the initial carrier liable for loss of goods shipped over its own and connecting lines, unless it produces a "receipt" in writing, is not required to be in any particular form, and the railroad company's office record known as "per diem sheet," which accompanies all cars transferred from one railroad company to another and is signed by the agents for both receiving and delivering roads, and being an acknowledgment of a receipt of the car by the receiving company, is sufficient. Jonesville Mfg. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 58 S. E. 422, 423, 77 S. C. 480 (citing Miller v. Railway Co., 11 S. E. 1093, 33 S. C. 359, 366, 9 L. R. A. 833).

Release distinguished

"A 'receipt' is evidence that an obligation has been discharged, but a 'release' is itself a discharge of it." A release cannot be varied, as against one whose interests may be affected by it, by parol evidence that the parties did not intend it according to its legal effect. A release given for a valuable consideration for all causes of action, including trespasses, is a release of a cause of action for unlawful confinement of the person previously procured by the persons to whom the release is given jointly or severally. Where a release is given extinguishing a demand wholly unliquidated, whether the sum received for the release is large or small is immaterial. Allen v. Ruland, 65 Atl. 138, 140, 79 Conn. 405, 118 Am. St. Rep. 146, 8 Ann. Cas. 344.

RECEIPT OF PROCEEDS

The acceptance of an oral promise to deliver brick in consideration of the conveyance of land constituting a homestead is not a "receipt of the proceeds" of a sale thereof within Rev. St. 1898, § 1158, exempting the "proceeds" of a sale of a homestead for one year after the "receipt thereof," and the year of exemption does not run from that time, but from the time of delivery of the brick. Christensen v. Beebe, 91 Pac. 129-131, 32 Utah, 406.

RECEIPT OF WRIT

Under Comp. Laws 1909, c. 87, art. 32 (section 6226), providing that the defendant in a mandamus proceeding, immediately upon "receipt of the writ," or at some other specifled time, shall obey its mandate, and that he shall then "return the writ" with his certificate of having done as commanded, the original writ should be served and not a copy, since the defendant could not be in receipt of the writ until it was delivered to him, and could not return the writ unless he had previously received it, and not a mere copy thereof. Ellis v. Outler, 106 Pac. 957, 958, 25 Okl. 469.

RECEPTOR

In attachment a "receptor" is one to whom possession of the property is delivered as bailee for the sheriff until production is required by the court. McDonald v. Loewen, 130 S. W. 52, 55, 145 Mo. App. 49.

RECEIPTS

See Gross Receipts; Net Receipts.

Acts 30th Leg. (1st Ex. Sess.) c. 18, § 11 provides that wholesale dealers or distributors of intoxicating liquors, shall make a quarterly report to the Comptroller of Public Accounts, showing the "gross amount collected and uncollected from any and all sales made within this state * * * during the quarter next preceding," and "at the time of making said report shall pay * * * an occupation tax for the quarter beginning on said date, equal to one-half of one per cent. of said gross receipts from said sales as shown by said report." Held, that the tax was on the gross sales whether collected or uncollected during the preceding quarter; the word "receipts," when used in a commercial sense, meaning the receiving of obligations or promises to pay, whether written or verbal, as well as cash. Eppstein v. State, 143 S. W. 144, 146, 105 Tex. 35.

RECEIVABLE

See Bill Receivable.

RECEIVE

See Injury Received; Value Received.
Received in cash or otherwise, see Otherwise.

In a deed of marriage settlement conveying to a trustee all the estate, both real and personal, and all the choses in action, that the wife may be possessed of or entitled to receive, etc., "and all the estate, either real or personal, or choses in action, that the above-named C. [the wife] may hereafter receive or be entitled by right, devise, or bequest," the word "receive," in the clause quoted, refers only to the personal property, leaving the deed, so far as it relates to the future acquisition of real estate, as if it read, "and all the real estate that the above-named C. may hereafter be entitled to by right, devise, or bequest"; and hence land conveyed by deed to the wife during her coverture is not within the deed of settlement, and may be mortgaged by her without the trustee's consent. Dunlap v. Hill, 59 S. E. 112, 114, 145 N. C. 312.

As accept

The terms "accept" and "receive," within Kirby's Dig. § 1814, which makes it an offense to accept and receive deposits in an insolvent bank, are synonymous. Morris v. State, 145 S. W. 213, 214, 102 Ark. 513.

The ordinary and accepted meaning of "receive" is synonymous with that of "accept." Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. United States, 164 Fed. 376, 390, 90 C. C. A. 364.

As charged in settlement

Usurious interest, being charged in the settlement of a building and loan association with a borrowing member, is "received," within Code 1906, § 2678, authorizing recovery of interest paid, where usury is received. Mississippi Building & Loan Ass'n v. McElveen, 56 South. 187, 189, 100 Miss. 16.

As including assent

Act March 29, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 414, c. 189), penalizing every officer of any bank who "receives any deposits" knowing that the bank is insolvent, does not penalize the act of assent to the reception of a deposit, and, where a receiving teller of an insolvent incorporated bank received a deposit, the president, though knowing of the insolvency, cannot be punished on the theory that he assented to the reception of the deposit; the word "receives" involving an affirmative act, and does not include an assent to the reception involving only a mere passive acquiescence. Ex parte Rickey, 100 Pac. 134, 142, 31 Nev. 82, 135 Am. St. Rep. 651.

As received by executor or successor of trustee

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2730, 2802, 3320, prescribing the compensation of trustees, a trustee, succeeding a deceased trustee, is not entitled to commissions on the funds "received" from the representative of the deceased trustee. In re Ward's Estate, 112 N. Y. Supp. 763.

Moneys found among the effects of a deceased trustee are not "received" by his executor, as that term is used in section 2730 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to commissions of executors and administrators on moneys received by them. In re Ingraham, 112 N. Y. Supp. 763, 766, 60 Misc. Rep. 44.

As received by lessors

Where the lease to plaintiff recites that it is subject to a prior lease to other persons and provides that all rents "received on account of said lease" are to be credited as part payment under the terms of this lease (the lease to plaintiff), the word "received" means received by the lessors, and the language fairly implies that the rent to accrue under the prior lease is to remain payable to them notwithstanding the second lease.

Shea v. McCauliff, 72 N. E. 69, 70, 186 Mass. 569.

As receiving protection of trade union

The constitution of the Brotherhood of Painters, providing that the initiation fee paid by an applicant for membership must accompany the application and be returned in case the applicant is rejected, with a proviso that, if the fee is paid in installments while the applicant is "working at the trade and 'receiving the protection of the brotherhood,'" such payments shall be forfeited to the brotherhood if the applicant has made any false statements or is unable to qualify as a member, and there being evidence tending to show a custom of the brotherhood not to permit its members to work with men who were not members. Held, that evidence that an applicant, pending his application, worked at the trade together with members of the brotherhood, did not show that plaintiff was "receiving the protection of the brotherhood." Levin v. Cosgrove, 87 Atl. 1070, 1071, 75 N. J. Law, 344.

Indians receiving rations and annuities

An Indian woman of the half-blood was born on the Sioux reservation and exercised what she believed to be her right to go on the reservation because of her Indian Yankton Al blood, and she constantly associated and affiliated with the Sioux tribes. She married a white man; but according to the custom of the tribes of the Sioux Nation, she remained the head of the family, and the right to tribal property was determined by her nationality. Her children were born into such Indian tribes, and she and her descendants were actual residents on the reservation and associated and affiliated with the tribes of the Nation prior to Act March 2, 1889, c. 405, 25 Stat. 888, setting apart a permanent reservation for the Indians "receiving rations and annuities." Held, that she and her descendants were within the Treaty of April 29, 1868, 15 Stat. 635, setting apart land for Indians of the several tribes of the Sioux Nation and such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as from time to time they adopted with the consent of the United States, the words "receiving rations and annuities" in the act of 1889 not being intended to be interpreted in the light of future regulations requiring rolls to be made up and approved by an officer of the United States in the Indian Department, and she and her descendants were entitled to be considered Indians of the Rosebud reservation within Act March 3, 1889, c. 450, 30 Stat. 1362. Sully v. United States, 195 Fed. 113, 128, 129.

Receive message by telegraph as including telephone

There are authorities which hold that in the construction of statutes the word "telegraph" embraces "telephone," and that statutes concerning telegraph companies include telephone companies as well. But the Arkansas statute declaring that "telegraph" companies shall be liable for mental anguish or suffering on account of negligence "in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages" does not include "telephone" companies. A telephone company does not "receive," "transmit," and "deliver" a message in the ordinary acceptance of those words. It merely furnishes to the patron facilities for carrying on a conversation at long distance. Southern Telephone Co. v. King, 103 Ark. 160, 146 S. W. 489, 490, 491, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402 (citing Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 79 N. W. 315, 76 Minn. 334).

As transfer of possession

Where the buyer of goods canceled the order before shipment, and refused them on shipment, and notified the seller that the goods were in the freighthouse at his risk, and awaiting his order, there was no receipt of the property within section 7 of the statute of frauds (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 7469) invalidating contracts for the sale of goods for the price of $50 or more, unless the purchaser shall "receive" a part thereof. Porter v. Patterson, 85 N. E. 797, 799, 42 Ind. App. 404.

RECEIVING EVIDENCE

View

The jury in a criminal case, in viewing the place of the commission of the offense, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 1119, is receiving evidence, and accused is entitled to have the judge present. People v. White, 90 Pac. 471, 475, 5 Cal. App. 329.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS

See Fence (Receiving Stolen Goods).

See, also, Permanently Deprive the Owner.

To constitute the crime of "receiving stolen property," knowing the same to have been stolen, the act of receiving or concealing the same must be accompanied with a criminal intent of the accused to aid the thief or hope to obtain some gain or reward for restoring the stolen property to the owner, or in some way to derive a benefit or profit therefrom. Pickering v. United States, 101 Pac. 123, 124, 2 Okl. Cr. 197. See, also, People v. O'Reilly, 138 N. Y. Supp. 776, 783, 153 App. Div. 854.

One of the essential ingredients of the crime of "receiving" and aiding in the concealment of stolen goods knowing the same to have been stolen is knowledge on the part of the doer or receiver that the goods have been stolen, and this knowledge must exist at the time of the receipt or purchase of the goods. It need not be such direct knowledge as comes from witnessing a theft, but it is sufficient that circumstances were such accompanying the transaction as to make defendant believe the goods had been stolen. State v. Druxinman, 75 Pac. 814, 815, 34 Wash. 257.

"The same person cannot be both thief and the receiver in a criminal sense. In order to constitute the crime of 'receiving stolen goods,' knowing them to have been stolen, there must be a thief and a receiver. The statute never contemplated that the thief could be guilty of 'receiving stolen goods' from himself." Perry v. Martin, 62 Atl. 1001, 1002, 73 N. J. Law, 310.

Under Pen. Code, § 550, providing that "a person who buys or 'receives' any stolen property * * * knowing the same to have been stolen, * * * or who corruptly, for any money, property, reward, or promise or agreement for the same, conceals, withholds, or aids in concealing or withholding any property, knowing the same to have been stolen, * * * is guilty of criminally receiving such property," the property must have been stolen by some one and have been bought, received, or withheld by one who must have known it was stolen, to constitute a crime. People v. Walker, 91 N. E. 806, 807, 198 N. Y. 329.

To constitute the crime of "receiving stolen goods" under Cr. Code, § 239 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 38), prohibiting the receiving of stolen property with knowledge that it has been stolen, the property must be bought for the purchaser's own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing it, and the purchaser must have knowledge that the property was obtained by larceny. People v. Israel, 88 N. E. 802, 803, 240 Ill. 375.

To sustain the prosecution of a prisoner for receiving goods, knowing them to be stolen, it must be shown that the goods or other things were previously stolen by some other person; that the accused bought or received them from another person, or aided in the concealing of them; that, at the time he so bought or received them, or aided in concealing them, he knew they had been stolen; that he so bought or received them, or aided in concealing them, malo animo, or with a dishonest intent. Territory v. Graves (N. M.) 125 Pac. 604, 605.

The doctrine seems to be established that in those states in which, by statute or at common law, it is larceny to bring into the state goods stolen in another state or a foreign country, one who there "receives" goods with knowledge that they have been stolen in another state or country is liable to indictment for receiving the goods. This does not apply, however, in those states, in which it is held that bringing into the state goods stolen in another state or foreign country does not constitute larceny; for the goods must have been stolen in the jurisdiction in which it is sought to punish the receiving. It is not a crime for one to receive in Georgia goods stolen in a foreign jurisdiction. Golden v. State, 58 S. E. 557, 2 Ga. App. 440 (citing 12 Cyc. p. 210).

RECEIVER

See Auxiliary Receiver; Chancery Receiver; Equitable Receiver; Permanent Receiver; Special Receiver; Statutory Receiver; Temporary Receiver. Application for receiver, see Application. Discharge of receiver, see Discharge. Included in street railroad corporation, see Street Railroad Corporation. Removal, see Remove—Removal.

A "receiver" is but an officer of the court, whose tenure of office is indeterminate. National Exchange Bank v. Woodside, 80 S. W. 715, 716, 107 Mo. App. 47.

A "receiver" is "the officer of the court, appointed on behalf of all parties, to take the possession and hold [the property] for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled." Town of Vandalla v. St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co., 70 N. E. 662, 664, 209 Ill. 73 (citing Coates v. Cunningham, 80 Ill. 467).

A "receiver" is a ministerial officer of a court of chancery, appointed as an indifferent person between the parties to a suit, and he holds the property for the benefit of all the parties interested, and his title and possession is that of the court. State v. Norfolk & S. Ry. Co., 67 S. E. 42, 44, 152 N. C. 785, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, 21 Ann. Cas. 692.

"The conception of a receiver is some one to take manual possession, for the court, of property, to take it out from the possession of others, and hold it for the better security of those who may be ultimately entitled thereto." Harrigan v. Gilbert, 99 N. W. 909, 951, 121 Wis. 127.

A receiver is only an officer of the court. Where a receiver appointed by a state court was authorized to demand and receive any and all sums which may have been or might thereafter be collected or received on account of a certain police board tax for certain years, and thereafter the authority was enlarged so as to include all the assets, claims, and taxes owned and collected by and due to such board prior to 1879, such authority was not sufficient to give the receiver the right to sue to recover such assets or claims. Hubert v. City of New Orleans, 130 Fed. 21, 24, 64 C. C. A. 389 (quoting Screven v. Clark, 48 Ga. 41).

A receiver is the arm of the court, to hold possession of property and manage it for the benefit of the persons ultimately entitled to it, his possession being that of the court; and he is not the representative of the corporation whose property he holds. Sullivan Timber Co. v. Black, 48 South. 870, 876, 159 Ala. 570.

A receiver is an officer of the court, the representative of the court in administering trust estates. He acts by order of the court. His powers come from the court. He has no individual status. His duty is to bring all the property belonging to his trust into possession, familiarize himself with the details of the estate and its business, keep accurate accounts, and make detailed reports with his recommendations to the court, to the end that the estate may be closed by the court as soon as the best interests of its owners or creditors will justify. Decker Bros. v. Berners Bay Min. & Mill. Co., 2 Alaska, 504, 509.

Though the mandatory words of an order directing the delivery of possession of property to a person "as receiver" pending an action were addressed to another than the "receiver," they necessarily carried with them an authorization to the person designated as "receiver" to take possession as such, and the order is sufficient as an appointment, since a receiver is a person authorized to take possession of property in litigation for the purpose of preserving it for whichever of the litigants the court may finally determine is entitled thereto. Cook v. Terry, 127 Pac. 816, 817, 19 Cal. App. 765.

A receiver is but an arm of the court to take care of and administer the property, assets, and estate in suit, to do with it as the law may direct for the benefit of the parties concerned; and, while in theory he can do nothing without the court's order or sanction, he has, in matters of management and manner of disposition of the estate, a large discretion. Coy v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 198 Fed. 275, 280.

A receiver is an arm or officer of the court which appoints him, and whatever he does under order of the court regarding the property in his hands is the act of the court; nor is the possession altered by an order vacating the appointment of the receiver and substituting another person in that position. State ex rel. Sullivan v. Reynolds, 107 S. W. 487, 492, 209 Mo. 161, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963, 123 Am. St. Rep. 468, 14 Ann. Cas. 198.

A receiver is an officer of the court appointing him, and his power does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of that court, and will not be recognized by the courts of another state, except upon considerations of comity. Choctaw Coal & Mining Co. v. Williams-Echols Dry Goods Co., 87 S. W. 632, 75 Ark. 365, 5 Ann. Cas. 569. See, also, Malone v. Johnson, 101 S. W. 503, 505, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 604.

Receivers being officers of the court are not agents of the party for whom they are appointed receivers, in the sense that they have authority to bind such party by any act or omission on their part. Stannard v. Robert H. Reid & Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 521, 527, 118 App. Div. 304.

The "receiver" being an arm of the court, his authority for taking over the properties of concerns involved, for administering their business affairs, and for issuing receiver's certificates, with a view for obtaining funds for discharging liabilities incident to the receivership, is but another expression for the authority of court, without whose orders and directions the receiver is powerless to do anything. International Trust Co. v. Decker Bros., 152 Fed. 78, 82, 81 C. C. A. 302, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152.

A "receiver" considered as an arm of the court usually termed an "equitable receiver" is a mere custodian without title and without power saving that conferred upon him by the order appointing him, and under Corporation Act (P. L. 1896, p. 277) is a statutory "receiver." He is the legislative agency to be named by the court to have such powers as the Legislature has vested in him, and is a separate entity. Cogan v. Conover Mfg. Co., 60 Atl. 408, 415, 69 N. J. Eq. 358.

A "receiver" is a person appointed by a court to take into his custody, control, and management the property or funds of another pending judicial action concerning them. John C. Orr Co. v. Cushman, 104 N. Y. Supp. 510, 511, 54 Misc. Rep. 121 (quoting Stand. Dict. vol. 2, p. 1489).

The main purpose of a "receiver" is to preserve the property or thing in controversy pending litigation concerning it, and hence the principal ground for a receiver's appointment is danger of loss of or injury to the property or thing in controversy before the court can make a disposition thereof by final decree on the merits. Hastings v. Tousey, 106 N. Y. Supp. 639, 640, 121 App. Div. 815.

A "receiver" is an officer of the court from which he receives his appointment. He is sometimes described as an impartial and indifferent person between the parties to a cause, appointed by the court to receive and preserve the property or funds in litigation pendente lite, when it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should hold it. He is in no sense an agent or representative of any party to the action. He exercises his function in the interests of no individual interested in the litigation, but for the common benefit of all concerned. He is frequently spoken of as the "hand of the court," and has been called the "executive hand of the court" (citing High. Rec. § 2; Beach, Rec. § 2). Hence the compensation of a receiver and the party or parties to be charged with the payment of the same are matters to be determined by the court from which the receiver derives his appointment. Hall v. Stulb, 55 S. E. 172, 126 Ga. 521.

A "receiver" is "the mere right arm of the court appointing him, to obey its orders in matters of administration within its jurisdiction, and as such is entirely subject to its control. He executes bond for the faithful performance of his duties, to account alone to the court appointing him; and the funds coming to his hands as such receiver are in custodia legis, held by him for distribution and application by the court whose commission he holds." A receiver in chancery of an insolvent corporation appointed by the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of Iowa has no legal status to maintain a suit in a jurisdiction foreign to that appointing him, though leave to institute the suit has been granted by the court appointing him. Fowler v. Osgood, 141 Fed. 20, 21, 72 C. C. A. 270, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824.

"A 'receiver' by his appointment does not become a litigant in the action, nor does he represent one more than the other of any of the parties to the controversy. He, when appointed, takes possession of the property as the right arm of the court for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled to it." Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co., 97 N. W. 613, 617, 68 Neb. 222, 63 L. R. A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 4 Ann. Cas. 59.

In general, a "receiver" by virtue of his appointment is clothed with only such rights of action as may have been maintained by the persons over whose estate he has been appointed and to whose rights, for purposes of litigation, he has succeeded. The "receiver" is the officer, the agent, and hand of the court, and therefore his powers are limited, and are derived from the order of appointment, if a common-law receiver, and from statute, if a statutory receiver. In re National Mercantile Agency, 128 Fed. 639, 640 (quoting and adopting High, Rec. [3d Ed. 1894] § 201; Beach, Rec. [Alderson's Ed. 1897] § 650).

"The 'receiver' is the representative of the court and of all the parties in interest, and can neither surrender to others nor divide with them the management of the prosecution or defense of such suits or the responsibility therefor." A receiver is appointed upon a principle of justice for the benefit of all concerned. He is virtually a representative of the court, and of all the parties in interest in the litigation wherein he is appointed. Atlantic Trust Co. v. Dana, 128 Fed. 209, 223, 62 C. C. A. 657 (quoting and adopting Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. [83 U. S.] 203, 217, 21 L. Ed. 447; citing and adopting Doggett v. Florida R. Co., 99 U. S. 72, 78, 25 L. Ed. 301; Southern Exp. Co. v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 99 U. S. 191, 199, 25 L. Ed. 319; Porter v. Sabin, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 149 U. S. 473, 37 L. Ed. 815; Gray v. Davis, 10 Fed. Cas. 1006, 1009; Ames v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 906; High, Rec. [3d Ed.] §§ 134, 135, 650; Jones, Railroad Securities, § 495).

A "receiver" is an officer of the court and not in any sense an agent or representative of either party; he is not such a general agent as to have any implied power, and he cannot make effectual contracts which are not authorized or ratified by the court. Lazear v. Ohio Valley Steel Foundry Co., 63 S. E. 772, 773, 777, 778, 65 W. Va. 105.

A "receiver" is but an officer of the court by whom he is appointed—as it is sometimes said, the right hand of the court. His custody is that of the court, and he cannot act, save as he may be specially authorized. He may not enter into litigation respecting property in his possession, save by consent of the court. And the law of comity among courts, whether of the same or a different state or jurisdiction, requires that leave should be asked and granted before suit against a receiver. Manker v. Phoenix Loan Ass'n of St. Joseph (Iowa) 96 N. W. 982, 983 (citing Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 52 S. W. 378, 151 Mo. 402, 48 L. R. A. 368; Keen v. Breckenridge, 96 Ind. 69; Central Trust Co. v. Railway, 59 Fed. 523; Haag v. Ward, 89 Mo. App. 186).

A "receiver" is an officer of the court appointing him. He is its immediate representative in the custody and administration of the property of which it has taken possession, and a suit against him without permission of the court, unless authorized by statute, is an unwarranted interference with the court's possession; but, where the receiver has contested a suit on the merits; the record of the judgment against him need not affirmatively show that permission was obtained to sue, in order that the judgment may be given effect in other suits in other courts. Ridge v. Manker, 132 Fed. 599, 601, 67 C. C. A. 596.

A "receiver" is a mere officer of the court whose first duty is to obey the orders of the court. He has no discretion, speaking generally, as to the application of funds which are in his hands by virtue of the receivership, and he holds them strictly subject to the order of the court, to be disposed of as the court may direct. Being a mere agent of the court, he has no authority to appeal from orders made by it in the pending proceeding, except as it may authorize him so to do, and with the further exception that he has the right to appeal in all matters relating to his official conduct or his accounts and credits, or from judgments rendered against him in other proceedings. Polk v. Johnson (Ind.) 76 N. E. 634, 635 (citing Herrick v. Miller, 24 N. E. 111, 123 Ind. 304; Smith v. Harris, 35 N. E. 984, 135 Ind. 621, 629; How v. Jones, 14 N. W. 193, 60 Iowa, 70; Dorsey v. Sibert, 9 South. 288, 93 Ala. 312; People v. Troy Steel & Iron Co., 31 N. Y. Supp. 337, 82 Hun. 303; Smith on Receiverships, § 417).

A "receiver" is a person appointed by a court or judicial officer to take charge of property during the pendency of a civil action, suit, or proceeding, or upon a judgment, decree, or order therein, and to manage and dispose of it as the court or officer may direct. B. & C. Comp. § 1080. Egan v. North American Loan Co., 76 Pac. 774, 775, 45 Or. 131.

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5455, defining a "receiver" as a person appointed by a court to take charge of property pending a civil action or proceeding, and to manage and dispose of it as the court may direct, a person appointed by the court to take charge of mortgaged chattels and retain the same pending foreclosure proceedings is a "receiver," whether appointed under section 5486, providing generally when receivers may be appointed, or under sections 5877, 5878, relating to the case of a chattel mortgagee having reasonable cause to believe the debt is insecure. Libert v. Unfried, 91 Pac. 774, 775, 47 Wash. 182.

A "receiver" is an indifferent person between parties, appointed by the court to receive the rents, issues, or profits of land, or other thing in question, pending the suit, where it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should do it. He is an officer of the court; his appointment is provisional. He is appointed in behalf of all parties, and not of the complainant, or of the defendant only. He is appointed for the benefit of all parties who may establish rights in the cause. The money in his hands is in custodia legis for whoever can make out a title to it. It is the court itself which has the care of the property in dispute. The receiver is but the creature of the court. He has no powers except such as are conferred upon him by the order of his appointment and the course and practice of the court. When a court exercising jurisdiction in equity appoints a receiver of all the property of a corporation, the court assumes the administration of the estate; the possession of the receiver is but the possession of the court; and the court itself holds and administers the estate, through the receiver as its officer, for the benefit of those whom the court shall ultimately adjudge to be entitled to it. The trustee in a mortgage of the property of a canal and irrigation company, who brings a suit for foreclosure and sale, and obtains the appointment of a receiver to take charge of and manage the property pendente lite, does not, by reason of such action, become personally liable for money borrowed, expenses incurred, and certificates issued by the receiver under orders of the court, in keeping the corporation on its feet as a going concern, which the proceeds of the sale proved insufficient to pay. Atlantic Trust Co. v. Chapman, 28 Sup. Ct. 406, 409, 208 U. S. 360, 52 L. Ed. 528, 13 Ann. Cas. 1155 (citing Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. [17 How.] 322, 331, 15 L. Ed. 164, 167; Porter v. Sabin, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 1010, 149 U. S. 473, 479, 37 L. Ed. 815, 818).

A receiver appointed in an action to foreclose, on allegation that the property is insufficient to satisfy the debt, as expressly authorized by Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1236, subd. 4, is neither an "assignee" nor "receiver," within section 7051, providing that where a property owner's business shall be put into the hands of any assignee, receiver, or trustee, the debts owing to laborers or employes by the property owner shall be treated as preferred debts; nor is such receiver an "assignee" or "receiver" within section 7058, providing that all debts due any person for manual or mechanical labor shall be preferred claims in all cases where property shall pass into the hands of an "assignee" or "receiver," and shall be first paid in full. McDaniel v. Osborn (Ind.) 72 N. E. 601, 603.

The bill having been framed against the defendant as "receiver," the suit cannot be turned into a personal action against him, on the theory that the word "receiver" is only descriptio personæ and may be disregarded. Thompson v. Evans, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 61, 70.

Receiver in bankruptcy

A bankrupt's receiver is not invested with title, but is a mere custodian without discretion, and until a trustee is appointed there is no legal representative of the estate clothed with title or authority regarding the same. In re Rubel, 166 Fed. 131, 133.

Receiver of railroad

A receiver of a railroad is not the agent of the company, nor its representative, nor in any sense under its control. He is a person who comes into possession of the equipment and business in invitum, placed there by the court which virtually sequesters the property for the time being to preserve it from ruin for the benefit of creditors primarily and other parties interested secondarily. Eckels v. Farley, 131 Ill. App. 557, 559.

RECEIVERSHIP

See Dry Receivership.

As suit, see Suit.

RECEIVER'S RECEIPT

A final receiver's "receipt" is an acknowledgment by the government that it has received full pay for the land; that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman and will in due course issue to him a patent. The entryman is the equitable owner of the land, and it becomes subject to state taxation and under the control of the state laws in respect to conveyances, inheritances, etc. A bona hide purchaser of standing timber from the holders of receivers' final receipts for the purchase price of lands entered under the timber act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. 89, c. 151), cannot, upon avoidance for the fraud of the entryman of the patents afterwards issued, be required to account to the federal government for the timber which it has paid for and cut and removed in reliance upon its purchase. United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 282, 287, 200 U. S. 321, 50 L. Ed. 499 (citing Carroll v. Safford, 44 U. S. [3 How.] 441, 11 L. Ed. 671; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 71 U. S. #### RECEIVER'S SALE

As judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

RECENT

"Recent," within the rule as to inference of guilt from recent possession of stolen property, is a relative term, depending on the surrounding circumstances, including the character of the property (citing Words and Phrases, "Recent"). People v. Friedman, 134 N. Y. Supp. 153, 156, 149 App. Div. 873.

The term "recent possession," as used in an instruction in a prosecution for larceny, as to the "recent possession" of stolen property, is merely relative and depends on all the circumstances of the case, and whether it is sufficiently recent to justify drawing an inference is usually a question of fact for the jury. State v. Minnick, 102 Pac. 605, 607, 54 Or. 86.

The term "recent," in the rule that the recent possession of a stolen article imposes on the possessor the burden of explaining his possession, and that his failing to make a reasonable explanation raises an evidential presumption of guilt, which will support a conviction, has reference to the time of the larceny; so that the evidence being that the article was stolen in November of a certain year, and he testifying that he received it some time before Christmas of that year, there is evidence of such possession. Jackson v. State, 52 South. 730, 731, 167 Ala. 77.

The bill to remove cloud from title, complainants claiming under their ancestor, who died 55 years before, and through an execution sale made to him 9 years before that, alleging that "after" such sale persons set about to cheat and defraud them of the lands, get possession and dispose thereof, and concealed as far as possible all the facts from complainants, who have just of "recent years" learned the facts, does not show that complainants have not had knowledge of the facts for 10 years, or have used diligence to discover them, so as to bring them within the exception to Code 1892, § 2731, providing a limitation of 10 years from the accrual of the right to recover for suits in equity to recover land. Jones v. Rogers, 38 South. 742, 748, 85 Miss. 802.

RECENTLY

In order that threats should be part of the res gestæ, something more must be shown than that they were made "recently," as this may mean hours, days or, for the matter of that, months before the fatal occurrence. State v. Thomas, 35 South. 914, 111 La. 804.

RECESS

Where the record of the board of supervisors showed that the board adjourned to a specified time, an amendment of the record showing that it took a recess until that time was unimportant; the words "recess" and "adjourn" both meaning that the meeting was postponed until the time specified. Beattie v. Roberts (Iowa) 137 N. W. 1006, 1008.

RECIPROCAL

See Mutual and Reciprocal.

RECIPROCAL WILL

A joint will is a single instrument containing the wills of two or more persons. A mutual will, or more strictly speaking a "reciprocal will," is one by which each testator makes testamentary disposition in favor of the other. Bower v. Daniel, 95 S. W. 347, 357, 198 Mo. 289 (citing Schumaker v. Schmidt, 44 Ala. 454, 4 Am. Rep. 135; Dias v. Livera, 5 App. Cas. 123; In re Diez, 50 N. Y. 88; Cawley's Estate, 20 Atl. 567, 136 Pa. 628, 10 L. R. A. 93).

Wills by two parties each in favor of the other are sometimes called "counter" or "reciprocal" wills. Deseuneur v. Rondel, 74 Atl. 703, 705, 76 N. J. Eq. 394 (citing Duvale v. Duvale, 35 Atl. 750, 54 N. J. Eq. 581, 588; Id., 39 Atl. 687, 40 Atl. 440, 56 N. J. Eq. 375).

RECITE

RECITAL

In deed

"A 'recital in a deed' is defined to be in setting down or report of something done before, or more specifically the narrative of the previous agreements or matters of fact on which the transaction is founded." The residence of the purchaser who is named in a tax deed and who is not fictitious is not, in a legal sense, a recital therein, and the omission thereof will not render the deed void upon its face. Havel v. Decatur County Abstract Co., 91 Pac. 790, 792, 76 Kan. 336.

The limits of a grant must be sought for in the deed of the premises, and the description there is not technically a "recital"; for, instead of being either a narrative of the facts on which the instrument is based, or an explanation of the motive for the operative part thereof, it is the very thing, which, by setting a limit to the grant, creates the boundary, and to this extent a deed is effective against privies and strangers alike. Bristol Mfg. Co. v. Palmer, 74 Atl. 76, 77, 82 Vt. 438.

RECKLESS — RECKLESSLY—RECKLESSNESS

See Rashly, Recklessly, or Wantonly.

In order to constitute willfulness or wantonness or reckless indifference to probable consequences, the act done or omitted must be done or omitted with a knowledge or a present consciousness that injury will probably result; and this consciousness is not to be implied from mere knowledge of the elements of the dangerous situation a person may be in and negligent and inadvertent acts in respect of the peril. Duncan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 44 South. 418, 420, 423, 152 Ala. 118.

Where an engine, running at an unusually high speed in a railroad yard, struck coaches on a side track, injuring a car cleaner therein, and the engine came so fast that it knocked the coaches from a stationary position a car and a half in length, and damaged the engine and the coaches, punitive damages were authorized, within the rule permitting punitive damages where the wrongdoer acts in a "reckless disregard" of another's rights. Bennett v. Charleston Union Station Co., 73 S. E. 340, 341, 90 S. C. 308.

The Rhode Island statute provides that no person shall operate a motor vehicle on the highways "recklessly," or so as to endanger the life or limb of any person and prescribes precautions to be taken by operators using the highways. A criminal complaint charged that defendant did "unlawfully" operate a certain motor vehicle on a certain highway "recklessly," and in operating it "recklessly" ran and drove into a team driven by complainant, so as to endanger his life and limb, etc. Held, that disregard of or inattention to the duty prescribed by the law constituted unlawfulness and recklessness; that the words "unlawfully" and "recklessly" in the complaint described the manner in which defendant drove, so as to negative an inference that the collision was an innocent accident; and that the facts stated constituted an offense. State v. Welford, 72 Atl. 396, 397, 29 R. I. 450.

As intentional

A count is demurrable which in its charging part alleges that the act was recklessly "and" wantonly done while the specification shows that it was recklessly "or" wantonly done; "reckless" not being equivalent to "wanton" or "intentional." Merrill v. Sheffield Co., 53 South. 219, 222, 169 Ala. 242.

Negligence distinguished

The word "recklessly," when used conjunctively with "wantonly," means more than "negligently," and the conjoined words never import less than such conscious disregard or an indifference to the probable consequences of the act to which they refer as is the legal equivalent of willful misconduct and intentional wrong. Bailey v. North Carolina R. Co., 62 S. E. 912, 914, 149 N. C. 169.

As negligence

The word "reckless," as used in a complaint for negligence, does not impute willfulness or intention; it means nothing more than simple negligence. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker (Ind. T.) 104 S. W. 1182, 1192 (quoting and adopting definition in Great-house v. Croan, 76 S. W. 273, 4 Ind. T. 668).

A complaint for injuries caused by the explosion of a powder magazine, which alleges that the explosion was the result of the reckless and heedless act of defendant's servant in igniting the powder, alleges negligence; the words "reckless" and "heedless" implying negligence. Fisher v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 108 Pac. 659, 661, 12 Cal. App. 739.

Where a complaint charged that an engineer wantonly, willfully, or recklessly caused or permitted steam to escape, thus causing the plaintiff to fall, and there was no allegation showing that this act was done while plaintiff was in obvious and imminent peril, the term "recklessly" cannot be understood as wantonly, and means no more than negligently, and charges but simple negligence, and thus the count merely charges willful, wanton, or simple negligence in the alternative. Southern R. Co. v. Goins, 56 So. 253, 254, 1 Ala. App. 370.

As wantonness

In an action for death, an instruction directing a verdict for defendant, unless the jury found that the motorman in charge of the defendant's car, after perceiving the dangerous situation then and there existing, did "recklessly and wantonly" send his car forward, the terms "recklessly" and "wantonly" are synonymous. Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 74 Pac. 15, 20, 140 Cal. 514, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85.

The term "recklessly," in an allegation that a certain thing was done "carelessly, negligently, and recklessly," is tantamount to the allegation that it was a wanton disregard of all consequences. Gustafson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 128 Fed. 85, 96.

"Recklessness" is the equivalent of "wantonness" or intentional wrong. Bussey v. Charleston & W. C. Ry., 55 S. E. 163, 167, 75 S. C. 116.

As willfulness

A "reckless act" is always regarded as the equivalent of a willful one. Walsh v. United States, 174 Fed. 615, 618, 98 C. C. A. 461 (quoting Lear v. United States, 147 Fed. 359, 77 C. C. A. 537).

The term "reckless" does not imply willfulness, but means rather "heedless, careless, rash, indifference to consequences." Robinson v. Helena Light & Ry. Co., 99 Pac. 837, 843, 38 Mont. 222.

The Oklahoma statute declares that every person who "willfully" discharges a firearm in a public place, etc., is guilty of a misdemeanor. A complaint charged defendants with violating the statute by shooting "recklessly" and in a manner liable to injure some one. Held, that the words "recklessly" and "willfully" were not synonymous; the word "willfully" being employed in penal statutes as synonymous with intentionally, designedly, or without lawful excuse, while the word "recklessly" is used to mean heedlessly, carelessly, or indifferent to consequences, without contemplating or intending such consequences, there being in general a wide difference between "intentional" acts and those resulting as the consequence of recklessness or carelessness. Thurman v. State, 104 Pac. 67, 68, 2 Okl. Cr. 718.

An allegation in the complaint in an action against a railroad company characterizing the act by which plaintiff was injured as "reckless" is equivalent to characterizing it as "willful," so as to justify punitive damages; the word "reckless" being defined as rashly negligent, utterly careless or heedless. Pickett v. Southern R. Co., Carolina Division, 48 S. E. 466, 469, 69 S. C. 445 (citing Webster's International Dict.); Cole v. Blue Ridge Ry., 55 S. E. 126, 127, 75 S. C. 156.

The word "reckless" is defined to be "desperately heedless" (Cent. Dict.). To be reckless of consequences. It is more than carelessness. It implies willfulness. Pegram v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 51 S. E. 975, 976, 139 N. C. 303, 4 Ann. Cas. 214.

Each of the words "wantonness," "willfulness," and "recklessness," embodies the element of malice, either express or implied, and are in law substantially the equivalent of each other, in so far as they give rise to an action based upon punitive damages. Hull v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 57 S. E. 28, 76 S. C. 278 (citing Pickett v. Southern R. Co., Carolina Division, 48 S. E. 466, 69 S. C. 445).

A complaint, in an action for injuries to a passenger while alighting from a train, which alleges that plaintiff, urged by the "willful," "unlawful," and "reckless" injunctions of the conductor, and in obedience to his directions, proceeded to alight from the train while in motion, and in so doing was injured, does not charge negligence, but charges willfulness; the word "unlawful" assigning no specific legal character to the acts alleged, and the word "reckless" being equivalent to "willful." Crosby v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 61 S. E. 1064, 1067, 81 S. C. 24.

"Recklessness" and "wantonness" are stronger terms than mere or ordinary negligence, and mean a disregard of security equivalent to bad faith and a willful or malicious disposition to injure. To constitute wantonness, there must be a design, purpose, or intent to do wrong, or cause the injury, though recklessness amounting to an utter disregard of consequences will supply the place of a specific intent. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lacy, 97 Pac. 1025, 1027, 78 Kan. 622.

RECKLESS STATEMENT

In Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337, Lord Herschell thus explained what is meant by a "statement made recklessly or without care": "To make a statement careless whether it be true or false and therefore without any real belief its truth appears to me to be an essentially different thing from making through want of care a false statement which is nevertheless honestly believed to be true." Donnelly v. Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Co., 61 Atl. 301, 306, 102 Md. 1.

RECLAMATION

Drainage of land distinguished, see Drainage of Land.

The word "reclamation" in Pol. Code, § 3481, providing that owners desiring to have their lands set off from a reclamation district must show to the board of supervisors that the land sought to be excluded is capable of an independent reclamation, means practical protection from probable dangers, and does not mean absolute protection from all dangers, and where a district may properly be classed, under the evidence, as one in which the land has been reclaimed, owners are not entitled to relief under the statute. Inglis v. Snider, 127 Pac. 60, 62, 163 Cal. 747.

"The term 'drainage of land' has practically the same application as 'reclamation'; the one is the means employed, the other the result." Laguna Drainage Dist. v. Charles Martin Co., 77 Pac. 933, 935, 144 Cal. 209.

RECLAMATION ACT

As revenue law, see Revenue Law.

RECLAMATION DISTRICT

As corporation, see Corporation.

As municipal corporation, see Municipal Corporation.

As public corporation, see Public Corporation.

While "reclamation districts" are sometimes called "quasi corporations," it would perhaps be more accurate to say that they are not corporations at all, but are so classed because of the many presumptions and rules which apply to corporations and have been made applicable to them. They are public agencies which would cease to exist when the policy of the state has changed, so that they are no longer required or when there is no further function for them to perform. Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, 105 Pac. 277, 280, 11 Cal. App. 399 (citing People ex rel. Van Loben Sels v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 148 Pac. 1016, 117 Cal. 121).

RECOGNITION

See General Recognition.

RECOGNIZANCE

See Moneys Recovered on a Recognizance.

See, also, Statutory Undertaking.

A "recognizance" is an obligation of record entered into before a court or other duly authorized officer, conditioned to do some act required by law, which is therein specified. Calhoun v. Gray, 131 S. W. 478, 481, 150 Mo. App. 591. A "recognizance" is where the prisoner and his recognizers appear before the court or justice and acknowledge themselves to be indebted to the state in a certain sum, on a certain condition, which is entered on the record and thereby becomes a part of it. While the writing may not be in the form of a recognizance, yet, under our statute, it cannot be quashed for informality, if it possess the essentials of a recognizance. "It differs from a bail bond merely in the nature of the obligation created, the former being an acknowledgment of record of an existing debt, while the latter, which is attested by the signature and seal of the obligor, creates a new obligation." State v. Dorr, 53 S. E. 120, 122, 59 W. Va. 188, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 402, 115 Am. St. Rep. 915.

A "recognizance" is an obligation of record in the case, and the cognizers thereby voluntarily submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court as parties with respect to proceedings for estreat. State v. Johnson, 57 S. E. 846, 847, 77 S. C. 252.

A "recognizance" is part of the record in which it is taken. It is an obligation of record and thus imports verity. Tully v. Lewitz, 98 N. Y. Supp. 829, 833, 50 Misc. Rep. 350.

In order to create a valid "recognizance," it is essential that the defendant and his sureties in some manner should acknowledge the obligation in the presence of the court, but this may be done orally as well as in writing, so that a written instrument reciting that the principal and surety appeared personally before the police justice and acknowledged themselves severally indebted to the state in the sum of $200, to be void if the principal personally appeared to answer the offense of selling liquor to minors, duly signed, witnessed, and filed, was a proper "recognizance." Thomsen v. State, 118 N. W. 330, 331, 82 Neb. 634.

When it is said by the court, in State v. Mills, 19 N. C. 552, that a "recognizance is in the nature of a conditional judgment, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or to such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate the forfeiture," it was not intended that a denial of the truth of the record could be thus set up by way of plea or answer to a scire facias. The entry of the forfeiture of a recognizance in a criminal case cannot be contradicted by an answer or a plea to a scire facias issued to enforce the forfeiture. State v. Morgan, 48 S. E. 604, 606, 136 N. C. 593.

RECOMMENCE

The "renewal" of a conspiracy means to begin it again; to "recommence" it; to repeat it. Each renewal is a new offense; a repetition, it is true, of a former one, but still an offense for which an indictment would lie. Commonwealth v. Bartilson, 85 Pa. 482, 487.

RECOMMEND

Const. art. 10, § 2, provides that all other officers whose "election or appointment" is not provided for by the Constitution shall be elected or appointed as the Legislature directs. Election Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 17) § 190, creates a board of elections in every first class city of four persons. Section 191 requires such commissioners of elections to be appointed by the mayor and any vacancy to be filled by him. Section 193 provides that the mayor of New York City shall appoint four persons as commissioners, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party. Section 194 provides that the chairmen of the county committees within New York and Kings counties of each of the two political parties polling the highest and next highest number of votes shall file with the mayor of New York City a certificate in the form stated, each of which four certificates shall certify the name of a qualified voter who is recommended as a proper person to be appointed for election commissioner, and the certificate certifies that the person named is a proper person to be appointed commissioner, and that the signer does "hereby recommend" his appointment. Section 195 provides that, in case of a vacancy, the chairman of the party committee shall file with the mayor a certificate certifying and "recommending" the name of a person for commissioner. Const. art. 2, § 6, provides that all laws creating boards charged with registering voters or distributing ballots shall secure equal representation of the two political parties holding the highest number of votes, and such boards shall be appointed as the Legislature may direct. Held, that section 194 did not require the mayor of New York City to appoint one as commissioner of elections who was recommended by the chairman of a county committee of Kings county; the mayor not being limited to persons so certified in making appointments. In re Kane, 129 N. Y. Supp. 280, 285, 144 App. Div. 196.

In will

The words "desire," "request," "recommend," "hope," "not doubting" used by testator in a will to express his desire that the executor will conduct a fund in a specified manner, testator having power to command, will not be construed as precatory only, but as commands clothed in the language of civility, and to impose on the executor an enforceable duty, sufficient to create a trust. Trustees of Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist., 75 Atl. 100, 101, 75 N. H. 408, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

RECOMMENDATION

Reference synonymous, see Reference.

RECONCILE

The words "reconciliation and amity," in a will whereby testator made a devise to certain persons in case "reconciliation and amity" should take place between them and testator's brothers and sisters, import a mental state rather than an active condition of association, which mental state is hard to establish except by declarations of the parties in interest. Alexander v. Page (Ky.) 101 S. W. 346, 347.

RECONDITIONED

Cotton in a bale is "reconditioned" by loosening the ties, removing the packing, and pulling or picking the damaged part of the cotton from the outside of the bale. Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones Cotton Co., 52 South. 899, 900, 167 Ala. 575.

RECONSTRUCT—RECONSTRUCTION

The word "reconstructed," in Act March 11, 1903 (Sess. Laws 1903, p. 244, c. 29, art. 2), providing that bridges may be constructed, repaired, or "reconstructed" across any stream in the territory, as provided in the act, is used in its ordinary acceptance, and means to rebuild; to construct again. Mc-Millan v. Board of Com'rs of Payne County, 79 Pac. 898, 900, 14 Okl. 659.

The word "reconstructing" in Rev. St. 1909, § 9411, authorizing the repairing of streets or reconstructing the same by the proper officer or committee on improvements, is used in its restricted sense, and is somewhat synonymous with the word "repairing," and is not used in its comprehensive sense as meaning to rebuild or construct again. Noel v. Town of Lees Summit, 148 S. W. 194, 196, 166 Mo. App. 114.

Where, under a single ordinance, a new pavement is to be laid, and the old curbing and guttering must be reset and replaced in part, the curbing and guttering are "reconstruction work," though the contractor is required to utilize serviceable old curb and gutter stones, and not "repair work," within Rev. St. 1899, § 5681 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2892], providing that the cost of repair of curbing or guttering shall, when not done by the owner liable therefor in the first instance, be paid out of the general revenue of the city, and the cost of the curbing and guttering was properly included in special tax bills. Rackliffe v. Duncan, 108 S. W. 1110, 1112, 130 Mo. App. 695.

Where a portion of an old turnpike road, by the extension of the limits of a city, was included within, and became a public way of, the city, and, as such, had a few repairs made on it, the regrading and paving of the road was an "original construction" of the street, within St. 1894, § 2833, making lot owners liable for the costs of the "original construction," and the city liable for costs of "reconstruction," of streets. McHenry v. Selvage, 35 S. W. 645, 99 Ky. 232.

Repair distinguished

Repair as including, see Repair—Repairs.

"Construct" means to build; "reconstruct" means to rebuild, to build over again; and a street is not reconstructed by being resurfaced either in whole or in part." "Webster defines 'repair' as to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, as to repair a house, a wall, or a ship. He defines 'reconstruction' as to construct again, to rebuild." Where, after a street which had been paved with asphalt at the expense of abutting owners had fallen into disrepair, the city passed an ordinance directing that it be reconstructed with asphalt pavement in accordance with the ordinance, in so far as it related to resurfacing streets with asphalt paving, so that the entire improvement consisted merely of relaying a new three-inch asphalt surface on the original macadam base, without disturbing the same, the work did not constitute a "reconstruction" of the street, but was a mere "repair" thereof, for which the city was solely responsible. City of Covington v. Bullock, 103 S. W. 276, 277, 126 Ky. 236 (quoting and adopting the definition in Levi v. Coyne, 57 S. W. 790, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 493).

A contract called for the paving of a street to be constructed with a stone curbing, with a foundation of broken stone and sand, and a six-inch concrete superstructure thereon, with a surface layer of two inches of asphaltum, to be kept in "repair" by the contractor for seven years. After its completion and use it soon became perforated with holes, which the contractor undertook to repair by patchwork. The condition of the asphalt surface continued, however, to grow worse, greatly interfering with the use of the street. Experts reported that it was in the interests of economy and business judgment to relay the entire surface asphaltum coating. Held, that as applied to the whole pavement as a unit this resurfacing was of the nature of repair work. Plaintiff's contention was that the work was "reconstruction" and not "repair." The court says that it may be conceded that there are some varying shades of difference in the general term "repair," but there is none more apt and comprehensible than the accepted dictionary definition: "To restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction." "Reconstruction" is "to construct again, to rebuild, to remodel, to form again or renew." It would therefore follow that to constitute a work of reconstruction of the pavement would involve the rebuilding of the whole unit, including the concrete foundation as well as the asphalt surface, to say nothing of the curbing. "Repair is 'restoration to a sound, good, or complete state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction.' Reconstruction is 'the act of constructing again.' Reproduction is 'repetition,' or 'the act of reproducing.' These definitions are instructive in bringing home to the mind that repair carries with it the idea of restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction, and that reconstruction or reproduction carries with it the idea of complete construction or production over again." American Bonding Co. v. City of Ottumwa, 137 Fed. 572, 579, 70 C. C. A. 270 (citing Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, 112 Fed. 146-150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 163, 55 L. R. A. 692).

Buffalo City Charter, § 288 (Laws 1891, p. 200, c. 105, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 661, c. 228, § 8), requires the owner or occupant of premises to lay and relay sidewalks whenever ordered, and to keep the sidewalk in good repair. It also requires the public works commissioner to notify the owner or occupant of any premises in front of which any such work, except the removal of stone and ice, and the repair of sidewalks, shall be required to be done, and, if the same is not done by the owner or occupant within 10 days, it shall be done by the city and the expense assessed against the property. There was a plank sidewalk five feet wide in front of plaintiff's premises, which plaintiff was directed to repair, and, after he had failed to do so, the commissioner caused the entire walk to be removed, and constructed a new concrete walk 17½ feet wide. Held, that the construction of such new walk was not a "repair," but was a "reconstruction," which the commissioner had no authority to make except pursuant to a resolution of the city council after notice to the property owner and an opportunity to be heard. Konowalski v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 467, 468, 131 App. Div. 465.

In a suit to charge land with tax bills, defendants could not contend that the work was repair work chargeable to the city instead of work of "reconstruction" chargeable to the abutting owner, on the ground that the contractors had repaired holes and cuts in the concrete foundation beneath the surface of the pavement which was being reconstructed, where such repairs were paid for by the city. Perkinson v. Schnaake, 83 S. W. 301, 302, 108 Mo. App. 255.

"To reconstruct" is to construct and build again. One who only assumes an obligation to repair a house could not be required to tear it down and rebuild it. Attorney General ex rel. Gibson v. Board of Sup'rs of Montcalm County, 104 N. W. 792, 795, 141 Mich. 590 (quoting and adopting definition in Board of Com'rs of White County v. Gwin, 36 N. E. 237, 136 Ind. 562, 22 L. R. A. 402).

Where, under a single ordinance, a new pavement is to be laid and the old curbing and guttering must be reset and replaced in part, the curbing and guttering are "reconstruction" work and not repair work within Rev. St. 1899, § 5681, providing that the cost of repair of curbing or guttering shall, when not done by the owner liable therefor in the first instance, be paid out of the general revenue of the city, and the cost of the curbing and guttering was properly included in special tax bills. Rackliffe v. Duncan, 108 S. W. 1110, 1112, 130 Mo. App. 695.

RECONVERSION

Though a will may convert land into money, the subsequent acts of the beneficiaries may reconvert the subject-matter into land; "reconversion" being an imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled and the converted property restored, in contemplation of law, to its original state—such reconversion being exercised before the property is actually converted. Nall v. Nall, 147 S. W. 1006, 1008, 243 Mo. 247.

A "record" is a memorial or history of judicial proceedings in a case, commencing with the writ or complaint and terminating with the judgment; and only the records of magistrates which are made in the course of judicial duty are of force. State v. Houltan, 83 Atl. 1106, 1107, 109 Me. 281.

The original files in a prosecution before a justice of the peace for assault and theft, together with the mittimus addressed to the officer on conviction and sentence, do not constitute a "record." McVeigh v. Ripley, 58 Atl. 701, 702, 77 Conn. 136.

The "record" proper in a criminal action, under the Oklahoma statutes includes the information, the plea of the defendant, the verdict of the jury, the sentence of the court, the instructions given by the court, and those requested by the defendant, together with all indorsements made thereon. Chandler v. State, 105 Pac. 375, 376, 3 Okl. Cr. 254; Rasberry v. State, 103 Pac. 865, 870, 4 Okl. Cr. 618.

The "record" in a criminal case includes a statement of the time and place of holding court, the indictment or information, with the indorsement thereon, the arraignment, the plea of the accused, the impaneling of the jury, the verdict, and the judgment of the court; and a motion in arrest of judgment will be sustained only when it is patent on the face of the record that there has been some irregularity in relation to one of the above-enumerated steps of the proceeding. State v. McCrocklin, 57 South. 645, 646, 130 La. 106.

The word "record," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 1130, providing that one convicted three times of felony shall be confined in the penitentiary for life, but judgment for the increased penalty shall not be given unless the jury find, from the record and other competent evidence, the fact of former convictions, was not intended to include the whole record, but merely the verdict and judgment of conviction and of the sentence, and hence the indictment in the cases in which former convictions were had cannot be read in evidence, nor argument permitted thereon. Tall

v. Commonwealth, 110 S. W. 425, 428, 33 Ky. Law Rep. 541.

The indictments against a person are "records or documents filed in a public office under authority of law." Code Cr. Proc. § 272; Code Civ. Proc. § 866. They are the property of the state, and a willful and unlawful removal of them constitutes a crime under Pen. Code, § 94. People v. Mills, 70 N. E. 786, 789, 178 N. Y. 274, 67 L. R. A. 131.

Where the record defined by Pen. Code, § 2229, as including the indictment, a copy of the minutes of the plea and of the trial, the charge given or refused, and the indorsements thereon, and a copy of the judgment, is included in the bill of exceptions, and not certified up by the clerk as the record, as required by section 2231, the merits of the appeal cannot be considered. State v. Farriss, 87 Pac. 177, 34 Mont. 424.

Oral instructions are not a part of the "record" under a statute requiring the charge to be given in writing and filed with the clerk as a part of the "record" on request of either party. Casto v. Murray, 81 Pac. 388, 47 Or. 57.

The record proper in civil cases consists of the process and return, the pleadings, and the verdict. Smith v. Moseley, 137 S. W. 971, 974, 234 Mo. 486.

Under Court and Practice Act 1905, § 474 (Gen. Laws 1909, c. 298, § 1), providing that, when the constitutionality of an act shall be brought in question on the record, the court shall forthwith certify the question to the Supreme Court, the constitutionality of an act is brought in question on the record where the constitutionality of a statute is clearly questioned by the allegation of any pleading, or by any other formal objection filed in the case, and the court must certify the question, and where a bill in equity attacks the constitutionality of an act a certification is not premature, because made before issue has been joined on the allegation of unconstitutionality, or while there remains the possibility that the case may be disposed of without reference to the constitutional question; the word "record" not requiring a completed record of the case, which is the orderly history of a case from beginning to end. Blais v. Franklin, 75 Atl. 399, 402, 30 R. I. 413.

The record on appeal consists of the judgment roll and the bill of exceptions as settled, signed, and certified to by the judge, and a document presumably sent up from the county clerk's office, together with the record purporting to be a notice of intention to move for a new trial, but not referred to in the bill of exceptions, cannot be considered. Walker Bros. v. Skiliris, 98 Pac. 114, 119, 34 Utah, 353.

The "record" in a case at law consists of the record proper and the bill of exceptions.

Hanson v. Anderson, 121 S. W. 736, 91 Ark. 443.

The "abstract" is the "record" on which the court on appeal determines a case, and it only refers to the original record when there is a conflict in the abstracts presented by the parties, and where it appears from the journal of the Supreme Court that the bill of exceptions was withdrawn and amended by inserting exceptions therein, but no change was made in the abstract, the court must be governed entirely by the abstract. State v. Harbour, 129 N. W. 565, 567, 568, 27 S. D. 42.

The "record" on appeal in criminal cases embraces only the summons or indictment, pleadings (in civil cases), verdict, and judgment. State v. Matthews, 55 S. E. 342, 343, 142 N. C. 621 (quoting and adopting the definition in Thornton v. Brady, 5 S. E. 910, 100 N. C. 38).

As used in the rule that an action in equity to remove a cloud on title can be maintained only when some evidence extrinsic to the record is necessary to show its invalidity, the word "record" means, not merely the record of the instrument of conveyance or lien on which the adverse claim may be based, but where such an instrument is the result of judicial proceedings, the entire record of such proceedings. Rumble v. Smith, 121 N. Y. Supp. 501, 502, 66 Misc. Rep. 298.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 681, 690, relating to appeals, and providing for the filing of a transcript of the record in the Supreme Court, a "record for appeal" ordinarily consists of a copy of all papers, entries, and proceedings in the lower court, or so much thereof as appellant in writing requests, duly certified and sealed, and any original paper, document, or entry incorporated in the transcript will be disregarded, unless express statutory authority for embracing it exists. Curless v. State, 87 N. E. 129, 88 N. E. 339, 172 Ind. 257.

Where a summons, dated August 15th, and served August 22d, required defendants to appear on October 15th, and an appeal was taken from an interlocutory order appointing a receiver in vacation, the transcript being filed in the Supreme Court August 22d, there could be no "appearance" by defendants until after the appeal was taken, within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 691, providing that certain documents shall be deemed part of the record, except a summons for defendant, when all the persons named in it have appeared to the action; and hence the summons and return thereon are part of the record, especially in view of section 663, providing that any pleading or paper filed, or offered to be filed, shall be a part of the record, etc. Marshall v. Matson, 86 N. E. 339, 342, 171 Ind. 238.

The docket entries of the trial court, showing orders granting motions for new trial unless defendant consented to entry of judgment for certain sums, supplemented by an agreed statement of the parties sanctioned by the judge, constitute the "record" until formally extended; and, where the entire proceedings are set forth, any question of law disclosed may be reviewed. Shanahan v. Boston & N. St. Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 751, 193 Mass. 412.

As used in Code, § 5462, requiring the Supreme Court to examine the "record" without regard to technical errors or defects which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and to render such judgment on the record as the law demands, the word "record" means that upon which the cause is submitted. This may be on transcript of all the papers in the case on file save those returned by a committing magistrate and by entries in the record book, but does not include the evidence. State v. Blodgett, 121 N. W. 685, 689, 143 Iowa, 578, 21 Ann. Cas. 231 (citing Code, § 5450; Harriman v. State, [Iowa] 2 G. Greene, 271).

The word "record," as used in Rev. St. § 5403, making it a criminal offense to steal or destroy any record, etc., of a court of justice or any paper document or record filed or deposited in any public office, is not limited to the technical common-law records of courts as enrolled, nor to technical documents, but is used in the common and ordinary sense, and includes an original paper or document, which, though not spread upon the record books, is treated as a "record" of what it contains. McInerney v. United States, 143 Fed. 729, 732, 733, 74 C. C. A. 655.

The "record" for review of a final order of the corporation commission consists of a certification of all the facts upon which the action appealed from was based, and which may be essential for the proper decision of the appeal, together with such evidence introduced before or considered by the commission as may be selected, specified, and required to be certified by any party in interest, as well as such other evidence so introduced or considered as the commission may deem proper, and also a written statement of the reasons upon which the action sought to be appealed from is based. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Love, 99 Pac. 1081, 1083, 23 Okl. 192.

A sufficient compliance with general order No. 36 (18 Sup. Ct. ix), providing that appeals under the bankrupt act from the Supreme Court shall be taken within 30 days after judgment, and that the court below shall, at or before the time of entering the judgment, make and file findings of fact and conclusions of law, which, together with the pleadings and judgment, shall constitute the record, is shown where the appeal was taken within 30 days, and the Circuit Court of Appeals made its findings of fact and conclusions of law part of the record by an order made within 30 days, directing the same to be filed nunc pro tunc as of the date of the judgment. Coder v. Arts, 29 Sup. Ct. 436, 441, 213 U. S. 223, 53 L. Ed. 772, 16 Ann. Cas. 1008.

The "record" of a board of arbitrators, creating a new school district from territory detached from contiguous districts, does not include the petition presented to the clerk or clerks of the district or districts and the notices posted before the election, for, notwithstanding their importance, the statute is silent as to what disposition shall be made of them, and there is no provision for their custody or perpetuation, and the sole and only "record" of the proceedings of the board is the certificate of the board of arbitrators forming a new district. School Dist. No. 2 v. Pace, 87 S. W. 580, 582, 113 Mo. App. 134.

Conclusiveness

"Records" of judicial tribunals as to parties affected are conclusive as to all matters contained therein of which the law requires a record, and cannot be contradicted or varied by parol testimony; but there is another class of entries, sometimes called "records," which are of a public nature and required by law to be kept by various non-judicial officers, which are of a less solemn nature, and are not accorded the conclusiveness attached to judgments of courts of record. They are competent evidence of the facts required by law to be recorded, but are not conclusive. They are prima facie evidence of the facts required to be recorded. And so, where it is not made the duty of an officer to indorse the date of filing on documents, his file mark is merely his own private mark, which may be contradicted by extrinsic evidence. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. O'Brien, 107 S. W. 25, 30, 128 Mo. App. 267 (quoting and adopting the definition in Goodrich v. Senate, 42 Atl. 409, 92 Me. 248).

County records

Section 17 of the act in relation to the collection of taxes in New Castle county (20 Del. Laws, p. 9, Append.) provides that, if the collector advertise for sale any property in which any person other than the one to whom the taxes are assessed has an interest, he shall, provided the interest of such other person appears "on the records of New Castle county," leave notice of the sale at the place of abode of such other person a certain time before the sale. Section 20 provides that the deed of real estate sold for taxes, executed by the collector, shall vest in the purchaser, subject to right of redemption, all the estate, right, and title the owner thereof had in and to it when the taxes were assessed, free from any interest or incumbrance of any person to whom the notice required by section 17 was given. Held, that "record of New Castle county" means county records, and does not embrace records of a city of the county, so that, though notice of a tax sale was given the city, the tax deed did not vest in the purchaser the title free from the lien of municipal taxes. Knowles v. Morris (Del.) 65 Atl. 782, 786, 6 Pennewill, 76.

Docket entries

The docket and minute books of the county court, though records for the purpose of keeping a memoranda of the business that is to go before the court, or has been transacted by it, are not record books in which the permanent orders of the court should be recorded or preserved, but such orders must be entered in the order book of the court. Rails v. Sharp's Adm'r, 131 S. W. 998, 1000, 140 Ky. 744.

The court or bench docket is not a record of the court in which its official entries are kept, but is merely a docket for the convenience of the court, and the notes of the judge are not the record entries to be incorporated in a transcript for the appeal of the case, and in determining what the record discloses the entries on such docket may not be considered. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 93 N. E. 683, 686, 49 Ind. App. 126.

Internal revenue collector's certificate

Shannon's Code, § 5573, provides that duly certified copies of all records and entries, or other papers belonging to any public office, or filed to be kept therein, are evidence in all cases. Section 5576 provides that the term "records" includes any record of any county, common-law, circuit, etc., court. Section 5580 provides for proof of judicial records of a sister state. Section 5583 relates to proof of the acts of the executive of the United States or of a state, etc. Section 5584 relates to proof of the proceedings of the Legislature of a state or of the United States, etc. Section 5588 provides that the certificate of the head of any department or bureau of the general government is a sufficient authentication of any paper or document appertaining or belonging to his office. Held, that none of such sections are broad enough to render a certificate issued by an internal revenue collector that a special tax stamp was issued to defendant admissible in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors, under Acts 1903, p. 1079, c. 355, § 1, providing that, in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors within four miles of a schoolhouse, the fact that defendant has paid the internal revenue special tax as a retail liquor dealer, etc., shall be prima facie evidence of sales within the meaning of the law, etc. Bayless v. State, 113 S. W. 1039, 1040, 121 Tenn. 75.

Jury list

A list of the names of duly qualified jurors drawn to serve at a term of court certified by the sheriff and by the judge of common pleas pursuant to P. L. 1876, p. 363 (Gen. St. p. 1854, § 50) forms no part of the "record of the proceedings had upon the trial" within Criminal Procedure Act, section 136 (P. L. 1898, p. 915). State v. Tomasi, 69 Atl. 214, 215, 75 N. J. Law, 739.

Land office books

Where the land commissioner in the discharge of his official duties indorsed in red ink a cancellation of an award of school lands on the purchaser's obligation and on the classification and appraisal record, these indorsements became a "record of an office," within the statutory meaning, so that it was competent to prove the cancellation by certified copies of the documents and indorsements thereon. Smithers v. Lowrance (Tex.) 91 S. W. 606, 607.

Motion to set aside judgment

A motion to set aside a judgment on ground that it was procured by fraud and to recall execution is not a pleading nor any part of the record proper, which consists of the petition, summons, and all subsequent pleadings, including verdict and judgment, and the ruling on the motion is a matter of exception only, and, unless the motion is preserved in a bill of exceptions and an exception is saved to the ruling, the matter is not reviewable. Graff v. Dougherty, 120 S. W. 661, 662, 139 Mo. App. 56.

Testimony

For the purpose of a motion in arrest of judgment for errors appearing on the face of the record, the word "record" means the strict record in the case as at common law. It does not include the evidence in the case, for, though the evidence be set out in the bill of exceptions, it is no part of the record proper, but a motion in arrest may raise the question of want of jurisdiction of the court to try the case where the question of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record proper. State v. Shappy, 65 Atl. 78, 79, 79 Vt. 306.

The term "record of the council with reference to said assessment," as used in the statute authorizing appeal to superior court from decision of the council confirming a special assessment, and specifying a copy of the notice of appeal, a transcript of the assessment roll, a copy of the objections, and of the order of the council confirming the assessment roll as necessary to be certified on appeal, but containing no provision taking testimony before the council, nor for certification of any testimony taken, does not include the testimony, but refers to such record as the minutes of the proceedings of the council upon the subject; and under the statute the appellant may submit and have considered any competent evidence, whether it was heard by the council or not. Ahrens v. City of Seattle, 81 Pac. 558, 560, 39 Wash. 168.

RECORD (Verb)

See Duly Recorded; Immediate Recording.

See, also, File.

"Record" means to preserve the memory of by committing to writing; to printing; to inscription; or the like; to make note of." Seaboard Air-Line Ry. v. Memory, 55 S. E. 15, 16, 126 Ga. 183 (quoting and adopting definition in Webster's Dict.).

"Recorded in like manner" within Statute of Wills (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 148), § 9, making a foreign will "recorded as aforesaid" valid in like manner as domestic wills, means recorded with the probate clerk as provided for in section 2. Dibble v. Winter, 93 N. E. 145, 150, 247 Ill. 243.

As register

"Record" and "register," as used in Revision of 1846 (Nixon Dig. pp. 526, 527), relating to the registration of mortgages, are synonymous. Manchester Building & Loan Ass'n v. Beardsley, 66 Atl. 1, 4, 72 N. J. Eq. 714.

"The verb 'record,' in statutes relating to recordable papers, has a technical meaning, the legal registry of an acknowledged or proven paper." A tax deed must be either acknowledged or proven before it can be recorded, and, if recorded without such acknowledgment or proof, it passes no title. State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 830, 57 W. Va. 447.

As take stenographic notes

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 4447, providing that the compensation of the reporter, or stenographer for "recording," or taking stenographic notes and "recording," the evidence in such civil cases as may be agreed by counsel to be recorded, etc., and section 4446, providing that it shall be the duty of the official stenographer to attend all courts in the circuit for which he is appointed, and when directed by the judge, as hereinafter set forth, to exactly, and truly "record," or "take stenographic notes," of the testimony and proceedings in the cases tried, a stenographer is "recording" the evidence when he has taken it down in shorthand, although he is not making a record thereof which is intelligible to those who are not versed in the system of shorthand which he uses, and even though no one but himself may be able to read his shorthand notes. Under this statute, the word "record," and the expression "or taking stenographic notes," mean identically the same thing; the latter expression being merely explanatory of the former. Seaboard Air-Line Ry. v. Memory, 55 S. E. 15, 16, 126 Ga. 183.

RECORD TITLE

Where a husband conveyed to a wife, who conveyed to another, who gave to the wife a bond for the deed, the bond constituted the wife's "record title," within the homestead statute, requiring the word "Homestead" to be entered in the margin of the record title. Brooks v. Black, 123 Pac. 131, 134, 22 Colo. App. 49.

RECORDER

As judicial officer, see Judicial Officer.

The "recorder" in the city of Independence, Or., is the judicial officer of said city, and the office is analogous to that of a police judge. Wong Sing v. City of Independence, 83 Pac. 387, 388, 47 Or. 231.

St. 1905, p. 940, c. 15, constituting the charter of the city of San Bernardino, section 95 (page 956) provides that the judicial power of the city shall be vested in a police court, consisting of one police judge. Section 14 (page 944) provides that such judge shall be elected at a general municipal election to be held on the first Monday of April, 1907. Section 13 (page 944) provides that the police judge and recorder shall continue to hold office and act as such until the second Monday of May, 1907, but that the first election of city officers under the charter shall be held on the second Monday of April, 1905. Section 51 (page 952) provides that the mayor shall fill all vacancies in an elective office, but that at the next municipal election an election shall be held for the office vacated, to fill the unexpired term. The incumbent of the office of recorder died prior to April, 1905, and on such date an election was held at which a judge of the police court was elected, but he was called the "recorder" instead of the police judge. Held, that with reference to the interval of time between the adoption of the charter and the second Monday of May, 1907, the terms "recorder" and "police judge" were used synonymously, though the charter did not continue in existence the recorder's court previously existing, and hence the fact that a warrant of commitment issued by the judge elected in 1905 was signed by him as "city recorder" did not render it insufficient so as to entitle the prisoner to release on habeas corpus. In re Baxter, 86 Pac. 998, 999, 3 Cal. App. 716.

RECORDER'S COURT

As inferior court, see Inferior Court.

As state court, see State Court.

RECORDARI

A "recordari" is a substitute for an appeal when a party has lost his right to appeal otherwise than through his own fault, and it may be granted by the judge in a proper case. Marsh v. Cohen, 68 N. C. 283, 286.

RECOUNT

The word "recount," as used in the election law, means not merely a mathematical count of the ballots or votes, but involves a recanvass of the votes. The statute presumes a mistake, not by the ballot clerks in making their return of the total number of ballots voted, but by the inspectors in canvassing and counting the votes. In re Hearst, 96 N. Y. Supp. 341, 343, 110 App. Div. 346.

The "recount" is not a contest. On the contrary, it is a mere ascertainment of the result shown by the ballots. It merely corrects mistakes made by the precinct election officers in counting the ballots and certifying the results. In the absence of a demand for a recount the votes are not counted. The ballots are simply checked up and compared with the poll books, and the returns, certified from the several precincts, are footed up and the general result ascertained and declared. The demand for a recount imposes upon the canvassing board the further duty of counting the votes as shown by the ballots. Goff v. Young, 57 S. E. 328, 329, 61 W. Va. 693.

RECOUPMENT

See, also, Counterclaim; Set-Off.

Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3756, defines "recoupment" as a right of the defendant to have a deduction from the amount of plaintiff's damages for the reason that plaintiff has not complied with cross-obligations or independent covenants arising under the same contract. So where a landlord sues out a warrant to dispossess his tenant because of nonpayment of rent under a lease contract, and the tenant arrests such proceedings by filing a counter affidavit and giving the required bond, upon a trial of such case the tenant, upon proper pleadings and proof, can prevent eviction and a recovery of double rent by showing that the landlord was indebted to him at the time of the suing out of the warrant by reason of damages ensuing from a violation of his cross-obligations under the contract in an amount equal to the rent due when the warrant was issued; and, if such damages exceed the amount of rent due the landlord, the tenant can obtain judgment for such excess. Weaver v. Roberson, 67 S. E. 662, 666, 134 Ga. 137. And so also where goods damaged during transportation are delivered by the carrier without payment of the freight charges and suit is thereafter brought to recover such charges, the defendant may file a plea of recoupment for the damages to the shipment, such plea may be filed notwithstanding the Hepburn Act, prohibiting carriers from accepting anything but money in payment of freight and other transportation charges. Battle v. Atkinson, 71 S. E. 775, 776, 9 Ga. App. 488. But damages arising upon the breach of an agreement to extend or defer the maturity of a note cannot be pleaded as recoupment to an action to recover the principal and interest due upon such note. The contract to extend (though referring to the note) is independent of the original promise to pay. Recoupment can be pleaded only where the plaintiff is in good conscience liable to the defendant under the same contract. Jester v. Bainbridge State Bank, 61 S. E. 926, 928, 4 Ga. App. 469.

"Recoupment" is the keeping back of something that is due because there is equitable reason for holding it, and this defense crept from courts of chancery into the practice at law to enable courts of law to prevent circuity of action. Williams v. Neely, 134 Fed. 1, 4, 67 C. C. A. 171, 69 L. R. A. 232.

"Recoupment" is a common-law right to reduce plaintiff's claim which continues so long as plaintiff's cause of action exists, and the right must grow out of or be connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues. State v. Arkansas Brick & Mfg. Co., 135 S. W. 843, 844, 98 Ark. 125, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378.

The word "recoupment" in its truest sense means a right of deduction from the amount of the plaintiff's claim, by reason of either a payment thereon or some loss sustained by the defendant by reason of the plaintiff's wrongful or defective performance of the contract out of which his claim originated. It has been defined to be a "keeping back of something which is due because there is an equitable reason for withholding it." The word is nearly if not quite synonymous with discount, reduction, or deduction. Michigan Yacht & Power Co. v. Busch, 143 Fed. 929, 936, 75 C. C. A. 109 (citing Ives v. Van Epps [N. Y.] 22 Wend. 155; Ward v. Fellers, 3 Mich. 281, 291; Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699; 2 Pars. Cont. [7th Ed.] 880; Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587, 595).

The doctrine of "recoupment" was recognized and allowed at common law, and was and is applied to actions whether founded in contract or in tort, but it is limited as a defense to defeating the plaintiff's action, in whole or in part. Recoupment rests on the principle of the desirability of avoiding circuity and multiplicity of actions by allowing the defendant, at his election, to give in evidence matters growing out of the same transaction by way of defense, instead of requiring a cross-action, when it can be done without a violation of principle or great inconvenience in practice; but while it is the policy of our law not to compel parties to bring two actions, when, with equal convenience, their rights can be settled in one, the defendant may not set up his claim by way of recoupment unless it would be just and practicable to adjust it in the plaintiff's action. The claim or damage to be recouped must be a valid cause of action for which a separate suit could be maintained, and must not have occurred through the fault or negligence of the defendant. As developed and permitted by the American courts, recoupment has attained a wider and more extended application than in England. Very generally, at least, if not altogether, the courts of this country have not restricted its application to cases where the defendant may recoup his damages for the purpose of affecting the value of the goods sold, or of the work done, but they have allowed the defendant to recoup damages suffered by him from any fraud, breach of warranty, or negligence of the plaintiff, growing out of and relating to the transaction in question, for the purpose, as we have already indicated, of avoiding needless delay and litigation. In an action for the price of a traveling crane, defendant cannot recoup damages alleged to have been suffered through having paid, without suit, a claim for damages on account of the death of a servant killed by the overturning of the crane because of its alleged negligent construction. Edgemoor Iron Co. v. Brown Hoisting Mach. Co. (Del.) 62 Atl. 1054, 1055, 1056, 6 Pennewill, 10 (citing Dorr v. Fisher [Mass.] 1 Cush. 271; Sawyer v. Wiswell [Mass.] 9 Allen, 39; Dushane v. Benedict, 7 Sup. Ct. 696, 120 U. S. 630, 30 L. Ed. 810; Johnson v. White Mountain Creamery Ass'n, 36 Atl. 13, 68 N. H. 437, 73 Am. St. Rep. 610; 1 Suth. Dam., §§ 172, 174).

As growing out of contract in suit

"Recoupment" is the right of defendant to claim damages, either because plaintiff has not complied with the contract sued on, or violated some duty which the law imposes on him in its performance. Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Alabama Const. Co., 50 South. 332, 334, 162 Ala. 380.

"Recoupment" exists only at common law, and must arise out of the contract sued on. American Bridge Co. of New York v. City of Boston, 58 N. E. 1089, 1090, 202 Mass. 374.

"Recoupment" implies that plaintiff has a cause of action, and defendant has a cause arising out of the breach of some other part of the contract upon which the action is based, or for some other cause connected with the contract, and is in the nature of a cross-action. Richard Deeves & Son v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 88 N. E. 395, 396, 399, 195 N. Y. 324.

"Recoupment" is the right of a defendant in the same action to claim damages from the plaintiff for some cross-obligation or violation of duty relating to the contract sued on. Hawthorne v. Murray (Del.) 84 Atl. 5, 6.

"Recoupment" is the keeping back or stopping of something which is due, and could be invoked at common law when defendant had sustained damages from plaintiff's breach of the contract sued on; defendant's damages being abated from plaintiff's claim. J. S. Wood & Bro. v. M. E. Jones & Son, 73 S. E. 1099, 1100, 10 Ga. App. 735; Krausse v. Greenfield (Or.) 123 Pac. 392, 394, 61 Or. 502.

Set-off distinguished

As defined by Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3757, a "set-off" is distinguishable from "recoupment" in that a set-off includes all mutual debts and liabilities, while recoupment is confined to the contract on which plaintiff sues. Weaver v. Roberson, 87 S. E. 662, 666, 134 Ga. 137.

"Recoupment" is distinguished from set-off in these particulars: First, it arises out of matters connected with the transaction or contract in which the plaintiff's cause of action is founded; second, it matters not whether it be liquidated or unliquidated; third, it is not dependent on any statutory regulation, but is controlled by the principles of the common law. Hayes v. Sildell Liquor Co., 55 South. 356, 358, 99 Miss. 583.

In an action for the price of a stock of millinery goods, a plea termed by the defendant a "plea of recoupment," claiming a sum had and received by plaintiff, which the defendant offers as a set-off against the demands of the plaintiff and claims judgment for the excess, was not demurrable, being good as a set-off, though not as a plea of recoupment. Thomas v. Thomas, 41 South. 141, 142, 146 Ala. 533.

"Recoupment" goes to show that the amount claimed is not due the plaintiff, while "set-off" is a defense which goes, not to the justice of the plaintiff's demand, but sets up a demand against the plaintiff to counterbalance his in whole or in part. It does not attack or deny plaintiff's claim, but admits it. As set-off does not go to show that the amount claimed by plaintiff is not due or owing by the defendant, it is not available as defense by affidavits of illegality to the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. Arnold v. Carter, 54 S. E. 177, 179, 125 Ga. 319.

Actions in tort

"Recoupment" is in law a mitigation of damages, and the defense is of such a nature as will permit a claim originating in contract to be interposed as against one suing in tort; likewise damages for a tort may be recouped against a claim predicated upon a contract. Spurgin v. Kruse, 125 Ill. App. 507, 508.

RECOURSE

See Without Recourse.

RECOVER—RECOVERY

See Duly Recovered; Lost All Hope of Recovery.

Money paid to plaintiff in a personal injury action, under a contract of settlement, was "recovered," as affecting an attorney's right to a lien, under the attorney's lien law (Laws 1909, p. 97); the word "recover" being often used in the sense of "receive" or "come into possession of." Standidge v. Chicago

Rys. Co., 98 N. E. 963, 966, 254 Ill. 524, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 65.

The word "recover," as first used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1552 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1177), providing that if plaintiff in an action not on contract recover any damages he shall recover his costs, refers to instances where he is entitled to a judgment, and not to cases where he prevails as to certain issues, but on the whole case suffers a judgment against him. Ozias v. Haley, 125 S. W. 556, 557, 141 Mo. App. 637.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3228, subd. 5, providing that a plaintiff in an action in the City Court, where, but for the amount claimed, the action should have been brought in the Municipal Court, can have no costs unless he shall "recover" $250 or more, and section 734, providing that, if the plaintiff proceeds in the action after accepting the tender, the sum accepted must be deducted from the recovery and judgment rendered for the residue, and that plaintiff's right to costs is determined by the amount of the residue, a sum accepted pending suit is not a "recovery," so that where plaintiff accepted payment of the amount claimed in, and withdrew, his first cause of action, thereby limiting his possible recovery to a sum less than $250, his right to costs was lost. Hill v. Kahn, 98 N. Y. Supp. 682, 683, 50 Misc. Rep. 360.

Where, in a suit by partners to settle the partnership and to enforce their lien on the assets, defendant partner obtained an affirmative judgment for a definite sum then under the control of the court, the title to which up to the time of the judgment was in the partnership and not in himself alone, there was a recovery within the meaning of a statute, providing that, where an action is prosecuted to a recovery, the attorney shall have a lien on the judgment for money or property recovered for his fee, and defendant's attorney was entitled to a lien. T. Harlan & Co. v. Bennett, Robbins & Thomas, 106 S. W. 287, 288, 127 Ky. 572, 32 Ky. Law Rep. 473, 128 Am. St. Rep. 360.

Under Act Feb. 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), providing that failure to adjust claims against a carrier within the times prescribed shall subject a carrier to a penalty, provided that, unless the consignee recover the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, a consignee of freight cannot recover the penalty for failure to pay for the lost freight, where he accepts, after the time provided in the act, the amount claimed for loss of freight before bringing the action for penalty. "The term 'recover,' when considered by itself, is not the usual or apt word to indicate a voluntary payment or receipt of money for damages suffered, but ordinarily means the obtaining in a suit of the right to something by a verdict and judgment of a court, and that this is the meaning in the present statute is manifest by the context—"recover in such action." Best v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 52 S. E. 223, 225, 72 S. C. 479.

There is not a "settlement or recovery," within an agreement of a plaintiff with his retreating attorney to pay him a certain sum, in case of a settlement or recovery of the claims sued on, where the defendant in the action, not acknowledging the validity of the claim, made a certain payment merely for the purpose of terminating the litigation and disposing of the annoyance from its prosecution. Randel v. Vanderbilt, 78 N. Y. Supp. 124, 75 App. Div. 313.

Attorney's fees as part of recovery

Code Civ. Proc. § 1195, providing that in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien plaintiff shall be entitled "to recover an attorney's fee," should be construed as entitling plaintiff to such fee as a part of the recovery, and therefore confers a lien for the fee, as well as for the subject-matter of the action. Peckham v. Fox, 82 Pac. 91, 92, 1 Cal. App. 307.

Recover by suit

"Recover by suit," in Cobbey's Ann. St. 1907, proviso of section 6147, authorizing a county to "recover by suit" from another county moneys expended for repairs of a bridge, include a suit instituted by an appeal from the disallowance of a claim by a county board. Cass County v. Sarpy County, 119 N. W. 685, 686, 83 Neb. 435.

Recovery of vein

In a coal mining lease which provides for suspension of a minimum royalty clause or exemption therefrom so long as a "fault" in existence in the mine, contact with which occasioned such exemption clause, shall be a hindrance to the successful operation of the mine and for resumption of the minimum royalty after the "fault" has been "pierced" and the normal vein "recovered," the words "pierced" and "recovered" mean more than a mere breach of the fault and discovery of coal on the opposite side, but, if the immediate obstacle has been overcome, the main entry put in condition for successful operation and, together with side entries, carried into the body of the coal for several hundred feet, encountering the same obstacle or others in some of the entries, but none in others, it is for the jury to say whether the fault has been overcome within the meaning of the lease. Collins v. White Oak Fuel Co., 71 S. E. 277, 280, 69 W. Va. 292.

The provision in Indianapolis Track Elevation Law, Acts 1905, c. 82, §§ 2, 5, including in the expenses of the work damages "recoverable" under existing laws by any person on account of the elevation or depression of tracks, and directing the board of public works to determine damages "recoverable" under existing laws, merely directs persons aggrieved to seek redress under existing laws if any, the word "recoverable" meaning that which can be recovered as a matter of legal right. Morris v. City of Indianapolis, 94 N. E. 705, 710, 177 Ind. 369.

RECRIMINATION

Civ. Code Mont. § 170, defines "recrimination" as "a showing by defendant of any cause of divorce against plaintiff." If defendant alleges and proves facts constituting cause of divorce against plaintiff in bar of plaintiff's cause of action, the averment of the facts constituting such recriminatory defense, and the denial thereof by plaintiff, create a material issue on which the court must find. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 75 Pac. 524, 526, 30 Mont. 36.

The Idaho statute defines the term as a showing by the defendant of any cause of divorce against the plaintiff, in bar of the plaintiff's cause of divorce. Stoneburner v. Stoneburner, 83 Pac. 938, 939, 11 Idaho, 603.

"By the weight of authority the offense pleaded in 'recrimination' need not be of the same nature as the offense which defendant has committed. Any misconduct on the part of complainant which constitutes ground for divorce bars his suit without reference to the nature of the offense of which he complains, although in some states a contrary rule prevails by statute or otherwise, and the two offenses must be of the same character. 'Recrimination' in divorce law is the defense that the applicant has himself done what is ground for divorce either from bed and board or from the bond of matrimony. It bars the suit founded on whatever cause, whether the defendant is guilty or not. It is a bar to any suit to dissolve a valid marriage, or to separate the parties from bed and board, that either before or after the complained of delictum transpired the plaintiff himself did what, whether of the like offending or any other, was cause for a divorce of either sort. The doctrine of 'recrimination' is applicable to all the causes for divorce. The Legislatures having provided the same legal effect for each cause for divorce, the courts refuse to measure the gravity of the several causes, but hold each effectual as a bar in recrimination." Where both parties are found guilty of any of the enumerated offenses for which a divorce may be granted, the court should dismiss the bill. Wilson v. Wilson, 132 N. W. 401, 403, 404, 89 Neb. 749 (citing 2 Bish. Mar., Div. & Sep. c. 11; 14 Cyc. p. 650).

RECTIFICATION

A large part of the whisky used in the United States is "rectified"; that is, that a barrel of whisky, as it comes out of the distillery, is adulterated by the rectifiers, so as to make five or six barrels of whisky out of it; and it is on this business of multiplying whisky which is distilled that the Legislature imposes the license tax. Brown-Foreman Co. v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 321, 324, 125 Ky. 402.

RECTIFIED SPIRITS

Liquor as including, see Liquor.

RECTIFIER

Rev. St. § 3244, in defining "rectifiers," includes "every person who, without rectifying, purifying or refining distilled spirits, shall, by mixing such spirits, wine or other liquor with any materials manufacture any spurious imitation or compound liquors for sale under the name of whisky, brandy * * * or any other name." Held, that in view of such statutory recognition of the manufacture of "imitation whisky," etc., and of the process of such manufacture, the regulation by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which directs that "alcohol, commercial alcohol or high wines which have been manipulated, * * * so as to resemble some particular kind of potable spirits, will be marked with the name of such spirits preceded by the word 'imitation,' as for example 'Imitation Whisky,'" is a proper and reasonable regulation, having also in view the provisions of Food & Drugs Act June 30, 1906, c. 3915, 34 Stat. 768, notwithstanding the fact that such compounds may have been previously sold in the trade under the name of the liquors they imitate. Woolner & Co. v. Rennick, 170 Fed. 662, 664.

A manufacturer of vanilla or ginger extract by mixing the comminuted vanilla beans or ginger root with alcohol in a percolator, and who afterward recovers a part of the alcohol remaining in the mixture for re-use by distillation, is a "rectifier of distilled spirits" and subject to the special tax imposed by Rev. St. § 3244. Henry K. Wampole & Co. v. United States, 191 Fed. 573, 574, 112 C. C. A. 663.

Where a party manufactured a ginger ale paste used for making ginger ale by placing a quantity in a percolator and adding alcohol, and the oleoresin thus obtained from the ginger, containing unnecessary alcohol, was distilled, and the alcohol separated, he, by such act, became a person who "rectifies, purifies, and refines" distilled spirits of wines, within Rev. St. § 3244, imposing an internal revenue tax on every person so engaged. United States v. S. Twitchell Co., 184 Fed. 525, 527.

RECURRING

See Contantly Recurring.

REDEEM

"To redeem" is defined as to purchase back; to regain possession by payment of a stipulated price; to repurchase; to regain property by paying what is due; to receive back by paying the obligation." B., being desirous of reorganizing the business of K. & Co., who were indebted to claimant, organized the E. Company, of the preferred stock of which claimant agreed to accept $5,000 of K. & Co.'s indebtedness, with a bonus of 20 per cent. common stock, and agreed not to press the new corporation for the remaining indebtedness so long as claimant felt assured of its ultimate success, it being also agreed that B., through the new corporation, should sell to others the full preferred capital stock issue of the company and redeem, within 18 months, the preferred stock and bonus which claimant agreed to accept as a temporary arrangement to further a reorganization, but, before this could be accomplished, the new corporation became a bankrupt. Held, that claimant's arrangement constituted a pledge of the new corporation's stock as security for the debt of K. & Co., and not a sale of such stock. In re United Educational Co., 153 Fed. 169, 171, 82 C. C. A. 343.

"The word 'redeem' does not mean to buy; it means to buy back; to liberate an estate by paying the debt for which it stood as security; to purchase in a literal sense" (citing Black, Law Dict. 1008). Hence a consent decree, declaring that defendant "has an equity to redeem" land on the payment to plaintiff of a specified sum, and, in case of the failure to pay the same within the time limited, "defendant shall stand absolutely debarred" of all equity, is not a contract for the purchase by defendant, for the right to "redeem" implies that he previously owned the land; redemption being an inseparable incident to a mortgage. Bunn v. Braswell, 55 S. E. 85, 86, 142 N. C. 113.

The word "redeem," in an agreement extending the time within which the right to redeem land from a foreclosure sale may be exercised, means that the owner of the equity of the land sold may have the title vested in him which was divested by the sale, by tendering or paying to the holder of the certificate of sale within the redemption period the amount of principal and interest evidenced thereby. Williams v. Hoffman, 76 N. E. 440, 443, 39 Ind. App. 315.

The word "redeem," used in a contract forming part of a transaction which plaintiff sought to show constituted a mortgage, and not a conveyance, was not controlling, as the word has no definite significance. It means to repurchase or to regain, and does not necessarily imply the existence of a valid existing indebtedness, and, if it is shown that there was no debt, the word will be construed as repurchase. Cold v. Beh, 132 N. W. 73, 77, 152 Iowa, 368.

As repurchase

The word "redeem," as used in statutory provisions authorizing a party to redeem, means "repurchase." Mannington v. Hocking Val. R. Co., 183 Fed. 133, 145.

REDEMPTION

See Equity of Redemption; Right of Redemption; Statutory Right to Redeem. Cost of redemption, see Cost.

The term "redemption" implies that there is something to be redeemed, something lost to be gotten back; and hence, where a sale for taxes is void and passes no title, there can be no redemption. Webb v. Ritter, 54 S. E. 484, 491, 60 W. Va. 193.

Where an insolvent husband's land goes to tax sale, and his wife purchases, the attempted purchase must be treated as if made by the husband, and, with respect to his creditors, it will be treated as a "redemption" of the land from his delinquency. Herrin v. Henry, 87 S. W. 430, 431, 75 Ark. 273.

Intestate died seised of 957 acres of land, subject to a mortgage for $15,000. The land was purchased by the mortgagee on foreclosure for $16,005.39, after which he agreed to assign the purchase certificate to the widow on payment of such amount, with interest, which agreement was extended until September 1, 1889, when a redemption was effected by a payment of the amount due, made up of two partial payments previously made by the widow, $6,326.67, the price of 100 acres of land sold by J., one of the heirs, for their benefit to another, $9,000 raised by a deed of trust on the remaining 857 acres, and $153.53, furnished by J. A quitclaim deed to the land was made by the purchaser under the mortgage sale to J. in his own right. At this time the land was worth $38,000. Held, that such transaction operated as a "redemption" of the land for the benefit of the widow and heirs of intestate, and not a purchase by J. for his sole use. Donason v. Barbero, 82 N. E. 620, 625, 230 Ill. 138.

Where an owner of land, knowing that the taxes thereon were delinquent, gave money to an agent to pay the taxes and wrote the county clerk and was informed of the amount required to redeem, and the agent subsequently went to the county clerk and informed him of the desire to pay delinquent taxes, and the clerk, after examining the records, informed the agent that there were no delinquent taxes, and by reason of such misinformation the taxes were not paid, there was a constructive "redemption," within St. 1898, § 1165, providing that the owner of land sold for taxes may, within a specified time, redeem the same; and a tax deed must be set aside on repayment of the amount for which the land was sold for taxes, and subsequent taxes paid by the holder of the tax deed. Menasha Wooden Ware Co. v. Thayer, 137 N. W. 750, 751, 150 Wis. 611.

Where, in a suit in which foreclosure of a mortgage was asked, upon a compromise between the mortgagor and mortgagee, a decree was entered foreclosing the equity of a judgment lienor, unless the premises should be redeemed as provided by law and within the time fixed by law, the decree should be construed as having fixed the priority of liens and having necessitated redemption in case of a subsequent sale, and, there having been no sale, the judgment lienor's equity was not terminated, since "redemption," as provided by law and within the time fixed by law in such a case, has a well-defined meaning and should be construed to have reference to redemption from a sheriff's sale within the period allowed judgment creditors. First Nat. Bank of Newton v. Campbell, 98 N. W. 470, 472, 123 Iowa, 37.

REDEMPTIONER

Under Rev. Code, 1905, § 7465, the property sold may be redeemed within one year from the date of sale, as provided in chapter 12, for redemption of real property sold under execution by the mortgagor or his successor in interest by a creditor having a judgment or mortgage lien on the property subsequent to that on which the property was sold, and those creditors only mentioned are redemptioners entitled to redeem from previous redemptioners within 60 days. North Dakota Horse & Cattle Co. v. Serungard, 117 N. W. 453, 456, 17 N. D. 466, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 508, 138 Am. St. Rep. 717.

When land is taken by the state in lieu of taxes which the owner failed to pay, it is then optional with the owner whether to take advantage of the privilege given him by law to redeem the land or let the state keep it. He is then a "redemptioner," and he cannot divest the state of its interest in the land, except he redeem within the period of the redemption, which continues until the state has disposed of the land. He is not any longer a tax delinquent, in any proper sense; he is not even a redemption delinquent, for there is no duty on him to redeem. Honeycutt v. Colgan, 85 Pac. 165, 168, 3 Cal. App. 348.

REDELIVER

REDELIVERY

In a charter party, in absence of any parol evidence and even against any such evidence, clauses as to "delivery" simply mean that the ship is turned over for the purpose of the charter, and the term "redelivery" means that, at the end, the ship is turned back to the owner, and the hire ceases. Callahan v. Munson S. S. Co., 130 N. Y. Supp. 869, 870, 71 Misc. Rep. 525.

REDELIVERY BOND

The "redelivery bond" in replevin is a substitute for the property only in those cases where a delivery of the property cannot be had on final judgment. It stands in place of the property as security for the payment of the value thereof. O'Brien v. Curry & Whyte, 127 N. W. 411, 412, 111 Minn. 533, 137 Am. St. Rep. 563.

REDUCE

Rev. Laws, c. 203, § 9, provides that, if two or more cases are tried together in the superior court, the presiding judge may "reduce" the witness fees and other costs, but "not less than the ordinary witness fees, and other costs recoverable in one of the cases" which are so tried together shall be allowed. Held that, in reducing the costs, the amount in all the cases together is to be considered and reduced, providing that there must be left in the aggregate an amount not less than the largest sum recoverable in any of the cases. The word "reduce," in its ordinary signification, does not mean to cancel, destroy, or bring to naught, but to diminish, lower, or bring to an inferior state. Green v. Sklar, 74 N. E. 595, 596, 188 Mass. 363.

In mining

As applied to mining the word "reduce" means to bring to a specified form or condition, as to reduce rock to powder, or to deprive an ore of nonmetallic constituents. In re Martin, 106 Pac. 239, 157 Cal. 60.

In taxation

That an application that an assessment should be "wiped out" and "reduced to nothing" is an application to reduce an assessment is untenable. Standard Marine Ins. Co., Limited, of Liverpool, England, v. Board of Assessors, 49 South. 483, 484, 123 La. 717, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 59.

REDUCED RATE

A "reduced rate" given by a carrier must be one fixed lower than another rate which is offered to the public, and the sale of a return trip ticket at a price less than two single trip fares is not a reduced rate. Robert v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 127 S. W. 925, 931, 148 Mo. App. 96.

Where a carrier had but one regular rate applicable to a given class of property, it is not a "reduced" or a special rate that will serve as a consideration for an owner's risk contract, as the word "reduced" implies a comparison, and it is not permissible to go outside the subject-matter to seek the comparison; but it must be made with another higher rate on the same class of property, and, where there is no such rate, there can be no reductions. Leas v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 136 S. W. 963, 965, 157 Mo. App. 455.

The term "reduced rate" presupposes the existence of a higher regular rate available to the shipper for the carriage of the same class of property under a contract that leaves unimpaired the carrier's common-law liability. It certainly does not mean a lower rate than that provided for the transportation of some other class of property. Ficklin v. Wabash R. Co., 93 S. W. 847, 848, 117 Mo. App. 221.

REDUCTION

In mining

The word "reduction," as applied to mining, means the separation of metals from their ore. In re Martin, 106 Pac. 239, 157 Cal. 60.

REDUNDANT—REDUNDANCY

"Redundancy" is the insertion in a pleading of matters foreign, extraneous, and irrelevant to that which it is intended to answer; the fault of introducing superfluous matters into a legal instrument. Berry v. Gelser Mfg. Co., 85 Pac. 699, 700, 15 Okl. 364 (quoting and adopting the definition in Black, Law Dict. p. 1009).

"Unnecessary matter is called 'redundant' when there is an effort to reform the pleadings by striking it out. It is called 'surplusage' when there has been no such effort, in which case it should be disregarded by the court as if the pleading did not contain it." Nels v. Whitaker, 84 Pac. 699, 700, 47 Or. 517 (citing Bliss, Code Pleading [3d Ed.] § 215).

Where a claim under a special contract for services is united with one for the reasonable value of the services the allegation as to reasonable value of the services is not surplusage, neither is it redundant nor irrelevant; "redundancy" being an excessive statement or a representation. E. D. Metcalf Co. v. Gilbert, 116 Pac. 1017, 1021, 19 Wyo. 331.

REED

Rattan reeds, from which the outside has been removed, are not "in the rough," within the meaning of the Tariff Act, but are "reeds wrought or manufactured from rattans." Foppes & Partisch v. United States, 154 Fed. 868.

REED CAP

The front of the lathe sword in a loom is called the "reed cap." Chambers v. Wampanoag Mills, 75 N. E. 1093, 1094, 189 Mass. 529.

RE-ENACT

The meaning of the word "re-enactment," as used in speaking of the re-enactment of a statute, is to continue in force the particular provision unchanged and not to do away with for any purpose. Jessee v. De Shong (Tex.) 105 S. W. 1011, 1015.

RE-ENTER

In a lease requiring a deposit to secure the performance of the covenants, declaring that if any rent shall be due or unpaid, or any default shall be suffered, the landlord or her representative might lawfully re-enter, by force or otherwise, the word "re-enter" is not restricted to a re-entry by a common-law action of ejectment. Anzalone v. Paskusz, 89 N. Y. Supp. 203, 205, 96 App. Div. 188.

Though the term "re-enter," used in its strict common-law meaning, did not refer to remedies described by existing statutes, a covenant in a lease drawn in a modern form, giving the lessor the right, upon the premises becoming vacant during the term, to "re-enter, either by force or otherwise," and relet the premises as agent of the lessee, holding him liable for the deficiency, included a re-entry by the lessor by summary proceedings. Pannuto v. Foglia, 105 N. Y. Supp. 495, 497, 55 Misc. Rep. 244.

RE-ENTRY

"Re-entry," in its legal sense, is applicable only to real estate which is capable of livery of seisin, and is inapplicable to an incorporeal hereditament. Where a grantor of an oil lease conveyed only the right to drill for oil on his land, together with the oil and gas discovered, and the right to go on the land for such purposes only, subject to certain conditions, such right was an incorporeal hereditament incapable of livery of seisin, and therefore not subject to re-entry. Monaghan v. Mount, 74 N. E. 579, 582, 36 Ind. App. 188.

RE-EXCHANGE

The damages recoverable by the payee of a negotiable foreign bill of exchange protested for nonpayment against the drawer may include the face of the bill, interest thereon, protest fees, and "re-exchange," which under the law merchant is the price which the holder of a dishonored bill must pay in the currency of the country where the original bill was drawn for a good bill payable where the original bill was payable, for the same amount of money and the expenses of protest. Pavenstedt v. New York Life Ins. Co., 96 N. E. 104, 105, 203 N. Y. 91, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 805.

RE-EXECUTE

The publication of a revoked will is not a "re-execution," and a "re-execution" would not be a republication. Danley v. Jefferson, 114 N. W. 470, 471, 150 Mich. 590.

REFER

REFEREE

As court, see Court (Of Justice).

As judge, see Judge.

As judicial officer, see Judicial Officer.

As trustee, see Trustee.

Decision of referee, see Decision.

The "referee" is an officer to take the proof, reduce it to writing, and report to the court, and upon such proof the court determines the question presented. In re Lawson, 96 N. Y. Supp. 33, 35, 109 App. Div. 195.

A "referee" is an officer who exercises judicial functions, and where he is unable, by reason of mental disease, of discharging the judicial duties, such mental incapability would be ground for the vacation of a judgment directed by him. On a motion to set aside a judgment, entered on a decision, of a "referee" on the ground of his insanity, the question to be determined is whether he was unable to comprehend the nature of the act and its relations, effects, and legal consequences, without reference to his sanity on other subjects. Schoenberg & Co. v. Ullman, 99 N. Y. Supp. 650, 651, 51 Misc. Rep. 83 (citing Shelford, Law of Lunatics, p. 618; Buswell, Insanity, p. 351; United States v. Haskell, 4 Wash. C. C. 402, 26 Fed. Cas. 207; Hoyt v. Adeo [N. Y.] 3 Lans. 173).

Commissioner synonymous

In an action on a deficiency judgment on mortgage foreclosure, the word "referee," as used in an allegation that the sale was made by a referee, is synonymous with "commissioner," within Code Civ. Proc. § 726, requiring a foreclosure sale to be made by a commissioner when not made by the sheriff. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Boyd, 100 Pac. 239, 241, 155 Cal. 193.

REFERENCE

The provision in Code, § 3650, for a "reference" does not authorize an order for trial on depositions; reference being distinguishable from an order to try on depositions, in that it may be with consent or without, but is always to find the facts, or the facts and the law, and not simply to take testimony. In re County Printing of Cherokee County (Iowa) 136 N. W. 765, 768.

Recommendation synonymous

According to Webster's International Dictionary a reference is "one who or that which is referred to specifically; one of whom inquiries can be made as to the integrity, capability, and the like of another." On cross-examination, one seeking to establish a claim against the estate of decedent was asked concerning a conversation with one of the executors, and on the redirect he testified that at one time he was requested to bring references. He was asked to give the number of "recommendations" of men of business. The word "recommendations," as used, was synonymous with the word "references." Kinney v. McFaul, 98 N. W. 276, 277, 122 Iowa, 452.

REFERENCE STATUTE

"Reference statutes" are those which refer to, and by reference adopt wholly or partially, pre-existing statutes. City of Pond Creek v. Haskell, 97 Pac. 338, 357, 21 Okl. 711 (citing Phoenix Assur. Co. of London v. Fire Department of City of Montgomery, 23 South. 843, 117 Ala. 631, 42 L. R. A. 468).

REFERENDUM

The function exercised by voters or a representative body, upon whose approval the inception of a franchise grant by the Legislature is made conditional, is not the exercise of a "legislative function." It is the exercise of the function of "referendum," which is not legislative. Duffield v. Ashurst, 100 Pac. 820, 825, 12 Ariz. 360.

Const. art. 11, § 2, as amended June 4, 1906, prohibits the Legislature from amending the charter of cities and towns, the right of which is reserved to the voters thereof, and article 4, as amended June 4, 1906, by section 1a, provides that the "referendum" may be demanded by the people, which power is reserved to the legal voters of every municipality and district as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts; that the manner of exercising such power shall be prescribed by the general laws, except that the cities and towns may provide for the manner of exercising such power as to their municipal legislation. Held, that the initiative and referendum power so conferred on municipalities was not limited to the enacting or repealing of ordinances, but extended to the amendment of the city's charter. Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

REFORM

The term "reform" means to correct; to make new; or to rectify. McCorquodale v. State, 29 Sup. Ct. 146, 147, 211 U. S. 432, 435, 53 L. Ed. 269 (citing Rapalje, Law Dict. p. 1083); Id., 98 S. W. 879, 887, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 344.

Authority to "reform and correct" a judgment implies power to correct a judgment which is incomplete. McCorquodale v. State, 98 S. W. 879, 887, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 344.

To "reform" implies both the lessening of evil and the increasing of good. Little v. State ex rel. Huey, 35 South. 134, 136, 137 Ala. 659.

REFORMATION

As suit for land, see Suit for Land.

"Reformation" is not an incident to an action at law, but can be granted only in equity. 'When relief is granted also on the contract as reformed, it means only that the court of equity sees fit to go on and finish the whole case.' United States v. Milliken Imprinting Co., 26 Sup. Ct. 572, 573, 202 U. S. 168, 50 L. Ed. 980.

REFRIGERATOR

As vessel, see Vessel.

REFUND

To "refund" a thing does not necessarily mean to return the identical property received. To "refund" means to return in payment or compensation for what has been taken; to repay; to restore. Farmers' Bank of Roff v. Nichols, 106 Pac. 834, 836, 25 Okl. 547, 138 Am. St. Rep. 931, 21 Ann. Cas. 1160.

A "refunding" of a debt is merely a funding anew, and not the creation of a new debt. The purpose of Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1888, prohibiting counties from contracting any debt by loan except to erect public buildings, etc., but permitting any county having an indebtedness outstanding, either in form of warrants issued prior to December 31, 1886, or in the form of funding bonds issued prior thereto, to contract a debt for the purpose of liquidating such indebtedness, was to permit the funding of an illegal indebtedness, and any legal county indebtedness existing before the adoption of the amendment could be funded under the Constitution prior to the amendment, and hence could be refunded. Manly v. Board of Com'rs of Pueblo County, 104 Pac. 1045, 1046, 46 Colo. 491.

In view of Code, § 1417, providing that the board of supervisors shall direct the treasurer to refund any tax erroneously or illegally exacted or paid, with all interest actually paid thereon, and section 4341, which defines "mandamus" as an action to compel an inferior board to do an act, the performance of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, and provides that mandamus cannot control discretion, there can be no recovery in mandamus to compel a board of supervisors to order the payment of interest on taxes erroneously exacted founded on section 1417; the section providing merely for the return of interest paid, and the word "refund" meaning to pay back, to restore. Home Sav. Bank v. Morris, 120 N. W. 100, 101, 141 Iowa, 560.

In the Ohio Statute providing that township funds may be deposited in some bank, subject to the order of the treasurer, and declaring that the failure of the bank to refund the money deposited shall not release the treasurer from responsibility, the word "refund" is used in its ordinary sense; that is, to repay. It does not mean that the identical money deposited is to be returned. A deposit by a township treasurer of separate township funds in a bank under the statute is an ordinary, and not a special, trust deposit, and hence was not entitled to a preference on the insolvency of the bank. In re Smart, 136 Fed. 974, 976.

A contract of sale of a steam shovel for use by the buyer in excavating an irrigation ditch stipulated that the seller guaranteed the same to be in good working condition, and that in the event of not proving so will refund all money paid by the buyer. The seller was not the manufacturer nor a dealer, but merely bought and sold the shovel for the profit arising on a resale. The buyer knew that fact. Neither party had ever seen the shovel and had no personal knowledge of its condition. The buyer, on finding that the shovel did not conform to the warranty and was worthless, notified the seller thereof and demanded an immediate refund of the amount paid on the price. Held, that the seller was liable only to repay the price paid; the word "refund" meaning to pay back by the party who has received it to the party who has paid money which ought not to have been paid. Shaw v. Water Supply & Storage Co., 128 Pac. 480, 481, 23 Colo. App. 110.

As debt

See Debts.

REFUSE

See Dry Refuse.

It is not a strained construction of Rev. Laws, c. 25, § 14, providing that a town may contract for the disposal of its garbage, refuse, and offal, to include ashes under the term "refuse." This word is defined by the Century Dictionary as "that which is refused or rejected; waste or useless matter; the worst or meanest part; rubbish." Ashes have been held to be included within the meaning of the word "refuse," in the English case of Gay v. Cadby, 2 C. P. D. 391. Haley v. City of Boston, 77 N. E. 888, 889, 191 Mass. 291, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005.

REFUSE—REFUSAL

See Absolute Refusal to Pay; First Refusal; Neglect and Refusal; Offer and Refusal.

Every refusal, see Every.

Willful refusal, see Willful—Willfully.

To "refuse" is literally to pour back, viz., to send back. The word "refusal," in its derivative and intrinsic meaning, includes the idea of absolute rejection. Generally speaking, when a service contemplates the doing of a definite work, there may be a "refusal" to serve after one has begun the work, which "refusal" may include the idea of an absolute rejection of the service. Thus, the resignation of a referee after his appointment and service for a considerable time is a "refusal" to serve, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1011, requiring the court to appoint another referee, when the referee named in the stipulation refuses to serve. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 849, 850, 105 App. Div. 88 (citing Crabb, Syn.; Cent. Dict.).

St. 1906, c. 516, § 5, providing for an application to the Board of Railroad Commissioners by an electric railroad company for a certificate of public convenience and necessity, provides that, if the board refuse to issue such certificate, no further proceedings shall be had, but that the application may be renewed after one year from the date of such refusal. Held, that the dismissal of an application at the request of the petitioners because of an informality was not a "refusal" of it, within the statute. Inhabitants of Weston v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 91 N. E. 303, 304, 205 Mass. 94.

Where a shipper was permitted to place lumber on a car, but the carrier refused to receive it for shipment, this was a "refusal to receive" it, within Revised 1905, § 2631, imposing a penalty for such refusal. Garrison v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. E. 578, 579, 150 N. C. 575.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 4494, requires railroad corporations to take and transport property on the due payment of the legal freight. Article 4496 provides that on refusal so to transport any property, or to deliver the same at the regular appointed time, the railroad shall pay to the party aggrieved all damages sustained thereby, with costs of suit, etc. Held, that the words on "the refusal," etc., "so to take," etc., refer to the preceding article and mean in case of the refusal to take under the conditions prescribed in such article. Dorrance & Co. v. International & G. N. R. Co., 125 S. W. 561, 563, 103 Tex. 200.

"Neglect," within Rev. St. 1899, § 2228, declaring that every able-bodied married man who shall "neglect" or "refuse" to support his family shall be deemed a "vagrant," arises from an inattentive state of mind, want of care for, and utter disregard of the obligation resting on the husband to support his family, whereas the word "refuse" imports a willful disavowal or disregard of such obligation; and hence where a physician of good habits endeavored to establish a practice, maintained an office where he waited for patients, and attended to such calls as he had, contributing his entire income from his practice to the support of his wife and himself, he was not a "vagrant," so as to entitle his wife to a divorce under section 2921, declaring that, when the husband shall be guilty of such conduct as to constitute him a "vagrant," within the meaning of the law respecting "vagrants," the wife may be divorced, though he did not succeed in earning enough to support both of them, and she was compelled to contribute to their support from her separate means. Gallemore v. Gallemore, 91 S. W. 406, 410, 115 Mo. App. 179.

Where plaintiff alleged that defendant, a constable, "refused and wholly failed" to execute two writs for the seizure of personal property, etc., the allegation being conjunctive, plaintiff was bound to prove, not only that the constable failed to exercise due diligence, but that he refused to execute the process. Reeder v. Huffman, 41 South. 177, 148 Ala. 472 (citing Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dancy, 11 South. 796, 97 Ala. 338).

Demand, offer, or notice implied

"A party cannot be said to refuse to do a thing of which he knows nothing. 'Refusal' implies demand, knowledge, or notice." Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hill, 20 Sup. Ct. 914, 915, 178 U. S. 347, 350, 44 L. Ed. 1097.

"Refusal" is the denial of anything demanded, solicited, etc.; the verb "refused" means to deny a request, demand, invitation, or command, to decline to do what is solicited, claimed, or commanded. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 63 Atl. 705, 707, 68 N. J. Eq. 740 (quoting Webst. Dict.). Under a statute providing for notice to an owner by a materialman when a contractor "refuses" to pay the materialman in order to preserve a materialman's lien, the notice is defective where it states a refusal of the contractor to pay the sum demanded, but fails to state that such refusal was made upon demand. Id., 59 Atl. 253, 258, 68 N. J. Eq. 315.

A fair construction of Pol. Code, § 1699, providing that any teacher whose salary is withheld may appeal to the superintendent of public instruction, who shall pronounce a final judgment advising the county superintendent, and that, upon receiving such judgment, the superintendent, if the judgment is in favor of the teacher, shall, in case the trustees refuse to issue an order for such salary, issue his requisition in favor of the teacher, "seems to require a notice of the final judgment to be given to the trustees so that they may act in conformity with it and issue their warrant, because a 'refusal' presupposes a demand. and it is only on a refusal by the trustees that the county superintendent can act." Williams v. Bagnelle, 72 Pac. 408, 409, 138 Cal. 699.

As used in Ann. St. 1906, § 729, providing that, if the judge refuse to sign a bill of exceptions because it is untrue, he shall certify thereon under his hand the cause of such refusal, the word "refuse" implies that some suggestion should be made to the judge to sign the bill or do otherwise, so that where a judge determined that a bill submitted to him within the time prescribed was untrue, but exceptor made no request within such time that the judge allow the bill or indorse his refusal thereon, with his reasons for so doing, the judge was not remiss in omitting to indorse his refusal, etc., until after the time for allowing and filing the bill had expired. State ex rel. Winsor v. Taylor, 114 S. W. 1029, 1032, 134 Mo. App. 430.

The word "refuse" of itself imports a request declined, and it is used in this sense in Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2299, 2301, imposing a penalty on railroad companies if they should "refuse" to put on sale tickets for points on connecting lines. Wimberly v. Georgia Southern & F. R. Co., 63 S. E. 29, 31, 5 Ga. App. 263.

The terms "refusing" and "failing" as used in Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 33, § 24, providing that any person who feels aggrieved by the action of any board of registry in "refusing" to register him as a qualified voter, or in erasing or misspelling his name, or that of any person on the registry or in registering, or "failing" to erase the name of any fictitious, deceased, or disqualified person, etc., have reference to what may be termed negative action in cases that have been specifically brought before the judgment of the board of registry. Collier v. Carter, 60 Atl. 104, 105, 100 Md. 381.

As failure

In an action by a passenger for his expulsion from a railroad train, the defendant's plea, averred that, when the conductor demanded of him his ticket or fare, plaintiff "refused" and "willfully failed" to present or tender any ticket or fare, and the conductor thereupon ejected him, and plaintiff's replication alleged that, when the conductor demanded his ticket or fare, he had misplaced his ticket in his clothing, and the conductor ejected him without giving him a reasonable time within which to produce the ticket. Held that, as the replication was in the nature of a confession and avoidance, it was insufficient, for, while the word "fail" at times is synonymous with "refuse," the word "refuse" here means to decline to accept, or reject, and the words "willfully fail" mean an intentional neglect, and so it does not show that plaintiff attempted to produce his ticket or notified the conductor that he had one, and requested reasonable time within which to search for his ticket, which was necessary before he could complain of his ejection. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mason, 58 South. 963, 965, 4 Ala. App. 353 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 631; 8 Words and Phrases, p. 7468).

Failure by a property owner to lay sidewalks within the time prescribed in an order requiring their construction, and with which he has been served, amounts to a refusal within Bluefield City Charter, § 38, as amended by Acts 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 65, c. 3), providing that, if a property owner shall refuse to lay a sidewalk, the board of supervisors may have the same done, and no express refusal need be shown. City of Bluefield v. McClaugherty, 63 S. E. 363, 364, 64 W. Va. 536.

Negotiable Instruments Law, § 137 (P. L. 1901, p. 213; 3 Purd. Dig. [13th Ed.] p. 3307), providing that, where a drawee to whom a bill is delivered for acceptance "refuses," within 24 hours after such delivery, or such other period as the holder may allow, to return the bill accepted or nonaccepted to the holder, he will be deemed to have accepted it, does not contemplate a tortious refusal to return, amounting to a conversion, the presentation for acceptance being regarded as a demand for acceptance, which, when the bill is retained by the drawee, implies a demand for its return within the time specified by the statute, making a neglect or failure to return a refusal to return; and hence, where a drawee bank failed to return checks to the collecting bank within 24 hours after their delivery to it, it must be deemed to have accepted the checks, and is liable to the holder thereon. Wisner v. First Nat. Bank of Gallitzin, 68 Atl. 955, 957, 959, 220 Pa. 21, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1266.

An averment that a master promised to repair machinery, but failed and "refused" to do so, is not inconsistent with the theory that the promise induced the servant to incur a known danger. The definition in Webster's International Dictionary of "refuse" is "not to comply with," and "the words 'refusing to comply' may in general have the same operation in law as the words 'failing to comply' would have." Virginia & N. C. Wheel Co. v. Harris, 49 S. E. 991, 993, 103 Va. 708 (quoting and adopting definition in Taylor v. Mason, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 327, 6 L. Ed. 101).

The word "failed," as used in an instruction that a defendant, after being notified to produce books and papers has "failed" to do so, is equivalent to "refused." F. R. Patch Mfg. Co. v. Protection Lodge No. 215, International Ass'n of Machinists, 60 Atl. 74, 83, 77 Vt. 294, 107 Am. St. Rep. 765.

The words "fail," "refuse," and "neglect," as used in St. 1903, §§ 795-797, providing that any railroad company which "shall fail, refuse and neglect to comply with the provisions" of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, are used interchangeably, and mean something more than an unavoidable and accidental violation of the statute. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 84 S. W. 566, 568, 119 Ky. 519.

To pay fare

A passenger who refuses to obey a rule of the carrier excluding dogs from passenger coaches while carrying them for hire in baggage cars does not evade the payment of fare within Rev. Laws, c. 108, § 18, empowering railroad police officers to arrest a passenger refusing to pay fare, and the arrest of the passenger for evading fare is illegal. Hull v. Boston & M. R. R., 96 N. E. 53, 59, 210 Mass. 159, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 406, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1147.

REGISTER

"Record" and "register," as used in Revision of 1846 (Nixon's Dig. pp. 526, 527), relating to the registration of mortgages, are synonymous. Manchester Building & Loan Ass'n v. Beardsley, 66 Atl. 1, 4, 72 N. J. Eq. 714.

The word "registered," as used in Acts 1898-99, p. 34, providing that a judgment filed and registered by the judge of probate shall be a lien on the debtor's lands, means recorded. Emrich v. Gilbert Mfg. Co., 35 South. 322, 325, 138 Ala. 316.

REGISTER (Noun)

As judge, see Judge (In Law).

REGISTERED HOLDER

Certificates issued by a company provided for payment of a certain sum at the office of a trust company in semiannual installments; that the failure to pay any installment when due should make all future installments at once due and payable; that until such default occurred the company might at any time discharge its liability by paying the amount of all future installments to the trust company in trust to pay the same to the "registered holders" of the certificates. Held, that the "registered holder" was the party appearing on the book of the trust company as the holder of the paper. Strickland v. National Salt Co., 76 Atl. 1048, 1050, 77 N. J. Eq. 328.

REGISTERED PHYSICIAN

Accused filed his diploma with the county clerk in 1880 pursuant to Act April 28, 1877 (Laws 1877, p. 343), relating to the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery, and was thereupon registered as a physician and received a license from the county clerk. Laws 1883, p. 115, provided that, if a physician were a graduate of medicine, he should present his diploma to the State Board of Health for verification, and that the board, upon finding the diploma genuine, should issue him a license. The act exempted those who had been practicing medicine five years in the state prior to its enactment. Laws 1901, p. 208, § 5 (Ann. St. 1906, § 8518-5), repealed Acts 1883, p. 115, and provided that any person, except "physicians now registered," practicing medicine or surgery in the state without first obtaining a license from the State Board of Health, should be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that though accused had not been practicing in the state five years at the enactment of the act of 1883, and may have been under such act not entitled to practice without being registered as therein prescribed, yet, inasmuch as he was duly registered under Acts 1877, p. 343, he was subsequent to the enactment of the act of 1901, which repealed the act of 1883, a "physician now registered" within the act of 1901, and entitled to practice without obtaining a license from the State Board of Health; no act of the Legislature having revoked the license granted him in 1880. State v. Carson, 132 S. W. 587, 589, 231 Mo. 1.

REGISTERED TAXES

As municipal claim, see Municipal Claim.

REGISTERED TONNAGE

The phrase "registered tonnage" is applied indiscriminately to the three classes of registered vessels, enrolled vessels, and licensed vessels, and means merely the capacity that has been ascertained and registered as provided by law, no matter what the size or business of the ship may be. "Registered tonnage" is the language that is always used, whether the ship is engaged in foreign trade, or in domestic trade, or in the coasting trade or fisheries. Wheaton v. Weston & Co., 128 Fed. 151, 153.

REGISTERED VOTER

As qualified elector, see Qualified Elector.

As qualified voter, see Qualified Voter.

The terms "legal voters" and "qualified electors" are interchangeable, but are not equivalent to "registered voters," as used in Laws 1905, p. 41, providing for the calling of an election to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited on petition of 10 per cent. of the registered voters. The phrase "legal voters" is a synonym for "registered voters," as used in the act. Roesch v. Henry, 103 Pac. 439, 440, 441, 54 Or. 230.

A finding by the county court in an order calling the election that a petition for a local option election was signed by "legal" voters, when L. O. L. § 4920, requires such petition to be signed by "registered" voters, would not invalidate the election; "legal" voters being synonymous with "registered" voters as used in the statute. State v. Billups, 127 Pac. 686, 689, 63 Or. 277.

Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 3, 4, provide the qualifications of voters and declare that every person shall be able to read and write, unless registered under another clause, before being entitled "to register," as required by section 3, and that, "before he shall be entitled to 'vote,' he shall have paid his poll tax for the previous year." Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 233, § 7, requires an order for a municipal election to determine whether saloons shall be licensed in lieu of a city dispensary on petition of one-third of the "registered voters" therein for the preceding municipal election, and section 9 declares that "any person entitled to vote for," etc., "shall have the right to vote at such election." Held, that "registered voters" did not include all persons whose names were on the permanent registration roll at the preceding municipal election, but only included those who had paid their poll tax as required and were entitled to vote. Pace v. City of Raleigh, 52 S. E. 277, 278, 282, 140 N. C. 65.

REGISTRATION

See Special Registration; Subsequent Registration.

"Registration" is the method of proof prescribed for ascertaining the electors who are qualified to cast votes. It is a part of the machinery of elections, and is a reasonable regulation, which conduces to their orderly conduct and fairness. People ex rel. Maher v. Carleton, 85 N. Y. Supp. 22, 23, 41 Misc. Rep. 523.

REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE

The "registration certificate" provided for by an act requiring a voter, as a condition of voting, to produce to election officers a certificate of registration, or, in case of its loss, a duplicate certificate from the county clerk, is not conclusive of the holder's right to vote, although it is conclusive as to the fact that the person named therein has been registered. Yates v. Collins, 82 S. W. 282, 284, 118 Ky. 682.

REGRATING

"Regrating" is the buying of corn or other dead victual in any market and selling it again in the same market. Dutton v. City of Knoxville, 113 S. W. 381, 383, 121 Tenn. 25, 130 Am. St. Rep. 748, 16 Ann. Cas. 1028.

REGRET

Reputable not synonymous

"Regular" and 'reputable are not synonymous words. 'Regular' is defined as conformed to or made in accordance with a rule; agreeable to an established rule, law, type, or principal, to a prescribed mode, or to established customary form. 'Reputable' is defined as being in good repute; held in esteem; estimable." Wise v. State Veterinary Board, 101 N. W. 562, 564, 138 Mich. 428 (citing Cent. Dict.).

REGULAR BUSINESS

See Regular Course of Business; Regular Real Estate Business.

A nonresident of a county owned property there which he managed and received the rents from, and also collected rent from property which he owned as cotenant with another, receiving a commission from his cotenant for collecting the latter's share. He formerly lived and transacted business in the county, having an office in a dwelling house owned by him, and, when he was in the county collecting rents, he called at the office, upon which his business sign still remained. Held, that he was not engaged in "regular business" or habitual avocation or employment, within Code, art. 75, § 132, authorizing any one so engaged to be sued in the county in which the business is carried on. State, to Use of Gemundt, v. Shipley, 57 Atl. 12, 13, 98 Md. 657.

REGULAR CHAIN OF TITLE

In respect to Pub. Acts 1899, p. 317, Act No. 204, the court says: "There is nothing in the law of 1899 that required the purchaser to reconvey to any one except the owner of the regular title. There is nothing to indicate an intention to give such a right to the holders of earlier tax titles, unless we are to say that such holder is a 'grantee under the last recorded deed in the regular chain of title to the land.' We are of the opinion that by 'regular chain of title' was meant the chain of title based upon the patent, and that one claiming under another tax title was not intended to be included although we can imagine cases where it would be as important that he should be included (e. g., where his tax title has been sustained by law, and he is in possession under it), and in any case it would seem just that he should be. * * * We think it more probable and more reasonable that the term 'regular title' was used with reference to the original government title, and believe that to be the meaning, as generally understood by lawyers." Griffin v. Jackson, 108 N. W. 438, 440, 145 Mich. 23, 9 Ann. Cas. 74.

REGULAR CLERK

The term "regular clerk," within Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 636, c. 466) § 1543, relating to the removal of regular clerks, "means one employed in the duty of keeping the records or accounts or in doing the writing which relates to the ordinary conduct or business details of the department." The property clerk, who, by Greater New York Charter, §§ 331-336 (Laws 1901, pp. 141-143, c. 466), is required to take charge of property stolen or embezzled which comes into the hands of the police, and property taken from prisoners, or lost or abandoned, and to advertise such property, and to sell it in case no claimant appears, and who is required to give security for the faithful performance of his duties, is not a "regular clerk," within the meaning of such section 1543, although he is required to keep a book of registry, description, and disposition of the property in his hands. People ex rel. Doonan v. McAdoo, 74 N. E. 1123, 181 N. Y. 548; People ex rel. Blatchford v. McAdoo, 91 N. Y. Supp. 553, 554, 101 App. Div. 183.

The words "regular clerk" as used in New York City Charter (Laws 1901, p. 636, c. 466) § 1543, providing that no "regular clerk" or person holding a position in the classified municipal civil service, subject to competitive examination, shall be removed until he has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation, etc., are used in their popular sense, and include only such positions as did not require any other qualification than the ability to perform purely clerical work. A regular clerkship is a "position in the classified municipal civil service subject to competitive examination." People ex rel. Corkill v. McAdoo, 99 N. Y. Supp. 324, 325, 113 App. Div. 770 (citing People v. Board of Fire Com'rs of City of New York, 73 N. Y. 437; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs of City of New York, 86 N. Y. 149; Chittenden v. Wurster, 46 N. E. 857, 152 N. Y. 345, 37 L. R. A. 809).

Laws 1911, c. 641, provided for a chief clerk in charge of the law department in the county clerk's office of Kings county, amending the act to make the office of county clerk of the county of Kings a salaried office, and regulating the management thereof. It fixed the salaries to be paid to assistants, clerks, employes, or subordinates employed in the office, declaring that the deputy clerk should receive $5,000, a year, expert of records $3,000, assistant deputy county clerk $2,500, and the chief clerk in charge of the law department $2,500. It was the duty of the clerk of the law department to pass on the papers for and enter judgment in law and equity cases, to tax costs, cancel notice of pendency of action, satisfy judgments and liens, issue transcripts and satisfy the same, certify to the correctness of copies, and issue executions and state writs. Held, that the chief clerk in charge of the law department was a "regular clerk," within Civil Service Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 7) § 22, and was therefore not subject to removal by the county clerk without notice and an opportunity to explain charges for which he was dismissed. In re Donnelly, 137 N. Y. Supp. 789, 790.

REGULAR COLLEGE

See Regular School or College.

REGULAR COURSE OF BUSINESS

Where a tenant, conducting both a wholesale and retail business, the former only amounting to 10 to 15 per cent. of its entire sales, offered his entire stock for sale for the purpose of closing out his business, and sold the same in such lots and quantities as suited his purchasers, disposing of the entire quantity within 42 days, such sales were not made in the ordinary course of business, within Rev. St. 1895, arts. 3251 and 3238, providing that all persons leasing any storehouse shall have a lien on the property of the tenant for the rents, and providing that such lien shall not attach to goods or merchandise sold or delivered in the "regular course of business." Freeman v. Collier Racket Co., 101 S. W. 202, 204, 100 Tex. 475. "Regular course of business," as used in such statute, does not apply to a sale of the whole stock of goods by the tenant with a view of going out of business in a closing out sale. Freeman v. Collier Racket Co., 105 S. W. 1129, 1130, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 177.

REGULAR ELECTION

An election at which judges of the district court are to be chosen for a full term in any of the judicial districts of the state, is, as to that office, a "regular election" within the meaning of Const. art. 3, § 11, providing that, in case of vacancy of any judicial office, it shall be filled by appointment of the Governor until the next regular election that may occur more than 30 days after the vacancy. Wendorff v. Dill, 112 Pac. 588, 83 Kan. 782.

REGULAR ENGAGEMENT

Where a manager of a theater wired a theatrical agency to offer plaintiff a regular engagement, commencing the first week in July, to which the agency replied that plaintiff could come until September 1st, and the manager then wired the agency that he could not consider plaintiff for the summer only, but would give $100 a week until September, and $125 after that date, which offer was accepted, the telegrams themselves showed that the engagement was at least for some definite period extending beyond the summer, and justified evidence that in the theatrical business the words "regular engagement" had a definite meaning, and as applied to an engagement in a theater which ran throughout the year meant an engagement for 52 weeks. Lewis v. Blackwood, 137 N. Y. Supp. 1061, 1063, 153 App. Div. 36.

REGULAR INTERVAL

Under Pol. Code, § 4460, defining a "newspaper of general circulation" as one which shall have been established, printed, and published at regular intervals for at least one year preceding the date of publication, where a newspaper had been published weekly for part of a year and daily for the balance of the year preceding the filing of a petition to have it declared a newspaper of general circulation, it was published at "regular intervals" for one year, within the statute, which does not require the interval between the dates of publication to be equal from beginning to end, but only to be regular, and not spasmodic or occasional. In re Tribune Pub.

Co. of Palo Alto, 108 Pac. 667, 12 Cal. App. 754.

REGULAR MEETING

The meeting of the board of county commissioners at which they are required to elect a chairman (Gen. St. 1901, § 1630) is a "regular meeting" within the meaning of that phrase as used in the provision that road petitions shall be presented at regular meetings (section 6018) and road viewers be then appointed. Molyneux v. Grimes, 98 Pac. 278, 280, 78 Kan. 830.

Where the rules of a common council require action at two regular meetings, and fix the days for the "regular meetings," action had on a day not so fixed is nugatory, where the proceedings are judicial in character, though all the members of the board have agreed to meet on the latter day; such meeting not being a regular one. Erie R. Co. v. City of Paterson, 76 Atl. 1065, 1066, 79 N. J. Law, 512.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 5615, providing that the terms "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the county court, as used in the article, shall include the regular sessions of such court commencing on the first Monday in February, etc., as well as any adjourned term provided for by the court when in session, fixing the date of hearing objections to an assessment of benefits at an adjourned session of the county court was sufficient within Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, contained in the same chapter and article, requiring such date to be fixed at "the next regular term" of the county court. State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148, 152, 245 Mo. 680.

REGULAR PASSENGER TRAIN

See, also, Regular Train.

The term "passenger train" includes all passenger trains, regular and irregular, not only trains that move every day on scheduled time, but excursion trains, special trains, extra trains, etc.; whereas, the term "regular passenger train" means a passenger train on the regular published schedule. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 1176, 219 Mo. 156 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6038).

REGULAR REAL ESTATE BUSINESS

Persons engaged in the management of real property are commonly said to be engaged in the "real estate business." Bennett v. Hebbard, 68 Atl. 537, 74 N. H. 411.

Where, under the statute which authorizes cities of the third class to impose a license tax upon "real estate agents," the council of such a city enacts an ordinance imposing a license tax upon the business of "real estate," and a real estate agent thereafter continues to conduct his business within said city without a license, and in such business makes a contract to find a buyer of real estate for a compensation, such ordinance does not render the contract illegal and void. Manker v. Tough, 98 Pac. 793, 794, 79 Kan. 46, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 17 Ann. Cas. 208.

REGULAR SCHOOL OR COLLEGE

The word "regular" means conformed to or made in accordance with a rule, agreeable to an established rule, law, type, or principle, and is not synonymous with the word "reputable," which means being in good repute, held in esteem, estimable; and an educational institution properly incorporated under the provisions of the law is a "regular school or college," within the meaning of the law; and the state veterinary board created by Pub. Acts 1899, No. 191, with authority to elect a secretary and to furnish him a list of all "regular colleges and schools of veterinary medicine," has no power to determine whether a college of veterinary medicine and surgery, existing under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 218, is a regular school or college, and cannot refuse a certificate to practice to a person holding a diploma from such college. Wise v. State Veterinary Board, 101 N. Y. 562, 563, 138 Mich. 428.

REGULAR SESSION

"Regular session," as used in a statute regulating sessions of county commissioners, may apply to a session held by adjournment from a regular session. Inhabitants of Bethel v. Oxford County Com'rs, 60 Me. 535, 538.

Const. art. 3, § 4, that the legislative districts shall be altered by the Legislature at the "first regular session" after the return of every 10-year enumeration, does not invalidate an apportionment made at an extraordinary session of the Legislature in 1907, after the court had declared invalid the apportionment of 1906 based on the census of 1905; the phrase "first regular session" merely prescribing when the Legislature is first empowered to make an apportionment after a census. In re Reynolds, 96 N. E. 87, 90, 202 N. Y. 430.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 5615, providing that the terms "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the county court, as used in the article, shall include the regular sessions of such court commencing on the first Monday in February, etc., as well as any adjourned term provided for by the court when in session, fixing the date of hearing objections to an assessment of benefits at an adjourned session of the county court was sufficient within Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, contained in the same chapter and article, requiring such date to be fixed at "the next regular term" of the county court. State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148, 152, 245 Mo. 680.

Under County Law, Laws 1892, p. 1750, c. 686, § 23, providing that each supervisor shall receive $4 per day for attending sessions of the board, and mileage for once going and returning between his residence and the place of meeting for each regular and special session, and section 10 (page 1745), providing that the board shall meet annually, may hold special meetings, and may adjourn from time to time, the terms "annual meeting" and "regular session" are synonymous, and a "regular" or "special" session is measured by its actual duration; each day not being a session, within section 23, so as to entitle the supervisors to mileage for each day's actual attendance at sessions of their boards. Wallace v. Jones, 107 N. Y. S. 288, 290, 122 App. Div. 497.

REGULAR STATION

The words "regular station," as used in Railroad Commission Act (Laws 1907, p. 75) § 22, requiring every railroad to provide and maintain adequate and suitable depot and toilet buildings at its regular stations where an agent is maintained, means a place established on the road where trains are regularly stopped to receive and discharge passengers and freight, and where the carrier keeps an agent for the transaction of business, so that, in an action against a railroad company for a penalty for failure to construct a depot building pursuant to an order of the Railroad Commission, it may be inferred, from an averment that the station is a "regular station," that defendant maintains an agent there. State v. Corvallis & E. R. Co., 117 Pac. 980, 981, 59 Or. 450.

A railway station was a "flag station," and not a "regular station," within Kirby's Dig. § 6612, authorizing railroad companies to make special charges to passengers boarding or alighting at other than regular stations, where the company had no depot there and no joint agency with the railroad which it crossed and did not use the other company's depot, though trains stopped at the crossing opposite the depot and passengers were received and discharged there on signal, and freight, express, and mail matter was received there; no tickets, bills of lading nor baggage checks being issued, and such stations being designated "flag stations" by the railroad, as distinguished from regular stations at which tickets were sold, baggage checked, bills of lading issued, and station houses and agents were maintained. Clark v. Jonesboro, L. C. & E. R. Co., 112 S. W. 961, 962, 87 Ark. 385 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6039, 6644).

REGULAR TERM

See, also, Next Regular Term.

A "regular term" of court, within the meaning of section 8497, Rev. Codes 1899, which, in the absence of good cause shown, requires the dismissal of a prosecution when an information is not filed at the next regular term after the defendant's commitment, means a jury term as distinguished from a statutory term without a jury. State v. Foster, 105 N. W. 938, 940, 14 N. D. 561.

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 5615, providing that the terms "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the county court, as used in the article, shall include the regular sessions of such court commencing on the first Monday in February, etc., as well as any adjourned term provided for by the court when in session, fixing the date of hearing objections to an assessment of benefits at an adjourned session of the county court was sufficient within Rev. St. 1909, § 5587, contained in the same chapter and article, requiring such date to be fixed at "the next regular term" of the county court. State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148, 152, 245 Mo. 680.

REGULAR TERMS

Where defendants, in the business of canning tomatoes, authorized a broker to dispose of the product in the Chicago market, and on the making of a sale the "bought" note given by the purchaser to the broker called for the "usual guaranty against swells and quality," and specified "terms regular, less one-half per cent. cash, ten days," but the "sold" note delivered by the broker to the purchaser did not contain such requirements, but called for "standard" tomatoes and "cash, less one and one-half per cent.," the notes did not fail to show a contract, on the theory that there was a material variance between the notes; it appearing that in the Chicago market, according to the usages of the trade, all such sales were made on "regular terms," meaning that the buyer was to have a credit of 60 days, with a discount privilege of 1½ per cent. in case of cash payment within 10 days, that a guaranty against swelling of the cans was customary, and that a guaranty of quality meant a "standard" can. Eau Claire Canning Co. v. Western Brokerage Co., 73 N. E. 430, 437, 213 Ill. 561.

REGULAR TITLE

In respect to Pub. Acts 1899, p. 317, Act No. 204, the court says: "There is nothing in the law of 1899 that required the purchaser to reconvey to any one except the owner of the regular title. There is nothing to indicate an intention to give such a right to the holders of earlier tax titles, unless we are to say that such holder is a 'grantee under the last recorded deed in the regular chain of title to the land.' We are of the opinion that by 'regular chain of title' was meant the chain of title based upon the patent, and that one claiming under another tax title was not intended to be included, although we can imagine cases where it would be as important that he should be included (e. g., where his tax title has been sustained by law, and he is in possession under it), and in any case it would seem just that he should be. * * * We think it more probable and more reasonable that the term 'regular title' was used with reference to the original government title, and believe that to be the meaning, as generally understood by lawyers." Griffin v. Jackson, 103 N. W. 438, 440, 145 Mich. 23, 9 Ann. Cas. 74.

REGULAR TRAIN

See, also, Regular Passenger Train.

The word "regular," when used to designate a railroad train, applies to the operation of the train whether it be a freight or a passenger train, but if it has its designated place on the published schedule, and if it ordinarily arrives and leaves as designated in that place, it is a regular train. Thus there may be two passenger trains, one regular and the other irregular, one that is scheduled on the time-table and the other not; yet the irregular train is as much a passenger train as the regular one. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 1176, 219 Mo. 156.

REGULAR TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS

See Office for the Regular Transaction of Business in Person.

REGULARLY

As promptly, see Promptly.

"Regularly," as used in Acts 1891, p. 364, c. 150, § 1, providing "that all railroads * * * having more than two tracks across any public highway * * * and used for switching purposes exclusively or regularly * * * shall, upon the order of the county commissioners, * * * place a flagman at said crossing," means in conformity with the established mode, and as a part of the routine business done at that point, slight variations in the intervals between particular acts of switching being immaterial, and does not mean at certain times or intervals of time according to some certain uniform and well-established practice. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. State, 82 N. E. 1017, 1019, 40 Ind. App. 695.

REGULARLY ADMIT TO PRACTICE

An applicant admitted to practice law in the district and inferior courts of the state by the decision of a district court, prior to Laws 1903, c. 64, and who has not been disbarred, continues after the enactment of that chapter to be "regularly admitted to practice" law within the state within Gen. Stat. 1909, § 2225. Hanson v. Grattan, 115 Pac. 646, 647, 84 Kan. 843, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240.

REGULARLY CONDUCT

In the statute forbidding transportation of liquors by persons not "regularly conducting" a general express business, the word "regularly" means fixedness and permanence in the character of the business, and also indicates stated times and established routes of conveyance. Commonwealth v. People's Express Co., 88 N. E. 420, 421, 426, 201 Mass. 564, 131 Am. St. Rep. 416.

Laws 1907, p. 645, c. 344, § 14, now Public Health Law (Consol. Laws, c. 45 [Laws 1909, c. 49]) § 173, provides that any person actively engaged in the practice of osteopathy in the state, who presents to the Board of Regents satisfactory evidence that he is a graduate in good standing of a "regularly conducted" school of osteopathy having a certain curriculum, which facts shall be shown by a diploma, etc., shall, upon application and payment of the fee, be licensed to practice. Relator presented, upon his application for a license to practice, a diploma from a college of osteopathy, which was a stock corporation organized under the corporation laws of another state, and which had not obtained the certificate from the Secretary of State required by General Corporation Law (now Consol. Laws, c. 23 [Laws 1909, c. 28]) § 15, as a condition precedent to doing business here, and had not received permission from the Regents of the University to do business under its corporate name, or assume the name of "college," or confer diplomas or degrees, as required by University Law (Laws 1892, p. 781, c. 378) § 33, as amended, now Education Law (Consol. Laws, c. 16 [Laws 1909, c. 21]) § 1104, as a condition precedent to such acts. Held, that the relator's college was not a "regularly conducted college," within the statute, it not having complied with the requirements for doing business within the state as a stock corporation, or for conferring diplomas, etc.; "regularly," as used in the statute, meaning "duly," "lawfully," or "legally." People ex rel. Scott v. Reid, 119 N. Y. Supp. 886, 869, 135 App. Div. 89.

REGULARLY ENTER

Where a bill for divorce contained no affidavit that there was no collusion between the parties, as required by Comp. Laws, § 8625, a default entered on nonappearance of the defendant was not "regularly entered," under a court rule providing that, in cases where personal service shall have been made and proceedings taken after default, the default shall not be set aside unless the application shall be made within six months after the default is "regularly entered," and was therefore subject to vacation after that time. McWilliams v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 105 N. W. 611, 612, 142 Mich. 225.

REGULARLY ESTABLISH

St. 1905, p. 58, c. 65, § 1, provides for an annual tax levy to support "regularly established high schools of the state," and by section 5 limits the benefits of the high school fund to high schools that "have been organized under the laws of the state or have been recognized as existing under the high school law of the state." "By this provision, the act furnished its own definition of the phrase 'regularly established high schools of the state,' used in the earlier sections, and impresses the character of regularly established high schools upon schools which comply with either of the last-quoted requirements of section 5." Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco v. Hyatt, 93 Pac. 117, 119, 152 Cal. 515.

REGULARLY FILE

Laws 1907, c. 57, § 22, provides that all entries, orders, and rulings of record in the clerk's office and all papers regularly filed in a cause shall be a part of the record proper, and Comp. Laws 1897, § 2997, provides that all instructions demanded must be filed and shall become a part of the record. Held, that the phrase "all papers regularly filed in a cause" only included papers which by statute or order of court are required or directed to be filed, the word "regularly" meaning in a regular manner, in a way or method according to rule or established mode, so that an instruction given by the judge upon his own motion in a criminal case is not a part of the record on appeal, so as to be reviewable unless embodied in a bill of exceptions, though it is included in the transcript. Territory v. McGrath, 114 Pac. 364, 367, 16 N. M. 202 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6040).

REGULARLY FORWARD

Where plaintiff's contract was to "promptly" forward information to defendant, its prayer, merely requiring it to be found that its information was "regularly" forwarded, was defective; "regularly" generally meaning merely in compliance with some prescribed rule, without regard to the idea of absence of unnecessary delay embodied in "promptly." F. W. Dodge Co. v. H. A. Hughes Co., 72 Atl. 1036, 1039, 110 Md. 374.

REGULARLY HELD

Const. art. 4, §§ 16, 17, provide for the election of a clerk of the superior court for each county, in the manner prescribed for members of the General Assembly, to hold office for four years. Section 29 provides that if the office of clerk becomes vacant during the term, and the people fail to elect, the judge of the superior court shall appoint some one to fill the vacancy until an "election regularly held." The general scheme of the Constitution as to appointees to vacancies in office occurring during an official term, as evidenced by article 3, §§ 12, 13, and article 4, §§ 21, 23, 24, 25, 28, is that the appointee shall hold only until the next general election. Thus vacancies in offices, the terms of which are two years, are filled by appointment "for the unexpired term," and vacancies in offices, the terms of which are four years, are filled by appointment only until the "next general election." Held, that an appointee to fill a vacancy occurring during the term in the office of clerk of the superior court holds only until the next general election, and not for the unexpired term, if there is an intervening general election. The adjective "regular," qualifying the word "election," may well refer to an election held at regular periods for the same office, but the adverb "regularly" qualifies the word "held," and refers not so much to the time as to the manner of holding the election; that is, according to the prescribed method or rule. Rodwell v. Rowland, 50 S. E. 319, 327, 137 N. C. 617.

REGULARLY QUALIFIED

One licensed to practice osteopathy under Public Health Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 45) art. 8, and thereby authorized to attend the sick and administer anything curative save drugs, and to do what a surgeon may do without instruments, and thereby becoming a doctor of osteopathy and a physician defined by section 160, is a regularly qualified physician within a policy requiring the attendance on insured of a "regularly qualified physician"; the term being equivalent to one authorized by law to treat the sick. Anderson v. National Casualty Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 889, 890, 151 App. Div. 439.

REGULARLY SUBMIT AND TRY

The Avondale City Charter (Acts 1894-95, p. 139) provides for the levy of special assessments for street improvements, and declares that the property owners assessed may appear and contest the assessment, and, if not satisfied with the action of the city council, they may remove the matter by certiorari to the city or circuit court, "where the case shall be regularly submitted and tried as in other civil cases." Held, that the property owner is entitled to a trial de novo after the case has been removed to the city or circuit court by certiorari. Harton v. Town of Avondale, 41 South. 934, 938, 147 Ala. 458.

REGULATE

See License, Regulate, and Tax.

"To regulate" means to adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. Weadock v. Judge of Recorder's Court of Detroit, 120 N. W. 991, 992, 156 Mich. 376, 132 Am. St. Rep. 527, 16 Ann. Cas. 720.

The word "regulate" means "to adjust, order, or govern by rule, method, or established mode; direct or manage according to certain standards or rules." Van Ingen v. Hudson Realty Co., 94 N. Y. Supp. 645, 648, 106 App. Div. 444 (quoting Stand. Dict.).

While the word "regulate" has been given a comprehensive meaning and construed to signify both government and restriction, thereby including in an act all subjects germane to the object named, it does not so much imply creating a new thing as arranging in proper order and controlling that which already exists. Cote v. Village of Highland Park, 139 N. W. 69, 74, 173 Mich. 201.

"To regulate" means to adjust; to govern by rule; to direct or manage according to certain standards or laws; to subject to rules, restrictions, or governing principles. Stand. Dict. An ordinance making it unlawful to keep open a pawnshop after 6 o'clock p. m. is not a prohibition of the business, but a regulation of it. City of Butte v. Paltrovich, 75 Pac. 501, 30 Mont. 18, 104 Am. St. Rep. 698.

"To regulate" means to prescribe the manner in which a thing licensed may be conducted; a license itself being the permit or authority to conduct and carry on. Pacific University v. Johnson, 84 Pac. 704, 706, 47 Or. 448.

"The word 'regulating' means to put or keep in order, as to regulate the disordered state of a nation or its finances." The title to an ordinance of a city or village, to wit, "An ordinance regulating and licensing liquor dealers within the village of St. Anthony," is sufficient, where the ordinance provides for the payment of a fixed sum for retail liquor dealers only, and prohibits the business of running a restaurant or lunch counter in connection therewith, or in the same room, and also requires the doors to be closed on Sunday, and also prohibits music, singing and dancing in the room occupied as a saloon. Village of St. Anthony v. Brandon, 77 Pac. 322, 325, 10 Idaho, 205 (quoting the definition in Cent. Dict.).

"The word 'regulate' is one of broad import. It is the word used in the federal Constitution to define the power of Congress over foreign and interstate commerce, and he who reads the many opinions of this court will perceive how broad and comprehensive it has been held to be." St. Louis v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 990, 992, 149 U. S. 465, 469, 37 L. Ed. 810; Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 88 S. W. 648, 651, 189 Mo. 107, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186 (quoting and adopting definition in St. Louis v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 149 U. S. 467, 13 Sup. Ct. 990, 37 L. Ed. 810).

Pub. Acts 1887, No. 145, is entitled "An act to regulate the use of steam engines, steam wagons or other vehicles which are in whole or in part operated by steam, on the public highways of this state," which act was amended by Pub. Acts 1903, No. 71, providing that no township shall be liable for damages sustained by the breaking of any bridge by any steam engine weighing more than six tons. Held, that the word "regulate" included both government and restriction, and broad powers could be exercised thereunder, and the subject-matter of the amendment was included within the title of the original act. Westgate v. Adrian Township, 126 N. W. 422, 161 Mich. 333.

The word "regulating," in title of Acts 1902, c. 566, entitled "An act to repeal and reenact section 4 of article 100 of the Code of Public General Laws as it is enacted by chapter 317, Acts 1894, entitled 'Works, hours of, in factories' regulating the employment of children," is sufficiently broad to justify provisions in the body of the act prohibiting the employment in any mill or factory other than establishments for the manufacture of canned goods of any child under 14 years of age, unless such child is the only support of a widowed mother, or invalid father, or is solely dependent on such employment for his support. Mt. Vernon-Woodberry Cotton Duck Co. v. Frankfort Marine Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 75 Atl. 105, 107, 111 Md. 561, 134 Am. St. Rep. 636.

As control

As applied to the sale of intoxicating liquors "regulation" means to restrict and control the authorized sale of liquors by providing the conditions under which sales may be made. McPherson v. State, 90 N. E. 610, 611, 174 Ind. 60, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

Lewiston City Charter (Laws 1880-81, p. 386) § 7, authorizes the city to provide for clearing, improving, and repairing streets, etc., for the prevention and removal of obstructions therefrom, and also to regulate cellarways and cellar lights, etc. Held, that the word "regulate" as so used means to put or keep in order, and to regulate sidewalks, and includes control thereof. City of Lewiston v. Isaman, 115 Pac. 494, 497, 19 Idaho, 653.

Under the law of Kentucky (Acts 1881-82, p. 817, c. 461), which holds that the use of a street by a telephone company is for a public and not a private purpose, general power expressly given to a city by a special charter to "regulate" the streets, alleys, etc., imports power to control their use, the word "regulate" being a word of wider import than "control," and authorizes the city to grant the right to a telephone company to erect and maintain its poles in the streets. City of Owensboro v. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co., 174 Fed. 739, 750, 99 C. O. A. 1.

Laws 1909, c. 222, entitled "An act to revise the laws authorizing the business of banking, providing for the organization and control of banks, and to establish a banking department for the supervision of such business," which, by sections 29 and 30, makes it an offense for officers and directors of a bank to permit shareholders to become indebted to it at one time in excess of 50 per cent. of its paid-up capital, does not conflict with Const. art. 3, § 21, which provides that no law shall embrace more than one subject which shall be expressed in its title; since to "control" has the same sense as to "regulate," and since the term "control of banks" means the control of the banking business, indicates new legislation and means to check or restrain, and hence appropriately covers the provisions declaring the offense and the penalty therefor. State v. McPherson, 139 N. W. 368, 369, 30 S. D. 547 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1549; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6041).

As license

St. Johns City Charter (Sp. Laws 1905, p. 542) § 69, subd. 45, authorizing the council to regulate and restrain dealers in liquor, places where it is kept for sale, and the sale and disposal thereof, and providing that no provisions of the law concerning the sale or disposition of liquors in Multnomah county shall apply to the sale or disposition thereof in said city, repeals the local option law (Laws 1905, p. 41) as to such city; the word "restrain" being more comprehensive than, and including the power to, "prohibit," and the power to license being included in the word "regulate." State v. Cochran, 104 Pac. 419, 421, 55 Or. 157.

As prescribe rules

The reservation in a street railroad franchise of power to "regulate" the conduct of the business means the imposition of such restrictions as may be necessary to protect the public from harm, and does not imply confiscation of any right or anything that will affect the revenues of the grantee of the franchise. The right to "regulate" is to prescribe rules for the government of the cars in the city, and applies to the means by which they are propelled, and the speed at which they may pass through the streets. Shreveport Traction Co. v. City of Shreveport, 47 South. 40, 43, 122 La. 1, 129 Am. St. Rep. 345 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6043).

The primary meaning of the word "regulate" is "to lay down the rule by which a thing shall be done." The importation of cigarettes in original packages for personal consumption is a transaction involving interstate commerce, and is not within Acts 1905, p. 82, c. 52, regulating and prohibiting the manufacture, sale, keeping for sale, owning or giving away of cigarettes, etc. State v. Lowry, 77 N. E. 728, 733, 166 Ind. 372, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350 (citing And. Law Dict.).

As prohibit

To "regulate" means to adjust by rule or method or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles of law, but the term does not include the power to prohibit. In re McCoy, 101 Pac. 419, 429, 10 Cal. App. 116.

The words "restraint" and "regulate" are not synonymous with the word "prohibit." A power or right to "regulate" a thing, such as the right of aliens to hold property, does not give an authority to "prohibit" that thing. Madden v. State, 75 Pac. 1023, 1024, 68 Kan. 658.

The power to "regulate" the sale of intoxicating liquors is not power to prohibit their sale. Timm v. Common Council of Village of Caledonia Station, 112 N. W. 942, 943, 149 Mich. 323.

The word "regulate" in Detroit city charter, authorizing the common council to regulate the selling of intoxicating liquors, does not give the power to prohibit the sale of liquors, but authorizes a municipality to confine the exercise of such business to a certain locality. Churchill v. Common Council of City of Detroit, 116 N. W. 558, 153 Mich. 93.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7507, providing that cities of the first class shall have power to "regulate" the selling or giving away of intoxicants, a regulation which works a partial prohibition is valid; the word "regulate" necessarily implying some degree of restraint and prohibition of acts usually done in connection with the thing to be regulated. City of Tacoma v. Keisel, 124 Pac. 137, 139, 68 Wash. 685, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 757.

"The power given a municipality to 'regulate' does not authorize it to suppress or prohibit a trade or business, as the very essence of regulation is the existence of something to be regulated." The charter power of a village to regulate billiard and pool halls was not a power to suppress them. State ex rel. McMonies v. McMonies, 106 N. W. 454, 455, 75 Neb. 443 (citing Horr & B. Mun. Ord. § 30; State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 106).

A provision giving a municipality "power to regulate" and "suppress" skating rinks gives no power to prohibit them. "A power to 'regulate' will not be construed to include the power to prohibit. 'A power simply to regulate does not embrace a power to prohibit or destroy a trade or occupation.' Therefore ordinances, to be valid, cannot interfere with lawful employment." Johnson v. Town of Philadelphia, 47 South. 526, 527, 94 Miss. 34, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637, 19 Ann. Cas. 103 (quoting and adopting definition in McQuillin, Municipal Ordinances, p. 79).

"Regulation" contemplates the continuance of the subject-matter in existence, or in activity, while "prohibition" implies its entire destruction or cessation. Under a statute empowering cities to "regulate and to license" dramshops, a city is not authorized to pass an ordinance requiring applicants for dramshop licenses to obtain yearly the consent of two-thirds of the qualified petitioners in the entire city instead of two-thirds of the proper petitioners in the block in which the applicant purposes to keep his dramshop, as required by another statute. State ex rel. Sheffel v. McCammon, 86 S. W. 510, 511, 111 Mo. App. 626.

While an ordinance regulating the hours in which intoxicating liquors shall be sold in Boise City and for Sunday closing, and providing a penalty for the sale thereof during prohibited hours, does prohibit the conduct of the business therein referred to during certain hours, it is a "regulation" of that business and not a prohibition of it. "To prohibit, limit, confine, or abridge a thing, the restraint may be permanent or temporary. It may be intended to prohibit, limit, or abridge for all time or for a day only." Restraint does not contemplate an absolute destruction of business, but rather places it within certain bounds." State v. Calloway, 84 Pac. 27-33, 11 Idaho, 719, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 114 Am. St. Rep. 285 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 828).

"Regulation" and "prohibition" are distinct and incongruous subjects of legislation. The prohibitory act is not unconstitutional on the ground that the exceptions created by the act provide the methods whereby those exceptions may be availed of without violating the major purposes of the act, and contains the subject of regulations as well as the subject of prohibition of dealings in intoxicants foreshadowed by the title, for while, in a sense, regulation is accomplished by the act, it is only a method by which the universal prohibition is bereft of its penalizing qualities by affording exceptions to those who comply with the act. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268, 273, 154 Ala. 249 (quoting and adopting definition in Miller v. Jones, 80 Ala. 89).

St. Louis charter, art. 3, § 26, cl. 6, delegates to the mayor and municipal assembly the power to regulate hospitals, to regulate stone quarries, and the slaughter of animals, provide for the erection, management, and regulation of slaughterhouses, prevent the driving of stock through the city, prohibit the erection of soap factories, stockyards, and slaughterhouses, and to remove and regulate the same. Held, that the power to regulate did not give the municipality the power to prohibit the quarrying of stone; the word "regulate" implying the continued existence of the subject-matter to be controlled, and so an ordinance prohibiting the operation of stone quarries, without permission from the municipal assembly by proper ordinance, is invalid, for the granting of the permission rests in the arbitrary discretion of that body, and such business may be improperly prohibited. City of St. Louis v. Atlantic Quarry & Construction Co., 148 S. W. 948, 950, 244 Mo. 479.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 24, par. 62, § 1, cl. 95, authorizes the Chicago counsel to license and regulate junk shops. Clause 50 authorizes it to regulate sale of meats, and provide for the place of selling. Clause 81 authorizes it to direct the location, and regulate the management and construction of packing houses. Clause 82 authorizes it to direct location, and regulate use and construction of breweries. Held, that the fiftieth and subsequent clauses recognize that power to regulate did not include power to prohibit within certain localities, and like meaning should be given to clause 95, in absence of anything showing contrary intent, so that, under the power to "regulate," the city could not prohibit maintenance of a junk shop in a building, except with consent of a majority of property owners in the block where located, and paragraph 6, providing that all laws not inconsistent with the provision of the act should continue in force, did not authorize the ordinance, where the power conferred by the old charter relating to the subject was also given by section 1 of the present act. People v. Busse, 88 N. E. 831, 832, 240 Ill. 338.

As refuse or revoke license

Milwaukee City Charter, c. 4, subsec. 1, authorizing the council to license, "regulate," and restrain those engaged in the liquor business, does not give the council power to revoke the license of a liquor seller nor to prescribe conditions on which the license may be revoked. State ex rel. Sepe v. City of Milwaukee, 109 N. W. 421, 422, 129 Wis. 562.

As restrain

Under Woodburn Charter, c. 4, § 5, authorizing ordinances deemed expedient to suppress intemperance and to regulate the sale or disposition of liquors, an ordinance restricting the right to sell intoxicants to registered pharmacists upon bona fide prescriptions for disease is a valid "regulation" and not a "prohibition." Bachelors' Club v. City of Woodburn, 119 Pac. 339, 343, 60 Or. 331.

As applied to the sale of intoxicating liquors, "regulation" means to restrict and control the authorized sale of liquors by providing the conditions under which sales may be made. McPherson v. State, 90 N. E. 610, 611, 174 Ind. 60, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 188.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7507, providing that cities of the first class shall have power to "regulate" the selling or giving away of intoxicants, a regulation which works a partial prohibition is valid; the word "regulate" necessarily implying some degree of restraint and prohibition of acts usually done in connection with the thing to be regulated. City of Tacoma v. Keisel, 124 Pac. 137, 139, 68 Wash. 685, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 757.

City affairs

A statute providing for the annexation of one city by another, enlarging the territory and population of one and depriving the other of its charter and government as a city, is a law "regulating the affairs of cities," within the state Constitution prohibiting the enactment of local acts for that purpose. Sample v. City of Pittsburg, 62 Atl. 201, 205, 212 Pa. 533 (citing definition in Morrison v.

Backert, 5 Atl. 739, 112 Pa. 322; Commonwealth ex rel. Fertig v. Patton, 88 Pa. 258; Scowden's Appeal, 96 Pa. 422; Perkins v. City of Philadelphia, 27 Atl. 356, 156 Pa. 554).

County business or affairs

The word "regulating," in Const. art. 4, § 22, forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating county business, is used in its ordinary sense as directing by rule or restriction. Board of Com'rs of Newton County v. State ex rel. Bringham, 69 N. E. 442, 444, 161 Ind. 616 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

To "regulate," as contemplated by the Constitution forbidding the passage of local or special laws regulating county business, is to direct by rule or restriction. Kraus v. Lehman, 83 N. E. 714, 716, 170 Ind. 408, 15 Ann. Cas. 849.

Const. art. 3, § 56, prohibits the Legislature from passing any local or special law regulating the affairs of counties, and declares that no local or special laws shall be passed where a general law can be made applicable. Acts 29th Leg. c. 161, as amended by Acts 30th Leg. c. 168, created the office of county auditor in all counties having a population of 40,000, or containing a city with 25,000 inhabitants, and prescribed the duties of such auditor, giving him general supervision over the accounts, books, etc., of all county officers having authority to receive money on behalf of the county, etc. B. county having the requisite population, plaintiff was appointed auditor therefor, and served until after the passage of Acts 31st Leg. c. 120, on April 1, 1909, amending the prior act and exempting B. county by name from the provisions thereof. Held, that the word "regulating," as used in the constitutional provision, should not be given a narrow or technical interpretation; and that the act establishing the office of county auditor was an act regulating county affairs within such section, and hence the act amending the same by exempting B. county was a special or local law regulating county affairs and was therefore unconstitutional. Hall v. Bell County (Tex.) 138 S. W. 178.

By Laws 1903, p. 38, c. 27, § 3, in effect April 14th, a new county was created from B. county, and an election ordered to be held on that day for the election of county officers of B. county; but by an amendment passed March 12, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 80, c. 49), two persons named were appointed county commissioners of B. county. They were directed to qualify on or before April 5, 1903, and to hold a meeting not later than April 10th, and appoint an assessor and a probate judge. Held, that such provision, which in effect ousted the existing officers of B. county before their terms of office expired and appointed new officers in their place, was a local and a special law "regulating county affairs," within the prohibition of Act Cong. July 30, 1886, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, prohibiting territorial Legislatures from passing local and special laws regulating county and township affairs. Territory ex rel. Curran v. Gutierrez, 78 Pac. 139, 141, 12 N. M. 254.

Pool rooms

"The 'power to regulate, or prohibit,' * * * not only includes nuisances, but extends to everything expedient for the preservation of the public health and the prevention of contagious diseases, and to which may be added that it extends to everything expedient for the promotion of public morals, welfare, or safety. It is only when a business is lawful and has no injurious tendency that the governing body cannot say who shall and who shall not exercise the right itself." Since the business of conducting a pool hall is not a useful employment, and is not always unattended with uses injurious to public peace and morals, an ordinance authorizing the police commissioners to make such regulations for granting permits to conduct that business as may be necessary for the maintenance of public order, the promotion of public morals, and the orderly conduct of such places is not invalid. Goytino v. McAleer, 88 Pac. 991, 4 Cal. App. 655 (citing County of Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 57 Pac. 153, 124 Cal. 344, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 284).

Power over divorces

In Const. art. 2, § 18, granting all power over divorces in the district court, subject to regulation by law, the word "regulation" is of broad signification, and, in the absence of restrictive words, the power granted must be regarded as plenary over the entire subject. Durland v. Durland, 74 Pac. 274, 275, 67 Kan. 734, 63 L. R. A. 959.

Punishment for contempt

By the use of the word "regulate," in Const. § 63, granting to the General Assembly the right to regulate the exercise by courts of the right to punish for contempt, it was not intended to clothe the Legislature with absolute power over the subject, but to confer on it authority to bring the subject of contempts within reasonable regulations, not inconsistent with the exercise by the courts, with vigor and efficiency, of those functions which are essential to the discharge of their duties. Yoder v. Commonwealth, 57 S. E. 581, 583, 107 Va. 823.

Railroads and railroad traffic

The right "to regulate" a street railway company means such restrictions as may be necessary to protect the public from harm, but does not mean the least confiscation of any right or anything that will affect the revenues of the company. Shreveport Traction Co. v. City of Shreveport, 47 South. 40, 43, 122 La. 1, 129 Am. St. Rep. 345.

The "power of the state to regulate railroads" extends to securing to the public reasonable facilities for making connections between different carriers. Atlantic Coast-Line R. Co. v. North Carolina Corp. Commission, 27 Sup. Ct. 585, 593, 206 U. S. 1, 51 L. Ed. 933, 11 Ann. Cas. 398.

The word "regulate," as used in a constitutional provision conferring on a railroad commission authority to make reasonable and just regulations to govern and regulate railroad traffic, has a broad meaning, and includes the power to see to the maintenance of the main track and all its switches and spurs. The commission may order that a spur or switch be not removed, subject to review by the court. Railroad Commission of Louisiana v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 35 South. 487, 488, 111 La. 133.

Streets

A grant of power to "regulate" the use of city streets confers the power to regulate the speed of automobiles, and also to provide for their registration and numbering as a means of regulation. People v. Schneider, 103 N. W. 172, 173, 139 Mich. 673, 69 L. R. A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 645.

To "regulate" implies that there exists the subject which is to be regulated. Under Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 136, c. 466) § 315, making it the duty of the police department to regulate the movement of teams and vehicles in the streets, this expression recognizes the existence of such a thing, and such movement in every part of a street is a public right. If, under the guise of a regulation, that movement is forbidden in any part of a street, there is an impairment of the right—a pro tanto prohibition. The word "regulate" is defined as to "prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed"; but to prescribe a rule for government, even though it afford the exercise of full powers, does not imply the power to prohibit absolutely the thing to be controlled. Peace v. McAdoo, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1039, 1041, 110 App. Div. 13 (citing Anderson v. City of Wellington, 19 Pac. 719, 40 Kan. 173, 2 L. R. A. 110, 10 Am. St. Rep. 175; Ex parte Patterson, 58 S. W. 1013, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 256, 51 L. R. A. 654; McConvill v. Jersey City, 39 N. J. Law, 44; Thousand Island Park Ass'n v. Tucker, 65 N. E. 975, 173 N. Y. 203, 60 L. R. A. 786; People v. Gadway, 28 N. W. 101, 61 Mich. 285, 1 Am. St. Rep. 578; Andrews v. State, 3 Heisk. [Tenn.] 165, 8 Am. Rep. 8; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. [9 Wheat.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23).

Tolls

The words "regulate tolls," as used in the charter of a railroad, providing that, when the aggregate amount of dividends declared shall amount to the full sum invested and 10 per cent., the Legislature may so regulate the tolls and freights that not more than 15 per cent. per annum shall be divided on the capital employed, and the surplus profits, if any, after paying the expenses and reserving such proportion as may be necessary for future contingencies, shall be paid over to the Treasurer of the State for the use of the common schools, do not refer solely to fixing the amount to be charged by the railroad, but the words embrace, not only fixing the amount to be charged to the public, but an order for the division if earnings between the railroad and the schools. The surrender by a railway company of its special charter, to accept a general railroad law, before the state had made any attempt to regulate its tolls, freed the company from all liability to the state under a charter provision that, when declared dividends shall aggregate a specified amount, the Legislature may so regulate the tolls that not more than a fixed percentage shall be divided annually on the capital employed, and the surplus profits shall be paid over to the State Treasurer, and that, "if required," the corporation shall furnish the Legislature a statement of expenditures; and such liability, therefore, cannot be enforced by virtue of subsequent legislation without impairing the rights of the railroad company under the federal Constitution. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Indiana, 24 Sup. Ct. 767, 769, 194 U. S. 579, 48 L. Ed. 1124.

REGULATE AND RESTRAIN

See, also, License, Regulate, and Restrain.

To say that the words "regulate and restrain" do not in any sense mean "revoke" is distinctly erroneous. Under Milwaukee City Charter, as amended (Laws 1874, pp. 327, 330, c. 184, subc. 4, § 3, subsecs. 9, 40), empowering the common council to regulate and restrain the sale of milk, to tax, license, regulate, and restrain vendors of milk, and to fix and regulate the amount of license, etc., the council had power to revoke milk licenses and to vest such power in the health commissioner, with the right to exercise the same summarily and even without notice. State ex rel. Nowotny v. City of Milwaukee, 121 N. W. 658, 659, 140 Wis. 38, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1060 (overruling construction in Sepic, State ex rel., v. City of Milwaukee, 109 N. W. 421, 129 Wis. 562).

REGULATE COMMERCE

See, also, Commerce; Interstate Commerce.

The word "regulate," as used in the commerce clause of the federal Constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 3), means to control. Titsworth v. State, 101 Pac. 288, 289, 2 Okl. Cr. 268.

The word "regulate," within the constitutional provision authorizing Congress to regulate interstate commerce, imparts the right and power to enact laws, and not simply to make rules and regulations. Snead

v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 151 Fed. 608, 618.

To "regulate," in the sense intended by Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3, conferring on Congress power to regulate commerce among the several states, is to foster, protect, control, and restrain with appropriate regard for the welfare of those who are immediately concerned and of the public at large. Mondu v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 174, 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44.

The power of Congress to "regulate commerce," given by subsection 3, § 8, art. 1, of the federal Constitution, means the power to enact legislation that directly affects interstate commerce or its adjuncts and not legislation that affects it or them indirectly only. It is the power to enact legislation which relates to, acts upon, or touches interstate commerce or its adjuncts, or legislation of which either is the subject. United States v. Adair, 152 Fed. 737, 745, 764 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23).

The "power to regulate" interstate commerce, which is vested in Congress, has no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. It is the power to regulate the commerce which originally existed in the states, and Congress, under this authority, may limit and restrain commerce at pleasure. The power is exclusive, and hence the grant carries with it the whole subject, leaving nothing for the states to act upon. Champion v. Ames, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 323, 188 U. S. 321, 47 L. Ed. 492.

"No fixed rule can be prescribed or defined that will amount to a regulation of commerce, within the meaning of the constitutional provision conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce among the several states." The power of Congress is plenary and exclusive. Chief Justice Waite, in the case of Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 488, 24 L. Ed. 547, said: "The line which separates the powers of the states from this exclusive power of Congress is not always distinctly marked, and oftentimes it is not easy to determine on which side a particular case belongs. Judges not infrequently differ in their reasons for a decision in which they concur. Under such circumstances it would be a useless task to undertake to fix an arbitrary rule by which the line must in all cases be located. It is far better to leave a matter of such delicacy to be settled in each case upon a view of the particular rights involved. * * * If the statutes of the state are for the purpose of facilitating the safe transportation of goods, without undertaking to regulate commerce or interfere in any manner with the rights of the parties to fix their liability by contract, they will be upheld, notwithstanding they may have an indirect or remote effect upon commerce."

A provision that when there are several connecting railroads under different companies, and goods are intended to be transported over more than one railroad, each company shall be responsible only to its own terminus and until delivery to its connecting railroad, that the last company which has received the goods as in good order shall be responsible to the consignee for any damages, open or concealed, done to the goods, and that such companies shall settle among themselves the question of ultimate liability, is not a regulation of commerce. Kavanaugh v. Southern R. Co., 47 S. E. 526, 527, 120 Ga. 62, 1 Ann. Cas. 705.

In determining the meaning and scope of the clause of the federal Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce, the Supreme Court has deemed it undesirable to give to the words employed therein any hard and fixed definition, or to mark with absolute certainty the extent of the power thereby conferred. It has been declared that "interstate commerce" is a term of very large significance, and the power conferred by the Constitution as to interstate and foreign commerce one without limitation. It authorizes legislation with respect to all subjects of foreign and interstate commerce, the persons engaged in it, and the instruments by which it is carried on. "Commerce" undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. In view of the large significance given to the terms of the commerce clause and the scope of the power thereby conferred, the Act of Congress of June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, commonly called the "Federal Employers' Liability Act," is a "regulation of commerce between the states, or with foreign nations, within the meaning of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and hence within the power of Congress." Kelley v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 152 Fed. 211, 217 (citing Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 578, 597, 43 L. Ed. 290; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 101, 23 L. Ed. 819; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 464, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 189, 194, 6 L. Ed. 23).

The power to "regulate commerce" between the states and with foreign countries conferred on Congress by the federal Constitution includes the power to regulate the transportation of persons. Act Cong. June 25, 1910, c. 395, 36 Stat. 825, making it a felony to furnish transportation, or to persuade, entice, or induce a woman or girl to go, from one state to another as a passenger in interstate commerce for prostitution or debauchery, where the furnishing of such transportation or the inducement, persuasion, or enticement is followed by the woman being actually transported in interstate commerce for such purpose, is a proper exercise of the constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce between the states, and is not unconstitutional as an infringement of the police power of the states. United States v. Hoke, 187 Fed. 992-994.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2090, as amended and re-enacted, making it unlawful to bring infected sheep into the state, is not a "regulation of interstate commerce," in violation of the federal Constitution, but is a reasonable exercise of the state's police power. Patrick v. State, 98 Pac. 588, 589, 17 Wyo. 260, 129 Am. St. Rep. 1109.

An order made under state authority, requiring a railroad company to stop on signal two of its through fast mail trains running between Jersey City, N. J., and Tampa, Fla., at a small town in South Carolina, which is also the junction point with a small branch road, is void as a direct "regulation of interstate commerce," where, in addition to several local trains daily, the residents of such town are furnished daily one slower through train each way. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Wharton, 28 Sup. Ct. 121, 124, 207 U. S. 328, 52 L. Ed. 230.

A regulation of "intrastate commerce," as well as of interstate commerce, and therefore one beyond the power of Congress to enact, is made by the provision of the Employers' Liability Act of June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, that "every common carrier engaged in trade or commerce" in the District of Columbia or in the territories or between the several states shall be liable for the death or injury of "any of its employes" which may result from the negligence of "any of its officers, agents, or employes." Howard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 144, 207 U. S. 463, 52 L. Ed. 297.

The "commodities clause" of the interstate commerce act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584), which makes it unlawful for any railroad company to transport in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity, "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier," is not a "regulation of interstate commerce," within the commerce clause of the Constitution, but entirely excludes from such commerce a certain class of persons, and is unconstitutional and void as applied to railroad companies which, under the sanction and encouragement of state laws, had more than 50 years before its enactment become the owners of coal lands in such state, and by themselves, or subsidiary companies of which they owned the stock, developed mines thereon, and constructed railroad lines thereto at great expense, and engaged extensively in the mining of coal, a large part of which was necessarily marketed in other states, and which could not practically be transported, except over their own lines, nor marketed within the state, as depriving such companies of their liberty and property without due process of law, in violation of the fifth constitutional amendment. United States v. Delaware & H. Co., 164 Fed. 215, 225-249.

As to prescribe rules

The power to "regulate commerce" is the power "to prescribe the rules by which commerce shall be governed (that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted), to determine when it shall be free and when subject to duties or other exactions. The power also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on and the means by which it may be aided and encouraged." The power to regulate applies as well to traffic on water as to traffic on land. The power is not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce, as they were known or in use when the Constitution was adopted. When a corporation or person engages in interstate commerce, the men who control it and the corps of its employes are subject to the legitimate means which Congress may select for its regulation, and, where the purpose of Congress is legitimate and expressly relates to employes engaged in interstate commerce, it is immaterial to the validity of the act that somewhere in its operation it may have a casual or contingent effect upon state legislation. Snead v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 151 Fed. 608, 614 (quoting and adopting definition in Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 828, 114 U. S. 208, 29 L. Ed. 158).

"The power vested in Congress to 'regulate commerce' with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes, is the power to prescribe the rule by which that commerce is to be governed, and is a power complete in itself, acknowledging no limitations other than those with the subject on which it acts, and cannot be stopped at the external boundary of a state, but must enter into its interior and must be capable of authorizing the disposition of those articles which it introduces, so that they may become mingled with the common mass of property within the territory entered. And while a state may provide for the security of the lives, limbs, health, and comfort of persons and the protection of property so situated, yet the subject-matter, which has been confided exclusively to Congress by the Constitution, is not within the jurisdiction of the police power of the state, unless placed there by congressional action." Stubbs v. People, 90 Pac. 1114, 1116, 40

To "regulate commerce" is to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed (that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted), to determine how far it shall be free and untrammelled, how far it shall be subject to duties and other exactions, and how far it shall be prohibited. The provisions of Laws 1906, p. 197, No. 182, § 1, making it punishable to keep, with intent to ship out of the state, for food purposes, the flesh of a calf which was less than four weeks old, or weighed less than 50 pounds, dressed weight, when killed, are not within the police power of the state, since, whatever may be the extent of that power respecting domestic order, morals, health, and safety, it cannot be exercised over a subject confided exclusively to the commercial power of Congress. So much of the Laws 1906, p. 197, No. 182, § 1, as makes it punishable to keep, with intent to ship out of the state, for food purposes, the flesh of a calf which was less than four weeks old, or weighed less than 50 pounds, dressed weight, when killed, is void as conflicting with Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, empowering Congress to regulate commerce among the several states. Laws 1906, p. 197, No. 182, § 1, provides that a person who sells, or offers to sell, or keeps with intent to sell, for food purposes, or ships out of the state, or keeps with intent to ship out of the state, for food purposes, the flesh of a calf which was less than four weeks old, or weighed less than 50 pounds, dressed weight, when killed, shall be imprisoned, etc. Held, that that part of the statute relating to the keeping with intent to sell for food purposes is to be construed as having only an intraterritorial effect, under the rule that statutes in this respect, which use general words, are to be so construed, unless they clearly indicate a different intent, and hence such part of the statute is not invalid as in conflict with Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, empowering Congress to regulate commerce among the several states. State v. Peet, 68 Atl. 661, 664, 80 Vt. 449, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 677, 130 Am. St. Rep. 998 (citing Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158).

The "power to regulate commerce," conferred by the federal Constitution on Congress, is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which "commerce" is to be governed. Like all other powers vested in Congress, it is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than those prescribed by the Constitution. Webster defines "commerce" as the "exchange or the buying and selling of commodities. Inter-course." In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (22 U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, etc., it is said that:

"Commerce undoubtedly is traffic; but it is something more. It is intercourse." In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. Ed. 244, etc., it is held that: "Transportation of freight and passengers is commerce." "Interstate commerce" is the trading and trafficking in commodities between and amongst citizens of different states. It is transporting by common carriers passengers and property from one state into another state. It is the selling and buying of a commodity or commodities by a citizen of one state to a citizen of another state, which commodity is to be transported from the state of the seller to the state of the buyer, or to another state, and there resold or used, as may serve the purpose of the buyer. Under these definitions, Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232, "relating to the liability of common carriers * * * engaged in commerce between the states * * * to their employes," and which makes every such carrier liable to any employe or his personal representative for all damages which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employes, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, ways or works, is not a "regulation of interstate commerce" but establishes new rules of liability, growing out of the relation of master and servant, which, if valid, are binding on all courts, both state and federal, but which have no such relation to "interstate commerce" as to bring them within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate such commerce, and the act is for that reason void. Howard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 148 Fed. 997, 999, 1000 (citing Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 347; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. Ed. 158; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. Ed. 244; Hopkins v. United States, 19 Sup. Ct. 40, 171 U. S. 597, 43 L. Ed. 290).

As to prohibit

The constitutional power of Congress to "regulate" interstate commerce includes the power to prohibit, in cases where such prohibition is in aid of the lawful protection of the public. Bennett v. United States, 194 Fed. 630, 632, 114 C. C. A. 402; Overton v. State, 123 Pac. 175, 7 Okl. Cr. 203.

The constitutional power of Congress to "regulate interstate" and foreign commerce also involves the power, not only to prescribe rules for the carrying on of such commerce, but also in certain instances to absolutely prohibit it. United States v. Hoke, 187 Fed. 992, 997.

REGULATION

See Intended Regulation; Police Regulations; Reasonable Regulation; Rules and Regulations; Under Reasonable Laws and Regulations.

Of commerce, see Regulate Commerce. See, also, Rule.

The words "ordinances," "rules," "regulations," and "by-laws" are synonymous terms. State ex rel. Krebs v. Hootor, 120 N. W. 199, 200, 83 Neb. 690 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5025).

"The designation of localities where the sale of intoxicating liquor is inhibited is not 'prohibition' but 'regulation' of the sale." Garonzik v. State, 100 S. W. 374, 375, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 533.

While an ordinance regulating the hours in which intoxicating liquors shall be sold in Boise City and for Sunday closing, and providing a penalty for the sale thereof during prohibited hours, does prohibit the conduct of the business therein referred to during certain hours, it is a "regulation" of that business and not a prohibition of it. "To prohibit, limit, confine, or abridge a thing, the restraint may be permanent or temporary. It may be intended to prohibit, limit, or abridge for all time or for a day only." Restraint does not contemplate an absolute destruction of business, but rather places it within certain bounds." State v. Calloway, 84 Pac. 27-33, 11 Idaho, 719, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 114 Am. St. Rep. 285 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 828).

A county ordinance imposing a license on sheep herders equal to three cents for each head of sheep and goats herded or pastured in the county per annum, requiring the license collector to collect the license fees and, after deducting 25 per cent. for collection, to pay the excess into the county treasury, and declaring that every herder who shall refuse or neglect to pay such license fees shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, imposed a license tax for mere purposes of revenue, and not for regulation of the business of sheep herding, and was therefore not within the jurisdiction of the board, under Pol. Code, § 3366, as amended by St. 1910, p. 635, c. 209 authorizing the licensing of business for the purpose of regulation only, which repealed by implication St. 1891, p. 306, c. 216, § 25, subd. 27, and County Government Act 1897, § 25, empowering boards of supervisors to license business generally for the purpose of both "regulation and revenue." Placer County v. Whitney Estate Co., 84 Pac. 277, 278, 2 Cal. App. 614.

Const. art. 11, § 19, as amended in 1911 (see Laws 1911, p. 2180), authorizing any municipal corporation to establish and operate enumerated public utilities, and providing that persons or corporations may establish and operate such works under "such conditions and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe under its organic law, on condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof," grants to all municipalities the power to construct and operate public utilities, and to prescribe the conditions on which persons and corporations may establish and operate such works, subject to charter provisions; and an ordinance of a city empowered to regulate conduits and works for the production and distribution of gas, etc., which prohibits excavations in streets without first obtaining permission from the board of public works, is valid when applied to one engaged in laying a gas pipe in a street as a part of the distributing system of a corporation engaged in supplying gas to the inhabitants of the city; the word "condition" meaning something established as a requisite to the doing or taking effect of something else, while the word "regulations" is something distinct from the word "conditions," and implies a broader meaning in the latter word than mere regulation of the manner of use. In re Russell, 126 Pac. 875, 876, 163 Cal. 668.

As law

The term "regulations," as used in Const. U. S. art. 4, § 3, granting courts power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territories or other property belonging to the United States, means laws, since territories, as well as states, must be governed by laws. Dorr v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 812, 195 U. S. 138, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697.

The words "regulations as may be prescribed by law," as used in Const. art. 8, § 15, providing that writs of error and appeals shall be allowed from the decisions of the said district courts to the Supreme Court under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, refer also "to statutes adopted or to be enacted, * * * providing the methods by which appeals and proceedings upon writs of error may be perfected." Featherman v. Granite County, 72 Pac. 972, 973, 28 Mont. 462 (citing and adopting State ex rel. White-side v. First Judicial District Court, 63 Pac. 395, 24 Mont. 539; Finlen v. Heinze, 69 Pac. 829, 70 Pac. 517, 27 Mont. 107).

As rule of law

A rule is a device in words and phrases for the control and direction of those who have something else given them to do. A "regulation" is a rule of law by which some right is to be exercised. They are words of a like import and import a partial restriction which does not wholly prohibit, and imply uniformity in operation, not discrimination. Borough of Belmar v. Prior, 79 Atl. 1032, 1034, 81 N. J. Law, 254.

As defined by Webster, the word "regulation" means a rule or order prescribed for management or government; prescription; a regulating principle; a governing direction; precept, or law; as, the regulations of a society. Const. art. 9, § 9, provides that the Governor, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Secretary of State, and Attorney General shall constitute the state board of land commissioners who shall have direction and control of the public lands under such regulations as may be prescribed by law. Held, that the term "regulations" meant such reasonable rules as might be prescribed by the legislative department of government, so that, in leasing state lands, the board must look to the statutory regulations prescribed, and then so act as in its judgment would secure a maximum amount under the prescribed regulations. Betts v. Commissioners of the Land Office, 110 Pac. 766, 770, 27 Okl. 64 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Leasing of State Lands, 32 Pac. 986, 18 Colo. 359).

REHEARING

See Motion for Rehearing.

REINED

See Being Reined.

REINSTATE

To "suspend" or "discharge" means to remove either temporarily or permanently from employment, and to "reinstate" may mean to receive back into employment only or to put back into the same position or state from which removed. Under Code Supp. 1907, § 679h, authorizing the chief of police to suspend or discharge any member of the force, but giving such suspended person the right to appeal to the board, which might reinstate him, upon reinstatement by the board of a police captain suspended by the chief of police, the chief is not compelled to reinstate him as captain, but could require him to report for duty as police patrol. Markey v. Schunk, 132 N. W. 883, 885, 152 Iowa, 508; Markey v. City of Dubuque (Iowa) 132 N. W. 885.

REINSURANCE

See, also, Double Insurance.

"Reinsurance" is defined to be "insurance by the first insurer of the whole or some part of his interest in the risk created by his contract of insurance." It is otherwise defined as "the contract that one insurer makes with another to protect the first from the risk he has already assumed." Ruohs v. Traders' Fire Ins. Co., 78 S. W. 85, 88, 111 Tenn. 405, 102 Am. St. Rep. 790 (citing Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Eastern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 45 Atl. 762, 64 N. J. Law, 343).

The term "reinsurance" has a well-defined meaning. That kind of a contract has been in force in the commercial world for a long number of years, and it is entirely different from what is termed double insurance;

i. e., an insurance of the same interest. The contract is one of indemnity to the person or corporation reinsured, and it binds the reinsurer to pay to the reinsured the whole loss sustained in respect to the subject of the insurance to the extent to which he is reinsured, irrespective of payment of, or ability to pay, the loss to the party originally insured. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburg, Pa., v. Firemen's Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 28 Sup. Ct. 544, 546, 209 U. S. 326, 52 L. Ed. 815, 14 Ann. Cas. 948.

"Reinsurance," as used in Laws 1896, c. 908, § 187, as amended by Laws 1901, c. 118, § 1, imposing on domestic insurance companies an annual state tax, and providing that the term "gross premiums" shall include such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance, means premiums collected by the insurance company from reinsuring the risks of other companies. Reinsurance is a contract by which one insurer insures the risks of another insurer. The statute is dealing with the gross premiums collected by an insurance company for business done; that is, for the insurance furnished. It has to do with receipts, not with disbursements. People ex rel. Continental Ins. Co. v. Miller, 70 N. E. 10, 12, 177 N. Y. 515.

A contract of "reinsurance" is simply to indemnify an original insurer for a loss he may sustain upon his contract of insurance. Mutual fire insurance companies, organized under the provisions of chapter 45, p. 257, Sess. Laws 1897, are not authorized to transact reinsurance business. Allison v. Fidelity Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 116 N. W. 274, 275, 81 Neb. 494, 129 Am. St. Rep. 694.

"Reinsurance" is properly applied to an insurance affected by one underwriter with another, the latter wholly or partially indemnifying the former against the risks which he has assumed; that is to say, after insurance has been affected, the insurer could have the subject of insurance reimbursed to him by some other company. There is in such case, however, no privity between the original insured and the reinsurer. The latter is in no respect liable to the former as a surety or otherwise; the contract of insurance and reinsurance being totally distinct and disconnected. Even if the insurer failed or became insolvent, or if his insured received only a dividend, however small, the reinsurer can gain nothing by this, but must pay the amount of the loss to the first insurer. David Bradley & Co. v. Brown, 112 N. W. 331, 332, 78 Neb. 836 (quoting and adopting definition in Appeal of Goodrich, 109 Pa. 529, 2 Atl. 211).

If there was any doubt as to the meaning of the word "reinsurances" in a contract between a fire insurance company and its agents for commissions, evidence to show that the word, as used in dealings between fire insurance companies and their agents, has a technical meaning of agency reinsurance, and excludes home office reinsurance, was admissible. Federal Ins. Co. v. Gilmour, 92 N. E. 36, 206 Mass. 203.

The term "double insurance" means an insurance of the same interest, and is entirely different from "reinsurance," which is a contract of indemnity to the person or corporation reinsured for the whole loss sustained in respect to the subject of the insurance to the extent to which he is reinsured. Providence-Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Atlanta-Birmingham Fire Ins. Co., 166 Fed. 548, 553.

"Double insurance" or "coinsurance" occurs when several policies are effected for the benefit of the same person on the same subject-matter, while "reinsurance" is effected by the insurer for his own protection. Where a marine carrier issued insured bills of lading which bound it as an insurer of the cargo covered, and against the risks so assumed it took out a marine policy providing that it was understood and agreed to be in effect a reinsurance of the risks assumed by insured, the latter contract was one of reinsurance and not of coinsurance, such as would entitle the insurance company to prorate the loss with the carrier. Ocean S. S. Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 121 Fed. 882, 887.

REINVEST—REINVESTMENT

Where a house in which a father had a life estate and his children the remainder was sold, under the provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 491, authorizing such sales and the reinvestment of the proceeds in other real property, the proceeds could not be used to erect a building on other land in which the father had a life estate, and his children the remainder; that not being a "reinvestment." Globe Realty Co. v. Lentz, 134 S. W. 882, 142 Ky. 497.

Kirby's Dig. § 3803, requiring a guardian to give bond to faithfully conduct a sale, etc., applies only to sales for reinvestment, and a sale to discharge a mortgage on other land was not a sale for "reinvestment," though the petition and order for sale designated it as such; the words "education" and "maintenance" in another statute authorizing sales being broad enough to authorize a sale to protect the ward's estate. Harper v. Smith, 116 S. W. 674, 675, 89 Ark. 284, 131 Am. St. Rep. 93.

A corporation was involved financially; its property having been sold under execution, and the time for redemption being about to expire. Plaintiffs owned four-sevenths of the capital stock, and defendants three-sevenths. To give defendants a controlling interest, the parties contracted that plaintiffs should transfer their interest to defendants, with the exception of 279,500 shares, which were to be retained, defendants to have two years in which to comply with the contract, and should they fail to so comply, the "interest" of plaintiffs should reinvest in them in the same proportion as they held and were possessed of at the signing of the agreement. Held, that upon default of defendants, in view of the fact that the word "reinvest" implies a previous divestiture and the use of the phrase "in the same proportion and ratio as they were held and possessed of," whereas plaintiffs never had possession of the corporate property as such, plaintiffs were entitled to recover their interest conveyed in the stock only, and not in the property of the corporation. Tevis v. Ryan, 108 Pac. 461, 464, 13 Ariz. 120.

REJECT—REJECTION

One of the definitions of the word "reject" given by Webster is: "To refuse to grant; as, to 'reject' a prayer or request." The board of excise, in refusing to grant a license, "rejects" the application within the meaning of the Inn and Tavern Act, prohibiting renewal of an application within one year after rejection of a former application. Sayre v. Board of Excise of City of Elizabeth, 79 Atl. 623, 624, 81 N. J. Law, 79.

Verbal rejection of a claim by an administrator is sufficient to set in operation the short statute of limitations prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1822, requiring suit on such claims to be brought within six months after "rejection." Gardner v. Pitcher, 95 N. Y. Supp. 678, 681, 109 App. Div. 106.

Where a claim against a decedent's estate was presented at the office of the administrator's attorney, who, under the administrator's direction, indorsed the claim "Rejected," and signed the administrator's name, there was a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 2607, requiring the rejection or allowance of claims by the administrator. Dorais v. Doll, 83 Pac. 884, 886, 33 Mont. 314.

REL. VAL. $5.00 CWT.

The indorsement on the face of a bill of lading, "Rel. Val. $5.00 Cwt.," cannot, in the absence of anything to explain the terms and in the face of the provision in the bill that, in case of loss of or damage to the goods shipped, the loss or damage shall be computed at their value, be assumed to be an agreement to reduce the value of the property in case of loss or damage to $5 per hundredweight. Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Embury, 90 S. W. 15, 16, 76 Ark. 589.

RELATE

The words "relate" and "involve," in the act creating the Court of Appeals (Laws 1911, p. 269) and providing for the retransfer by the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court of cases which involve the construction of the federal or state Constitutions or relate to a freehold, are synonymous. Monte Vista Canal Co. v. Centennial Irrigating Ditch Co., 123 Pac. 831, 832, 22 Colo. App. 364.

The answer, in an action for the release or reconveyance of land, conveyed to defendant's intestate by absolute deed, alleged to have been a mortgage, defended by the mortgagee's administrator and sole heir at law, admitted that the deed was a mortgage, but insisted that it was so held by defendant administrator as security for a larger indebtedness claimed to be due from the plaintiff to the estate of the mortgagee, and prayed judgment therefor, but asserted no claim to the property described in the deed as sole heir at law. Held, that the words "relates to a * * * freehold," as used in the act establishing the Court of Appeals, should be given the same construction as the like expression found in the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure for appeals to the Supreme Court; that the terms "relate to" and "involve" were synonymous in this connection; and that a judgment for plaintiff with a money judgment for defendant for the balance found due did not involve a freehold, so that the Court of Appeals, as well as the Supreme Court, was without jurisdiction. Fehringer v. Martin, 126 Pac. 1131, 1133, 22 Colo. App. 634.

"Relating" means in respect to; in reference to; in regard to. Hence an act fixing the salaries of judges of all courts is one relating to courts which, under Const. art. 5, § 26, is required to be general. Commonwealth v. Mathues, 59 Atl. 961, 975, 210 Pa. 372.

In order to bring a case within a statute authorizing appeal directly to the Supreme Court in cases "relating to revenue," the revenue must be directly, and not merely incidentally or remotely, involved. A suit to restrain a county and its board of supervisors from entering into a contract employing a tax ferret was not one "relating to revenue," within the act. Wilson v. Marion County, 68 N. E. 793, 794, 205 Ill. 580.

The title of Laws 1905, p. 2051, c. 725, "An act 'relating to' the acquisition of property by the city of New York for water supply," etc., indicates that it has reference to the subject-matter specified, but does not convey the idea of an exclusive act, presupposing instead that some other provision of law governs the subject-matter, to have "bearing or concern; to pertain; to refer." In re Water Supply in City of New York, 109 N. Y. Supp. 652, 655, 125 App. Div. 219 (quoting Webst. Dict.).

RELATED

Affinity

The phrase "related to," whether used in a statute, will, or contract, includes only relations by blood, and therefore do not include husband and wife. De Graffenreid v. Iowa

Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687 (citing Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends v. Bennett, 19 Atl. 785, 49 N. J. Eq. 39).

RELATION—RELATIVE

See Confidential Relation; Female Relation; Fiduciary Relation; Legal Relation; Near Relatives; Nearest Relations; Parental Relation.

Other relative, see Other.

See, also, Brother-in-Law; Family; Kin.

The words "relative" and "relation," when construed technically, refer to one connected by ties of blood, but, when employed in their generic sense, they include those connected by affinity, as well as consanguinity. Wapello County v. Eikelberg, 117 N. W. 978, 979, 140 Iowa, 736.

Webster's International Dictionary (1907) defines the word "relation" to be "a person connected by consanguinity or affinity; a relative; a kinsman or kinswoman." Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines a "relation" as "one connected with another by blood or affinity; a relative; a kinsman or kinswoman." De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687.

"Relations," as testamentary beneficiaries are relatives, entitled under the statute of distributions, and persons who have married them. Henderson v. Henderson, 77 Atl. 348, 350, 77 N. J. Eq. 317.

Although "relatives" is popularly used as a word of general and comprehensive signification, it has acquired a definite and restricted sense when occurring in wills, and unless a contrary intention appears it is construed as equivalent to those persons who would take under the statute of distribution. Thompson v. Thornton, 83 N. E. 880, 197 Mass. 273.

"Relative," as used in a by-law of a fraternal benefit association, confining the designation of a new beneficiary to a relative or dependent of the member, is broad enough to include one who married a sister of the wife of the member. Tolson v. National Provident Union, 113 N. Y. Supp. 534, 536, 60 Misc. Rep. 460.

Though the term "relative" is to be extended to cover relatives by marriage as well as by blood, a niece of a deceased member's father's first wife, deceased being a son of the second wife, was not a "relative" of deceased either by consanguinity or affinity, and, although named as beneficiary in the certificate, was not, in the absence of a will making her deceased's legatee, entitled to the death benefit, under Code, § 1824, providing that no fraternal association shall issue a certificate to one not "the husband, wife, relative, legal representative, heir, or legatee" of the member. Smith v. Supreme Tent,

Under the statute providing that any female under the permanent or temporary protection of accused at the time of the killing shall be included within the term "relative" in the statute, justifying one in protecting a female relative and reducing a killing to manslaughter when committed in protecting her, the mistress of accused is a female relative, and, where decedent attempted to take her away from the house of accused against her consent, accused had the legal right to protect her under the law of manslaughter. Gaines v. State (Tex.) 148 S. W. 717, 721.

The word "family," within the charter of a mutual benefit society, like "relative," has a very extensive scope, and has been held to include relatives and connections both by blood and marriage. The charter of a beneficial association provided that its object was to establish a benefit fund for the families or dependents of members as they shall direct, and a by-law declared that on the death of one or more beneficiaries prior to the death of the member, if no change of beneficiary should have been made, the share or shares to which such beneficiaries would have been entitled shall be paid to the beneficiary's legal representative, to be distributed to his or her heirs at law. Held that, where a member of such order died after the death of his wife, who was named as his beneficiary, without appointing a new beneficiary, the heirs of the wife at the time of the member's death were entitled to the fund. Anderson v. Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion, 60 Atl. 759, 69 N. J. Eq. 176.

Under Probate Act (Laws 1873, p. 269) § 90, granting the right of administration to creditors in certain cases, a person whose claim as creditor rests entirely on assignments taken by him since the death of intestate is not qualified, since it is against the policy of the law to purchase the right to administer an estate. Probate Act (Laws 1873, p. 269) § 90, as amended by Laws 1881, p. 6, § 1, provides that administration of the estate of an intestate shall be granted to: First, the surviving husband or wife, or such person as he or she may request to have appointed. Second, the next of kin in the following order: First, child or children; second, father or mother; third, brothers or sisters; fourth, grandchildren. Third, to one or more of the principal creditors: Provided, that if there be no "relatives or next of kin," then the probate court or judge may appoint any suitable and competent person to administer such estate. Held, that the words in the proviso, "no relatives or next of kin," must be construed to mean "no relatives or next of kin such as are specified in the enacting clause," and hence next of kin not within those mentioned in the enacting clause have no priority over any suitable person whom the judge may appoint. In re Hoss Estate, 109 Pac. 1071, 1072, 59 Wash. 360.

As relation by blood

With the exception of a few special bequests, and a provision for the erection of a monument and a direction that any note owing him by any of his "kin" should be canceled and the amount given to such "relative," a will provided for the distribution of the estate among testator's relatives "equally as provided by statute, as if no will had been made," thus embracing only blood relatives. Held, that the words "kin," "relative," and "relatives" referred prima facie to blood connections only, so that the husband of testator's niece was still liable on notes given to the testator. Boyd v. Perkins, 113 S. W. 95, 96, 130 Ky. 77.

Rev. Laws Mass. 1902, c. 119, § 6, provides that a fraternal death benefit shall be payable only to the husband, wife, etc., or relative of the member named in the certificate. The charter of a fraternal benefit society declared its object to be to establish a fund from which, on a member's death, a sum not exceeding a certain amount should be paid to his family or a relative, and its constitution declared its object to be to create a fund from which a sum not exceeding a certain amount should be paid to the husband, wife, or relative of a member. Held, that a son-in-law of a member was not a "relative" of such member, and could not be named as a beneficiary; only a relative by blood being intended to be included in that expression. Supreme Lodge, New England Order of Protection, v. Hine, 73 Atl. 791, 792, 82 Conn. 315.

As next of kin

Under a will giving all testator's property to his wife, and providing, "Previous to her death she may will or distribute to her 'relations' and to my 'relations' any property as she may choose or desire them to have," she, in distributing the property, is not limited to next of kin of her self and testator as beneficiaries. Levi v. Fidelity Trust & Safety Vault Co., 88 S. W. 1083, 1084, 121 Ky. 82.

Husband or wife

A husband is not a "relative" of his wife, nor is a wife a "relative" of her husband. De Graffenreid v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 624, 635, 20 Okl. 687.

"Relatives," in the statute directing bodies of strangers or convicts to be delivered to their "relatives or friends," includes the surviving spouse, though in other statutes it may not. Koerber v. Patek, 102 N. W. 40, 46, 123 Wis. 453, 68 L. R. A. 956 (citing Cleaver v. Cleaver, 39 Wis. 96, 20 Am. Rep. 30).

A deceased devisee, testator's wife, was not a "relative," within Rev. St. c. 76, § 10, providing that when a "relative" of the testator, having a devise of real or personal estate, dies before the testator, leaving lineal descendants, they take such estate as would have been taken by such deceased "relative," if he had survived. Farnsworth v. Whiting, 66 Atl. 831, 833, 102 Me. 296.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 135, § 21, providing that if a devise or legacy is made to a child or other relation of the testator, who dies before the testator, but leaves issue surviving the testator, such issue shall, unless a different disposition is made by the will, take the same estate which the person whose issue they are would then have taken if he had survived the testator, a wife is not a "relation of testator," her deceased husband. Curley v. Lynch, 92 N. E. 429, 430, 206 Mass. 289.

Under Laws Me. 1847, c. 33, § 10, providing that if the mayor and aldermen of any city, or the selectmen of any town, shall refuse or neglect to examine and decide on any case of insanity, as required by section 8, two justices of the peace, one of whom shall be of the quorum, upon complaint made in writing by any relative of an insane person, shall sit and hear and decide on the case, a complaint in writing made to the selectmen by the wife of the person alleged to be insane is sufficient; she being a "relative," within the intentment of the statute. Treasurer of Insane Hospital v. Inhabitants of Belgrade, 35 Me. 497, 504.

RELATION (In Contract, Conveyance, or Other Transaction)

Under the doctrine of "relation," all of the several parts and ceremonies necessary to complete a conveyance shall be taken together as one act and operate from the substantial part by relation. The formal part effectuates the substantial part, and hence must relate to it. Thompson v. Ramsey, 66 Atl. 588, 589, 72 N. J. Eq. 457.

The doctrine of "relation," while of equitable origin, has a well-recognized application to proceedings at law, and is applied most frequently to conveyances of real estate made pursuant to an antecedent contract, and to give effect to the intention of the parties or to protect purchasers pending the fulfillment of the contract. It is also applied to public land transactions, so as to cut off intervening claimants between the date of the entry and that of the patent. Knapp v. Alexander-Edgar Lumber Co., 130 N. W. 504, 506, 145 Wis. 528, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1091.

By the fiction of relation, a legal title is held to relate back to the initiatory step for the acquisition of the land. The doctrine of "relation" precludes the United States from retaining, as against its grantees of lands within the indemnity limits of the grant made by Act June 3, 1856, c. 41, 11 Stat. 17, in aid of railway construction, a sum which it collected from trespassers thereon for the removal of iron and stone from the land during the period between the selection of such lands to supply in part a large deficiency in the place limits and the approval of such selection by the Secretary of the Interior. United States v. Anderson, 24 Sup. Ct. 716, 718, 194 U. S. 394, 48 L. Ed. 1035.

While the doctrine of "relation" is of equitable origin, it has a well-recognized application to proceedings at law. By it is meant that principle by which an act done at one time is considered by a fiction of law to have been done at some antecedent period. It is usually applied where several proceedings are essential to complete a particular transaction, such as a conveyance or deed. The last proceeding, which consummates the conveyance, is held for certain purposes to take effect by relation as of the day when the first proceeding was had. Peyton v. Desmond, 129 Fed. 1, 11, 63 C. C. A. 651.

"By the doctrine of 'relation' is meant that principle by which an act done at one time is considered, by a fiction of the law, to have been done at some antecedent period. It is usually applied where several proceedings are essential to complete a particular transaction, such as a conveyance or deed. The last proceeding which consummates the conveyance is held for certain purposes to take effect by relation as of the day when the first proceeding was had." Krakow v. Wille, 103 N. W. 1121, 1123, 125 Wis. 284, 4 Ann. Cas. 1016 (quoting and adopting definition in Gibson v. Chouteau, 80 U. S. [13 Wall. 92] 20 L. Ed. 534).

The doctrine of "relation," like every other fiction of the law, has its limitations. It can never be made to bear fruit where its root is not planted in some antecedent, lawful right. It is sometimes allowed to prevent injustice, as when an attachment has been issued and levied without sufficient affidavit, and an amended affidavit is afterwards made. It will relate back so as to uphold the attachment and the previous levy. United States v. Atchison, T. & S. Ry. Co., 142 Fed. 176, 187.

The doctrine of "relation" is a fiction of law to prevent injustice and the occurrence of injuries, or otherwise there would be no remedy. The doctrine of relation does not authorize a widow, afterwards appointed administratrix of the estate of her husband, to take possession by herself or agent, prior to such appointment, of personalty claimed by and in the possession of another, though at the husband's death he had a mortgage on such property. James v. Nunley, 97 S. W. 1028, 1030, 6 Ind. T. 336.

"Title by relation" must be limited to valid acts done in respect to the goods and chattels of a decedent by a person prior to his appointment as administrator, and the doctrine has no application to wrongful acts of a person who, to the prejudice of a third person, officiously intermeddles with the goods and chattels of an intestate before his appointment as administrator, but the granting of letters of administration legalize all other acts, otherwise valid, that have been done by the administrator before his appointment. Casto v. Murray, 81 Pac. 883, 885, 47 Or. 57.

By the doctrine of "relation," the title of a purchaser at a judicial sale relates back to the date of the lien. While the title acquired by a purchaser at a mechanic's lien foreclosure sale relates back to the date the lien became effective, the purchaser is nevertheless precluded by the doctrine of caveat emptor from recovering damages for injuries to the property by the owner between the date of the filing of the lien and the date of the sale. Van Buskirk v. Summitville Min. Co., 78 N. E. 208, 209, 38 Ind. App. 198.

As between two persons beginning irrigation ditches at the same time, and prosecuting work thereon with reasonable diligence to completion, the one who first began work had the prior right, even though the other had completed his first. This is the doctrine of "relation back." Wright v. Cruse, 95 Pac. 370, 372, 37 Mont. 177; Murray v. Tingley, 50 Pac. 723, 725, 20 Mont. 260.

"The question of 'relation back' of amendments is a fiction of the law and should never be allowed when to do so would, to the prejudice of a litigant, deprive him of a substantial right." Gen. St. Fla. 1906, § 3146, giving a right of action for wrongful death, gives such right to the widow alone, if there be a widow, for her sole benefit, while the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232) gives such right, for the death of an employé against an interstate carrier, to the personal representative of the deceased alone, and for the benefit of his widow and children or dependent next of kin; and where, therefore, a widow of an employé of an interstate railroad company brought suit against such company in a state court of Florida, in her capacity as widow, to recover for the death of her husband, such action was necessarily based on the state statute, and an amendment of her declaration, changing the capacity in which she sued to that of administratrix, introduced a new and different cause of action based on the federal statute, and was in effect the bringing of a new action thereunder, which was begun for the purpose of limitation, when the amendment was filed, and did not relate back to the time of the commencement of the original action. Hall v. Louisville & N. R., 157 Fed. 464-466.

RELATIONSHIP

"Relationship," in the law of homicide, justifying the taking of life to prevent the commission of a felony, is not restricted to the ties of affinity or consanguinity, but has the broader sense, denominating any tie, even if it be ephemeral, which binds the parties together. Gillis v. State, 70 S. E. 53, 54, 8 Ga. App. 606.

In an action against a telegraph company for damages for delay in the delivery of a death message, the court found that the deceased and the plaintiff were first cousins, that the sender at the time of delivering the message to defendant informed its agent of the relationship existing between the plaintiff and the deceased. Held, that the word "relationship" meant the state of being related by kindred affinity or other alliance, and the finding was only to the effect that defendant knew that the parties were first cousins, and not that the company had notice of any special tender relationship, and was insufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Samuels (Tex.) 141 S. W. 802, 805.

RELATIVE INTERESTED IN WELFARE

Within a rule of an insane asylum requiring patients entering the same to be searched and money or other things of value taken from the persons, to be deposited with the superintendent, and making it his duty to keep the same for the patient or turn it over to the guardian, relative, or friend interested in him and looking after his welfare, a sister of a patient claiming money on his person as having been stolen, and requesting its delivery to her as the rightful owner, is not a relative interested in looking after his welfare. Worsham v. Votgsberger (Tex.) 129 S. W. 157, 159.

RELATIVE VALUE

The term "relative value," as used in a building contract requiring monthly estimates of the relative value of the work done, meant that the value was not absolute; the estimated value of a part as it stood in connection with the whole. Drhew v. Altoona City, 121 Pa. 401, 418, 15 Atl. 636.

RELATOR

Where the Attorney General appeared in chancery in relation to the improper conduct of a charity, and he sued at the relation of others, they were termed "relators." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1040, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

RELEASE

See Date Released; Deed of Release; Technical Release.

See, also, Parole.

The word "release" may be shown to be the same as the word "discharge." Egan v. Winnipeg Baseball Club, 104 N. W. 947, 96 Minn. 345.

The word "release," in a quitclaim deed, means "discharged." Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

"A 'release' is a discharge of a debt by act of the party. A release is a voluntary relinquishment of a lien and right of action or an obligation." Woodrough v. Douglas County, 98 N. W. 1092, 1095, 71 Neb. 354.

A "release" is a discharge or a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that held some former estate in possession. The words generally used therein are "demised, released, and forever quitclaimed." Sanborn v. Crowds Bros. & Co. (Tex.) 99 S. W. 444, 447 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Blackstone, Com. 324).

A "release," not under seal, given by a beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate in consideration of receiving a part of the amount of the certificate, is a mere receipt in full of the society's liability, and the acceptance by the beneficiary thereof is a discharge only of so much of the debt as is equal in amount to the sum received. Farmers' & Mechanics' Life Ass'n v. Caine, 79 N. E. 956, 959, 224 Ill. 599 (citing Titsworth v. Hyde, 54 Ill. 386; Heffer v. Cahn, 73 Ill. 296; Hayes v. Massachusetts Life Ins. Co., 18 N. E. 322, 125 Ill. 626, 1 L. R. A. 303; Ostrander v. Scott, 43 N. E. 1089, 161 Ill. 339; distinguishing Rigdon v. Walcott, 31 N. E. 158, 141 Ill. 649; Papke v. G. H. Hammond Co., 61 N. E. 910, 192 Ill. 631; Hartley v. Chicago & Alton Railroad Co., 73 N. E. 398, 214 Ill. 78; and Chicago City Railway Co. v. Uhter, 72 N. E. 195, 212 Ill. 174).

Under a receipt given to the sheriff garnishees, acknowledging the receipt of property of the judgment debtor, and agreeing to "release" the same, when ordered by the sheriff, the term "release" must have been used in the sense of a return or redelivery to the sheriff. Hence an allegation in the complaint, in an action by the sheriff for breach of the contract to return the property, that plaintiff had demanded possession of the property, which receiptors refused and still refuse to deliver, was sufficient, after answer, as an allegation of breach of the agreement to return the property. Colbath v. Hoefer, 73 Pac. 10, 12, 43 Or. 366.

In 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5374, as to the effect of giving a bond in attachment, expressly stating that the attachment shall be "discharged" and restitution made of property taken, the term "discharged" is used as referring to the attachment, and must mean that the attachment then becomes a closed incident in the case. Section 5376 provides that at any time before or after the "release" of the property, or before an actual levy has been made, application may be made that the writ be discharged on the ground that it was improperly issued. This section cannot be consistent with section 5374, if it is held that application may be made to discharge the writ of attachment after it has already been discharged by the giving of the bond. It must therefore refer to a "release" of the property made voluntarily or authorized, but without a discharge of the writ. Brady v. Onffroy, 79 Pac. 1004, 1007, 37 Wash. 482.

Const. art. 14, § 7, providing that the state thereby releases to the owner or owners of the soil all mines and minerals thereon, was curative in its nature and retrospective in its effect, and intended as an extinguishment of the rights of the state in only those mines and minerals in soil owned at the time of its adoption, and was not intended to prevent the state from reserving mines and minerals in lands of the public domain subsequently granted by it, in view of the facts that this provision was originally adopted by the convention which framed the Constitution of 1866 at a time when the state could not afford to be generous in its disposal of the ungranted public domain; that it was adopted, not as a general provision of the Constitution, but as an ordinance substituted for one having special reference to the title to a salt lake, then in dispute; and that its language has remained unchanged in subsequent Constitutions, especially as the term "release" commonly means to surrender a right or discharge a liability which presupposes the existence of some person against whom the right may be exercised or the liability enforced, and the word "owner" ordinarily means one who already has a legal or rightful title, and not one who must acquire such title in the future, in order to come within the term; and hence Rev. St. 1895, art. 3498n, reserving minerals on lands thereafter granted by the state, is valid. Cox v. Robison, 150 S. W. 1149, 1155, 105 Tex. 426.

As contract

See Contract.

As a conveyance

The word "release" means to discharge. An agreement between the owners of land and a railroad company stated that, in consideration of a certain sum paid, the owners "do hereby discharge and forever release" the railroad company from all damages and claims whatsoever on account of the taking, etc., of the land, had the effect of a formal quitclaim deed, the operative words of which are "remise, release, and forever quitclaim," and served to discharge and release the railroad company from all claims of ownership and title to the lands, constituting the transaction a grant of real property, which as thoroughly divested the grantors of their title as warranty deed with full covenants of title. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

Where a lessee of school lands under the laws of the territory contracted with A.

that such lessee fully releases said lands to A., provided that A. fully complies with the terms of the contract, then said lessee to have no claims or privileges on said land, his prior right to said land being forever released to A., "to have and to hold the same for a term of four years" (that being the unexpired term of the original lease of such lessee), the contract was not a lease, but a contract of sale—a relinquishment of all rights and claims of the lessee, and conveyed to A. the prior right to re-lease said land at the expiration of the original lease. Whitaker v. Hughes, 78 Pac. 383, 385, 14 Okl. 510.

Receipt distinguished

"A 'receipt' is evidence that an obligation has been discharged, but a 'release' is itself a discharge of it." A "release" cannot be varied as against one whose interests may be affected by it, by parol evidence that the parties did not intend to according to its legal effect. A "release" given for a valuable consideration for all causes of action, including trespasses, is a release of a cause of action for unlawful confinement of the person previously procured by the persons to whom the release is given jointly or severally. Where a "release" is given extinguishing a demand wholly unliquidated, whether the sum received for the release is large or small is immaterial. Allen v. Ruland, 65 Atl. 138, 140, 79 Conn. 405, 118 Am. St. Rep. 146, 8 Ann. Cas. 344.

Satisfaction distinguished

There is a clear distinction between a "satisfaction" of a joint tort and "release" growing out of the right of the injured party to choose whether he will seek redress against all or a less number of those jointly liable to him. A release unsupported by a consideration of one joint tort-feasor does not operate to release another wrongdoer, but a contract which purports to be a satisfaction and release of one wrongdoer jointly liable with another, and which shows that the injured person has for a consideration surrendered his claim against one wrongdoer, cannot recover compensation from another wrongdoer jointly liable. While one who compromises a claim does not necessarily admit that the claim was well founded, the one who receives the consideration is precluded from denying that it was well founded, and, when a pretended claim for a tort has been settled and satisfaction has been rendered the claimant by one so connected with the wrong as to be reasonably subject to an action and possible liability as a joint tort-feasor, the satisfaction will release all who may be liable, though the one released was not liable. The validity and effect of a release of a cause of action does not depend on the validity of the cause of action. Cleveland C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Hillgoss, 86 N. E. 485, 487, 171 Ind. 417, 131 Am. St. Rep. 258 (citing and adopting Fleming v. McDonald, 50 Ind. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 711; Ashcraft v. Knoblock, 45 N. E. 69, 146 Ind. 169, 174; Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] pp. 224, 225).

Seal

A "release," as defined by the Century Dictionary, is: "In law, a surrender of a right; a remission of a claim in such form as to estop the grantor from asserting it again. An instrument by which a creditor or lienor discharges the debt or lien, or frees a particular person or property therefrom, irrespective of whether payment or satisfaction has been actually made. Hence usually it implies a sealed instrument." The words "deed of release," as used in Civ. Code, § 3845, providing that an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage in the margin of a record shall have such effect, means simply the release of the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage. Swain v. McMillan, 76 Pac. 943, 945, 30 Mont. 433.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE

A lease by a railway company of a part of its right of way stipulated that the lessee covenanted to "assume all the risks" of loss of any building, improvements, or property on or near the premises, occasioned by fire from locomotives, etc., and that the lessee released and discharged the company from any claim on account thereof. The lease provided that if, on termination of the lease, the lessee or owner of any of the buildings on the ground should fail to remove any buildings or other property from the leased premises, the company might remove the same at the cost of the lessee. Held, that the lessee assumed only risk of loss of its own buildings and property, the words "assumes all the risks" applying, in common acceptance, to an employé entering the service of the master, who "assumes all the risks" of injury to himself incident to his employment, and the words "release and discharge" not being used in ordinary parlance in relation to insurance, guaranty, or indemnity, but applying to a claim owned or controlled by the party undertaking to release and discharge another from such claim. W. A. Morgan & Bros. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 110 S. W. 978, 983, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 420.

RELEASE OF A RIGHT OF WAY

The phrase "release of a right of way," in an instrument in writing by which the absolute owner of a tract of land released to a steam railroad company a right of way 100 feet in width and passing through the land, leaving a portion thereof on each side of the right of way, conveys an easement in the land for railroad purposes, leaving the fee subject to such servitude in the general owner. Cincinnati, H. & D. Ry. Co. v. Wachter, 70 N. E. 974, 975, 70 Ohio St. 113.

RELEASE, REMISE, AND FOREVER DISCHARGE

Where a partnership was dissolved on one of the partners retiring and a new firm was created, consisting of the remaining partner and a third person, and the new firm took over the assets and business of the old one, and at the same time the partners of the new firm executed an instrument reciting that they "released, remised, and discharged" the retiring partner from the payment of all liabilities of the old firm, the new firm assumed all the liabilities of the old firm, and the retiring partner's right against the partners of the new firm was complete at the latest when a judgment was rendered against the partners of the old firm based on a claim against the old firm; for, though the words "release, remise, and forever discharge" are not the most appropriate, they must be given a meaning which will effectuate the plain intention of the parties, and they must be construed to be an agreement to assume and discharge all the debts, agreements, and liabilities of the old firm. Alexander v. McPeck, 75 N. E. 88, 89, 189 Mass. 34.

RELEASED

The term "released," as a legal phrase, and when used in reference to a shipment by a carrier, means that the carrier is relieved from losses not occasioned by its negligence. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Butler Marble & Granite Co., 68 S. E. 775, 777, 8 Ga. App. 1.

The word "released," as used "in contracts of shipment, has from usage acquired a well-defined meaning. * * * In this state * * * the word must be held to mean only that the shipper agrees to relieve from all liability as against which the law allows the carrier to exempt itself by contract." Therefore the contract to ship goods "released" must be construed to mean that the carrier is only relieved from losses occasioned without his negligence. Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Johnson, King & Co., 48 S. E. 807, 121 Ga. 231.

RELEVANT

One fact is relevant to another, when, according to the common course of events, the existence of the one taken alone or in connection with the other renders the existence of the other certain or more probable. Locke v. Kraut, 83 Atl. 626, 627, 85 Conn. 486.

"Relevant," as applied to testimony, means that the testimony bears upon the issues so as to tend to prove or disprove them, but testimony may be relevant if it is only a link in the chain of evidence tending to prove the issues by reasonable inference, though not directly bearing upon them. San Antonio Traction Co. v. Higdon (Tex.) 123 S. W. 732, 734.

Any evidence is "relevant" which logically tends to prove or disprove a material fact in issue; and every act or circumstance serving to elucidate a material issue is relevant. Alexander v. State, 68 S. E. 274, 275, 7 Ga. App. 88.

The word "relevant" means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that, according to the common course of events, one, either taken by itself or in connection with other facts proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Coutourie, 135 Fed. 465, 469, 68 C. C. A. 177 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Steph. Dig. Ev. c. 1, p. 36).

"The word 'relevant' means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that, according to the common course of events, one, either by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other." In an action on a note given for the purchase of a steam engine, where the issue was whether plaintiff agreed to take back such engine and return the note if defendant would buy goods in which plaintiff was interested at a certain price, evidence that plaintiff was offered by another after the sale to defendant, without knowledge thereof, the same price defendant had paid, was "relevant." Strickland v. Phillips, 55 S. E. 453, 75 S. C. 264 (quoting and adopting definition in Steph. Dig. Law of Evidence [3d Ed.]).

The word "relevant," as applied to the admission of evidence, means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that, according to the common course of events, one, either taken by itself, or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other. Where, in an action for breach of warranty of variety of seed wheat sold, the seller denied the making of the warranty, and the evidence showed that he had only a different variety of wheat for sale, evidence that he sold wheat during the same season to third persons and warranted it to be of the variety warranted to plaintiff was admissible as bearing on the fact in issue. Moody v. Peirano, 88 Pac. 380, 382, 4 Cal. App. 411 (quoting and adopting definition in Steph. Dig. Law of Evidence, c. 1; and citing Thayer's Introduction to Cases on Evidence).

RELEVANCY

Irrelevancy, see Irrelevancy—Irrlevant.

The test of "relevancy" of evidence is whether it tends legitimately to establish the issuable fact. People v. Furlong, 125 N. Y. S. 164, 169, 140 App. Div. 179.

"Relevancy of testimony" means that any two facts to which it is applied are so related to each other that, according to the common course of events, one, either taken by itself or in connection with other facts proves or renders possible the past, present, or future existence or nonexistence of the other. Fishman v. Consumers' Brewing Co., 73 Atl. 231, 78 N. J. Law, 300.

RELIABLE

Defendant in complaining of plaintiff, a general freight agent, wrote to the general manager of the railroad that plaintiff told him one thing and wired the agent another, and concluded with a separate paragraph, saying that the plaintiff was not a reliable man in any respect, and that his word was not good with people who knew him. Held that, in view of the arrangement of the letter which showed that the last paragraph related to plaintiff's personal character, the communication was libelous per se, as tending to injure him in his business; the letter charging him with not being "reliable" in any respect, which means untrustworthy, and that his word was not "good," the word "good" as applied to one's word meaning untarnished, honorable; and so action might be maintained without allegation of special damage. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1104.

RELICT

RELICITION

"Accretion" is the increase or growth of property by external accessions as by alluvium naturally added to land situated on the bank of a river, or on the seashore; "alluvium" is applied to the most recent sedimentary deposits, such as occur in the valleys of large rivers—an imperceptible deposit usually of mingled sand and mud resulting from the action of fluviatile currents; and the term "reliction" is applied to land made by the gradual and imperceptible withdrawal of the water by which it was covered. Wilson v. Watson, 138 S. W. 283, 284, 144 Ky. 352, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 774.

RELIED

See Rely.

RELIEF

A letter given by an overseer of the poor to a wife, by means of which she obtained her husband's wages, was not "relief" within the meaning of the Poor Law. In re Kelly, 95 N. Y. Supp. 53, 56, 46 Misc. Rep. 548.

The term "relief," as often used in equity, has reference to the kind and degree of aid furnished to the plaintiff; whereas, in truth it has reference to the mode in which the aid was given. If given in an answer, he calls it "discovery"; if by decree, he calls it "relief." Where complainant filed a bill for an accounting and foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the fact that the bill waived an answer under oath did not amount to a waiver of complainant's right to discovery. Utah Const. Co. v. Montana R. Co., 145 Fed. 981, 987.

Under St. 1898, § 2886, the "relief granted plaintiff" on default cannot exceed that prayed for. A husband was granted a divorce on the wife's failure to appear, and division of "his" property was ordered, though not prayed for. Held, that the division was not "relief granted to plaintiff," within section 2886, but rather relief to defendant. Lessig v. Lessig, 117 N. W. 792, 793, 136 Wis. 403.

RELIGION

"Religion" has reference to man's relation to divinity; to the moral obligation of reverence and worship, obedience, and submission. It is the recognition of God as an object of worship, love, and obedience; right feeling toward God, as highly apprehended. People v. Board of Education of Dist. 24, 92 N. E. 251, 252, 245 Ill. 334, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442, 19 Ann. Cas. 220.

While "religion" in its broadest sense includes all forms of belief in the existence of superior beings capable of exercising power over the human race, as commonly accepted it means the formal recognition of God, as members of societies and associations, and the term, "a religious purpose," as used in the constitutional provision exempting from taxation property used for religious purposes, means the use of property by a religious society or body of persons as a place for public worship. People v. Deutsche Evangelisch Lutherische Jehovah Gemeinde, etc., 94 N. E. 162, 164, 249 Ill. 132.

"Theology, the science of 'religion'—that is, of formulating our thinking with respect to religion—has steadily insisted upon connecting religion with the life men lead and the things they do in this world. Indeed, the great religious struggles of the past have come in most cases from the undertaking of men to impose on other men, not their religion, but their science of religion; and against this, rather than religion, as defined by the Attorney General, the law has interposed its shield of protection. When theologians formulate their conclusion that anything such as a particular mode of life is essential to the attainment of the promised benefits of a religion, it is not for the courts by resorting to the definitions of lexicographers to perform the ungracious, if not herculean, task of determining whether this is so.

The anticipated advantages of nearly every religion or creed are made dependent on the life its followers live, and the criticisms oftenest heard are that the exalted doctrines of righteousness professed are too frequently forgotten in the ordinary pursuits of life, and that the contests for wealth in some circles are wedged with the rapacity of beasts of prey. Surely a scheme of life designed to obviate such results, and by removing temptations, and all the inducements of ambition and avarice, to nurture the virtues of unselfishness, patience, love, and service, ought not to be denounced as not pertaining to religion when its devotee regards it as an essential tenet of their religious faith." State v. Amana Society, 109 N. W. 894, 898, 132 Iowa, 304.

Piety synonymous

In determining the validity of a charity, there is no distinction between the promotion of "piety" and of "religion"; the two words being synonymous. Glover v. Baker, 83 Atl. 916, 931, 76 N. H. 393.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATION

The Church Home & Infirmary of Baltimore City, organized under Acts 1852, c. 231, composed (article 1) of certain persons, "together with such clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church * * * and laymen of the same as contribute to the funds," the object (article 2) being to provide a home for poor and distressed persons of such church "through the Ladies Church Home Society or other agencies to minister to their temporal and spiritual wants," is not a "religious corporation" within the Declaration of Rights, § 38, requiring legislative sanction to render valid a devise to religious institutions. Baltzell v. Church Home & Infirmary of Baltimore City, 73 Atl. 151, 153, 110 Md. 244.

Under the act of 1872 (3 Gen. St. p. 2759), a presbytery may be said to present a two-fold aspect. It is a strictly spiritual body or court, and the trustees, or presbyterial corporation. Neither the church corporation nor the presbyterial corporation is strictly ecclesiastical in the English sense inasmuch as the former is composed wholly of laymen, and the latter, partly so. However, they are classed as "religious corporations." MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 61 Atl. 1027, 1035, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

The term "religious corporation" in Tax Law (Laws 1896, p. 869, c. 908) § 221, as amended, providing that any property devised or bequeathed to any "religious corporation," including corporations organized exclusively for Bible or tract purposes, shall be exempt from the transfer tax and that there shall also be exempted personal property other than money or securities bequeathed to a corporation or association organized for the moral or mental improvement of men or women or for missionary, benevolent, or charitable purposes, means religious corporations as separate and distinct from charitable, benevolent, and missionary societies, and, though missionary societies are in a sense organized for religious purposes, they are not religious corporations. Laws 1848, p. 447, c. 319, provided for the incorporation of benevolent, charitable, scientific, and missionary societies, and such statute was repealed by Membership Corporation Law (Laws 1895, p. 331, c. 559), whereby all corporations organized under the repealed statute became membership corporations. A corporation organized under the Laws of 1848 was known as the "W. Street Mission," and, according to the certificate of incorporation, formed to do good spiritually and materially to those coming under its influence, to proclaim the Christian religion, and to provide a place to which persons might resort for Christian worship and fellowship. Held, that a devise of money to the corporation in question was not exempt from the tax. In re White's Estate, 103 N. Y. Supp. 688, 690, 118 App. Div. 869 (citing In re Huntington's Estate, 61 N. E. 643, 168 N. Y. 399; In re Watson's Estate, 63 N. E. 1109, 171 N. Y. 256).

St. 1898, §§ 1990 to 2001—20, provide for the incorporation of religious societies, and sections 1771-1791m provide for the formation of corporations for benevolent, charitable, or medical institutions, and for schools, hospitals, asylums, or other like institutions. The charter of the city of Superior (Laws 1891, c. 124, § 244) provides that no land benefited shall be exempt from assessment for sewers, "excepting only * * * property owned by some religious society" or corporation and not used for pecuniary profit. Held, that a corporation, incorporated under chapter 86, to maintain parochial schools, hospitals, and to help the poor, and not organized for profit, though authorized to acquire and hold property, its principal place of business being its hospital, in which religious services were conducted as a part of its administrative work was not exempt from sewer assessments, the term "religious corporation," in the charter, meaning the same as in chapter 91, and the words "property owned," as used in the charter, referring to a use in connection with religious purposes, and that defendant could not incorporate as a religious corporation, because it had no membership maintaining regular religious worship as a church society, a "religious society" being a body of persons organized to maintain religious worship only, who usually meet in some stated place for worship of God and religious instruction. United States Nat. Bank v. Poor Hand Maids of Jesus Christ, 135 N. W. 121, 122, 148 Wis. 613.

RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION

tion to young men of the Baptist denomination, without reference to residence, who should give satisfactory evidence to their church and to the trustees of the society of their personal piety and of their call to gospel ministry. The Baptist Educational Society of the State of New York furnished means of instruction to young men of the Baptist denomination who gave satisfactory evidence to their church and to the board of trustees of their personal piety and call to preach, and was similarly supported. The American Baptist Home Missionary Society was organized to promote the preaching of the gospel in North America. Its constitution provided for officers and members, and that all money or property contributed and designated for any particular field should be used as appointed or returned to the donors. It had no other purpose than the extension of gospel preaching. Held, that all three were "religious institutions" not confined in their operations to local or state purposes, but for the general good of the people interested therein, and were therefore exempt from payment of the collateral inheritance tax imposed by Laws 1898 (P. L. p. 106). In re Jones' Estate, 67 Atl. 1035, 1036, 73 N. J. Eq. 353.

Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, § 1, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 751, c. 201, provides that no gift for religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent uses, which shall in other respects be valid under the laws of this state, shall be deemed invalid on account of indefiniteness or uncertainty of the beneficiaries; but the title to the subject-matter of the gift shall vest in the trustee named in the instrument, and, if no trustee is named, the same shall vest in the Supreme Court. Section 2 provides that the Supreme Court shall have control over the gifts provided for by section 1, and that the Attorney General shall represent the beneficiaries and enforce the trust by proper proceedings. A will devised the residue of testator's estate to his executor in trust to collect the rents and profits thereof and to pay the same annually to "religious, educational or eleemosynary institutions" as in his judgment shall seem advisable, not more than $500 to any one institution in any one year. Held: That the statute applies to public and not private charitable gifts, and has reference to indefiniteness of beneficiaries, but not of the purposes for which the gift is made; that while the words, "religious" and "eleemosynary," when used to designate institutions, may necessarily imply that the institutions are engaged in public and not private charitable work, the words "educational" and "institutions" have a broad significance, and may refer as well to private as to public organizations or charities; and that, since the terms used are in the disjunctive, the invalidity of the provision as to educational institutions renders the entire gift invalid. In re Shattuck's Will, 86 N. E. 455, 193 N. Y. 446.

RELIGIOUS PURPOSES

As charity, see Charity.

As purely public charity, see Purely Public Charity.

Exclusively used for religious purposes, see Exclusively Used.

See, also, Gift to Church.

While "religion" in its broadest sense includes all forms of belief in the existence of superior beings capable of exercising power over the human race, as commonly accepted it means the formal recognition of God, as members of societies and associations, and the term, "a religious purpose," as used in the constitutional provision exempting from taxation property used for religious purposes, means the use of property by a religious society or body of persons as a place for public worship. People v. Deutsche Evangelisch Lutherische Jehovah Gemeinde, etc., 94 N. E. 162, 164, 249 Ill. 132.

RELIGIOUS SEMINARY

See Theological or Religious Seminary.

The holding of morning exercises in the public schools consisting of the reading by the teacher without comment, of nonsectarian extracts from the Bible, King James' version, and by repeating the Lord's Prayer and the singing of appropriate songs, in which the pupils are invited, but not required, to join, does not constitute the public schools a place of worship, nor render them sectarian, nor convert them into a "religious seminary," within Const. art. 1, §§ 6, 7, and article 7, § 5, providing that no one shall be compelled to attend or support any place of worship, and that no money shall be appropriated from the treasury for the benefit of any religious society or for the support of any sectarian school. Church v. Bullock (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1025, 1027.

"Religious seminary" means a place specifically for the preparation of men for the ministry, or, at least, for the teaching of religious doctrines. Church v. Bullock, 109 S. W. 115, 117, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES

In popular usage, the expression "religious services" is synonymous with "divine service." McDaniel v. State, 63 S. E. 919, 920, 5 Ga. App. 831.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY

As precinct, see Precinct.

A "religious society" is a voluntary association of individuals or families united for the purpose of having a common place of worship, and to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines and duties, and to administer the various ordinances of religion. Church v. Bullock, 109 S. W. 115, 117, 104 Tex. 1, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860.

St. 1898, §§ 1990 to 2001—20, provide for the incorporation of religious societies, and sections 1771—1791m provide for the formation of corporations for benevolent, charitable, or medical institutions, and for schools, hospitals, asylums, or other like institutions. The charter of the city of Superior (Laws 1891, c. 124, § 244) provides that no land benefited shall be exempt from assessment for sewers, "excepting only * * * property owned by some religious society" or corporation and not used for pecuniary profit. Held, that a corporation, incorporated under chapter 86, to maintain parochial schools, hospitals, and to help the poor, and not organized for profit, though authorized to acquire and hold property, its principal place of business being its hospital, in which religious services were conducted as a part of its administrative work was not exempt from sewer assessments, the term "religious corporation," in the charter, meaning the same as in chapter 91, and the words "property owned," as used in the charter, referring to a use in connection with religious purposes, and that defendant could not incorporate as a religious corporation, because it had no membership maintaining regular religious worship as a church society, a "religious society" being a body of persons organized to maintain religious worship only, who usually meet in some stated place for worship of God and religious instruction. United States Nat. Bank v. Poor Hand Maids of Jesus Christ, 135 N. W. 121, 122, 148 Wis. 613.

As incorporated society

"The term 'religious society' had in the English ecclesiastical law and has in our law a well-defined meaning, and, as commonly used in our law, it is synonymous with 'parish,' 'precinct,' and designates an incorporated society created and maintained for the support of public worship." Rifle v. Proctor, 74 S. W. 409, 410, 99 Mo. App. 601.

RELIGIOUS USES

A bequest for saying masses for the repose of the dead is a gift for a "religious use." In re Eppig, 118 N. Y. Supp. 683, 684, 63 Misc. Rep. 613.

A bequest to a priest or his successor, for the purpose of saying masses for testator and his wife, is a "religious use," within Act 1855 (P. L. 328). In re O'Donnell's Estate, 58 Atl. 120, 209 Pa. 63.

A bequest in trust to invest and reinvest the principal, and expend the income in keeping testator's cemetery lot and monument thereon in good repair, is not a gift to a "religious, educational, charitable, or benevolent use" within Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, and is invalid. In re Waldron, 109 N. Y. Supp. 681, 684, 57 Misc. Rep. 275.

Laws 1893, p. 1748, c. 701, declaring that no "bequest to religious, charitable, or benevolent uses," in other respects valid, shall be deemed invalid by reason of uncertainty of the persons designated as beneficiaries, etc., does not apply to an absolute gift to an unincorporated religious society, which did not constitute a trust for a particular purpose. Fralick v. Lyford, 95 N. Y. Supp. 433, 435, 107 App. Div. 543.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP

See Building for Religious Worship; Disturbing Religious Worship; House of Religious Worship.
See, also, Worship.

RELINQUISH

"The word 'relinquish' does not import a conveyance of the fee, but rather the use of the land." An instrument in writing, by which the owner of certain land "relinquished to the president and directors" of a certain turnpike company certain described ground, was insufficient to convey a fee, but constituted a conveyance of an easement only. Mitchell v. Bourbon County (Ky.) 76 S. W. 16, 17 (citing Harrison v. Lexington & F. R. Co., 48 Ky. [9 B. Mon.] 470).

RELINQUISHMENT

See Total Relinquishment.
As sale, see Sale.

RELOCATE

As applied to a way, the word "relocate," without addition or qualification, means to locate again, and implies a preservation of the identity of the way without material change. Bennett v. Town of Wellesley, 75 N. E. 717, 721, 189 Mass. 308.

RELOCATION

Construction of new switch tracks or side tracks, or a new track on part of a railroad's main line, does not necessarily constitute a "relocation." A railroad company, having the right to locate a depot at a new site, had power to condemn land for the additional right of way required to elevate its tracks, in order that its trains might enter and depart from the depot; this not being a "relocation" of the right of way of the road, or a "change of its terminus." Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Chicago Mechanics' Institute, 87 N. E. 933, 939, 239 Ill. 197.

"Relocation" is the appropriation of mining ground by location where a former claim has become lost by abandonment or forfeiture and the land is consequently restored to the public domain. There can be no relocation unless there has been a prior valid location, or something equivalent, of the same property. Jackson v. Prior Hill Min. Co., 104 N. W. 207, 208, 19 S. D. 453.

The requirements of Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 2358-2363, that, in voting on the question of county seat removal, each elector must vote for the place in the county which he prefers by placing opposite the name of the place the mark "X," are mandatory, and necessitate the construction of the statute as a removal statute, as distinguished from one for relocation. As affecting the question of location of county seats, a removal statute provides for the removal of the county seat to a proposed new county seat designated in the petition therefor, while a relocation statute authorizes a petition and election on the question, not whether the county seat shall be removed to a particular place, but where the county seat shall be located. Miller v. Norton, 132 N. W. 1080, 1095, 22 N. D. 196.

RELOCATOR

A "relocator" of mining ground is not a discoverer of the mineral therein, but an appropriator thereof, and cannot hold the ground except upon making proof that the original locator had abandoned or forfeited his right by failure to comply with the mining laws. Zerres v. Vanina, 134 Fed. 610, 614.

The "relocator," when he so describes himself in the notice, solemnly admits, in an instrument which is made a matter of record, that he is not a discoverer of mineral, but an appropriator thereof, on the ground that the original discoverer had perfected his right. Jackson v. Prior Hill Min. Co., 104 N. W. 207, 208, 19 S. D. 453 (quoting and adopting definition in Wills v. Blain, 20 Pac. 798, 5 N. M. 238).

RELY

The word "relied," as used in the finding of a court to the effect that the court was not satisfied that plaintiff "relied upon the oral statements made to him by the defendants," means that the court was not satisfied that the representations operated upon the plaintiff's mind in such a way as to cause him to depend upon them materially or otherwise. Peabody v. Whitcomb, 81 N. E. 193, 194, 195 Mass. 330.

The word "relied," as used in an instruction in an action for false representations in locating plaintiff on public land, to the effect that if the jury found the representations were made and were false and that plaintiff "relied" on them he will be entitled to recover, etc., implies a belief, and the instruction is not therefore subject to the objection that it omitted the element of belief of the representations on plaintiff's part. David v. Moore, 79 Pac. 415, 417, 46 Or. 148.

The court instructed in a servant's personal injury action that in determining contributory negligence and assumption of risk plaintiff was entitled to rely upon the assurance of safety given by the employer, if one was given, and was entitled to rely upon the superior knowledge and experience of his employer in the work. Held, that the word "rely" meant to trust or depend upon, and the instruction was improper where plaintiff testified that he knew he was going into a dangerous place pursuant to his foreman's order, since the jury were not required as a matter of law to absolve plaintiff from negligence if he knew the place was dangerous, though they also believed that his employer had assured him that the place was safe, or that plaintiff had relied upon the knowledge and experience of his employer. Caciatore v. Transit Const. Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 572, 573, 147 App. Div. 678.

Believe synonymous

"The words 'rely' and 'believe' are nearly synonymous. 'Rely' is to depend upon some one or something as worthy of confidence; to repose confidence; to trust; used with 'on' or 'upon.' 'Believe' is to accept as true on the testimony or authority of others; to have faith or confidence in the truth of any one or anything." In an action to rescind a sale of real estate for fraud, an allegation that plaintiff relied on the representations made constituted a sufficient averment that he believed them to be true. Spencer v. Hersam, 77 Pac. 418, 31 Mont. 120.

REM

See In Rem.

REMAIN

See Enter and Remain.

The word "remain" is defined as "to stay behind after others have withdrawn; to continue unchanged in place; to abide; to stay; to endure; to last." Its synonyms are "to continue; to stay; wait; tarry; rest; sojourn; dwell; abide; last; endure" (Webster). A statute which requires a liquor dealer's bond to be conditioned that he will not sell liquor to a minor, or permit a minor to enter and remain in his saloon, provided that, where the sale was made in good faith and on reasonable belief that the person was of full age, there can be no recovery, was passed for the purpose of repressing two evils—one the purchase of liquors by minors, and the other the immoral influence resulting to them from loitering in saloons; and it follows that where the entering and remaining in a saloon were merely for a time sufficient to get a drink, and the sale was made in good faith on reasonable grounds of belief that the person was of full age, there can be no recovery on a liquor dealer's bond in the terms of the statute, although such person was a minor. Tinkle v. Sweeney, 77 S. W. 609, 610, 97 Tex. 190; Ghio v. Stephens (Tex.) 78 S. W. 1084.

A liquor dealer's bond, executed under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5060g, conditioned that he shall not permit any minor to enter and "remain" in his place of business, is not breached by his permitting a minor to enter and remain momentarily in his saloon. Douthitt v. State, 83 S. W. 795, 798, 98 Tex. 344 (citing Tinkle v. Sweeney, 77 S. W. 609, 97 Tex. 190; Goldsticker v. Ford, 62 Tex. 385).

Ownership and power of disposal implied

A testator by his will devised and bequeathed to his aged wife all his estate "both real and personal wherever found and however situate for her use during life," and the next clause provided that, "at the death of my said wife, whatever may remain of said estates, I give, devise and bequeath to my daughter." Held, that by the use of the expression "whatever may remain" a power of sale by the life tenant was annexed by implication to the devise of the life estate, and that it sufficiently appeared that the testator intended the power of sale to extend to both the real and the personal estate, so that, the power of sale as to the real estate having been exercised by the life tenant in her lifetime, the remainderman was thereby divested of her title thereto. Young v. Hillier, 67 Atl. 571, 572, 103 Me. 17, 125 Am. St. Rep. 283 (citing and adopting Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 21 Me. 288; Shaw v. Hussey, 41 Me. 495; Warren v. Webb, 68 Me. 133; Stuart v. Walker, 72 Me. 145, 39 Am. Rep. 311; McGuire v. Gallagher, 99 Me. 334, 59 Atl. 445; Harris v. Knapp [Mass.] 21 Pick. 412; Johnson v. Battelle, 125 Mass. 453).

REMAIN DUE

Plaintiff alleged two causes of action, one to recover $1,000 loaned to defendants at one time, and the other to recover $200 loaned at a later date. Defendants answered, admitting the receipt of the money, and alleging that plaintiff was indebted to them for $337 for board and lodging and a further sum for money paid by them on his behalf. The answer to the first cause of action stated that defendants admitted that plaintiff turned over to defendants the sum of $1,000, "a portion of which was to be regarded as a loan to defendants," but claimed a right to deduct a sufficient sum therefrom to pay the amount of the accrued board. The answer otherwise alleged that the board so furnished was of the reasonable value of $30 per month, making the value the sum of $345, that plaintiff had paid thereon the sum of $8, and that the balance of $337 "remains due" defendants. Held, that the words "remains due" were equivalent to an allegation that such amount was unpaid, and that the answer, therefore, in effect admitted that the whole sum was advanced by plaintiff as a loan. Hendelman v. Kahan, 97 Pac. 109, 110, 50 Wash. 247.

REMAIN UNMARRIED

See If She Remains Unmarried.

REMAIN UNSOLD

Where a testator bequeathed as follows: "Two hundred and fifty shares of stock that I hold in the great western Turnpike company, in the state of New York, to 'remain unsold,' and the dividends arising thereon I direct to be equally divided between my sons, J., D. and E., my daughters M., M., S. and D., and my grandchild, O. S. T."—the turnpike stock was an absolute specific legacy to be enjoyed by the receipt of the dividends. Manning v. Craig, 4 N. J. Eq. 436, 437, 41 Am. Dec. 739.

In a paragraph of a will declaring that a daughter should have the right to use a certain house and lot for two years after testatrix's death, or for such longer period as the house should remain unsold, provided the same could be done without detriment to the estate, etc., the words "remains unsold" mean unsold by the executor under the power given the executor in a following paragraph to sell the testatrix's real estate for any purpose, with full discretion as to the time of sale, provided that he should so far as possible carry out her wishes as expressed in the preceding paragraph. Faxon v. Faxon, 55 N. E. 316, 317, 174 Mass. 509.

REMAINDER

See Rest, Residue, and Remainder.

All the rest, residue, and remainder, see All.

Said remainder, see Said.

Where plaintiff's grantor covenanted for himself, his assigns, etc., in a deed conveying a certain tract to himself, for the benefit of all other purchasers of the "remainder" of the tract, of which the land conveyed to him formed a part, not to erect thereon houses of amusement or entertainment, providing his grantors inserted similar clauses in all the other deeds of the remainder of the tract which they covenanted to do, the word "remainder" meant all of such tract not embraced in that deed, whether previously or subsequently sold. City of Baltimore v. Garrett, 69 Atl. 429, 433, 108 Md. 24.

One-half the net proceeds of the sale of real property in which a testator owned an undivided half interest, and not the entire net proceeds of the sale, is meant by the word "remainder," as used in an agreement for the division of the inheritance between the widow as usufructuary heiress and the heirs, who were also the owners of the other undivided half interest of the property, by which such property was to be sold, certain admitted debts or liabilities were to be deducted from the proceeds, and the remainder was to be turned over to the widow, to be used by her as usufructuary heiress. Calvo v. De Gutierrez, 28 Sup. Ct. 382, 384, 208 U. S. 443, 52 L. Ed. 564.

The use of the word "remainder" in the habendum clause of a deed is not decisive that a technical remainder is intended, where the whole clause, construed together, shows another intent, which will be enforced, though a popular, rather than a strict, meaning be attached to particular words. Simonds v. Simonds, 85 N. E. 860, 862, 199 Mass. 552, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686.

Where testator by the second clause of his will gave an undivided fourth of his property in trust for R., one of his four children, the third clause, giving to each of his other three children an undivided quarter of the "said remainder" of his estate, will be construed as giving to each of them a quarter of the whole estate, remaining after payment of his debts, funeral charges, expenses, etc.; it appearing that this was the intention, as otherwise part of the estate would be undisposed of by the will. Angell v. Angell, 68 Atl. 583, 586, 28 R. I. 592.

REMAINDER (Estate In)

See Contingent Remainder; Limitation of a Remainder; Vested Remainder.

See, also, Estate Remaining.

The essential characteristics of a "remainder" are: (1) There must be a precedent particular estate, whose regular termination the remainder must await. (2) The remainder must be created by the same conveyance and at the same time as the particular estate. (3) The remainder must vest in right during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instante that it determines. (4) No remainder can be limited after a fee simple. A fee simple is vested in the children of M. by a will devising property to them without further words, and thereafter appointing D. trustee to control the property during their lives. Dulin v. Moore (Tex.) 69 S. W. 94, 96 (quoting and adopting definition in Wells v. Houston, 57 S. W. 599, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629).

Real Property Law, § 28, defines a "remainder" as a future estate dependent upon a preceding estate. In Perry, 96 N. Y. Supp. 879, 884, 48 Misc. Rep. 285.

The word "remainder," as applied to estates and under the restrictive meaning, is a remnant of an estate in lands and tenements, expectant upon and part of the estate created together with the same at one time; and to be strictly a remainder it must be created not only at the same time, but by the same instrument, as the particular estate. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 69 N. E. 804, 806, 207 Ill. 611.

"A 'remainder' is a remnant of an estate in land depending upon a particular prior estate, created at the same time and by the same instrument and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate, and not in abridgment of it." If a homestead be selected from the separate property of a married woman in her lifetime, upon her death intestate a life estate vests in the surviving spouse, and "remainder" in the heirs of the deceased. Hobson v. Huxtable, 116 N. W. 278, 279, 79 Neb. 340 (quoting and adopting definition in 4 Kents' Com. [13th Ed.] 353).

A remainder requires a particular estate to support it, and a "contingent remainder" must vest during continuance of the particular estate, or eo instante that it determines; and, if the particular estate terminates before the event upon which the contingent remainder is to vest occurs, the remainder is defeated, whether the preceding estate reaches its natural termination or is ended prematurely by merger, forfeiture, or otherwise. Bond v. Moore, 86 N. E. 386, 391, 236 Ill. 576, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540.

"If A., being the owner of land, gives it by deed or will to B. for life, and after the death of B. to C. in fee, the estate given to C. is called a 'remainder,' because it is the remnant or remainder of the estate or title which is left after taking out the lessor estate given to B. The same is true where, instead of a life estate, B. is given an estate for years, or any other terminable estate less than a fee." Archer v. Jacobs, 101 N. W. 195, 197, 125 Iowa, 467.

By the habendum clause in a deed E. was to have the premises for life, and, if by any means the estate should come to an end in his lifetime, remainder to N. for the residue of E.'s life, remainder, after the death of E., to E. and his heirs. On the day the deed was executed, E. conveyed the premises to the grantor; and the latter reconveyed as above, reciting a nominal consideration. Held, that E.'s interest, other than the life estate, was an estate in expectancy, a future estate termed a "remainder," which could be created and transferred by that name, and as such was descendible, devisable, and alienable, the same as an estate in possession, as expressly provided by Real Property Law (Laws 1896, pp. 564, 567) §§ 26-28, 49. Ray v. Jaeger, 115 N. Y. Supp. 737, 739, 131 App. Div. 294.

As executory devise

The word "remainder" includes executory devises. Gannon v. Albright, 81 S. W. 1162, 1168, 183 Mo. 238, 67 L. R. A. 97, 105 Am. St. Rep. 471.

As a fee

The ninth clause of a will was divided into three seemingly distinct parts, the first part giving and bequeathing to testator's wife, after debts and bequests made in other clauses of the will had been paid, all the residue of the property, both personal and real, "to have and to hold during her lifetime, to manage and control without having to give bonds, and this is to be in lieu of her dower interest in my estate, for the benefit and support of herself and my two minor children * * * excepting" certain described land, which by the second part of the clause he devised to two sons. The third part of the clause provided "the remainder of the estate after these bequests are made shall be at my wife, M. I.'s disposal, but it is expressly provided that if any of my children mentioned in this will shall die before they come in possession of their bequest, it will revert to the estate and shall be subject to the same conditions as the estate according to the terms mentioned in the will." Held, that the will, aside from the third part of the ninth clause, having disposed of all of testator's property, the word "remainder" as used in such third part must be held to refer to the remainder after the wife's life estate, and, as the word "disposal" indicates the power of absolute disposition, the life estate granted by the first part of the ninth clause was raised to a fee simple by the third part of the clause, and hence the wife took a fee rather than a life estate in the property devised and bequeathed to her by the ninth clause. Ironside v. Ironside, 130 N. W. 414, 416, 150 Iowa, 628.

REMAINDER AND CONTINGENT INTEREST

"Remainder and contingent interest in real estate" is a term broad enough to include contingent remainders in fee, as well as defeasible fees. Scheirich v. Maxwell (Ky.) 89 S. W. 4, 5.

REMAINDERMAN

As devisee, see Devisee.

Domestic Relations Law, § 64 (Laws 1896, p. 227, c. 272; Consol. Laws, c. 14, § 114), provides that a foster parent and adopted minor child have all the rights of parent and child including the right of inheritance from each other; but as to real and personal property dependent under the provisions of any instrument of the foster parent dying without heirs the minor is not deemed the child of the foster parent so as to defeat the rights of remaindermen. Testator, by his will, set aside a specified sum, the income thereof to be paid to a person named "during his life and upon his death, leaving a child or children surviving him to pay over the principal of said sum to such child or children." Held, that the words "leaving a child or children" had reference to the natural offspring of the life beneficiary, and that on his death his adopted child was not entitled to any of the property left by the will, as the word "remaindermen" was employed in the broad sense of those who might ultimately be entitled to take the estate, whether technically remaindermen under the common law, or not. In re Leask, 90 N. E. 652, 654, 197 N. Y. 193, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158, 134 Am. St. Rep. 866, 18 Ann. Cas. 516.

REMAINING.

See Balance Remaining; Estate Remaining; Money Remaining; Then Remaining.

Where testator devised certain real estate in trust, and provided that, if his grandson should die, the trust should be discharged, and the real estate become the property of "the remaining children" of my deceased son jointly, the term "remaining" is equivalent to "other," and not to the "then surviving," children, and does not make the interest of each of the granddaughters contingent. Smith v. Myers, 61 Atl. 573, 212 Pa. 51.

Testator gave his wife his estate during her life to be used according to her desire, and the will provided that after her death the property remaining should be divided among his brothers and sisters. Held, that the phrase "property remaining" amounted to a plain implication that the corpus of the estate was likely to be diminished during her life and tended to show an intention that she should have a right to dispose of the property and use the proceeds as she might desire. McGuire v. Gallagher, 59 Atl. 445, 446, 99 Me. 334.

REMAINING ASSETS

A final adjudication in receivership proceedings, after provisions made for interest and attorney's fees, adjudged that the balance remaining due on the principal due an intervening creditor should be a charge on the general fund, and that the creditor should be entitled to share as an unsecured creditor in the remaining assets. There was then in the hands of the receiver a fund representing the net assets derived by him from his operation of the corporation's property which had come into his hands, and also a fund derived by him from the proceeds of the property of the company. Thereafter a final decree of distribution awarded to such creditor a share in the general fund and in the remaining assets, but denied to it any share in the net earnings fund. Held, that, in view of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1490, providing that all claims against any corporation at the time of the appointment of a receiver, shall be paid out of the earnings of such corporation while in the hands of a receiver to the exclusion of mortgage action, the "remaining assets" did not include the net earnings fund. First Nat. Bank v. J. I. Campbell Co. (Tex.) 133 S. W. 311, 312.

REMAINING IN A PLACE

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 388f, as added by Acts 30th Leg. p. 109, providing that if any person shall go into and remain in any gambling house, or shall remain in any place where prohibited games are being played, etc., and further providing that by "gambling house" and "gaming house" is meant any place where people resort for the purpose of gaming, a person remaining in a private dwelling house, not shown to be a place frequented for the purpose of gaming, while a prohibited game was being played therein, is guilty of no offense, since "remaining in a place," etc., means in a place where gaming is being conducted in a sense continuously. Walters v. State, 125 S. W. 11, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 240.

REMAINING LIVING HEIRS

The words "remaining living heirs" as used in a will providing that, in case of the death of either one of four children, the property willed to either of them was to be equally divided to the remaining living heirs of testator, mean his surviving children and the children of any such child deceased. In re Harrington's Will, 125 N. W. 986, 991, 142 Wis. 447.

REMANIT

"Remanit" is a product obtained by carbonizing silk rags. It is a nonconductor of heat, and generally used as a wrapping or covering for steam pipes or boilers. It is a manufacture of silk within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 491 (30 Stat. 187). Frank v. United States, 143 Fed. 702, 703.

REMEDY

See Appropriate Remedy; Common-Law Remedy; Cumulative Remedy; Domestic Remedy; Household Remedies; Inadequacy of Remedy at Law; Legal Remedy; Personal Remedy; Plain, Speedy and Adequate Remedy; Provisional Remedy; Speedy and Adequate Remedy; Speedy Remedy; Statutory Remedy.

Election of remedy, see Election.

Other remedy, see Other.

"Remedy" signifies the judicial means for enforcing a right or redressing a wrong. Walters v. City of Ottawa, 88 N. E. 651, 654, 240 Ill. 259.

The term "remedy," within Rev. St. § 79, providing that, when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, unless so expressed, is the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury; that is, the legal mode for enforcing a right or redressing or preventing a wrong. To illustrate: We speak of the remedy for nonfulfillment of contract as an action, under the old practice, in assumpsit, covenant, debt, or detinue, or in tort, if the injury is to the individual, and the like, and under the Code, the civil action, embracing all of these, while in criminal prosecutions the remedy is by indictment or information, or in some minor offenses by complaint before a magistrate. State v. Barlow, 71 N. E. 726, 728, 70 Ohio St. 363.

In Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 22, 24 Stat. 387, providing that nothing in this act shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies, the term "remedies" includes the necessary courts or tribunals, and, where a carrier in violation of the common law has charged and collected from a shipper an exorbitant freight rate, the shipper had a right under the common law to seek relief in a state court. Abilene Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co., 85 S. W. 1052, 1055, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 366.

Where, in an action on an accident benefit certificate stipulating that insurer should not be liable for death resulting from surgical treatment, the evidence showed that insured died while chloroform was being administered preparatory to an operation, and an attending physician testified that the proximate cause of death was acute dilatation of the heart immediately caused by the chloroform, and that insured's diseased condition did not contribute to his death, the jury could find that surgical treatment did not include the administering of chloroform; "surgery" being defined as the branch of the healing art that relates to external injuries, deformities, and other morbid conditions to be remedied directly by manual operations, "surgical" being defined as being of or pertaining to surgery, "treatment" meaning the act or manner of treating, "remedy" being defined as something used for the cure or relief of bodily disease, and "surgical treatment" meaning treating a disease by means of surgery. Belle v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n of America, 135 S. W. 497, 502, 155 Mo. App. 629.

Cause of action distinguished

See Cause of Action.

As right

"The ideas of 'right' and 'remedy' are inseparable. Want of right and want of remedy are the same thing." Blakemore v. Cooper, 106 N. W. 566, 569, 15 N. D. 5 (quoting and adopting Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793).

As right of intervention

The right of intervention given to a claimant is a statutory "remedy at law" and subject to the constitutional guaranty of a jury trial. Hubbard v. Lamburn, 75 N. E. 707, 709, 189 Mass. 296.

REMEDIAL

A judgment finding defendants in a pending suit in equity guilty of contempt of its authority in violating an interlocutory injunction previously granted in a suit for the benefit of the complainant, and ordering the payment of specified fines, three fourths of which when paid should go to the complainant "as compensation in part for the expenses incurred in prosecuting these contempt proceedings," is punitive instead of "remedial," and reviewable on writ of error without awaiting a final decree in the suit in equity. In re Merchants' Stock & Grain Co., 32 Sup. Ct. 339, 340, 223 U. S. 639, 56 L. Ed. 584.

REMEDIAL CASES

"Remedial cases," as used in the Minnesota Constitution conferring original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in such remedial cases as may be prescribed by law, includes only such cases in which summary remedy is afforded by extraordinary writs. In re Lauritsen, 109 N. W. 404, 408, 99 Minn. 520.

The cases intended by the term "remedial cases" are those where the remedy is afforded summarily, through certain extraordinary writs, such as prohibition, mandamus, certiorari, and quo warranto. Any greater or less extensive meaning could hardly be given to the term without making it so indefinite as to make it difficult to say what it means. State v. St. Paul S. C. R. Co., 28 N. W. 245, 246, 35 Minn. 222, 223.

REMEDIAL LAW

Substantive law is that part of the law which creates, defines, and regulates rights as opposed to adjective or remedial law, which prescribes the method of enforcing rights or obtaining redress for their invasion. Mix v. Board of Com'rs of Nez Perce County, 112 Pac. 215, 220, 18 Idaho, 695, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 534.

REMEDIAL STATUTE

The word "remedial," as applied to statutes, is commonly given an extended meaning and made to include all such as are enacted from time to time to supply the defects of the existing law, whether arising from inevitable imperfections of human legislation, from change of circumstances, from mistake, or from any other cause, but it was not so used in Minnesota Constitution giving to the Supreme Court original jurisdiction in such "remedial" cases as may be prescribed by law, but, as so used, included only those cases in which the remedy is afforded summarily in extraordinary writs as in mandamus, quo warranto, and habeas corpus. In re Lauritsen, 109 N. W. 404, 408, 99 Minn. 520.

The legislation providing for assessment and all other tax proceedings, though not "remedial" in the ordinary sense of the term, is purely so as between the state, on the one hand, and the persons and property subject to taxation, on the other. Webb v. Ritter, 54 S. E. 484, 493, 60 W. Va. 193.

REMISE

The words "remise," "release," and "quitclaim" each mean to discharge. Sherman v. Sherman, 122 N. W. 439, 443, 23 S. D. 486.

"Remise" means to release a claim to, remise, or surrender by deed, and it would appear that the words "remise," "release," and "quitclaim" are interchangeable. Banard v. Duncan, 112 N. W. 353, 355, 79 Neb. 189, 126 Am. St. Rep. 661.

REMISE AND FOREVER DISCHARGE

See Release, Remise, and Forever Discharge.

REMISSION

A party in justice's court may remit a part of his demand so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the justice, but the remission must be absolute for all demands in excess of the jurisdiction, for "remission" implies forgiveness, and means a voluntary relinquishment of a claim or a part thereof by one capable of asserting it, and does not refer to the extinguishment of a debt by agreement of the parties, or by judgment of the court. Kilgore Lumber Co. v. Thomas & Hammonds, 128 S. W. 62, 64, 95 Ark. 43.

REMITTITUR

The word "remittitur," used in Supreme Court rule 34 (78 Pac. xlii), providing that, when a judgment of a District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, the remittitur shall not be issued until after the lapse of 30 days thereafter, unless otherwise ordered, designates the judgment of the appellate tribunal which is authenticated to the court from which the appeal is taken, and corresponds to "mandate," used in the practice of the United States Supreme Court. In re Smith, 83 Pac. 167, 169, 2 Cal. App. 158.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD

At common law "remittitur of record" was a writ by which an appellate court handed back jurisdiction to the trial court. Donnell v. Wright, 97 S. W. 928, 931, 199 Mo. 304.

REMODELING

The words "repairing" and "remodeling" are not synonymous or included within the meaning of the word "building," within an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits. City of Mayville v. Rosing, 123 N. W. 393, 395, 19 N. D. 98.

REMONSTRANCE

As pleading, see Pleading.

REMOTE—REMOTENESS

See Too Remote.

The words "proximate" and "immediate" are synonymous, and are each the antonym of "remote." Herke v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 125 S. W. 822, 823, 141 Mo. App. 613.

The camp at Los Quemados of the main body of United States troops in the vicinity of Havana, situated about 6 or 8 miles from that city, and about 2½ miles from the beach of Marianao, and connected with both points by rail, is not "situated in the interior of the island," within the meaning of an agreement on the part of the United States to take the fresh beef needed at posts or camps so situated, made pursuant to advertisements for proposals, in which the phrases "posts remote from the seacoast" and "posts and camps in the interior of the island" were used as synonymous. Simpson v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 54, 199 U. S. 397, 50 L. Ed. 245.

"Remoteness," as applied to evidence, is a term which has regard for other factors than mere lapse of time, even where it is a factor, as it often is not. The essence of remoteness is such a want of open and visible connection between the evidentiary and principal facts that, all things considered, the former is not worthy or safe to be admitted in proof of the latter. Generally speaking, the question of remoteness, as justifying the exclusion of evidence, must depend upon all the considerations, including time, the character of the evidence, and all the surrounding circumstances which, in the opinion of the court, ought to have a bearing upon its worthiness to be brought into the consideration and determination of the matter in contention. State v. Kelly, 58 Atl. 705, 706, 77 Conn. 266.

REMOTE CAUSE

"The 'remote cause' is that cause which some independent force merely took advantage of to accomplish something not the probable or natural effect thereof." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 755, 7 Ind. T. 16 (quoting and adopting the definition in Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 63 Fed. 405, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583).

"Remote cause," as used in the law of negligence, means the improbable cause, or cause which was not the efficient cause, of the injury. Davis v. Mercer Lumber Co., 73 N. E. 900, 903, 164 Ind. 413.

By "remote cause" is intended that which may have happened and yet no injury have occurred, notwithstanding that no injury could have occurred if it had not happened. Claypool v. Wigmore, 71 N. E. 509, 510, 34 Ind. App. 35 (citing Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trainor, 33 Md. 542).

Where, in the sequence of events between an original default and a final injury, an entirely independent and unrelated cause intervenes which is of itself sufficient to stand as the cause of the mischief, the second cause is ordinarily regarded as the "proximate cause" and the other as the "remote cause." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 29 Sup. Ct. 321, 323, 213 U. S. 1, 53 L. Ed. 671 (citing Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tweed, 74 U. S. [7 Wall.] 44, 52, 19 L. Ed. 65, 67).

If two distinct causes are successive and unrelated in their operation, one of them must be the "proximate cause" and the other the "remote cause," and in such case the law regards the proximate cause as the efficient cause and disregards the remote. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Justice, 101 Pac. 469, 473, 80 Kan. 10 (quoting Herr v. City of Lebanon, 24 Atl. 207, 149 Pa. 222, 16 L. R. A. 106, 34 Am. St. Rep. 603).

In a case where two distinct, successive, causes, wholly unrelated in operation, contribute toward the production of an accident, resulting in injury and damage, one of such causes must be the proximate and the other the "remote cause" of the injury. A prior and "remote cause" cannot be made the basis of an action for the recovery of damages if such "remote cause" did nothing more than furnish the action or give rise to the action by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened between such prior and remote cause and the injury a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury. A farmer who had driven a team of 11 year old horses 17 miles hitched one of them, as he had been frequently in the habit of doing, to a hitching rail in front of a store, and was engaged in unloading his wagon, going back and forth for this purpose but a short distance. The halter with which the horse was hitched was apparently in good condition, and no defect therein was shown. While the team was standing quietly, a boy, in turning over the hitching rail near the head of the team, struck the nose of the one hitched with his foot, which frightened the team and caused them to break loose, by breaking the halter, and run away, causing damage. Held, that the striking of the horse by the boy was the "proximate cause" of the accident. Stephenson v. Corder, 80 Pac. 938, 940, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L. R. A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500 (quoting and adopting Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Columbia, 69 Pac. 338, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L. R. A. 399).

A "remote cause" is one which is inconclusive in reasoning, because from it no certain conclusion can be legitimately drawn. In other words, a remote cause is a cause the connection between which and the effect is uncertain, vague, and indeterminate. It does not contain in itself the element of necessity between it and its effect. From the remote cause the effect does not necessarily flow, and it is this idea of necessity—the necessary connection between the cause and the effect—that is the prime distinction between proximate and a remote cause. Though the existence of a remote cause is necessary for the existence of the effect (for unless there has been a remote cause, there can be no effect), still the existence of the remote cause does not necessarily imply the existence of the effect. The remote cause being given, the effect may or may not follow. McGovern v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 408, 410, 120 App. Div. 524 (citing 4 Am. Law Rev. 201, 203; Laidlaw v. Sage, 52 N. E. 679, 158 N. Y. 73, 99, 44 L. R. A. 216).

An injury which could not have been foreseen nor reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act of negligence is not actionable, and such an act is either the "remote cause" or no cause whatever of the injury. An injury that results from an act of negligence, but that could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as its probable consequence, or that would not have resulted from it had not the interposition of some new and independent cause interrupted the natural sequence of events, turned aside their course, and produced it, is not actionable. Such an act of negligence is the "remote" and the independent intervening cause is the "proximate" cause of the injury. Brubaker v. Kansas City Electric Light Co., 110 S. W. 12, 14, 130 Mo. App. 439 (quoting Cole v. German Savings & Loan Society, 124 Fed. 114, 59 C. C. A. 595, 63 L. R. A. 416).

Where a miner was overcome by gas and while unconscious was found by a searching party and taken to the surface on the elevator cage which was 5½ feet square, two sides being inclosed and two open, and one of his feet projecting beyond an open side of the cage, was caught by the timbers of the shaft and his leg broken, the negligence of the employer in permitting a dangerous quantity of gas in the mine, if conceded, while a "remote" was not the proximate cause of the injury which was the negligence of those placing him on the cage, so that, under the rule that one negligent is responsible only for such consequences as would naturally and probably result and as should reasonably have been foreseen, the employer was not liable. Tels v. Smuggler Min. Co., 158 Fed. 260, 264, 267, 85 C. C. A. 478, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893 (citing and adopting Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; South-Side Pass. Ry. Co. v. Trich, 11 Atl. 627, 117 Pa. 390, 2 Am. St. Rep. 672; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co., 51 N. E. 1, 171 Mass. 536, 41 L. R. A. 794; Gibson v. International Trust Co., 58 N. E. 278, 177 Mass. 100, 52 L. R. A. 928; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 475, 24 L. Ed. 256; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 130, 24 L. Ed. 395; Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co., 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. Ed. 1070; Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Elliott, 55 Fed. 949, 5 C. C. A. 347, 20 L. R. A. 582; Cole v. German Savings & Loan Soc., 124 Fed. 113, 59 C. C. A. 593, 63 L. R. A. 416).

REMOTE DAMAGES

"Proximate damages" as a result of an unlawful act are those which are the natural and not "remote" consequence of such act. If, on the contrary, the damages complained of would not naturally and usually flow from the negligent act, but were brought about by some unforeseen casualty, they are "remote." Louiseau v. Arp, 114 N. W. 701, 703, 21 S. D. 566, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 130 Am. St. Rep. 741 (quoting and adopting definition in 13 Cyc. p. 25).

REMOTE PROFITS

In an action for breach of contract, "profits" are usually considered too "remote" when not the immediate fruits of the principal contract, but dependent on collateral engagements not brought to the notice of the contracting parties. Dickerson v. Finley, 48 South. 548, 552, 158 Ala. 149.

REMOVE—REMOVAL

See Cut and Remove.

An attachment provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 3169 (3), on affidavit that defendant has "removed" or is about to remove property from the state with intent to defraud his creditors, is not authorized by an affidavit showing that defendant is in custody in default of $2,000 bail, and merely suggesting that he may at any time be discharged, and that in such case he will leave the state for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff. Tocci v. Gianvecchio, 95 N. Y. Supp. 583, 48 Misc. Rep. 351.

As change of residence

Where one is not a resident of the state but is passing through the same with his goods, an attachment may issue against him, on the ground "that he is actually removing out of the county" in which he may then be found. Johnson v. Lowry, 47 Ga. 560, 561, 562, 15 Am. Rep. 655.

A resident of Iowa came to Montana in the summer of 1907, to make his home there. He engaged in business therein, and filed on a homestead. He returned to Iowa to arrange his affairs there, and brought his family to Montana after November, 1907. Held that, under Rev. Codes, § 481, Rule 9, providing that a change of residence can only be made by the act of removal, joined with the intent to remain in another state, etc., he was a qualified voter at the November, 1908, election; "removal" meaning the act of changing a former home to a new home. Carwile v. Jones, 101 Pac. 153, 159, 38 Mont. 590.

Same—Permanent absence

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4570, 4628, 4637, authorize and contemplate the appointment of non-residents as executors. Section 4622 provides for the suspension of the powers of an executor when the judge has reason to believe that he has permanently removed from the state, and section 4623 provides that if, upon the hearing, the court is satisfied that there exists cause for his removal, his letters must be revoked. Held, that where a nonresident is appointed as executor, and personally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court and personally conducts the settlement of the estate, he cannot be removed from office on the ground of his nonresidence unless he subsequently permanently "removes" from the state, in the sense of permanently absenting himself from the place where the business of his trust is transacted, or withdrawing himself beyond the process of the court. Hecht v. Carey, 78 Pac. 705, 706, 13 Wyo. 154, 110 Am. St. Rep. 981.

As discharge from office, position, or trust

A recall is a method of removal of officers, within Dallas city charter, providing that elective officers may be "removed" in a manner therein provided. Bonner v. Belsterling, 138 S. W. 571, 573, 104 Tex. 432.

An assignment to a lower position in the same service under the classified service and at a lower rate of compensation is a "removal" from the position formerly held. Waters v. City of New York, 88 N. Y. Supp. 238, 241, 43 Misc. Rep. 154 (citing People ex rel. Callahan v. Board of Education, 79 N. Y. Supp. 624, 78 App. Div. 501).

The word "removal," as used in an order of court removing a defendant from office on the filing of an indictment against him under an act according to which, and a constitutional provision, he should then only be suspended, removal following on conviction should be construed as one of suspension; defendant not being prejudiced, he being thereafter convicted. Howard v. State, 82 S. W. 202, 72 Ark. 600.

The words "removal" and "discharge" are used indiscriminately in the statute to designate orders of court which have the effect of simply removing guardians, executors, etc., from office without exonerating them from liability to account. Code Civ. Proc. § 1805, requiring action on a guardian's bond to be commenced within three years from the "discharge or removal" of the guardian, applies to an action after a final order of the court removing or discharging the guardian, and does not include termination of the guardianship by the ward attaining majority. Cook v. Ceas, 77 Pac. 65, 68, 143 Cal. 221.

The civil service act of 1908 (P. L. 1908, p. 235), providing that officers and employees of any municipality adopting the act shall continue to hold their offices or employments and shall not be removed therefrom except after a written statement of the reason for removal, etc., and requiring the civil service commission to arrange offices and employments in the classified service in classes, etc., refers only to officers whose terms of office are not fixed by law, and it does not extend the term of an office previously fixed by legislative act; the word "removal" applying to one whose term is indefinite, and not naturally connoting the case of an officer whose statutory term has actually expired. McKenzie v. Elliott, 72 Atl. 47, 48, 77 N. J. Law, 43.

"A case of 'removal for just cause' implies some misconduct upon the part of the officer, or imputes to him some violation of the law. Under such circumstances, it is necessary that the charges against him shall be based upon some refusal to obey or intention to violate the law prescribing his duties. There are often such penalties attached to proceedings for the removal of officers 'for cause shown' that they are and should be carefully guarded from abuse; but, as to the right to the office as against the people, it is a well-recognized rule that the agency may be terminated at any time by the sovereign power without reason given." Good v. Common Council of City of San Diego, 90 Pac. 44, 46, 5 Cal. App. 265 (citing Croly v. Board of Trustees of City of Sacramento, 51 Pac. 323, 119 Cal. 234, and In re Carter, 74 Pac. 997, 141 Cal. 319).

Under Const. art. 12, § 8, conferring on the Governor power to remove officers of charitable and penal institutions, and article 4, § 22, authorizing the Governor to suspend an officer indicted for embezzlement, and Cr. Code 1902, §§ 381, 388, 389, 410, providing for the removal by the Governor of local officers convicted of specific misconduct, and providing for the dismissal from office of any magistrate convicted of neglecting to pay over fines, and Civ. Code 1902, §§ 625, 982, authorizing the Governor to remove for cause any officer appointed by him to fill a vacancy, and authorizing the Governor to suspend magistrates for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duty, etc., the Governor has no power to remove magistrates serving for a full term except after trial and conviction, as provided by the Constitution and the statutes, but he may suspend any magistrate when a showing has been made to him by affidavit that the magistrate is probably guilty of embezzlement and a true bill has been found, and he may suspend for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duty, but submit the suspension to the Senate for approval or disapproval, and an attempt of the Governor to remove a magistrate without indictment and conviction is without effect as a removal. A "suspension" is the mere temporary withdrawal of the power to exercise the duties of an office, while a "removal" is a complete deprivation of official tenure. McDowell v. Burnett, 75 S. E. 873, 877, 92 S. C. 469.

The "removal" of a receiver means simply a change in the personnel of the receivership which continues unaffected. Ripy v.

Redwater Lumber Co., 103 S. W. 474, 478, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 311.

The term "remove," as applied to a receiver, means simply a change in the personnel of the relationship. The receivership itself continuing unaffected. The effect of such removal is only to substitute one person for another in the office, and the cause of the removal is some personal objection to the receiver. It is thus distinguished from a discharge, which relates to the termination of the receivership, and is asked and ordered for the reason that because of the state of the suit there is not any longer any necessity for continuing the receiver. Pagett v. Brooks, 37 South. 263, 264, 140 Ala. 257.

Under a city charter providing that teachers in their first or second year should be classified as probationary, and might be dropped on the adverse report of the classification committee, and that teachers who have been assigned for more than two years, other than special teachers, shall be classed as permanent teachers, and shall hold their positions until removed, and that no teacher shall be removed save at the close of the year and with at least one month's notice. While there does not appear to be any great difference between "dropping" a teacher from the department, and "removing" him, so far as the effect on the teacher is concerned, the section does apply the latter term only to permanent teachers, and the clause protecting teachers from removal without prior notice, except at the end of the school year, was intended to refer only to permanent teachers, but an appointee during the probationary period could be legally dropped only on the adverse report by the classification committee. Barthel v. Board of Education of City of San Jose, 95 Pac. 892, 894, 153 Cal. 376.

Removal statute

The requirements of Rev. Codes 1905, §§ 2358-2363, that, in voting on the question of county seat removal, each elector must vote for the place in the county which he prefers by placing opposite the name of the place the mark "X," are mandatory, and necessitate the construction of the statute as a removal statute, as distinguished from one for relocation. As affecting the question of location of county seats, a removal statute provides for the removal of the county seat to a proposed new county seat designated in the petition therefor, while a relocation statute authorizes a petition and election on the question, not whether the county seat shall be removed to a particular place, but where the county seat shall be located. Miller v. Norton, 132 N. W. 1080, 1095, 22 N. D. 196.

Remove location of college

Where an agricultural college was a part of Wyoming University at Laramie before the Wyoming Agricultural College was located at Lander by a vote of the people after it was established by the Legislature, the repeal of the sections of the act establishing an agricultural college, providing it with a managing board and regulating its affairs, was not a "removal" of its location so as to violate Const. art. 7, § 23, providing that the Legislature shall not locate any public institutions other than those indicated, except under general laws and by vote of the people. State ex rel. Wyoming Agriculture College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90-107, 14 Wyo. 318.

Remove timber

Timber cannot be said to be "removed" from the premises unless it is carried off, and hence, under a contract requiring that logs shall be removed from the premises in three years, the timber cannot be said to be "removed" from the premises when it is merely cut down and left lying on the lands. Clark v. Ingram Day Lumber Co., 43 South. 813, 814, 90 Miss. 479.

A contract to sell timber, giving the buyer four years to cut and remove it, and providing that if longer time should be required to "remove" the timber, an extension would be granted covering the time required to "cut and remove" the timber, not exceeding two years, entitled the buyer to cut, as well as remove, timber during the extension period. Norfolk Lumber Co. v. Smith, 63 S. E. 954, 955, 150 N. C. 253.

Remove tracks

Under a contract with a borough stipulating that a street railway company should not "remove" its tracks without the borough's consent, the company could not take up its tracks to readjust them without the borough's consent. Chester, D. & P. Ry. Co. v. Borough of Darby, 66 Atl. 357, 358, 217 Pa. 275.

RENDER

See Duly Rendered; Personal Services Rendered.

RENDITION OF JUDGMENT

As announcement of decision

Where a statute refers to the rendition of judgment, it means the formal announcement by the court and does not mean the entry of the same by the clerk. The judgment is a judicial act of the court. The entry is a ministerial act of the clerk. The judgment is as final when pronounced by the court as when it is entered and recorded by the clerk as required by statute. State ex rel. Ryan v. Murphy, 97 Pac. 391, 30 Nev. 409, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210 (quoting California State Tel. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 155).

"A judgment is rendered whenever the trial judge officially announces his decision in open court, or out of court signifies to the clerk, in his official capacity and for his official guidance—whether orally or by written memorandum—the sentence of the law pronounced by him in any cause. This pronouncement of the court it is incumbent upon the clerk to forthwith enter. The writing out of the judgment in the form of a judgment file, to be recorded is a matter of subsequent clerical action. There is recognized a clear distinction not only between the judgment and the writing which is required to be made to evidence it, but also between the 'rendition' of the judgment and the preparation of this writing at some subsequent time. In Goldreyer v. Cronan, 55 Atl. 594, 76 Conn. 113, this distinction is judicially asserted. It is there said that the filed memorandum of decision brought a judgment into existence; that a judgment, speaking generally, is the determination or sentence of the law, speaking through the court, and does not exist as a legal entity until pronounced, expressed, or made known in some appropriate way; that it may be expressed orally or in writing, or in both of these ways, in accordance with the customs and usages of the court in which it is rendered." Appeal of Bulkeley, 57 Atl. 112, 113, 76 Conn. 454.

A judgment of conviction pronounced by the court constitutes the "rendition of a judgment," within the meaning and requirements of chapter 389, p. 594, Laws 1903, allowing 90 days after the rendition of a judgment in which to file a record in the Supreme Court on appeal from the conviction of a misdemeanor, to entitle defendant to a stay of execution pending the appeal. Youngberg v. Smart, 78 Pac. 422, 423, 70 Kan. 299.

"While in one sense a judgment is 'rendered' when it is announced by the judge, yet until that judgment is entered of record there is no competent evidence of such rendition. It cannot exist or be dependent upon the memory of the officers of the court or in memorandum not embraced in the record, which the law provides shall be made." Kennedy v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 93 N. E. 71, 119 Iowa, 123 (citing and adopting Balm v. Nunn, 19 N. W. 810, 63 Iowa, 641; Cadwell v. Dullaghan, 37 N. W. 178, 74 Iowa, 239; Winter v. Coulthard, 62 N. W. 732, 94 Iowa 312).

"Where the statute refers to the 'rendition of judgment,' it means the formal an-announcement by the court and does not mean the entry of the same by the clerk." Hence under Comp. Laws, §§ 3425, 3426, providing that an appeal may be taken from a final judgment within one year "after the rendition" thereof, etc., the time within which an appeal must be taken begins to run from the date the court made its decision and ordered judgment to be entered accordingly, though the judgment was not entered until later. Central Trust Co. of California v. Holmes Min. Co., 97 Pac. 390, 391, 30 Nev. 437.

Rev. St. Wis. c. 120, § 160, requires a justice on verdict by a jury to "render judgment forthwith," or he will lose jurisdiction. But under this statute, if a justice on receipt of verdict render judgment by saying that he renders judgment in favor of one of the parties for the damages found by the jury with costs, the judgment thus rendered may be subsequently entered on his docket, and the costs taxed without affecting its validity. Kleinsteuber v. Schumacher, 35 Wis. 608, 611, 613.

"A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace at the regular time and place of holding his court, but which was written out and signed at some other time and place in the district, is not void. The word 'rendered,' as used in section 462 of the Code [Civ. Code 1910, § 4705], refers to the making up and announcement of the judgment, and not to the clerical act of reducing it to writing." Constitution Pub. Co. v. Dean, 75 S. E. 335, 336, 11 Ga. App. 361.

As entered

A judgment in an action at law is rendered when it is entered in the minutes during term time, or when in vacation it is put in form for such entry or record and is signed by the judge. Pittsburg Steel Co. v. Streety, 53 South. 505, 60 Fla. 183.

Where findings are required, there can be no rendition of the judgment until they are filed, unless they are waived, and where they are waived or are not required, the entry of the decision in the minutes of the court is the rendition of the judgment. Brownell v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 109 Pac. 91, 93, 157 Cal. 703.

Under a statute providing that a notice of appeal must be given when the judgment is "rendered or made," and one providing that in a trial by jury judgment shall be immediately entered by the clerk in conformity to the verdict, a judgment in a trial by jury is "rendered or made" when the clerk enters judgment. Chilcott v. Globe Nav. Co., 95 Pac. 264, 265, 49 Wash. 302.

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 974, authorizing appeal from a justice within a certain time after the "rendition" of the judgment, judgment is not rendered till it is "entered," and mere entry of memorandum of the verdict is not enough; as, while section 891 provides that in case of trial by jury judgment must be entered by the justice "at once," in conformity with the verdict, section 893 provides that it must be entered substantially in the form required by section 667, and that "no judgment shall have effect for any purpose till so entered." Thomson v. Superior Court of Mendocino County, 119 Pac. 98, 100, 161 Cal. 329.

Entered or entry distinguished

"The 'rendition' and 'entry' of a judgment are entirely different acts—one is to be performed by the court and must be in order of time, and the other by the clerk." People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 407, 410, 7 Cal. App. 330, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717 (quoting from Peck v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 207).

"The 'rendition of a judgment' * * * is an entirely different thing from the entry of it. The former is the act of the law through the mouth of the judge; the latter the act of the clerk. The former gives force and efficacy to the judgment; the latter preserves a memorial of it. The former is a judicial act; the latter a ministerial act." Jaqua v. Harkins, 82 N. E. 920, 922, 40 Ind. App. 639 (quoting and adopting the definition in 1 Black, Judg. § 179).

RENEW

See Covenant To Renew.

The word "renew," in a lease providing that the lessee shall have the right to renew the lease, imports a giving of a new lease like the old one, with the same terms, stipulations, and covenants. Leavitt v. Maykell, 89 N. E. 1056, 1057, 203 Mass. 506, 133 Am. St. Rep. 323.

The covenant in a lease to "renew" indicates the intention of the parties to execute a new lease, and the duty of the lessee to give notice to the lessor at or before the expiration of the lease of his election to renew. Whalen v. Manley, 69 S. E. 843, 844, 68 W. Va. 323.

A bond in renewal of a former bond securing the payment of notes recited that the obligee was willing to "renew" the notes in consideration of the bond, and provided that the bond should be void if, within a year, or at the expiration of any renewal notes, the principal obligor should pay the notes or renewals, and that the notes might be renewed during one year, for periods customary in bankable paper, and that the liability of the surety should not, in any event, exceed a certain sum. Held, that the obligee was required to renew the notes only once, and not to grant repeated renewals for the space of a year. Haney School Furniture Co. v. Medary, 101 N. W. 929, 930, 123 Wis. 364.

As extended

The meaning of the word "renew" is to make over, to re-establish or to rebuild; and the meaning of "extend" is to prolong, to lengthen out. Where a lease for 10 years provides for an extension of the term for 10 years at the option of the lessee, as distinguished from a renewal of the lease, the lease makes the term 20 years, at the option of the lessee, and his holding over, after the expiration of the 10 years, is a sufficient exercise of the option, so that it is immaterial whether the lessor was insane when he afterwards gave a written extension for the 10 years. Quinn v. Valiquette, 68 Atl. 515, 518, 80 Vt. 434, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962.

The words "renew" and "extend" do not always mean the same thing; but, in interpreting a stipulation in a lease "granting the privilege of renewing and extending this contract for a period of three years from" the expiration of the term named in the lease, the context of the lease will be construed for the purpose of arriving at the intent of the parties, and the words may be given a similar meaning, if that seems to be what the parties intended. Hamby & Toomer v. Georgia Iron & Coal Co., 56 S. E. 1033, 1037, 127 Ga. 792 (citing 7 Words & Phrases, p. 6086; Insurance & Law Bldg. Co. v. National Bank of Missouri, 71 Mo. 58, 60; Jones, Landlord & Tenant, § 338).

The word "renewed" may properly be used to express an agreement on the part of the maker of a note, but is inappropriate to express an agreement on the payee's part extending to the time of payment. The words, "Renewed July 6," indorsed on the back of a note over the signature of the payee, are too indefinite to extend time of payment. Brenneke v. Smallman, 83 Pac. 302, 304, 2 Cal. App. 306.

RENEWAL

A "renewal" of a license, within Gen. St. 1902, § 2647, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, p. 750, c. 200, provided that no liquor license, excepting a renewal, shall be granted in the residential and manufacturing parts of a town, is a granting to the same person of the same privilege granted to him the previous year to sell in the same place; and hence an application for a removal permit was properly not treated as an application for a renewal, where it was found that the new location was unsuitable and more unsuitable than the original location. Appeal of Bormann, 71 Atl. 502, 503, 81 Conn. 458.

A liquor license granting the same privilege to the same person to sell in the same place is a renewal license within Gen. St. 1902, § 2647, providing that no license except a renewal of a license shall be granted in purely residential or manufacturing parts of a town, with certain exceptions, but a license granted to a different person would not be a renewal. Appeal of Stavolo, 71 Atl. 549, 550, 81 Conn. 454.

Under a contract, entered into February 15, 1906, to act as a salesman at a stated salary per year payable in equal monthly installments with a specified commission payable at the end of the year, and with provision that, in the event either or both parties did not desire to renew the agreement at its expiration, notice should be given in writing of intention not to renew at least 30 days prior to its expiration, continuing to work after the expiration of the year until October 30th following without notice by either party operates as a "renewal" for one year of the contract with all its provisions. Allen v. Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co., 91 N. E. 887, 888, 205 Mass. 569.

The "rent period"—that is, the stated period by which the rent is reserved in a lease—is the criterion by which to measure an implied renewal by holding over. A tenant's holding over and paying monthly rent beyond the term of a lease for a year, relating to urban premises, in which lease rent is reserved by the month and is payable at monthly periods, does not, alone, imply a renewal by the year. A renewal of the tenancy by the month is implied. Kaufman v. Mastin, 66 S. E. 92, 93, 66 W. Va. 99, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855.

The "renewal" of a conspiracy means to begin it again; to recommence it; to repeat it. Each renewal is a new offense. Commonwealth v. Bartilson, 85 Pa. 482, 487.

As extension

Where a lease provided that at the expiration thereof the tenant should have the privilege of leasing the premises for a further term of one year, commencing on the day the lease expired, such covenant was a contract for a "renewal" and not an "extension" of the lease, and required notice in order to entitle the lessee to exercise its right. Gray v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 84 Pac. 280-282, 2 Cal. App. 653.

Where a lease of street railway property, which was subject to a mortgage securing an issue of bonds, contained a provision requiring the lessee on the maturity of the debt to "provide for the renewal thereof by the issue or renewal of bonds," there was no duty on the lessee to pay and extinguish the bonds at maturity and its acquisition of them at or near their maturity, through a trustee, with the purpose of having them held by the trustee to protect its lease and its own bonds with the proceeds of which they were purchased and which were secured by a mortgage to the trustee on such lease and other property, did not operate as a payment but only as an extension which was fairly within the provision of the lease for a "renewal." Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Central Park

N. & E. R. B. Co. 193 Fed. 963, 965, 113 C. C. A. 591 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6085).

The word "renew" etymologically contemplates something more than passivity in suffering a state to continue as it was. A distinction is sometimes recognized between a covenant to renew a lease and a provision for an extension of the term at the option of the lessee, but the intention of the parties is controlling. Thus where a lease of a river bank and appurtenant boom privileges for a period of five years provided for a "renewal from year to year at the same rent per annum," as long as the lessee might want the land, and the lessee continued to occupy the property and pay rent for several years after the expiration of the original term, the lessor would not be heard to say that the contract contemplated that a new lease should be executed in writing at the beginning of each year after the five-year term expired, and that, as no such renewal lease was executed, the lessee was without right in the possession of the land. The word "renewal" in such lease was evidently used in the sense of extending. Kentucky Lumber Co. v. Newell (Ky.) 105 S. W. 972, 973.

As re-establishment of contract

The term "renewal," as applied to a note, means the re-establishment of the particular contract for another period of time. Lowry Nat. Bank v. Fickett, 50 S. E. 396, 397, 122 Ga. 489.

Same—Conditions imported

A "renewal" of a policy of insurance constitutes a separate and distinct contract for the period of time covered by such renewal. It is, however, a contract with the same terms and conditions. Long Bros. Grocery Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 110 S. W. 29, 31, 130 Mo. App. 421 (citing De Jernette v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 33 S. W. 828, 98 Ky. 558; Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. American Surety Co., 99 Fed. 674, 41 C. C. A. 45; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115; Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425).

In a provision that the lessee has to make arrangements with the lessor "for the renewal of another term three months before this term expires," at a specified increased rent, by the words "renewal of another term" was meant the creation of a new term of lease, having the same conditions and characteristics as the first lease, except as to the rent. Christian Feigenspan v. Popowska, 72 Atl. 1003, 1005, 75 N. J. Eq. 342.

RENEWAL PREMIUM

Where an insurance contract provides that premiums must be paid in advance as a condition of continuing the policy in force for another year, or for the period for which they are paid, such premiums are known as "renewal premiums," because they renew and continue the policy in force for another year, or another period. People ex rel. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Miller, 71 N. E. 930, 932, 179 N. Y. 227.

RENOVATE

Where plaintiff knew that magnesium stains are a frequent, inherent, and ineradicable defect in bricks, and defendant did not know that fact, and plaintiff contracted to "renovate the entire brickwork on a house, guaranteeing to make it look like new," without making any exception of magnesium stains, he could not urge the impossibility of eradicating magnesium stains, which appeared on the house, and which he was unable to remove, as an excuse for not complying with the terms of his contract by removing all the stains. Finney v. Bennett, 97 N. Y. Supp. 291, 292, 49 Misc. Rep. 230.

RENT

See Dead Rent; Demand for Rent; Ground Rent; Loss of Rents.
Distress for rent, see Distress.

"Rent" is the compensation, either in money, provisions, chattels, or labor, received by the owner of the soil from the occupant thereof. Shartenberg & Robinson v. Ellbey, 62 Atl. 979, 981, 27 R. I. 414.

"Rent" is a sum stipulated to be paid for the use and enjoyment of land. In re Roth & Appel, 181 Fed. 667, 669, 104 C. C. A. 649, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 270.

"Rent" is the consideration paid for the use of the land. Brooks v. Cook, 38 South. 641, 643, 141 Ala. 499.

"Rent" is something given by way of compensation to the lessor for the right to make use of the land demised. National Subway Co. v. City of St. Louis, 69 S. W. 290, 294, 169 Mo. 319.

The term "rent," under the common law and feudal system, had reference distinctively to land, and was inappropriately used when intended to indicate a return for the use of money or personalty; and, while now applied indiscriminately to the return for the use of personalty as well as of real property, the fundamental distinction and derivation must be kept in view in determining the question of suspension of rent by eviction. Metropole Const. Co. v. Hartigan, 85 Atl. 313, 314, 83 N. J. Law, 409; Magoon v. Eastman, 84 Atl. 869, 870, 86 Vt. 261.

"Rent" is a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal as a compensation for the use thereof. Kendall v. Uland, 120 N. W. 152, 153, 83 Neb. 527.

Where a landlord wrote a merchant that, if the latter would furnish the tenant advances, the landlord would not advance him anything and would only hold the crop for the land "rent," whereupon the merchant contracted with the tenant to make the advances and took a mortgage on the crop, the landlord could not as against the merchant subsequently increase the rent by adding thereto a balance due for "rent" for the previous year; the agreement of the landlord to hold the crop only for the land "rent" meaning the rent for that year. Beattie v. Hughes & Mercer, 101 S. W. 170, 171, 82 Ark. 199.

Where land was absolutely conveyed, a subsequent provision of the deed that, if the purchase-money notes were not paid, the conveyance should be void, and the grantee should be entitled to hold as tenant, paying a rent which should be credited to him as purchase money, did not create the relation of landlord and tenant upon nonpayment of a note, as it would have done in case of an executory contract of sale; that relation being inconsistent with the fee-simple ownership conveyed to the grantee, as merely calling the debt "rent" after default did not make it such. Levy v. McDonnell, 122 S. W. 1002, 1003, 92 Ark. 324, 135 Am. St. Rep. 183.

The word "rent" is defined as meaning to grant the possession and enjoyment of for a consideration in the nature of rent; to take and hold for a consideration in the nature of rent. Where a lease provided for rent in installments, the last installment being payable on a certain date or sooner when the "party renting" desired it, and there was a clause in the lease speaking of the landlord having "rented" the farm, it was held that the lease gave the landlord an option to make the last installment payable sooner than the specified date. Musewald v. Seeker, 101 N. Y. Supp. 287, 51 Misc. Rep. 355.

Price of conditional sale

Where a peddler delivered goods on an understanding that title should vest in the one to whom they were delivered on payment of all the installments of "rent," the transaction amounted to a sale within Acts 1902-03-04, p. 484, c. 271 [Va. Code 1904, p. 2223], making sales by peddlers unlawful unless a license has been issued. Crall & Ostrander v. Commonwealth, 49 S. E. 638, 640, 103 Va. 855; Id., 49 S. E. 1038, 103 Va. 862 (citing City of South Bend v. Martin, 41 N. E. 315, 142 Ind. 31, 29 L. R. A. 531; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Erwin, 84 Ind. 457; Lanman v. McGregor, 94 Ind. 301).

Repairs

The term "rent," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2231, authorizing the maintenance of summary proceedings for the dispossession of a tenant for nonpayment of rent, cannot be extended to include the cost of repairs for which the tenant had agreed to pay. Simionelli v. Di Ericco, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1044, 1045, 59 Misc. Rep. 485.

Royalty for mining privilege

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 130, authorizing the probate court, on being satisfied that it is necessary to rent the real estate for payment of debts, to order the administrator to take possession of and rent the same, etc., the probate court may order the administrator of a decedent owning a mine to lease the same for the purpose of obtaining money with which to pay debts; for the word "rent" means a compensation for the use of lands demised, and is treated as a profit issuing out of the land, and rent may be in the form of royalty. Meeks v. Clear Jack Mining Co., 124 S. W. 1084, 1089, 141 Mo. App. 648.

RENT CHARGE

Annuity distinguished

A "rent charge" is a charge against land in the hands of the purchaser and arises out of the land itself, while an "annuity" is a yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to one for life, years, or in fee, chargeable upon the person of the grantor. A deed of land in consideration of the payment to the grantor of an annual sum until the grantor's death, and retaining a lien to secure such payments, imposed merely a personal obligation on the grantee to make the payments and created an "annuity," and not a "rent charge," the provision securing the payments by a lien not affecting the personal character of the obligation, and that the grantor rented the land and applied the rent on the annual payments with the grantee's acquiescence did not affect the character of the instrument. Lynch v. Huston, 119 S. W. 994, 996, 138 Mo. App. 167.

RENTAL

See Crescendo Rental; Occupation Rental.

RENTAL VALUE

The term "rental value," as applied to land covered with a growing crop, means, not what the lands may be rented for in the vicinity for ordinary purposes, but the value of the use of the land for the purposes of maturing and harvesting the crop, and the value of a crop in the condition in which it exists at the time of an injury thereto is the prime factor in the ascertainment of the value of the use, and the rule of rental value as so defined governs in cases presenting only an injury to growing crops. Blunck v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 115 N. W. 1013, 1017; Blunck v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 120 N. W. 737, 741, 142 Iowa, 146 (citing Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 96 N. W. 984, 122 Iowa, 32; Lommelund v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 29 N. W. 119, 35 Minn. 412; Folsom v. Apple River Log-Driving Co., 41 Wis. 609; Shot- well v. Dodge, 36 Pac. 254, 8 Wash. 337; Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co., v. Ryan [Tex.] 21 S. W. 1013; Suth. Dam. § 1023).

In an action for damages to plaintiff's land through the pollution by defendant of a stream through the land, defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction that plaintiff was entitled to recover the value of the use of the land; there being practically no difference between such value and the rental value. Williams v. Haile Gold Mining Co., 66 S. E. 117, 118, 85 S. C. I.

Lands upon which crops can be grown have a value, known as a "rental value," and such value is the true measure of damages for the destruction of the crops. For people are ready to pay rent and take the risk of a crop. Knight v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 98 S. W. 81, 82, 122 Mo. App. 38.

The "usable value" of premises is not synonymous with "rental value," but has as a term an equivalent sense, which should be allowed to be shown in condemnation proceedings. Reiser v. New York, 66 N. E. 731, 736, 174 N. Y. 196.

By "rental value" as damages to a lessee for failure to obtain possession of a farm is meant, not the probable loss of profits that might occur to the lessee, but the value, as ascertained by proof, of what the premises would rent for, or by evidence of other facts from which the fair rental may be determined. Herpolshelmer v. Christopher, 111 N. W. 359, 361, 76 Neb. 352, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1127, 14 Ann. Cas. 399.

"The coal and other materials derived from the ordinary and reasonable operation of opened coal mines, iron mines, lead mines, gravel banks, clay pits, stone quarries, slate quarries, salt works, oil wells, and other property of this character which diminishes in quantity and value by use, constitute the 'rents and profits' thereof, and not the body of the property, and belong to the owners of the former and not to the owners of the latter." Traer v. Fowler, 144 Fed. 810, 816, 75 C. C. A. 540.

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS

Increase in value

As to the terms creating a trust, the words "rents, income, issues, and profits" give the intermediate beneficiary only the annual income, and not any increase in the value of the securities in which the fund was vested. In re Stevens, 98 N. Y. Supp. 28, 31, 111 App. Div. 773 (approving Stewart v. Phelps, 75 N. Y. Supp. 526, 71 App. Div. 91).

Property included

The words "rents, issues, and profits," as used in instruments declaring trusts, if not restrained by the context, will be given a meaning broad enough to include the sale of the property itself. Connolly v. Bouck, 174 Fed. 312, 316, 98 C. C. A. 184 (quoting and adopting the definition in Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Gisborne, 5 Utah, 319, 15 Pac. 253).

As net income

The expression "rents, issues, and profits of land," as used in a will by which a testatrix devised lands to her executors in trust to collect the "rents, issues, and profits" during the life of her sister, to pay over to her sister during her life, out of said "rents, issues, and profits" $500 semiannually, and, after paying municipal charges on the lands, to deposit the surplus of the rents to their credit in bank, at interest, until her sister's death, means that sum of receipts from the land which remains: First, after maintaining the property by needed repairs and by protective insurance; and, second, after payment of public charges, the intention was to pay $1,000 annually out of the annual "rents, issues, and profits" and therefore out of what the trustees had of such "rents, issues, and profits" to make payment with. Hopkins v. Remy, 53 Atl. 676, 677, 64 N. J. Eq. 12.

RENUNCIATION

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3512, providing that the holder of a negotiable instrument may renounce his rights against any party thereto, but that a renunciation must be in writing, unless the instrument is delivered up to the person primarily liable, refers to a release, for the word "renunciation" is used in the sense of release, and, in the absence of any written release or surrender of the note to the maker, the maker is not relieved from liability. Pitt v. Little, 108 Pac. 941, 943, 58 Wash. 355.

Under Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1890, p. 361) § 122, authorizing the holder of a negotiable instrument to "renounce his rights against any party to the instrument," and providing that a "renunciation must be in writing," the release of a surety on a note cannot be shown by parol; the word "renunciation" being used in the sense of "release." Baldwin v. Daly, 83 Pac. 724, 725, 41 Wash. 416.

REPAIR—REPAIRS

See Good Repair; Necessary Repairs; Needed Repairs; Operation and Repair; Ordinary Repairs; Person Who Makes, Alters, or Repairs; Properly Repair; Reasonable Repair; Running Repairs; Specific Repairs; Substantial Repair.

All inside and outside repairs, see All. Keep in repair, see Keep.

Laid up for repairs, see Laid Up.

To "repair" is to mend; to restore to a sound state whatever has been partially destroyed; to make good an existing thing; restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction. Dougherty v. Taylor & Norton Co., 63 S. E. 928, 930, 5 Ga. App. 773.

"The word 'repair,' as defined by Webster, means 'to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction.'" Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Bryan (Tex.) 107 S. W. 572, 576.

The word "repairs" as used with reference to mechanics' liens, and as affecting priority of other liens, signifies articles used to replace others which are worn out or unsatisfactory, as well as repairs in the sense of patchwork on decayed or worn parts of a building. Elliott & Barry Engineering Co. v. Baker, 114 S. W. 71, 73, 134 Mo. App. 95.

"Repairs," as used in Cobbey's Ann. St. 1907, § 6417, as to contracts between counties for repair of bridges, is used in its ordinary sense, and does not include ice breaks. Colfax County v. Butler County, 120 N. W. 444, 446, 83 Neb. 803.

Alteration distinguished

A decision of county commissioners, made on petition of a mayor and aldermen, as authorized by Pub. St. Mass. c. 112, § 129, for alteration of a railroad bridge over a highway, requiring certain additions to the upper surface of the masonry to prevent the dripping of water on the street below, requires an "alteration," within the meaning of the act, and not mere "repairs," where it appears that the bridge has remained exactly as it was built, without any injury or dilapidation. Boston & A. R. Co. v. County Com'rs of Hampden, 42 N. E. 100, 101, 164 Mass. 551.

As construct

See Construct.

Existence of thing repaired implied

As used in Rev. St. 1809, § 1105, which requires railroads in the first instance to build "lawful fences" on the sides of its road, and provides that, if it fails for three months after completion of the road to build a fence as required, the owner may build it and recover the cost, and also declares that, if a fence once erected becomes out of repair, the owner may, after giving five days' notice, and on failure of the railroad company to make the repairs, make them himself, and recover the cost, the word "repair" means to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, and hence, where a lawful fence, viz., one required to keep the landowner's stock from getting onto the track, had not been constructed, the adjoining owner was not required to give notice as a condition of his right to construct a lawful fence and recover the cost from the railroad company. Sharp v.

Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co., 123 S. W. 507, 508, 130 Mo. App. 525.

As guaranty

An "agreement to keep in repair" for a period of 12 months, contained in a contract for street paving, is a mere guaranty of good work and not a contract for repairs within the meaning of a charter requiring repairs of streets and highways to be paid out of the general revenue of the city. Allen v. Labsap, 87 S. W. 926, 929, 188 Mo. 692, 3 Ann. Cas. 306.

Improvement

See Improvement.

To "repair" is to mend, to restore to a sound state whatever has been partially destroyed, to make good an existing thing, restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction. An "improvement" is a valuable and useful addition, something more than a mere repair or restoration to the original condition. Dougherty v. Taylor & Norton Co., 63 S. E. 928, 930, 5 Ga. App. 773 (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6090).

Under Rev. Codes, § 2419, authorizing directors of irrigation districts to fix rates of tolls and charges for water against persons using its canals, or to levy assessments to defray expenses of the operation, repair and improvement of such portion of its works as are in use, the laying of a pipe line caused by the lawful removal of a ditch by municipal authorities is a repair or improvement, the funds for defraying which may be included in a maintenance assessment or in increased toll rates, and is not a new construction which must be defrayed by a special assessment under section 2391, or a bond issued under section 2396. City of Nampa v. Nampa & Meridian Irr. Dist., 115 Pac. 979, 983, 19 Idaho, 779.

A sidewalk improvement by a town incorporated under the town act of March 7, 1895 (Gen. St. 1895, p. 3525), and the supplements thereto, consisting of cutting the edge of the flagging and replacing some of the stones to permit the growth of trees, and a few slight changes in the grade, is a "repair" not subject to an assessment for benefits under section 64 as amended by Act May 2, 1906 (P. L. p. 325), relating to sidewalk building, but the cost should be collected from the landowner either by suit, or included in the tax levy against the land, as provided by section 58. Willard Woman's Christian Temperance Union v. Town of Westfield (N. J.) 75 Atl. 174, 175.

An agreement by a street railroad company in its franchise to keep the street between the tracks in "repair" is not an agreement to "improve" the street or to pay for such improvement; it being necessary to render the company liable for improvements of the street that there be an expressed stipulation in the franchise to that effect. Indianapolis & E. R. Co. v. Town of New Castle, 87 N. E. 1067, 1069, 43 Ind. App. 467.

New Code Civ. Proc. § 649 (Gen. St. 1909, § 6244), gives a mechanic's lien to one who shall, under contract with the owner of any land or with a trustee, agent, etc., of such owner, perform labor or furnish material for the repair of any building, improvement, or structure thereon. Held, that where the owner rented his land, stipulating in the lease that the lessees should have the right to make reasonable repairs to the building and deduct the actual cost thereof from the rentals, the lessees will be deemed the agents of the owner and persons doing work and furnishing material for improving the property at the instance of the lessees are entitled to a mechanic's lien on the interest of the lessee and the owner; the term "repairs" in the lease being intended by the parties thereto to include the improvements made by the contractors. Potter v. Conley, 112 Pac. 608, 609, 83 Kan. 676.

As maintain

The word "repair," as applied to bridges in road laws, means to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction. Brown County v. Keya Paha County, 129 N. W. 250, 251, 88 Neb. 117, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 790; Platte County v. Butler County, 135 N. W. 439, 440, 91 Neb. 132.

Any act that is reasonably necessary to put or keep a street in good repair suitable for the travel thereon is "repairing" or maintaining the street, within the meaning of Pub. St. N. J. c. 75, § 1 (Laws 1893, p. 47, c. 59, §§ 1, 2), requiring towns to keep their highways in good repair, suitable for travel thereon. Connor v. Manchester, 60 Atl. 436, 437, 73 N. H. 233.

Manufacturing distinguished

Laws 1912, c. 157, prohibiting any person, firm, or corporation, engaged "in manufacturing or repairing," to work employes more than 10 hours per day, is sufficiently definite; for "manufacturing" is the system of industry which produces manufactured articles, and "manufacture" is the production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials, by giving them new forms, qualities, and properties, or combinations, and "repairing" is the making or restoring of an article or thing to its completeness. State v. J. J. Newman Lumber Co., 59 South. 923, 926, 102 Miss. 802, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851.

New or additional structure

New building distinguished, see New Building.

Under statutes making a distinction between the erection of new structures, and the repairing of existing structures, the repair of a structure presupposes the retention of the substantial identity of the structure. Attorney General ex rel. Gibson v. Board of Sup'rs of Montcalm County, 104 N. W. 792, 794, 795, 141 Mich. 590.

One installing a sprinkling system is not engaged in "repairing" within Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 18, relating to unsafe scaffolds, holsts, stays, etc., since "repair" is the restoration to a sound or good state after decay, waste, injury, or partial destruction, dilapidation, or loss, and involved the idea of something pre-existing. Grady v. National Conduit & Cable Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 549, 553, 153 App. Div. 401.

New records for a talking machine intended to increase the repertory could not be regarded as "repairs." Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Leeds & Catlin Co., 150 Fed. 147.

As rebuilding

A lessee, bound by the terms of his lease to keep the premises in a good state of "repair," was bound to restore the buildings when they were destroyed by fire. David v. Ryan, 47 Iowa, 642, 644 (citing and adopting Phillips v. Stevens, 16 Mass. 238; and Beach v. Crain, 2 N. Y. 86, 49 Am. Dec. 369).

The regrading, widening, and macadamizing of a highway is "repair," within Laws N. H. 1891, c. 186, providing that all repairs on roads in the care of the city of Concord shall be under the direction of the commissioner of highways. Hall v. Concord, 52 Atl. 864, 867, 71 N. H. 367, 58 L. R. A. 455.

Reconstruction distinguished

In a suit to charge land with tax bills defendants could not contend that the work was repair work, chargeable to the city, instead of work of reconstruction, chargeable to the abutting owner, on the ground that the contractors had repaired holes and cuts in the concrete foundation beneath the surface of the pavement which was being reconstructed, where such repairs were paid for by the city. Perkinson v. Schnake, 83 S. W. 301, 302, 108 Mo. App. 255.

The word "repairing," in Detroit City Charter 1904, § 193, providing that "repairing" of sidewalks shall be at the expense of the city, does not include a reconstruction of a sidewalk when necessary, and the section does not qualify Loc. Acts 1901, p. 709, No. 472, amending section 57 (Loc. Acts 1883, p. 614, No. 326), authorizing the council to require an owner to reconstruct a sidewalk in front of his premises. Walker v. City of Detroit, 106 N. W. 1123, 1124, 143 Mich. 427.

Buffalo City Charter, § 288 (Laws 1891, p. 200, c. 105, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 661, c. 228, § 8), requires the owner or occupant of premises to lay and relay sidewalks whenever ordered, and to keep the sidewalk in good repair. It also requires the public works commissioner to notify the owner or occupant of any premises in front of which any such work, except the removal of stone and ice, and the repair of sidewalks, shall be required to be done, and, if the same is not done by the owner or occupant within 10 days, it shall be done by the city and the expense assessed against the property. There was a plank sidewalk five feet wide in front of plaintiff's premises, which plaintiff was directed to repair, and, after he had failed to do so, the commissioner caused the entire walk to be removed, and constructed a new concrete walk 17½ feet wide. Held, that the construction of such new walk was not a repair, but was a reconstruction, which the commissioner had no authority to make except pursuant to a resolution of the city council after notice to the property owner and an opportunity to be heard. Konowalski v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 467, 468, 131 App. Div. 405.

Ky. St. § 4315, providing that, in counties where the funds for working the roads are raised by taxation, the road supervisor shall advertise for bids, and let to the lowest and best bidder the working and keeping in repair of all the roads in the county, has no reference to the reconstruction of a turnpike by the fiscal court, the language applying only to the supervisor and not the court, and showing that only ordinary repairs were contemplated under this section; and hence a contract for reconstruction need not be submitted to competition. Hanlon v. Cleary, 133 S. W. 953, 954, 142 Ky. 46.

Ky. St. § 1840, giving the fiscal court power to appropriate county funds for the maintenance of highways, and section 4306, giving the fiscal court general charge and supervision of the public roads with authority to repair same, the fiscal court had power to reconstruct a turnpike road. Hanlon v. Cleary, 133 S. W. 953, 954, 142 Ky. 46.

Under a grant to a railroad company of the right to cut timber from adjacent public lands "for the construction and repair" of its road, where neither the grant nor the company's articles of incorporation specified the kind of road to be built, it was optional with the company to build either a broad or narrow gauge, and, having constructed a narrow-gauge road, it had no authority to take timber to make the same over into a broad gauge, which was reconstruction, and not repair, but it did have the right to take such timber to keep the road in repair after such change had been made. United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 190 Fed. 825, 854.

A contract called for the paving of a street to be constructed with a stone curbing, with a foundation of broken stone and sand, and a six-inch concrete superstructure thereon, with a surface layer of two inches of asphaltum, to be kept in "repair" by the contractor for seven years. After its completion and use it soon became perforated with holes, which the contractor undertook to repair by patchwork. The condition of the asphalt surface continued, however, to grow worse, greatly interfering with the use of the street. Experts reported that it was in the interest of economy and business judgment to relay the entire surface asphaltum coating. Held, that as applied to the whole pavement as a unit this resurfacing was of the nature of repair work. Plaintiff's contention was that the work was "reconstruction" and not "repair." The court says that it may be conceded that there are some varying shades of difference in the general term "repair," but there is none more apt and comprehensible than the accepted dictionary definition: "To restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction." "Reconstruction" is "to construct again, to rebuild, to remodel, to form again or renew." It would therefore follow that to constitute a work of reconstruction of the pavement would involve the rebuilding of the whole unit, including the concrete foundation as well as the asphalt surface, to say nothing of the curbing. "Repair is 'restoration to a sound, good, or complete state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction.' Reconstruction is 'the act of constructing again.' Reproduction is 'repetition,' or 'the act of reproducing.'" These definitions are instructive in bringing home to the mind that repair carries with it the idea of restoration after decay, injury, or partial destruction, and that reconstruction or reproduction carries with it the idea of complete construction or production over again. American Bonding Co. v. City of Ottumwa, 137 Fed. 572, 579, 70 C. C. A. 270 (citing Good-year Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, 112 Fed. 146-150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 163, 55 L. R. A. 692).

"Webster defines 'repair' as, to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, as to repair a house, a wall, or a ship. He defines 'reconstruction' as, to construct again, to rebuild." Where, after a street which had been paved with asphalt at the expense of abutting owners had fallen into disrepair, the city passed an ordinance directing that it be reconstructed with asphalt pavement in accordance with the ordinance, in so far as it related to resurfacing streets with asphalt paving, so that the entire improvement consisted merely of relaying a new three-inch asphalt surface on the original macadam base, without disturbing the same, the work did not constitute a "reconstruction" of the street, but was a mere "repair" thereof, for which the city was solely responsible. City of Covington v. Bullock, 103 S. W. 276, 277, 126 Ky. 236 (quoting and adopting definition in Levi v. Coyne [Ky.] 57 S. W. 790).

Where, under a single ordinance, a new pavement is to be laid, and the old curbing and guttering must be reset and replaced in part, the curbing and guttering are "reconstruction work," though the contractor is required to utilize serviceable old curb and gutter stones, and not "repair work," within Rev. St. 1899, § 5681, providing that the cost of repair of curbing or guttering shall, when not done by the owner liable therefor in the first instance, be paid out of the general revenue of the city, and the cost of the curbing and guttering was properly included in special tax bills. Rackliffe v. Duncan, 108 S. W. 1110, 1112, 130 Mo. App. 695.

Remodeling distinguished

The words "repairing" and "remodeling" are not synonymous or included within the meaning of the word "building," within an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits. City of Mayville v. Rosing, 123 N. W. 393, 395, 19 N. D. 98, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120.

As rendering suitable for use

Where improvements are limited to repairing interior arrangements of an old building to suit the convenience of the owner, they are repairs or alterations within the meaning of Mechanic's Lien Law, § 10. Grantwood Lumber & Supply Co. v. Abbott, 78 Atl. 1046, 80 N. J. Law, 564.

As rent

See Rent.

Repavement of street

"Repairing" a pavement means restoration of the paved surface, while "repaving" means replacement of old pavement with new. People ex rel. Keller v. City of Buffalo, 137 N. Y. Supp. 464, 466, 77 Misc. Rep. 532.

Milwaukee City Ordinance June 6, 1887, § 4, granted certain rights and privileges to the Milwaukee City Railway Company, defendant's predecessor in interest, and obligated it to maintain in good and thorough repair during the charter term all portions of W. street between the outside rails, and one foot therefrom toward the curb, of the same material as that of which the street should be composed when such repairs should be necessary. Held that, while the word "repair" does not mean "repave," yet the section requires the company to keep the street in repair, and that, when a given pavement becomes defective, the company must renew that portion of the pavement within its zone, using the same material which the city uses on the rest of the street. State ex rel. City of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 139 N. W. 396, 398, 151 Wis. 520.

Where the wearing surface of a paved street in a metropolitan city has become so decayed as to be unfit for use, and it is proposed that the material composing the wearing surface shall be removed and a new material relaid thereon on the same concrete base, it constitutes a "repaving" as distinguished from "repairing," as used in the provisions of the charter of such a city (Comp. St. 1903, c. 12a), regulating the manner and method of improving streets. McCaffrey v. City of Omaha, 101 N. W. 251, 252, 72 Neb. 583.

A charter empowering a city council to raise money for regulating, cleaning, and keeping in repair streets and highways, and providing also that grading and macadamizing, etc., shall be done at the expense of the owner, does not authorize an expenditure of a part of the money raised for graveling or macadamizing. State v. City Council of Passaic, 46 N. J. Law, 124.

The relaying of macadam in the center of a macadamized street to the width of 14 feet part of the way and 20 feet for the remainder of the way, and to the depth of 18 inches, and presenting, when completed, after work continuing for 2 months and 10 days, at a cost apportioned to the abutting property of $4,025.90, a uniform and even appearance the entire length of the street, as though repaved, is not "repairing" a street, within Rev. St. 1909, § 9411, authorizing a town of the fourth class to repair streets without notice, through its proper officer or committee on improvements, as the word "repair" is not the substitution of a structure in place of a similar original structure; but to constitute a repair there must be an original on which to rest the repair. Noel v. Town of Lees Summit, 148 S. W. 194, 195, 166 Mo. App. 114.

The work of lining up and repairing a curb by replacing rotten stones with new ones where necessary is repair work, which must be paid for by the city, under St. Louis city charter. Perkinson v. Schnake, 83 S. W. 301, 302, 108 Mo. App. 255.

In performing a contract for a street improvement, the old asphaltum was removed, and the old concrete base was replaced by new material where necessary. Where no concrete existed, new concrete was used, not more than six inches in depth, and the finished surface was made to conform to a plane parallel with and three inches below the finished surface of the pavement. Wherever the earth where the new concrete was used was soft and spongy, it was dug up and repaired. Wherever the concrete base then in place was below a point parallel to three inches below the finished surface of the pavement, new concrete was laid on the old so as to bring its surface up to such parallel; and wherever such base was above such point it was cut down to the same parallel. In addition, a binder course of bituminous concrete, 1½ inches thick, composed of clean broken stone, was laid on the concrete base, and on this foundation a compressed asphalt wearing surface 1½ inches thick was placed. It was held that the work done was not "repairs," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 5681, providing, as to cities of the second class, that the cost of the repairing and keeping in repair of all streets shall be paid out of the general revenue fund, and exempting abutting property owners from liability therefor. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Munchenberger, 78 S. W. 280, 282, 105 Mo. App. 47.

The obligation of a city passenger railway company under its charter to keep the street embracing the track of its road and two feet on each side in "repair" does not require it to repave it with a new and different and, perhaps, more costly material. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Scharf, 54 Md. 499, 500, 503.

Under a city charter providing for repairs to sidewalks and curbs and authorizing the board of works to require the owner of the lot in front of which repairs might be needed, to make them, upon notice, and that if not done by the owner the city might do it and sue for the expense as for labor done and materials furnished for him, but which gave no authority to make the cost of such repairs by an assessment, the resetting of curbs and flagging of sidewalks, already laid, constituted "repairs," not subject to assessment. State v. Jersey City, 38 N. J. Law, 410, 415.

As restoration to original condition

"To 'repair,' as is ordinarily understood, is to mend; not to make a new thing, but to reft or make good or restore an existing thing." Walker v. City of Detroit, 106 N. W. 1123, 1124, 143 Mich. 427.

The language of the statute as to the employer's duty to furnish safe appliances for work of "repairing" includes any work of restoration to a former more perfect condition. Koepf v. National Enameling & Stamping Co., 139 N. W. 179, 184, 151 Wis. 302.

The word "repair," is used in connection with a patented article, means the restoration of worn-out parts. Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 503, 506, 213 U. S. 325, 53 L. Ed. 816 (citing Wilson v. Simpson, 50 U. S. [9 How.] 109, 13 L. Ed. 66; Same v. Rosseau, 45 U. S. [4 How.] 709, 11 L. Ed. 1169).

Where, at the commencement of a lease for a term of years, the premises were changed from a loft and office building to a factory, the expense of alterations necessary to place them in their original condition after surrender on the tenant's bankruptcy was not "repairs," for which the landlord was entitled to claim under the lease, providing that the tenant shall make all inside repairs and alterations at his own expense. In re International Milling Co., 175 Fed. 308, 309.

Pol. Code, § 3459, provides that if further assessments are required to protect, maintain, or "repair" the works of a reclamation district, the trustees must present to the supervisors a statement of the work done and to be done, and that the board must direct an assessment. Held, that proceedings to restore 1,500 feet of washed-out levee were properly had under the section, and that the landowners were not entitled to the advice of the supervisors before the work was done.

Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v. Clark, 100 Pac. 1091, 1092, 155 Cal. 345.

A lease provided that the lessee should not deface the premises, by removal of any fixture or otherwise, and yield up the premises and all additions in good repair, but permitted him to make alterations necessary for his business, and to remove the same at the termination of the lease, provided he put the premises in good repair. The lessee built on the premises bathrooms, and installed appropriate fixtures and tiled floors, all of permanent construction, to adapt the premises for his business of selling bathroom and sanitary fixtures. Held, that the lessee had the option of removing the additions at the end of the term, and when he exercised the option the premises must be left undefaced and in good repair, but, where he did not elect to exercise the privilege of removal, the lessor could not compel him to make such removal; the word "repair" meaning mending a waste or decay incident to a removal, and not a restoration to an original state, when the additions were sound as structures and not defacing the premises. Perry v. J. L. Mott Iron Works Co., 93 N. E. 798, 799, 207 Mass. 501.

Street paving

It was not improper to include, in an assessment for the improvement of a street, the cost of work performed on the sidewalks, curbing and guttering, on the theory that such work constituted repairs chargeable to the city. Halsey v. Richardson, 122 S. W. 326, 329, 139 Mo. App. 157.

Repair of road

As county purpose, see County Purpose.

Repair of vessel

Inclosing the deck of a barge to protect her cargo from the weather to fit her for a particular business constitutes "repairs," and not construction. The O. H. Vessels, 183 Fed. 561, 562, 106 C. C. A. 107; 177 Fed. 589 (citing The Iris, 100 Fed. 104, 40 C. C. A. 301; The Ella, 84 Fed. 471).

The word "repair" contemplates an existing structure, which has become imperfect by reason of the action of elements or otherwise. In the case of vessels particularly, this distinction is one which cannot be ignored, as it lies at the basis of an important diversity of jurisdiction between the common-law and maritime courts. Gagnon v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 510, 512, 193 U. S. 451, 48 L. Ed. 745.

The test to be applied in distinguishing between a new vessel and one repaired does not depend upon the comparative amount of new and old material used. Nor is it necessary that the dimensions or burden should remain unchanged to constitute a repaired vessel. The real test is whether the existence and identity of the vessel remain. Homer v. The Lady of the Ocean, 70 Me. 350, 352.

Widen or deepen ditch

The phrase "widen or deepen," as used in Laws 1905, p. 327, c. 230, § 26, authorizing county commissioners to keep drainage ditches in proper repair, etc., by removing obstructions therefrom, is not included in the term "repairs," so as to authorize such work without notice to interested property owners. In re Renville Co., 122 N. W. 1120, 1122, 109 Minn. 88.

REPAIR SHOP

A condition attached to the grant of aid to a railroad that it locate its "repair shop and roundhouse" at a particular place means no more than such repair shop and roundhouse as may be required upon the particular section or division of the road to which it refers. Bradley Ramsay Lumber Co. v. Perkins, 33 South. 351, 354, 109 La. 317.

REPARTIAMENTO

"Repartimento" is a proceeding in its nature judicial—a partition of common property. Steinbach v. Moore, 30 Cal. 498, 505.

REPAVE—REPAVEMENT

Where a street has been paved for a part of its width, subsequent pavement of those parts which have never been paved is not a "repavement," as affecting liability for the expense of an improvement. People ex rel. Keller v. City of Buffalo, 137 N. Y. Supp. 464, 465, 77 Misc. Rep. 532.

Milwaukee City Ordinance June 6, 1887, § 4, granted certain rights and privileges to the Milwaukee City Railway Company, defendant's predecessor in interest, and obligated it to maintain in good and thorough repair during the charter term all portions of W. street between the outside rails, and one foot therefrom toward the curb, of the same material as that of which the street should be composed when such repairs should be necessary. Held that, while the word "repair" does not mean "repave," yet the section requires the company to keep the street in repair, and that, when a given pavement becomes defective, the company must renew that portion of the pavement within its zone, using the same material which the city uses on the rest of the street. State ex rel. City of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 139 N. W. 396, 398, 151 Wis. 520.

Where the wearing surface of a paved street in a city of the metropolitan class has become so rotten and decayed as to be unfit for use, and, in a work for the improvement of such street, it is proposed and required that all the material composing the wearing surface of the entire portion of the paved street shall be removed, and a new material of the same or of a different kind replaced or relaid thereon, even though on the same concrete base, such proposed work constitutes a "repaving" of the street, as distinguished from "repairing," as those words are used in the charter of the city. McCaffrey v. City of Omaha, 101 N. W. 251, 252, 72 Neb. 583.

As paving

See Pave—Pavement.

As repair

See Repair—Repairs.

REPEAL

See Express Repeal.

The primary meaning of the word "repeal," as used in speaking of the repeal of a statute, is, as its etymology imports, that the statute has been recalled or revoked. To repeal signifies the abrogation of one statute or some of its particular provisions by another. Jessee v. De Shong (Tex.) 105 S. W. 1011, 1014 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6102, and citing Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 11 Pac. 3, 6, 69 Cal. 479; Butte & B. Consol. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore-Purchasing Co., 60 Pac. 1039, 24 Mont. 125).

The term "repeal" with reference to statutes means the abrogation of a previously existing law by a subsequent statute, which either declares that the former shall be revoked, or which contains provisions so irreconcilable with those of the earlier law that only one of the two can remain in force; the former being an express repeal and the latter an implied repeal. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 235 Mo. 687. See, also, Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 36 Colo. 418.

Laws 1899, c. 141, relating to compensation of county officers, provided (section 12) that probate judges should retain fees in amounts proportioned to the population, dividing the excess with the county. Section 14 required such judge to keep a record of all fees collected, and file quarterly reports showing their amount. Laws 1901, c. 214, fixed the fees of the probate judge in two counties in accordance with the general schedule, except as to two items which were increased, and allowed him to retain the entire amount collected and expressly repealed original section 14 of chapter 141. Laws 1909, c. 142, purported to repeal the act of 1901 so far as it applied to one of the counties covered thereby. Held, that the act of 1901 was not a repeal of chapter 141 within the meaning of the rule that the repeal of a statute does not revive a statute previously repealed, and the county as to which it was repealed again came within the operation of the law of 1899. State v. Prattler, 112 Pac. 829, 830, 84 Kan. 169, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

Amendment distinguished

There is a distinction between a "repeal" and an "amendment" of a statute. A "repeal" necessarily involves a change in the law, whether the statute repealed is the only enactment on the subject dealt with in the repealed act. A statute, in derogation of the common law, is not an amendment of the common law, and therefore the fact that an independent act, full and complete in itself, repeals by implication any portion of a statutory system does not render it an amendatory statute, where it makes no reference to the statutes affected by it. It is true that such an act alters or changes the system, but this change or alteration is and must be ascribed to the repeal wrought by the independent act and not to the change or alteration consequent upon the repeal. An amendment also involves some change or alteration in the existing statute law, and may also operate as a repeal of some of its provisions, but such change or alteration made by the amendment is direct and not consequential, as is the case of a repeal. There is also another marked difference between a "repeal" and an "amendment." An "amendment" may not, and often does not, operate as a repeal, but merely as an addition to the statute of which it is amendatory. This can never be the effect or operation of a repealing statute, whether the repeal be by implication or be direct. As stated in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, a "repeal" is "the abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act," while an "amendment" is "an alteration or change of something proposed in a bill or established as law." A "supplemental" act adds something that was left out of the original act, and does not necessarily revise it or amend it in the technical sense, while an amendment is something that may be incorporated into the act amended on its passage. A supplemental act is an independent law, and a "healing act" is one that cures some defect in a proceeding which the Legislature could have authorized in the first instance. From this it is held that an independent legislative act, complete in itself, and inconsistent with other statutory provisions on the same subject, is not an "amendment" but is a "repeal." State ex rel. Gamble v. Hubbard, 41 South. 903, 905, 906, 148 Ala. 391.

Synonyms

The term "repeal" is synonymous with "annul," "cancel," "reverse," and "abolish," so that a statute or ordinance is repealed when it is destroyed, abolished, abrogated, canceled, annulled, recalled, or rescinded by a later one. City of St. Louis v. Kellman, 139 S. W. 443, 445, 235 Mo. 687; Wilson v. People, 85 Pac. 187, 189, 86 Colo. 418.

REPEAL BY IMPLICATION

"A 'repeal by implication' must be by necessary implication. It is not sufficient to establish that the subsequent law or laws cover some, or even all, of the cases provided for by it, for they may be merely affirmative, or cumulative, or auxiliary. But there must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and those of the old, and even then the old law is repealed by implication only pro tanto to the extent of the repugnancy. Evans v. McFarland, 85 S. W. 873, 878, 186 Mo. 703 (citing State ex rel. Reid v. Walbridge, 24 S. W. 457, 119 Mo. 383, 41 Am. St. Rep. 663, and quoting And. Law Dict. p. 879); Jessee v. De Shong (Tex.) 105 S. W. 1011, 1014 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6103).

For a later statute to repeal an earlier one on the same subject by implication, there must be such a repugnancy or conflict between the two acts that they cannot stand together. Austin v. State, 135 S. W. 1167, 1168, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 573 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6103).

"Repeals by implication" are not favored, and, where two statutes, covering in whole or in part the same matter, are not absolutely irreconcilable, effect should be given, if possible, to both of them. Giles v. Denison, 78 Pac. 174, 177, 15 Okl. 55; McMillan v. Board of Com'rs of Payne County, 79 Pac. 898, 899, 14 Okl. 659.

REPEL

REPEL IMPUTATION OF NEGLIGENCE

In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger while attempting to alight from a street car, it is error to give to the jury an instruction in which, after telling them that, under the law, the defendant is held liable for the slightest negligence, they are instructed that the defendant must "repel by satisfactory proof every imputation of such negligence," when the facts are not such as to create a presumption of negligence against the defendant and cast the burden upon it to disprove negligence, and also when the contributory negligence of the plaintiff is involved. To "repel by satisfactory proof every imputation of negligence" means that the burden is upon the defendant to prove that the injury was not the result of its negligent act. Blake v. Camden Interstate Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 408, 409, 57 W. Va. 300.

REPLACEMENT

The word "replacement," as applied to a patented article, means the restoration of worn-out parts. Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 503, 506, 213 U. S. 325, 53 L. Ed. 816 (citing Wilson v. Simpson, 50 U. S. [9 How.] 109, 13 L. Ed. 66; Same v. Rosseau, 45 U. S. [4 How.] 709, 11 L. Ed. 1169).

REPLEVIN

"Replevin" is a possessory remedy. Matison v. Hooberry, 78 S. W. 642, 643, 104 Mo. App. 287.

"Replevin" is a mere possessory action. It is said in Shinn, Repl. § 164, that it is a universal principle of the law of replevin that the action will only lie against the party in possession of the property at the time the action is instituted. Jenkins v. City of Ontario, 74 Pac. 466, 467, 44 Or. 72, 102 Am. St. Rep. 625.

In an action of "replevin," nothing can be tried but the right of possession of the property in controversy. Nicolette Lumber Co. v. People's Coal Co., 62 Atl. 1060, 1061, 213 Pa. 379, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327, 110 Am. St. Rep. 550, 5 Ann. Cas. 387.

"Replevin" is a possessory action only. Roach v. Curtis, 100 N. Y. Supp. 411, 414, 50 Misc. Rep. 122.

"The 'action of replevin' is one for the possession merely." Kelly v. Lewis, 88 Pac. 388, 389, 38 Colo. 18.

"Replevin" "is strictly a possessory action, and the right of the possession of the property involved at the commencement of the action is the question at issue." The gist of action is the unlawful detention of the property. Hyde v. Elmer, 88 Pac. 1132, 14 N. M. 39.

The remedy of "replevin" is specific in purpose and limited in scope. It can only be invoked against unreasonable detention existing when suit is brought, and one not in possession is invulnerable to such suit, and it is immaterial that the value of the thing sought might be recovered in the event it could not be produced to satisfy the judgment. Redinger v. Jones, 75 Pac. 997, 999, 68 Kan. 627.

"Replevin" cannot be maintained by one who has neither title to the property, general or special, nor the right to possession. Clark v. Anderson, 68 Atl. 633, 634, 103 Me. 134.

Under the Code, the gist of "replevin" is the wrongful detention of the property in dispute. Robb v. Dobrinski, 78 Pac. 101, 103, 14 Okl. 563, 1 Ann. Cas. 981.

"Replevin" is a form of action to recover possession of personal chattels that have been unlawfully taken or detained from their owner. The action is founded on the general or special property of the plaintiff, and his consequent right to immediate and exclusive possession, and the action is therefore one in which the title or property of a chattel is determined. Hitch v. Riggin (Del.) 80 Atl. 975, 976.

"Replevin" does not lie to recover the amount which may be found due from defendant to plaintiff on account, but to recover possession of the property in dispute.

Malsby v. Gamble, 54 South. 766, 768, 61 Fla. 310.

An action of "replevin" is not only an action to recover the specific property, but also to recover damages for the detention and plaintiff is entitled to recover such damages, though he has not, pursuant to the statute, required the immediate delivery of the property. Pedrick v. Kuemmell, 65 Atl. 846, 847, 74 N. J. Law, 379.

"'Replevin' is strictly a possessory action for the recovery of personal property, and, in order to recover, the plaintiff must be the legal owner and entitled to the possession at the time of the commencement of the action;" and "replevin" will lie to recover growing strawberry plants attached to the soil, where the testimony shows a sale of all the strawberry plants on a certain tract. Cannon v. Mathews, 87 S. W. 428, 429, 75 Ark. 336, 69 L. R. A. 827, 112 Am. St. Rep. 64, 5 Ann. Cas. 478.

"Replevin" is an action for the wrongful detention of possession, and the primary object is to recover the thing and not its value. O'Brien v. Curry & Whyte, 127 N. W. 411, 412, 111 Minn. 533, 137 Am. St. Rep. 563.

"Replevin" is an action for the recovery of chattels wrongfully taken and detained, or wrongfully detained; the gist of the action being indifferently stated to be the "wrongful" or "unlawful" detention. Boswell v. First Nat. Bank of Laramie, 92 Pac. 624, 632, 16 Wyo. 161.

"Replevin" is a suit involving only the right to possession. Welker v. Appleman, 90 N. E. 35, 39, 44 Ind. App. 699.

The statutory action of "claim and delivery" (B. & C. Comp. § 284) for the recovery of possession of specific personal property is substantially the ancient remedy of "replevin." Freeman v. Trummer, 91 Pac. 1077, 1079, 50 Or. 287.

"Replevin" is one of the most ancient and well-defined writs known to the common law. The plaintiff in replevin does not take or hold the goods replevied as a bailee or custodian, nor are the goods in any sense in custodia legis. It is an ancient common-law proceeding by which the owner recovers possession of his own. It is defined in the old books as "a redelivery to the owner, by the sheriff, of his cattle or goods distrained upon any cause, upon surety that he will pursue the action against him that distrained. If he pursue it not, or if it be adjudged against him, then he who took the distress shall have it again, and for that purpose may have a writ of retorno habendo." Three States Lumber Co. v. Blanks, 133 Fed. 479, 481, 66 C. C. A. 353, 69 L. R. A. 253 (quoting from 6 Bac. Abr. [Wilson's Ed.] side page 52).

"'Replevin' is strictly an action at law. The right of recovery must exist at the time the action is commenced. It cannot be created by bringing notes into court, as in an equitable suit for rescission, and offering to surrender them up as the court may direct." Plaintiff sold implements to defendant on credit obtained by fraudulent representations of defendant. Subsequently defendant made a payment on the account, but sold some of the implements for an amount greater than that which he paid on account. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to maintain replevin for the goods without first offering to return defendant's notes for the price, but that it was not necessary for plaintiff to offer to return the payment made. Kingman-Moore Implement Co. v. Ellis, 103 S. W. 127, 129, 125 Mo. App. 692 (quoting and adopting the definition in Thompson v. Peck, 18 N. E. 16, 115 Ind. 512, 1 L. R. A. 201).

Trover distinguished

The primary purpose of "replevin" is to recover the property in specie, not its value. A text-writer, in distinguishing between the compensation to be awarded to the injured party in certain cases, says: "The essential distinction between trover and replevin, as regards the rule of damages, aside from the element of willfulness in the taking or detention, is briefly this: In trover the title to the property is regarded as having passed to the defendant, who is therefore liable for its value, simply, with interest. In replevin the title is treated as still in the plaintiff, who is therefore to recover, not only the chattel itself, or its value, but also damages for its detention, of which interest may be the measure, but is not in all cases the necessary limit." La Vie v. Crosby, 74 Pac. 220, 222, 43 Or. 612 (citing Sedg. Dam. [8th Ed.] § 528).

Trover is an action to recover damages sufficient to cover the value of personal property wrongfully held by another, while "replevin" or detinue is primarily an action to recover the property, and a judgment is given only in the absence of ability to secure the specific articles claimed. Leeper Graves & Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Hobart, 110 Pac. 655, 660, 26 Okl. 707, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 302.

REPLICATION

The "replication de injuria" is a general mode of pleading available when the defendant has pleaded matter of excuse. It denies briefly by a general form and in summary terms, but is not permissible when the matters of excuse consist of justification under the process of a court of record. Justification by arrest upon view and under warrant and conviction had under the provisions of the New Jersey act of March 29, 1897 (P. L. p. 109), for the enforcement of the game act (Act April 14, 1903; P. L. p. 526), are matters of record provable by the conviction, and, when pleaded in an action, do not permit of the replication de injuria. Where a protestando is not broad enough to cover all the matters of record set out in such plea, and the remainder of these matters of record become mixed with other facts not matters of record, the general replication de injuria absque residuo causæ cannot stand against a notice to strike out. Taverna v. Churchill, 72 Atl. 43, 44, 77 N. J. Law, 430.

REPORT

See Department Report; Immediate Report; Inquire and Report; Phonographic Report of Testimony; Separate Report.

As public document, see Public Document.

An award of commissioners in eminent domain proceedings is neither a verdict, a "report," nor a decision, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1235, which provides that, where final judgment is rendered for a sum of money granted by a verdict, report, or decision, interest on the sum awarded must be computed by the clerk and included in the amount of the judgment. In re Pine's Stream and East Meadow Stream in Town of Hempstead, 114 N. Y. Supp. 681, 684, 129 App. Div. 929.

An invalid "report" amounts to no "report," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1019, providing that, on a trial, by a referee his report must be filed or delivered within 60 days of final submission of the case, and, if not, either party may, before it is filed or delivered, terminate the reference. Lederer v. Lederer, 95 N. Y. Supp. 623, 625, 108 App. Div. 228.

In an action to recover land which plaintiff claimed by devise, where there was testimony that the witness knew the testator in 1862 and understood that he died during the war, such being the report, the word "war" must be understood as the war between the states, and "report" as meaning common rumor. McDoel v. Jordan (Tex.) 151 S. W. 1178, 1179.

A case reserved is a "case reported," within Rev. Laws, c. 173, § 115, providing for discharge of reports by the trial court on failure to take necessary steps for review. Daly v. Foss, 95 N. E. 899, 209 Mass. 470.

Rev. St. c. 79, § 46, provides that questions of law arising on reports of cases may come before the Supreme Judicial Court as a court of law. Held, that the word "case" is used in its unrestricted sense, as a contested question before a court or justice, a suit or action, a cause, and the phrase "reports of cases" contemplates a method of submitting questions involving both law and fact, in the most comprehensive manner to the decision of the court, so that a report of a case under the statute must submit the whole controversy for final decision unless some question is reserved, and hence, upon a report without restriction, the law court may pass upon the question of costs in a probate case. Mather v. Cunningham, 78 Atl. 102, 103, 107 Me. 242 (quoting 1 Words and Phrases, p. 985).

REPOSSESS

The word "repossess," as used in a covenant in a lease authorizing the landlord, on the tenant's breach of covenant, to re-enter the premises and repossess himself of the same, was not equivalent to "dispossess," as used in the statute providing for regaining possession of real property by summary proceedings. Kleinstein v. Gonsky, 118 N. Y. Supp. 949, 950, 134 App. Div. 266.

REPREHENSIBLE

The term "reprehensible," used to characterize a statement in the opinion of a court, is disrespectful and scurrilous. In re Breen, 93 Pac. 997, 1002, 30 Nev. 164.

REPRESENT

See As Represented.

As conduct legal proceeding

A guardian ad litem, who is appointed to "represent" the infant in an action or proceeding pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 372, conducts and controls the proceeding on behalf of the infant; and an attorney for minors in probate proceedings is to "represent" them pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1718, and, so far as he is concerned, to conduct and control the proceedings. State ex rel. Eakins v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist., 85 Pac. 1022, 1023, 34 Mont. 226.

As declare

To "represent" is to describe or portray; in other words, to declare or set forth. Beck v. Budd, 88 N. E. 785, 786, 44 Ind. App. 145.

As misrepresent

Rev. Codes 1905, § 4058, defines collusion, as a ground for denying a divorce, as an agreement between the husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause for divorce, to enable the other to obtain a divorce. Held, that "represented," within the statute, means misrepresented, and such collusion is not proved by evidence failing to show any agreement between the husband and wife that one of them should commit or appear to have committed acts constituting cause for divorce, where it does not appear that defendant was represented as having committed acts for such purpose, which he had not committed. Wiemer v. Wiemer, 130 N. W. 1015, 1017, 21 N. D. 371.

Eligibility or qualification indicated

Sacramento City Charter, § 8, as amended 1911, provides that the board of trustees shall consist of nine members, one from each ward, who shall be a resident of such ward, a trustee to which ward shall be elected by the qualified voters of the city, and each such elector shall be entitled to vote on the election of each trustee. Primary Election Act 1911 (St. 1911, p. 775) § 5, subd. 6, provides that, except in the case of a candidate to a nomination to a judicial office or a school office, nomination papers shall be signed as follows: By not less than 1 per cent. and not more than 2 per cent. of the voters of the party of the candidate seeking nomination within the state or political subdivision thereof in which the candidate seeks nomination. Section 7 of the charter declares that the legislative power of the city is vested in the board of trustees, and that each member of the board shall be a qualified elector at least 25 years of age, shall have been a citizen of the state and an inhabitant of the city three years, and "of the ward which he represents for at least one year next before the day of his election." Held, that the word "represents" was used in section 7, not to define the power or prescribe the duties or limit the territorial authority of a member of the board of trustees, but was employed to declare one of the several qualifications of eligibility of a member of the board; and, since, under the primary election law, candidates to be voted for within the city by the voters at large must be nominated by the voters at large, the charter should be construed as requiring the nominations of trustees by electors belonging to the political party of the candidate residing in the entire city, and not alone by the members of the candidate's political party within the ward from which the trustee is elected. Hicks v. Desmond, 117 Pac. 943, 945, 16 Cal. App. 722.

Acts 1901, p. 534, c. 231 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3623a), provides that if a remonstrance against a street improvement "is signed by two-thirds of the property owners, residing upon the lots abutting on such improvement, and representing two-thirds of the number of lineal feet of such improvement, then all further proceedings shall be abandoned." Held, that the persons whose signatures can make the remonstrance peremptory must be two-thirds of those property owners who reside upon lots which abut on the improvement, and who also represent two-thirds of the number of lineal feet of the improvement, the word "residing" and the words "and representing" relating equally to the preceding "two-thirds of the property owners"; and hence, where the remonstrators owned more than two-thirds of the lineal feet abutting on the improvement and were more than two-thirds of the property owners residing on the real estate abutting on the improvement, but the remonstrators who resided on their lots did not own or represent two-thirds of the lineal feet, the remonstrance was insufficient. Maley v. Clark, 70 N. E. 1005, 1006, 33 Ind. App. 149.

REPRESENTATION

See By Right of Representation; Equality of Representation; False Representation; Fraudulent Misrepresentation; Fraudulent Representation; Legal Representative; Material Representation; Misrepresentation; Personal Representative; Promissory Representation; Statements and Representations; Taking by Representation; Unit of Representation.

Estoppel by representations, see Estoppel in Pals.

Code, art. 46, § 19, provides that the reality of an intestate who leaves no child or descendant shall descend to his brothers and sisters and their "descendants" in equal degree, equally. Section 21 provides that, if no brother or sister or any "descendant" from such brother or sister be living, then it shall descend to the father, and if no father living, then to the mother, and, if no mother living, then to the grandfather on the part of the father, and, if no such grandfather living, then to the descendants of such grandfather in equal degree, equally. Section 27 provides that, if in the descending or collateral line any parent shall be dead, the child or children of such parent shall by representation be considered in the same degree as the parent would have been in if living, and shall have the same share of the estate as the parent would have been entitled to if living; "provided that there be no representation admitted among collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children." Held, in a contest between first cousins and grandnieces of an intestate who left no nearer relatives, the former claiming as descendants of his grandfather and the latter as descendants of his sister, that the word "descendants," as used in section 19, was not limited to "children" by the proviso in section 27 limiting the right to take "by representation," which only applies to one seeking to be considered in the same degree as a deceased parent would have been in if living; and the grandnieces took as "descendants," under section 19, to the exclusion of the cousins, because the latter, who could only inherit by virtue of section 21, could only take in default of the persons mentioned in section 19. Hoffman v. Watson, 72 Atl. 479, 482, 109 Md. 532.

Though it is a general rule in equities that parties not before the court will not be bound by the decree, under the exception known as the "doctrine of representation," where it appears that a particular party, though not before the court in person, is so far represented by others that his interests receive actual and an efficient protection, the decree will be held binding upon him. De Witt County v. Leeper, 70 N. E. 760, 762, 209 Ill. 133.

Administrator

The appointment of a temporary administrator does not constitute "representation" on the estate of the decedent, within Civ. Code 1910, § 4376, providing that the time between the death of a person and representation on his estate shall not be counted against his estate, provided the time does not exceed five years, so as to cause limitations to begin to run against an estate on the appointment of such administrator. Baumgartner v. McKinnon, 73 S. E. 518, 521, 137 Ga. 165, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824.

As to character, credit, etc.

In Rev. Laws c. 74, § 4, providing that no action shall be brought to charge a person on or by reason of a representation or assurance made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person unless such representation is made in writing and signed by the party to be charged thereby the phrase "concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person," should be construed as limited to "representations" made to induce the plaintiff to enter into a transaction which will result in a debt due to him from a third person and did not include representations as to the financial credit of a corporation, made to induce plaintiff to subscribe to shares thereof to be paid for in cash. Walker v. Russell, 71 N. E. 86, 88, 186 Mass. 69, 1 Ann. Cas. 688.

Implied statements

While in its strict sense, a "representation" is an assertion or statement of some fact, it may also include an implied representation by conduct that a fact exists, including both express and implied statements, so that whatever word, action, or conduct conveys a real impression that a fact exists is embraced in the term. Ricks v. State, 69 S. E. 576, 577, 8 Ga. App. 449.

In false pretense

A "representation," to come within Rev. St. 1908, § 1849, denouncing the offense of knowingly and designedly, by any false pretense, obtaining property from another, must be of some fact, past or present, which is not the case where the property is obtained on promise to deliver a check, and that the check will be paid, though at the time thereof it is the intention of the person so promising to stop payment on the check, as he afterwards does. People v. Orris, 121 Pac. 163, 164, 52 Colo. 244, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 170.

In insurance

A "representation," in a contract for insurance, is collateral to the contract, and to be effective must be material to the risk. Donley v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 76 N. E. 914, 916, 184 N. Y. 107, 6 Ann. Cas. 81.

A "representation" is not strictly a part of the contract of insurance, or of the essence thereof, but is something collateral or preliminary, in the nature of an inducement, so that its falsity, unlike a false warranty, will not vitiate the contract or avoid the policy, unless it relates to a fact actually material, or clearly intended to be made material by agreement of the parties; it being sufficient if the representations are substantially true, though not strictly or literally so. A misrepresentation renders the policy void on the ground of fraud, while noncompliance with a warranty operates as an express breach of the contract. Pelican v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 119 Pac. 778, 781, 44 Mont. 277.

There is a material and substantial difference between the legal effect of a "warranty" and a "representation." A "representation" must relate to a material matter, and it is only required to be substantially true, while a "warranty" must be literally true, and its materiality cannot be called in question. It is said that warranties enter into and are made a part of the contract, while "representations" are merely inducements to it. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Link, 82 N. E. 637, 638, 230 Ill. 273 (citing Continental Ins. Co. v. Rogers, 119 Ill. 474, 10 N. E. 242, 50 Am. Rep. 810; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Moravec, 214 Ill. 186, 73 N. E. 415); Id., 131 Ill. App. 89, 94.

The difference in legal effect between a "warranty" and a "representation," in an insurance policy, is that falsity in a warranty in any particular bars recovery on the policy, while a "representation" to do so must refer to some fact material to the insurance, and be false, or fraudulent. Hoeland v. Western Union Life Ins. Co. of Spokane, 107 Pac. 866, 867, 58 Wash. 100; Monahan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Baltimore, 63 Atl. 211, 212, 103 Md. 145, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 759.

The distinction between a "representation" and a "warranty," as applied to statements by insured in his application for a policy, is that in the case of a representation it is sufficient if the representation is substantially true, while in the case of a warranty it must be literally true. In the case of representations, the policy is not avoided unless the statements are false to a degree or in a sense that materially affects the risk, or are such that, if they had not been made, the policy would not have been issued. In the case of a "warranty," it cannot be said that, though literally false, it is substantially true. In the case of a representation, the law clearly contemplates that it shall be viewed liberally, and though false, as a matter of fact, to a degree sufficient to defeat the liability of the company if it were a warranty, it may nevertheless, as a representation, be held to be substantially true. Royal Neighbors of America v. Wallace, 92 N. W. 897, 898, 66 Neb. 543.

All statements regarding the risk contained in or appearing on the face of a policy are warranties, and such is the rule irrespective of the use of the word "warranty" or "warranted." A stipulation in an insurance policy, reducing the price of insurance 50 per cent. on "Sprinkler risks" without requiring insured to use due diligence in maintaining an automatic sprinkler system in good working order, is a "warranty," and not a "representation." Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 106 Pac. 194, 195, 196, 56 Wash. 681, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 593.

"A 'warranty' in the law of insurance is not matter collateral to the contract, stated as an inducement to the other party to enter into the agreement, as a 'representation' is. It is parcel of the contract, and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, invalidates the obligation if not strictly true; and this though the thing warranted does not affect the risk." Salts v. Prudential Ins. Co., 120 S. W. 714, 716, 140 Mo. App. 142.

In insurance a "representation" is a statement of the applicant to the insurer regarding a fact material to the proposed insurance, and it must be, not only false, but fraudulent, to defeat the policy. The crucial distinction between a "representation" and a "warranty" is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract, and that the truth of the one is not and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery on the policy. Thus where the president of a bank applies to a bonding company for a bond indemnifying the bank against defalcations by an employé, and answers questions in writing at the request of the bonding company as to the former conduct of such employé, such questions and answers are representations and not warranties, but must be given in good faith, and any material false representations will relieve the company from liability. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Guthrie Nat. Bank, 87 Pac. 300, 17 Okl. 397 (citing Rice v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 103 Fed. 430, 432, 43 C. C. A. 270, 275; Moulou v. American Life Ins. Co., 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 111 U. S. 335, 28 L. Ed. 447).

Statements made in good faith by the president of a bank to an indemnity company, for the purpose of inducing the company to give a bond guaranteeing the faithful discharge of the duties of a bookkeeper of the bank, that the bookkeeper had kept his accounts correct and had made proper settlements for cash and securities intrusted to his care, and that the books had been inspected and examined, are "representations," and not warranties, where they are made on blanks furnished by the company, notwithstanding a stipulation therein that the answers are to be taken as conditions precedent, and as the basis of the bond applied for, and the liability of the company does not depend on the absolute truth of the statements.

Guthrie Nat. Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 79 Pac. 102, 103, 14 Okl. 636.

A warranty in insurance enters into and is a part of the contract, and must be literally true to permit a recovery on the policy, while a representation is not a part of the contract, but an inducement thereto. A "representation" must relate to a material matter, and is only required to be substantially true. Spence v. Central Accident Ins. Co., 86 N. E. 104, 105, 236 Ill. 444, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

The difference between a "warranty" and a "representation" lies in the fact that in the former the question of materiality is closed, while in the latter it is left open, and, if untrue in the former case, the policy is voidable at the option of the other party, while if untrue in the latter case, and also material, the same result follows. American Bonding & Trust Co. of Baltimore v. Burke, 85 Pac. 692, 693, 36 Colo. 49 (quoting and adopting definition in Ostrander, Fire Ins. [2d Ed.] § 135).

Whether the answers made by the applicant for a policy of indemnity or insurance are "warranties" or mere "representations" must depend upon the character of the question and its answer, the opportunity of the insurer to guard against the "representation" in the light of its consequences, or whether it is material to the risk. A warranty must be strictly true. A "representation" need only be substantially true. The crucial distinction between a "representation" and a warranty is that the one is not, and the other is, a part of the contract between the parties, and that the truth of the one is not, and the truth of the other is, a condition precedent to a recovery upon the policy or bond to which they relate. Poultry Producers' Union v. Williams, 107 Pac. 1040, 1041, 58 Wash. 64, 137 Am. St. Rep. 1041.

"A 'warranty' is a stipulation expressly set out or by inference incorporated in the policy whereby the assured agrees 'that certain facts relating to the risk are or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be true, or certain acts relating to the same subject have been or shall be done.' Its purpose is to define the limits of the obligation assumed by the insurer, and it is a condition which must be strictly complied with, or literally fulfilled, before the right to recover on the policy can accrue. It is not necessary that the fact or act warranted should be material to the risk, for the parties by their agreement have made it so. Lord Eldon says: 'It is a first principle in the law of insurance that, if there is a warranty, it is a part of the contract that the matter is such as it is represented to be.' On the other hand, 'representations' are no part of the contract of insurance, but are collateral or preliminary to it. When made to the insurer, at or before the contract is entered into, they form a basis upon which the risks proposed to be assumed can be estimated. They operate as the inducement to the contract. Unlike a false warranty, they will not invalidate the contracts because they are untrue, unless they are material to the risks and need only be substantially true. They render the policy void on the ground of fraud, 'while a noncompliance with a warranty operates as an express breach of the contract.'" Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. King, 102 S. W. 194, 195, 82 Ark. 400 (quoting and approving definition in Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 25 S. W. 835, 58 Ark. 528, and citing Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 21 S. W. 468, 57 Ark. 279; Western Assur. Co. v. Althelm-er, 25 S. W. 1067, 58 Ark. 565).

The word "representation," in an answer in an action on a life insurance policy averring, as to the application for insurance, that the false representation of the deceased in relation to his use of liquors afforded legal ground to claim annulment of the contract, was evidently used in that connection merely as synonymous with the word "statement" or "declaration." Briguac v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 36 South. 595, 601, 112 La. 574, 66 L. R. A. 322.

REPRESENTATIVE

"The 'representatives' of a deceased person are not usually designated by the term 'assignees.'" Sere v. Pitot, 10 U. S. (6 Cranch) 332, 336, 3 L. Ed. 240.

As one having authority to act for another

An agent authorized to conduct the business of buying and shipping cotton is the "representative" of the principal in such business; and his acts within the scope of his apparent authority are binding on the principal. Birge-Forbes Co. v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 115 S. W. 333, 335, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 55.

One directing and superintending the stringing of wires for a telegraph company is the "representative" of the company, and his knowledge is the knowledge of the company. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Likes, 80 N. E. 136, 141, 225 Ill. 249.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1223, provides that citation may be served on a foreign corporation by service on the local agent; and article 1194, subd. 25, provides that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county where it has an agency or "representative." Held, that the statute contemplates service on a person employed in forwarding the particular business for which the corporation was organized, and service on an attorney representing the defendant, and who was in the county at the time of service merely for the purpose of settling certain claims between the parties to the action, was insufficient. Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves & Co., 95 S. W. 739, 740, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

Executor or administrator

"The primary and ordinary meaning of the words 'representatives,' or 'legal representatives,' or 'personal representatives,' when there is nothing in the context to control their meaning is 'executors and administrators'; they being the representatives constituted by the proper court." Briggs v. Walker, 19 Sup. Ct. 1, 171 U. S. 466, 471, 43 L. Ed. 243.

"The word 'representative' has been held to include any person or party who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law." In a proceeding for the distribution of the estate of an intestate, in a contest between parties, each claiming as next of kin and heir at law, the administrator is a representative of his intestate. Sorensen v. Sorensen, 98 N. W. 837, 840, 68 Neb. 483 (quoting Kroh v. Helms, 67 N. W. 771, 48 Neb. 691; Sorensen v. Sorensen, 77 N. W. 68, 56 Neb. 729).

The words "representative" and "legal representative" of a person do not necessarily exclude the administrator or executor, but such words employed in a policy of a benefit association in view of the purposes of the association to benefit the family and heirs of deceased members were not intended to include the administrator of the member referred to in a policy. Tucker v. Knights of Pythias of North & South America, 68 S. E. 796, 797, 135 Ga. 56.

Where action against a nonresident was commenced by issuance of summons and attachment of his property in the state, and he then died, his administrator, appointed by a court of the state of his residence, entitled to possession of the property subject to the lien of attachment, in the absence of administration in New York, was his "representative" or successor in interest, within Code Civ. Proc. § 757, providing that action against a sole defendant, for a cause of action surviving, shall, on his death, be continued against his representative or successor in interest. Logan v. Greenwich Trust Co. of Greenwich, Conn., 129 N. Y. Supp. 577, 580, 582, 144 App. Div. 372.

The terms "personal representative" and "representative" are synonymous and refer to the person constituted representative by the proper court. An administrator is a "personal representative" of the decedent, within the statute providing that the personal representative may maintain an action for the recovery of damages for death by wrongful act. Jones v. Minnesota Transfer Ry. Co., 121 N. W. 606, 607, 108 Minn. 129 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5359).

"Representatives," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 655, providing that when a policy of insurance is effected on one's own life in favor of some person other than himself, having an insurable interest therein, the lawful beneficiary, other than himself or his legal representatives, shall be entitled to its proceeds against creditors and "representatives" of insured, means the personal representatives of an insured, as distinguished from "legal representatives," meaning heirs and distributees. Hall v. Ayers' Guardian (Ky.) 105 S. W. 911, 913, 914.

The word "representatives," as used in Bates' Ohio St. 1908, § 3628, subd. 2, exempting the amount of life insurance policy from "all claims by the representatives and creditors" of the insured, means personal representatives. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Cadiz, Ohio, 173 Fed. 390, 393.

Grantee

Comp. Laws 1897, § 496, in relation to substituted service, provides that, if a defendant against whom a decree shall have been made on substituted service, or his "representatives," shall afterwards appear and petition to be heard, petitioner may be admitted to answer on certain conditions. Held, that the grantee of a defendant, in a suit to quiet title, was embraced within the word "representatives." Coffin v. Outonagon Circuit Judge, 103 N. W. 835, 837, 140 Mich. 420.

As heir, devisee, or administrator

The word "representatives," as used in a will whereby a testator devised land and personalty to his wife, and then made to each of his children certain devises and bequests, and then declared that at the expiration of the life of the wife that which was given to her for life should be equally divided between all his children, share and share alike, "the representatives of such as may have died to stand in the place of their ancestors," means the persons who are appointed, not by the deviser in a will, but by the law, to represent him, and upon whom the law would have cast the inheritance. Bowen v. Hackney, 48 S. E. 633, 635, 136 N. C. 187, 67 L. R. A. 440.

A testamentary trustee holding a trust estate for the benefit of his children with power to appoint by will the manner, and the trust under which the estate should be divided among his children, executed a will, whereby he provided that the income of the trust fund should be divided equally among his living children and the legal representatives of any who might be dead, and declared that, if any of the children should die without having children, his or her share in the trust fund should be divided equally among his brothers and sisters surviving, and the representatives of any deceased child. Held, that since the word "representatives" meant legal representatives or heirs, and might include descendants of remote degree, the gift was against the statute of perpetuities. Allen v. Davies, 82 Atl. 189, 192, 85 Conn. 172.

Bouvier in his Law Dictionary says that the heir represents the ancestor; the devisee, his testator; the administrator, his intestate. It seems that, in a suit against the heirs for the specific performance of the ancestor's contract, the contractee complainant cannot testify as to transactions with or statements by the ancestor, since probably heirs or devisee are "representatives" of the deceased debtor under the statute. Kleb v. Kleb, 62 Atl. 396, 401, 70 N. J. Eq. 305.

As heir or next of kin

"While technically the words 'legal representatives' mean administrators or executors, they may refer to heirs or next of kin. A 'representative' is one who stands in the place of an owner of real estate as heir, of personality as next of kin. He is one, also, who takes by representation; and in wills and settlements the terms 'representatives' and 'legal representatives' are frequently held to mean heirs and next of kin, and not executors and administrators." Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 112 App. Div. 254 (citing Griswold v. Sawyer, 26 N. E. 464, 125 N. Y. 411).

As next of kin

Testator by his will gave "unto all my brothers and sisters and their representatives, after the decease of my wife, the house and lot left in trust to her and also the bank stock left in trust to her, to be equally divided, share and share alike." The sisters died, leaving issue. Held, that the word "representatives" meant, with reference to the context, next of kin under the statute of distribution. Howell v. Westbrook, 66 Atl. 417, 418, 69 N. J. Eq. 641.

"The word 'representative' may mean the next of kin of decedent, or executors, or administrators, according as the intention of the decedent is manifest in the will." In re Harton's Estate, 62 Atl. 1058, 1059, 213 Pa. 499, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939 (quoting and adopting definition in Appeal of Trustees of University of Pennsylvania, 97 Pa. 187).

Testator devised the residue of his estate in trust for his wife for life, remainder to the children of his sisters, the "heirs and representatives" of any such children who died between testator's decease and the time of distribution to be entitled to such share or shares as their respective ancestors would have been entitled to receive if living. Held, that the word "heirs" must be construed to mean the same persons as "representatives," and that both together should be construed to mean "next of kin." In re Nelson's Estate, 74 Atl. 851, 859, 9 Del. Ch. 1.

Purchaser

A purchaser from the mortgagor is the "representative" of the mortgagor for the purpose of redemption, within Ky. St. §§ 2364, 2365, defining the right of redemption, and authorizing a sale thereof, and such a purchaser, who files his affidavit and deed showing his title, and who moves for leave to redeem from a sale under a foreclosure decree, may appeal from an adverse ruling, under Civ. Code Prac. § 734, granting an appeal from a judgment, as a matter of right, to a party or privy thereto. Miller v. Wheeler, 143 S. W. 1028, 1030, 147 Ky. 131.

Widow

Under Ky. St. § 2364, providing that, if property sold on mortgage foreclosure does not bring two-thirds of its appraised value, defendant and his representatives may redeem within a year by paying the purchaser the original purchase money and 10 per cent. interest, the mortgagor's widow, who joined in the mortgage and was entitled to dower in the surplus proceeds on foreclosure sale, could redeem; she coming within the term "representatives." Hiller v. Nelson (Ky.) 118 S. W. 292, 293.

REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY

In a suit to establish title to real estate claimed under a sheriff's sale, where complainant paid the consideration for his own benefit, but took title in the name of his three sons, testimony as to conversations with one of the sons, since deceased, is not inadmissible, the suit being one in rem and not in personam, so that the representative of the deceased son defending the suit does not appear in a "representative capacity" within the meaning of the statute. Thomas v. Thomas, 81 Atl. 748, 749, 79 N. J. Eq. 461.

REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT

See, also, Republican Government.

"A 'representative form of government' is defined in the universal dictionary of the English language as one 'conducted and constituted by the agency of delegates or deputies, chosen by the people.'" This definition fairly expresses the modern American idea of representative government. A fraternal benefit association must have a representative form of government. This requires that the directors or other officers who have charge and control of the property and business of the society and the management of its affairs shall be chosen by the membership thereof. Lange v. Royal Highlanders, 106 N. W. 224, 226, 75 Neb. 188, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, 121 Am. St. Rep. 786 (following State v. Bankers' Union of the World, 99 N. W. 531, 71 Neb. 622).

REPRESENTATIVE OF VALUE

Other representative of value, see Other.

REPRIEVE

As proceeding, see Proceeding.

A "reprieve" is a respite by the Governor from a sentence of death. State v. Finch, 103 Pac. 505, 511, 54 Or. 482.

"At common law 'reprieves after judgment' were of three kinds: (1) At the pleasure of the crown; (2) in the discretion of the court; (3) of necessity—which latter was in the case of a woman convict alleging pregnancy when called for sentence." But the insanity of one in confinement awaiting execution under capital sentence cannot be tested under Act July 5, 1906, § 13 (P. L. p. 722), as it does not give the court the common-law power of "reprieve after judgment." In re Herron, 72 Atl. 133, 135, 77 N. J. Law, 315 (citing the definition in 12 Cyc. p. 790; 1 Chit. Cr. Law, 758).

Suspension distinguished

Acts 32d Leg. c. 44, is not unconstitutional in authorizing district courts to suspend sentences in certain cases as an invasion of the right to "reprieve" or grant "commutations of punishment" reserved to the Governor by Const. art. 4, § 11, as a "reprieve" postpones the execution of a sentence to a day certain, whereas a "suspension" is for an indefinite time, and a "commutation" is the changing of the punishment assessed to a less punishment. Snodgrass v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 162, 165, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1144 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6115, 6116).

REPRODUCTION

"Reproduction" is repetition or the act of reproducing, and carries with it the idea of a complete production over again. American Bonding Co. v. Ottumwa, 137 Fed. 572, 579, 70 C. C. A. 270 (citing Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, 112 Fed. 146-150, 50 C. C. A. 159, 163, 55 L. R. A. 692).

REPTILE

A conviction will not be reversed because the counsel for the state, in his argument to the jury, referred to defendant's conduct as showing "reptilian sagacity," since the remark amounted to no more than saying that defendant was as wise as a serpent. State v. Barrington, 95 S. W. 235, 257, 198 Mo. 23.

REPUBLIC

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT

See, also, Representative Government."

"A republican form of government is a government administered by representatives chosen or appointed by the people or by their authority. Mr. Madison says it is 'a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people, and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.'" Kadder- ly v. City of Portland, 74 Pac. 710, 719, 44 Or. 118.

A "republican form of Government" is one in which the people select those who are to make or direct their laws, and is radically different from a pure democracy, in which the people collectively, and as their own original act, make the laws. In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 270, 280, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911 (citing Webst. Dict.).

The term "republican," as used in the federal constitutional provision (article 4, § 4) guaranteeing to every state a republican form of government, means a government by the citizens en masse acting directly, though not personally, according to rules established by the majority. Kiernan v. City of Portland, 112 P. 402, 404, 57 Or. 454, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 339.

"A republican form of government," within the meaning of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 4, guaranteeing to the states a republican form of government, is a government by the people, through the representatives appointed by them to the various departments, executive, legislative, and judicial, as provided, either by direct vote or through some intervening officer or body by them selected and appointed by direct vote, for the purpose. Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 115 N. W. 177, 181, 137 Iowa, 452.

Recall

A recall provision in a city charter, vesting the powers of government in the people and constituting all inhabitants of the city a body politic, is not violative of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 4, guaranteeing to every state a "republican form of government," which merely means a government by the citizens in mass, acting directly, and not personally, according to the rules established by the majority. Bonner v. Belsterling, 138 S. W. 571, 574, 104 Tex. 432.

REPUBLISH

"Republication" of a revoked will signifies publishing or declaring again. A will revoked by a will of a later date is not revived upon the destruction of the later will, by the testator's oral declarations to revive it, but his intention must be expressed in writing sufficient to satisfy the statute. Danley v. Jefferson, 114 N. W. 470, 471, 150 Mich. 590, 121 Am. St. Rep. 640, 13 Ann. Cas. 242.

REPUDIATION

A "repudiation" of a contract is something said or done by a contracting party to indicate that he will not perform, or further perform, his contracts. It is an essential element of a repudiation that there be something still to be performed by the repudiating party in the future. Holden & Martin v. Gilfeather, 63 Atl. 144, 146, 78 Vt. 405.

A bare refusal to pay calls made on the stockholders of a corporation is no more a "repudiation" of the status of a shareholder than a refusal to pay what is due under a contract which can be rescinded is a rescission. Electric Welding Co. v. Prince, 81 N. E. 306, 310, 195 Mass. 242.

That a broker, under a contract to obtain insurance annually for his principal for ten years, demanded more compensation than he was entitled to in one year did not amount to a "repudiation" of the contract, or justify rescission by defendant; the broker not refusing to fulfill his contract unless the payment was made, his demand involving no hidden fraud or deceit, it being immaterial that his construction of the contract made defendant's insurance more expensive than he had expected, and the broker's demand not being violative of any confidential relation. Tanenbaum v. Federal Match Co., 81 N. E. 565, 566, 189 N. Y. 75.

Where a seller's traveling salesman took an order for flour to be filled by shipment of one car each month for five months from date of order, and the seller wrote the buyer on receipt of the order, thanking them for same, and complaining only of the length of time allowed to move the flour, the letter was not a "repudiation" of the sale. J. B. Brennan & Son v. Dansby, 95 S. W. 700, 702, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 7.

An allegation in a complaint that defendant abandoned the contract is equivalent to an allegation that the contract was repudiated, though technically "abandonment" is the relinquishment of a right, and "repudiation" the renunciation of a duty. Parker Land & Imp. Co. v. Ayres, 87 N. E. 1062, 1063, 43 Ind. App. 513.

A refusal to pay the amount due for a portrait painted under contract is a "repudiation" of the contract, authorizing suit without further offer of delivery. Scott v. Miller, 99 N. Y. Supp. 609, 611, 114 App. Div. 6.

REPUGNANCE

REPUGNANCY

"Repugnancy" consists in two inconsistent allegations, which destroy the effect of each other." An indictment for conspiracy to defraud by the use of the mails, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3696], as amended, is not bad for repugnancy because it charges in the same count that defendant conspired to defraud by dealing or pretending to deal in what are commonly called "green articles" and spurious treasury notes. Lehman v. United States, 127 Fed. 41, 45, 61 C. C. A. 577 (citing 10 Ency. Law, 565).

To vitiate a pleading for "repugnancy," the conflict must be irreconcilable. Town of Cameron v. Hicks, 64 S. E. 832, 833, 65 W. Va. 484, 17 Ann. Cas. 926.

If, where the sense of the language used in a pleading may be ambiguous, it is sufficiently marked by the context, or other means, in what sense it was intended to be used, no objection can be made on the ground of "repugnancy," which only exists where a sense is annexed to words which is either absolutely inconsistent therewith or, being apparently so, is not accompanied by anything to explain or define them. To vitiate a pleading on the ground of repugnancy, the conflict or inconsistency must be irreconcilable. Town of Cameron v. Hicks, 64 S. E. 832, 833, 65 W. Va. 484, 17 Ann. Cas. 926.

REPURCHASE

Where a mortgagee agreed, in consideration of the mortgagor conveying the property to him by deed absolute on its face, that the latter might "repurchase" it within a certain time at a certain price, the word "repurchase" was equivalent to the word "redeem." Day v. Davis, 61 Atl. 576, 578, 101 Md. 259.

REPUTE

See Good Repute.

REPUTABLE

A "reputable college," within the statute entitling graduates in pharmacy from any "reputable college" to a license, is one of whose character the public, having general acquaintance with the subject, entertain a good opinion. State ex rel. Mauldin v. Matthews, 62 S. E. 695, 697, 81 S. C. 414, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735, 128 Am. St. Rep. 919, 16 Ann. Cas. 182.

The meaning of the word "reputable," as used in Laws 1903, p. 664, c. 411, authorizing the board of dental examiners to recognize graduates' diplomas from reputable institutions, is "worthy of good repute"; it relates to real character, not to mere reputation in that regard. State ex rel. Milwaukee Medical College v. Chittenden, 107 N. W. 500, 522, 127 Wis. 468.

The term "reputable," as used in the statute providing for the registration of reputable resident physicians, was not limited to physicians and surgeons who were graduates of some reputable medical school, or are members of some incorporated medical society, but has reference merely to general character or some honorable work, and is satisfied in case the applicant is regarded as honorable and praiseworthy by reason of his worth and professional conduct. State v. Schmidt, 119 N. W. 647, 650, 138 Wis. 53.

"Regular" and "reputable" are not synonymous words. "Regular" is defined as conformed to or made in accordance with a rule; agreeable to an established rule, law, type, or principal, to a prescribed mode, or to established customary form. 'Reputable' is defined as being in good repute; held in esteem; estimable. Cent. Dict. A school or college may be regular (i. e., regularly incorporated) and not 'reputable.' Wise v. State Veterinary Board, 101 N. W. 562, 564, 138 Mich. 428.

The word "reputable," as used in a statute requiring an affidavit of a reputable person to certain facts, means one of good repute in the community, one held in esteem; and a person may be reputable, although he has committed an offense against the law. In re Consent to Sell Intoxicating Liquors in City of Oskaloosa, 134 N. W. 620, 623, 155 Iowa, 149.

The words "reputable persons" in the statute requiring that the signatures on a petition of general consent under the mulct law shall be verified by affidavits of "reputable persons" are not equivalent to the words "credible persons," and, where an objection to a petition is based on the fact that the persons making the verification had been convicted within a year of violations of the liquor laws, the court, in the absence of any evidence of subsequent engagement in lawful business by such persons, cannot consider such persons as reputable; the word "reputable" not being confined to a matter of reputation, but implying to some degree a character worthy of good repute, or entitled to the esteem of good citizens generally. Jackman v. Board of Sup'rs of Blackhawk County (Iowa) 137 N. W. 906, 910.

As applied to witnesses, the words "respectable" and "reputable" have practically the same meaning. Mr. Webster defines the term "respectable" as "worthy of respect; fitted to awaken esteem; deserving regard; hence of good repute; not mean; as a respectable citizen"—and the term "reputable" as "having or worthy of good repute; held in esteem; honorable; praiseworthy; as a reputable man or character." State v. Spivey, 90 S. W. 81, 87, 191 Mo. 87 (citing Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606).

REPUTABLE FREEHOLDERS

"A deed of lands made to a large number of persons for a single consideration, and merely for the purpose of qualifying them to sign recommendations for licenses, is fraudulent, and will not constitute them 'reputable freeholders.'" In re Cohn, 121 N. W. 107, 108, 84 Neb. 230 (quoting with approval from Black, Intox. Liq. § 161).

REPUTATION

See General Reputation.

"Reputation" is a sort of right to enjoy the good opinion of others, and is capable of growth and real existence, as an arm or leg.

An injury to reputation is an injury to the person, within Rev. Civ. Code, La. 1870, art. 2402, providing that damages for personal injuries to the wife are not community property, but her separate property. Times-Democrat Pub. Co. v. Mozee, 136 Fed. 761, 763, 69 C. C. A. 418 (quoting and adopting definition in Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 13 S. E. 250, 87 Ga. 79, 80).

"Reputation" is the general opinion or common knowledge of the community, being "a sort of right to enjoy the good opinion of others, and is as capable of growth and has as real an existence as an arm or leg. It is a personal right, and an injury to reputation (as by a libel) is a personal injury, within the meaning of statutes providing that injuries to a person shall not abate." Cohen v. New York Times Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 206, 208, 153 App. Div. 242 (quoting and adopting the definition in 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6118).

A sort of distinction is allowed between "hearsay" and "reputation." Yet "reputation" is nothing more than hearsay derived from those who had the means of knowing the fact, and may exist when those best acquainted with the fact are dead. Still it is a general rule that reputation is evidence as to general character as to the fact of legitimacy, relationship, pedigree, rights of common, rights of way, and all rights depending upon custom or prescription. Scott v. Blood, 16 Me. 192, 196.

As character

The word "character" has a dual meaning, and may refer to a person's private life, about which the public may have no knowledge, or may mean the character that a person enjoys by reputation; and in libel actions "character" is synonymous with "reputation." Lydlard v. Daily News Co. of Minneapolis, 124 N. W. 985, 987, 110 Minn. 140, 19 Ann. Cas. 985.

A person's "reputation" and "character" are not the same. Reputation as evidence may tend to prove character; but a man may in fact have a good character while suffering from a bad reputation. Curtice v. Dixon, 68 Atl. 587, 589, 74 N. H. 386 (citing Bottoms v. Kent, 48 N. C. 160).

Webster's International Dictionary defines "reputation" as "the estimation in which one is held; character in public opinion; the character attributed to a person, thing, or action; repute. (Law.) The character imputed to a person in the community in which he lives." Speaking of character and reputation, the same author quoting from Abbot, says: "It would be well if character and reputation were used distinctly. In truth, character is what a person is; reputation is what he is supposed to be. Character is in himself; reputation is in the minds of others. Character is injured by temptation and by wrongdoing; reputation by slander and libels. Character endures throughout defamation in every form, but perishes when there is a voluntary transgression; reputation may last through numerous transgressions, but be destroyed by a single, and even an unfounded, accusation or aspersion." Thus an instruction that, in determining the weight and credibility to be given to the testimony of any witness, the jury might take into consideration the "character" of the witness was proper, where each party contended that the testimony on behalf of the other party was unreliable. Harrison v. Lakenan, 88 S. W. 53, 54, 58, 189 Mo. 581 (citing State v. Gee, 85 Mo. 647; State v. Brooks, 5 S. W. 257, 330, 92 Mo. loc. cit. 557; State v. Harrod, 15 S. W. 373, 102 Mo. loc. cit. 598; State v. Hillsbeck, 34 S. W. 38, 132 Mo. loc. cit. 358; State v. Hudspeth, 60 S. W. 136, 159 Mo. loc. cit. 200).

The defendant, in a criminal action, was charged with larceny and was a material witness in his own behalf. At the trial the state attacked his "reputation" for truth and veracity. The defendant then called witnesses and offered to prove by them that they knew his "character" for truth and veracity, and that it was good. An objection was sustained to the testimony on the ground that his "reputation" and his "character" for truth and veracity was involved. Held that, inasmuch as the distinction between "reputation" and "character" is not commonly understood by witnesses, and the terms are frequently used without discrimination both by the courts and lawmakers, it was error to exclude the testimony. State v. Tawney, 99 Pac. 268, 78 Kan. 855.

The terms "character" and "reputation" are often used interchangeably. Where it is proper to show the character of a party, it was not error to permit witnesses to answer questions referring in direct terms to his character as a fighting, quarrelsome, and vindictive man, as well as questions inquiring what his general reputation was in respect to the qualities named, although the generally approved rule is to restrict such questions to general reputation. Spain v. Rakestraw, 101 Pac. 466, 79 Kan. 758 (citing State v. Tawney, 99 Pac. 268, 78 Kan. 855).

Under Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, 34 Stat. 596, providing that it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the person desiring citizenship has resided in the United States at least five years preceding his application and one year in the state, "and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same," an alien who is a saloon keeper, and has known for over two years that the state law requires the closing of saloons on Sunday, but has kept the back door of his saloon open on Sunday regularly, and who states that, if he should take an oath to support the United States Constitution and laws, he would continue to keep the back door of his saloon open on Sundays, should be denied citizenship, as the word "character," although frequently used as synonymous with "reputation," is what a person is, while reputation is what he is supposed to be, and one who is an habitual violator of the law is not a person of good moral character, and well disposed to the good order of the country. United States v. Hraskey, 88 N. E. 1031, 1033, 240 Ill. 560, 130 Am. St. Rep. 288, 16 Ann. Cas. 279 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1061-1063).

Strictly speaking, the words "reputation" and "character" are not synonymous. "Character" is what a man or woman is morally, while "reputation" is what he or she is reputed to be. "Reputation" is the estimate which the community has or expresses of a person's character; and, if the reputation is bad, this is treated as evidence where general character is involved. Moore v. Dozier, 57 S. E. 110, 113, 128 Ga. 90 (citing Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 212, 213).

"Character" signifies the reality, and 'reputation' merely what is reputed or understood from report to be the reality about a person or thing." Woodruff v. State, 101 N. W. 1114, 1118, 72 Neb. 815 (citing 6 Cyc. p. 892).

"Reputation" is the evidence of character, and character is not to be established by the opinions or conclusions of witnesses, nor by the personal knowledge of the witness, nor by particular acts or circumstances, but in the respect involved is proven by evidence of the general reputation which one bears in the locality where he resides as to that particular trait. State v. Simmons, 88 Pac. 57, 58, 74 Kan. 799.

Good general "reputation" for honesty, chastity, veracity, and like qualities is synonymous with "good character" as to those qualities, within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 268. The good character of a man is the estimation in which he is held in the community in which he resides. As stated in Anderson's Law Dictionary, the term "character" means: "The qualities impressed by nature or habit on a person, which distinguish him from other persons. These constitute his real character, while the qualities he is supposed to possess constitute his estimated character or 'reputation.'" Ex parte Vandiveer, 88 Pac. 994, 4 Cal. App. 650.

As general reputation

The word "reputation," when unqualified, means general reputation, and a question as to "the reputation for chastity" of the paramour of defendant in a prosecution for lewdness is proper in form. State v. Poyner, 107 Pac. 181, 182, 57 Wash. 489.

If an impeaching witness understands, when asked if he knows the "reputation" of the witness whose credibility is being attacked, that "reputation" means "general reputation" (i. e., what is generally said of him in the community where he lives), then the omission of "general" from the question will not make the question improper, and hence a question of omitting the word "general" was not objectionable, where the impeaching witness had been informed in effect that the term "reputation" meant "general reputation." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Garber, 111 S. W. 227, 229, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 70.

As popular estimation

A man's "reputation" consists in the esteem in which he is held by his fellow men. State v. O'Hagan, 63 Atl. 95, 96, 73 N. J. Law, 209.

"Reputation" is what people say of a man, whereas character is what he is. People v. Montgomery, 68 N. E. 258, 260, 176 N. Y. 219.

A man's "reputation" is the estimate in which others hold him, and not the opinion which he has of himself. Lyon v. Lash, 88 Pac. 262, 74 Kan. 745, 11 Ann. Cas. 424.

A witness, though not acquainted with accused, may testify as to his general character and reputation, where such testimony is based on what acquaintances of accused have said, "reputation" being the estimation in which others hold one, and this can only be made known or communicated by some expression, usually oral statements. McGuire v. State, 58 South. 60, 61, 3 Ala. App. 40.

"Reputation" is what is generally said of a person by the people of the community where he is known. And, when the subject of inquiry is a corporation, the same rule governs that controls in the introduction of evidence respecting the "reputation" of a natural person. State v. Brown, 93 Pac. 52, 53, 33 Utah, 109.

REPUTED CHARACTER

The "reputed character" of a person is the slow-spreading influence of opinion, arising out of the deportment of an individual in the society in which he moves, as distinguished from his real character, which is that impressed by nature, traits, or habits upon the person. Moore v. Dozier, 57 S. E. 110, 113, 128 Ga. 90 (citing Wright v. City of Crawfordville, 42 N. E. 227, 229, 142 Ind. 642; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6118).

REPUTED FATHER

The object of Code 1896, § 364, providing that the marriage of the mother and "reputed" father of a bastard renders it legitimate, if recognized by the father as his child, is to enable parents by marrying to clothe their offspring with legitimacy, and a publication before marriage of the parentage of the child is not required, but if the child is regarded by the parents themselves as their child, either before or after marriage, it is legitimate; the use of the word "reputed" being intended merely to dispense with absolute proof of paternity. McBride v. Sullivan, 45 South. 902, 904, 155 Ala. 166.

REPUTED HOUSE OF ILL FAME

In Gen. St. 1902, § 1316, as amended by Pub. Acts 1907, c. 122, which imposes a punishment upon any person "who shall keep a house which is, or is reputed to be, a house of ill fame, or which is resorted to, or is reputed to be resorted to, for the purposes of prostitution or lewdness," the word "reputed" is to be regarded as describing the real character of the place, and the offense is the keeping of a place whose reputation of being a place unlawful to keep is founded on fact; and so construed the statute is constitutional. Morse v. Brown, 78 Atl. 430, 431, 83 Conn. 550.

REPUTED OWNER

Where one entered into possession of land under a contract with the authorized sales agent of the owner, which contract was in effect one of purchase and sale, though containing a provision that it should not be considered a contract of sale, and held himself out as the owner and contracted for the erection of a building on the land, he was, as against the vendor, the "reputed owner" of the land within Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, giving a lien upon property for labor and material furnished with knowledge of the owner or the person having or claiming any interest in the property. National Lumber Co. v. Whalley, 121 Pac. 729, 730, 162 Cal. 224.

Whenever the word "owner" or "reputed owner" is used in the mechanic's lien statutes, it means the owner or reputed owner with whom the contract was made, and he is therefore the only necessary defendant under the statute. Carswell v. Patzowski (Del.) 55 Atl. 342, 343, 4 Pennewill, 403.

REQUEST

A "request" is the act of asking for anything desired; expression of desire. In re Kreiders' Estate, 61 Atl. 1115, 1116, 212 Pa. 587.

Under the law of England the word "request," when used in a will, may be construed to be mandatory or directory, depending on the intention of the testator as gathered from the will. McCurdy v. McCallum, 72 N. E. 75, 76, 186 Mass. 464.

A "request" from one in authority is understood to be a mere euphemism. It is in fact a command in an inoffensive form. State ex rel. Freeman v. Schere, 93 N. W. 169, 170, 65 Neb. 853, 59 L. R. A. 927.

Where a testator, in the bequest of his personal property, and in the devise of certain realty in remainder, and in the nomination of executors, employs the word "request" as expressive of will, purpose, and desire, and the will further "requests" that on the death of his wife all his real estate shall go to his heirs, the word "request," as last used, will be given the same meaning. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 64 N. E. 267, 268, 197 Ill. 144.

Where testator gave to his wife the residue of his real and personal estate, and requested that at her death she should by will bequeath at least two-thirds of what she received under his will to certain charities, the word "request" was used in the sense of "will" or "direct," and therefore rendered the request mandatory, and not precatory. Gilchrist v. Corliss, 118 N. W. 938, 940, 155 Mich. 126, 130 Am. St. Rep. 568.

Where a person is employed by the owner of a lot in a city to construct a sidewalk, and purchased materials which were used in its construction, the purchase will be considered as made at the "request" of the owner, within Comp. Laws 1897, § 2218, so as to entitle the materialman to a lien thereon. Houston-Hart Lumber Co. v. Neal, 113 Pac. 621, 16 N. M. 197.

Under a mortgage providing that, upon "request" of one-fourth of the bondholders in amount, the mortgagee might take possession and manage the property through receivers or sell it, there was a sufficient "request" for the bondholders to exercise the power of sale, where one-fourth of them in amount by written "request" instructed the trustee to declare the principal sum due and to proceed to a sale, referring in general terms to specified defaults, and specifically mentioning, as one of the grounds of the request, the mortgagor's insolvency. Union Trust Co. of Maryland v. Thomas, 66 Atl. 450, 457, 105 Md. 507.

Implied request

Where the witnesses to a will go to testatrix's house for the purpose of attesting her will, which was drawn up and executed by testatrix in their presence, and one of the witnesses heard her say that she wanted the will written, and testified that it was written and read to her, and the other witness held her up in bed for the purpose of having her affix her signature, and both witnesses testified that the will was executed in their presence and that they attested it at her request, it is sufficient to show a proper execution of the will, although both witnesses denied that testatrix requested them to sign. Hughes v. Rader, 82 S. W. 32, 51, 183 Mo. 630 (citing Schierbaum v. Schemme, 57 S. W. 526, 157 Mo. 1, 80 Am. St. Rep. 604).

As persuade

The words "hereby agree to request" in a covenant in a lease for years that on destruction of the buildings lessors would rebuild or repair with any money received from insurance held by mortgagees if they would permit and direct it to be so applied, which lessors "hereby agree to request and do hereby so request," were not equivalent to "hereby agree to endeavor to persuade." Putts v. Pendleton, 73 Atl. 900, 901, 111 Md. 280, 283.

Require equivalent

St. 1895, p. 273, c. 207, provides that for each day's actual attendance when legally "required" to attend on the superior court witnesses shall be entitled per day to $2 in civil cases, and may demand the payment of their mileage and fees for one day in advance, and, when so demanded, shall not be compelled to attend unless the sum shall have been paid, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1985, declares that a subpoena is a process by which the attendance of a witness is required. Held, that the word "required," was synonymous with "requested," meaning merely to give notice, and since the party making a request for the attendance of a witness is liable for the statutory fee, in case the witness attends, such party may tax costs for such attendance, though the witness was not subpoenaed. Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co., 99 Pac. 716, 718, 9 Cal. App. 434.

Trust or estate in fee created

The words "desire" and "request" do not import a trust, where testatrix devised certain real estate to her husband, and stated that it was her desire and request that he should convey the same to a lodge, so as to impose on it the duty to properly care for the cemetery lot in which she might be buried. They should be understood in their usual sense, in the absence of anything in the will to indicate that they were used in any other than their ordinary sense. Kauffman v. Gries, 74 Pac. 846, 848, 141 Cal. 295.

"The mere use in a will of the precatory words 'desire' and 'request' will not be sufficient to create an enforceable trust, or a power in the nature of a trust, when the context clearly shows that the testator's intention was contrary." A testator made a devise to an educational institution, and provided that, in case the devise should fail for any cause, the same should go to the children of his two brothers. In a codicil he authorized, empowered, and requested his daughter, his only lineal descendant, to ratify and confirm the devise to the institution, declaring that, in case she complied with the request, the gifts over should be revoked. The daughter executed the power by a deed to the institution, and the gift over was thereby revoked. Thomas v. Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, 70 N. E. 896, 899, 70 Ohio St. 92.

The words "desire," "request," "recommend," "hope," "not doubting" used by testator in a will to express his desire that the executor will conduct a fund in a specified manner, testator having power to command, will not be construed as precatory only, but as commands clothed in the language of civility, and to impose on the executor an enforceable duty, sufficient to create a trust. Trustees of Pembroke Academy v. Epsom School Dist., 75 Atl. 100, 101, 75 N. H. 408, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

Testatrix, domiciled in Nova Scotia, gave to her daughter-in-law $2,000, to be free from the control of husband and a son, and declared "I request" that she shall at her death give the same to her two daughters, and provided that the receipt of the daughter-in-law "shall be a sufficient discharge" to the executors. She devised real estate to a son, and specified sums to another son and a granddaughter absolutely. She made no provision as to the receipt of these legatees. She also made a bequest to two grandsons, and provided that if they, or either of them, should not have arrived at the age of 21 when the executors were ready to pay the legacies, the executors were authorized to accept the receipt of the parent of these legatees. Held, that by the law of Nova Scotia, which is the same as that of England, the daughter-in-law held the $2,000 with the right to use the income for life, and that the principal was charged with a trust in favor of her two daughters, the word "request" being mandatory. McCurdy v. McCallum, 72 N. E. 75, 76, 186 Mass. 464.

Language not imperative in form, but which appears to be imperative in its real meaning, as intended by a testator, will create a testamentary trust, while language used by way of suggestion, advice, etc., with a view to influence, but not to direct the discretion of the devisee, will not raise a trust. The word "request," in a will, "I therefore request" the devisee to pay to a third person such sums of money as may be requisite for her comfort, may properly be read as imperative so as to create a trust. Russell v. United States Trust Co., 127 Fed. 445, 447.

To "request" is not to empower, but to recognize that power to do the thing requested already resides of right in the one of whom the request is made. A devise of the residue of testator's property to his widow, to have the use and control of the same, with the right to use as much as she pleased for her comfort and pleasure, and, if there were anything left at her death, "it is my request that she give" to a church a parsonage, "and one-half of the residue to my heirs," gave the widow an estate in fee in the whole property, with the right to dispose of the same by will, subject only to the request above recited. Brown v. Eastman, 57 Atl. 96, 97, 72 N. H. 356.

In nearly all of the cases in which the effect of the word "request" has been discussed, it is stated that its precise meaning must depend on circumstances in which it is employed. Since Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 2737, provides that "every devise in terms denoting the testator's intention to devise his entire interest in all his real or personal property shall be construed to pass all the estate in such property," under a clause in a will that "I bequeath my entire estate, both real and personal, to my beloved wife," the wife acquired a fee-simple title in testator's real estate, though there was in a subsequent clause a "request that at the death of my wife my estate that I am now seised of be equally divided between my children." Snodgrass v. Brandenburg, 72 N. E. 1030, 1031, 164 Ind. 59.

REQUEST FOR DIRECTED VERDICT

A request to direct a verdict is not a request to charge, but is a motion to take the case from the jury, and the jury must render the verdict directed, and there is no occasion to charge as to the law. Smalley v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 98 Pac. 311, 318, 34 Utah, 423.

REQUIRE

See As is Required; Legally Required.

The word "require" means to demand; to ask as of right and by authority; to insist on having; to exact. Federal Lead Co. v. Swyers, 161 Fed. 687, 692, 88 C. C. A. 547.

"Require" means to make necessary, to ask as of right. Boyce v. Stringfellow, 114 S. W. 652, 654, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 504.

"Require" means to ask of right and by authority and is synonymous with demand. Anything is a "requirement" by a public officer which brings home to the person called upon that the officer is there officially and desires compliance. United States v. Armour & Co., 142 Fed. 808, 822.

Under a railroad mortgage to secure refunding bonds, providing that a certain amount thereof, or such less amount thereof as shall be necessary for that purpose, shall be reserved to be issued in exchange for, or to take up at maturity or before maturity, certain underlying bonds, and that any of such reserved refunding bonds which "shall no longer be required" to be reserved for such purpose may be issued for development of the road, they are "required" so long as any of the underlying bonds have not in some way been retired; the railroad company having no power to determine that they are not so required because the remaining outstanding underlying bonds, which it has made every reasonable effort, without success, to have retired, do not mature till after the refunding bonds. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, 99 N. E. 162, 163, 205 N. Y. 609.

As cause

In a petition alleging that defendant employed plaintiff and his wife to feed certain cattle, that the cattle were placed by defendant on the premises where plaintiff resided, and that the feeding "required" the services of plaintiff and his wife, the word "required" was not the synonym of "caused" or "occasioned"; yet the subsequent allegation "that the services of plaintiff and his wife and children so performed" indicates with reasonable fairness that such was the meaning of the pleader. Stapper v. Wolter (Tex.) 85 S. W. 850, 851.

As compel

Where, in an action for injuries to a servant while painting a roof, the court instructed the jury that if the master was guilty of negligence "in requiring plaintiff to go upon said ladders on the roof," etc., and there was evidence that plaintiff was told to go upon the roof, etc., but there was nothing to show that he was compelled to do so, the word "requiring" was used by the court in the sense of "directed," and could not have mislead the jury. Planters' Gin Co. v. Washington (Tex.) 132 S. W. 880, 881.

As demand or request

A contract for the sale of stone for the construction of a building according to specifications, which provides that the stone shall be delivered in such quantities as may be required, not to exceed a specified quantity per day, and that the seller shall continue the delivery of stone in the quantities required, executed on the theory that the seller should prepare the stone at his quarry and deliver it in varying dimensions, does not require the seller to deliver any stone except on demand specifying quantities and dimensions; the word "require" according to lexicographers and in common parlance meaning demand, or to ask as of right and by authority. Duhamel v. Port Angeles Stone Co., 109 Pac. 597, 599, 59 Wash. 171, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1229.

A party contracted to furnish all kinds of nuts and bolts and wrought-iron material in constructing a large building covering 22 acres, the contractor to furnish lists of "material required at least thirty days prior to the time" they required it. Held that, according to the reasonable intention of the parties and the natural meaning of the word "require," which imports a demand or request made authoritatively, the contract must be held to provide that the materialmen should have 30 days in which to manufacture or provide the materials prior to the time they should be needed, rather than that the submitting of a list should of itself require the delivery of the articles within 30 days, so that a failure to deliver within 30 days articles specified in a list submitted at the beginning of the work, which covered two-thirds of all the material, was not a breach. Moran Bolt & Nut Mfg. Co. v. Caldwell, 144 S. W. 472, 474, 240 Mo. 358.

The word "requires," as used in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 4003, providing that no sheriff, deputy sheriff, or coroner shall be liable for neglecting or refusing to serve any civil process unless his legal fees and indemnity bond, if he "requires" one, are first tendered to him, is equal to "demand," and a levying officer has the unqualified right to require an indemnifying bond in all cases where he is requested to seize and take into his possession personal property under a process placed in his hands for service. Canfield-Caulkins Implement Co. v. Cowden, 127 Pac. 216, 70 Wash. 587.

A contract for the purchase of stone provided that the vendor should furnish to the purchaser not less than 5,000 and no more than 8,000 cubic yards of stone, and that, if more than 5,000 were required, three weeks' notice should be given for the extra amount. The vendor sued for a breach of contract before 5,000 yards had been delivered. Held, that he could only recover damages for the difference between the stone furnished and the 5,000 yards referred to in the contract, there being no agreement that he should furnish the stone for any particular work, or for use in any particular place, nor allowing the vendor to furnish more than 5,000 yards without notice from the purchaser that more was required; the word "required" referring to the notice of requirement and not the necessity of having more stone to complete the job. Ready v. J. L. Fulton Co., 72 N. E. 317, 319, 179 N. Y. 399.

In a fire policy making the loss payable 60 days after its ascertainment, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required, the word "required" implies more than the existence of some fact making a thing necessary, and includes a request or demand as an element of the necessity. American Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., v. Rodenhouse, 128 Pac. 502, 504, 36 Okl. 211.

The word "required," as used in a policy of fire insurance, providing that no loss therein shall become payable until 60 days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss "herein required" have been received by the company, including the award by appraisal when appraisal has been "required," may mean not only "requested," or "demanded," but "made necessary," or "made an essential condition," as the term is defined in the Century Dictionary. Graham v. German American Ins. Co., 79 N. E. 931, 933, 75 Ohio St. 374, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055, 9 Ann. Cas. 79.

Rev. St. 1899, § 8822, providing that the owner, etc., of any mine shall keep a sufficient supply of timber, when required, to be used as props so that the workmen may at all times be able to properly secure the workings from caving in, and it shall be the duty of the owner, etc., to send down props when required, means that the mining company shall keep on hand a sufficient supply of props so that, when a miner requests them, it shall send them down without unnecessary delay to enable him to prop his room; and the word "required" does not mean when needed, so as to impose upon the master the duty of sending down the timbers without any demand or request from the employé. Wojtylak v. Kansas & T. Coal Co., 87 S. W. 506, 517, 188 Mo. 260; McKinnon v. Western Coal & Mining Co., 96 S. W. 485, 488, 120 Mo. App. 148.

St. 1895, p. 273, c. 207, provides that for each day's actual attendance when legally "required" to attend on the superior court witnesses shall be entitled per day to $2 in civil cases, and may demand the payment of their mileage and fees for one day in advance, and, when so demanded, shall not be compelled to attend unless the sum shall have been paid, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1985, declares that a subpoena is a process by which the attendance of a witness is required. Held, that the word "required," was synonymous with "requested," meaning merely to give notice, and since the party making a request for the attendance of a witness is liable for the statutory fee, in case the witness attends, such party may tax costs for such attendance, though the witness was not subpoenaed. Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co., 90 Pac. 716, 718, 9 Cal. App. 434.

Discretion implied

The word "required," as used in Acts Md. 1898, c. 123, § 758, by which the police commissioners are "required" to make a detail of policemen for park service, is directory merely, and does not create an imperative absolute duty, admitting of no discretion. Upshur v. City of Baltimore, 51 Atl. 953, 958, 94 Md. 743.

The word "required," as used in an act providing that the municipal authorities in cities of 5,000 inhabitants or more are "hereby authorized, empowered, and 'required'" to adopt such ordinances as would be necessary to prevent stock running at large, is equivalent to "commanded," and is mandatory on the municipal authorities of the cities and towns to which it applies. There is no discretion left with those governing bodies as to the passage of such ordinances, and, without a violation of municipal duty, they cannot forego the discharge of the obligation. The duty is entirely ministerial, and mandamus is the proper remedy to compel adoption of such ordinances. Huey v. Waldrop, 37 South. 380, 381, 141 Ala. 318.

When, after the filing of a libel against a vessel and giving the stipulation to answer judgment, the claimant and owner of the vessel dies, and the answer is put in by the administrator of his estate, the rule with regard to exclusion of parties in interest (U. S. Rev. St. § 858, which contains an exception in favor of parties called to testify to transactions with the deceased by the opposite party or "required" to testify thereto by the court) applies as if the case were an ordinary common-law action brought against the administrator; and in such case the surviving party is not entitled, as a matter of right, to testify as to transactions with the deceased; but, when the court can see that justice demands that he should be sworn, it is within its discretion to permit his testimony to be given. The Poland, 19 Fed. Cas. 908, 909.

As fairly reasonably required

The word "require," as used in the phrase "such as the said party of the second part may require for its own purposes," etc., in a municipal electric lighting contract, refers to such a reasonable amount as the reasonable exigencies of the municipal service might call for. Albany Power & Mfg. Co. v. City of Albany, 65 S. E. 886, 890, 133 Ga. 375.

A contract between a promoter of a proposed railroad and certain subscribers provided that the promoter would cause the railroad company to be organized, and that the company would build a line to A., where it would connect with two specified railroads. The subscribers agreed to procure a right of way, depot grounds, etc., at their expense, according to a proposition of a general solicitor attached to the contract, and which contained a provision to "give the company whatever right of way, depot grounds, etc., it may 'require' at A." Held, in view of the object to be attained—the connection with the other railroads—all that the company could "require" of the subscribers were right of way, depot grounds, etc., reasonably necessary to accomplish the connection, and it was not entitled to a right of way through the town beyond the point of connection required by the road for an ultimate extension in that direction. Boyce v. Stringfellow, 114 S. W. 652, 654, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 504.

Intention to allow no fee indicated

The word "required," as used in Laws 1891, p. 126, c. 109, authorizing the issuance of child labor permits by the county judge, and providing that "no charge or fee shall be required" by him, indicates a legislative intent to make such permits free to the applicants, and the statute does not prevent him from recovering from the county the per diem compensation allowed by St. 1898, § 2454, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 81, c. 45, as for the time actually engaged in matters not appertaining to probate business, and as Laws 1895, p. 493, c. 249, conferring civil jurisdiction on the county judge of Lincoln county, saves him the right to the per diem compensation allowed by section 2454, he is entitled to such compensation from the county for time actually engaged in passing on applications for such permits. Hoffman v. Lincoln County, 118 N. W. 850, 852, 137 Wis. 353.

As necessary

The word "necessary" or "required," as used in connection with expenses of the government, does not mean those expenses which are absolutely indispensable and without which government could not be maintained, but it imports no more than that one thing is convenient or essential to another, and the choice of what may be so convenient, useful, or essential is necessarily left to the Legislature and cannot be reviewed by the courts. State ex rel. Lucero v. Marron, 128 Pac. 485, 490, 17 N. M. 304.

The word "required," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 1321, providing a penalty for Sabbath working, except "work required" in maintaining or operating railroads, etc., means that which is necessary, and does not refer to work which may as well be done on other days. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 108 S. W. 851, 852, 128 Ky. 542.

Where a will provides that the widow may draw from the estate all the money required for her support and maintenance, the word "require" does not mean an amount needed or necessary for such purpose, but includes such sums as she may wish to use for such purpose. Blair v. Blair, 108 Pac. 827, 828, 82 Kan. 464.

A request for bids for coal for a city asked for coal to be delivered "as needed" and also as fast as "required." The bids offered to deliver at such times and in such quantities as the city might direct, and the body of the contract stated in one place that the coal should be delivered promptly "as ordered," and in another, that on failure to make delivery "as ordered," the city might either forfeit the contract or buy coal at the contractor's expense in the open market. Held, that the words "order" and "direct" should be construed as synonymous with the word "require," and that the word "require" was used as the substantial equivalent of "need." McLean County Coal Co. v. City of Bloomington, 84 N. E. 624, 627, 234 Ill. 90.

Where a contract for the sale of coal requires the sellers to deliver as "required," and the parties construe it as meaning that it is to be delivered as "needed," such construction will be adopted in litigation as to the meaning. W. H. Purcell Co. v. Sage, 65 N. E. 723, 725, 200 Ill. 342.

The word "required," as used in the provision of the Constitution, as to appropriations for expenses required by law, means "to have need or necessity for." State ex rel. Lucero v. Marron, 128 Pac. 485, 490, 17 N. M. 304.

Prohibit equivalent

The mandate of New York Laws 1897, c. 415, § 110, providing that no employé shall be "required or permitted" to work in a bakery more than 60 hours in any one week, is the substantial equivalent of an enactment that "no employé shall contract or agree to work" more than 10 hours per day; there being no real distinction between the words "require" and "permit." The law is unconstitutional as interfering with freedom of contract. Lochner v. New York, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 541, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. Ed. 937, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.

Record or registry as required by law

A state statute, which "requires" a conveyance or transfer to be recorded in order to be effectual against any class or classes of persons, is a law by which such recording is "required," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 790, which defines preference given by a debtor within four months prior to his bankruptcy, and provides that, "where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is "required." Loeser v. Savings Deposit Bank & Trust Co., 148 Fed. 975, 979, 78 C. C. A. 597, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1233. Contra, In re Chadwick, 140 Fed. 674, 678. In this provision of the Bankruptcy Act the word "required" has reference to the character of the instrument of transfer required to be recorded by the state law, rather than to the particular individuals who by reason of adventitious circumstances may or may not be affected by an unrecorded instrument. The purpose and effect of such amendment was to change the rule applied to the original and prior acts, under which, not only the requirement of recording, but the effect of a failure to record were controlled by the state law, by making instruments of transfer required by the state law to be recorded, in the sense in which such phrase is ordinarily used, speak from the date of recording, and not the date of execution, upon the question of voidable preferences. First Nat. Bank v. Connett, 142 Fed. 33, 36, 73 C. C. A. 219, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148. The word "required," found in the phrase, "the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required," of the amendment of section 60a, Bankruptcy Act, has reference to the character of the instrument of transfer required to be recorded by the state law rather than to the particular individuals who, by reason of adventitious circumstances, may or may not be affected by an unrecorded agreement. In re Reynolds, 153 Fed. 295, 300. By the Ohio statute, providing that unrecorded deeds, as to bona fide purchasers for value without knowledge, are void, record of deed is "required," within this provision of the Bankruptcy Act. Ragan v. Donovan, 189 Fed. 138, 144. And so, by the Nebraska statute, providing that every chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by continued change of possession, shall be absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor, and as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, "unless it or a copy is filed with the county clerk for registration, the registration of a mortgage is "required," within the Bankruptcy Act. Mattley v. Giesler, 187 Fed. 970, 972, 110 C. C. A. 90. Under this provision of the Bankruptcy Act, a mortgage of property in New York, which is not required by the laws of the state to be recorded to be valid, except as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith, for value, takes effect, for the purpose of computing the four months' period, at once on its execution, without reference to its recording, and, if executed more than four months prior to the bankruptcy of the mortgagor, does not constitute a preference, and creates a valid lien, in the absence of proof that it was withheld from record pursuant to agreement for the purpose of defeating the provisions of the bankruptcy law, or that other persons were thereby induced to extend credit to the mortgagor or forego their legal rights. The word "required," in this provision, does not mean the same as "permitted," or the same as the words "required in any case, or for any purpose." In re Hunt, 139 Fed. 283, 286.

Service requiring presence

A yard foreman of a railway company, in the discharge of whose duties it was customary and necessary for him to ride on a yard engine, and whose position on the step of the engine, at the time he was thrown therefrom, was the usual and proper place for him to be, is an employé engaged in service "requiring" his presence on an engine, within Const. § 162 (Va. Code 1904, p. cclix), abolishing, as to such an employé, the doctrine of fellow servant, so far as it affects the employer's liability for injuries to the employé resulting from another employé's acts or omissions, and authorizing a recovery for injury due to the act or omission of a co-employé in another department or in charge of a switch, signal point, or engine; that section not being limited to an employé actually engaged in the operation of the engine, but extending to others present in the reasonable and proper discharge of their duties. Southern Ry. Co. v. Smith, 59 S. E. 372, 373, 107 Va. 353.

REQUIRED BY LAW

See Business Required by Law.

See, also, Law.

The expression "required by law," employed in a statute, refers to statutory law. People v. Knapp, 132 N. Y. Supp. 747, 750, 147 App. Div. 436.

In Ky. St. § 3098, as amended and reenacted by Acts 1910, c. 107, providing that when, in any city of the second class having a street railway, the railway company is required by law or its franchise, or by any contract with the city, to pave any part of a street or alley, the cost shall be assessed against the company, the term "required by law" applies where the general council passes an ordinance making the requirement, and such a requirement by ordinance is authorized by the act. City of Newport v. Silva, 137 S. W. 546, 549, 144 Ky. 450.

REQUIREMENT

The word "requirements," as used in a policy of fire insurance providing that no action should be maintained on the policy "until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing 'requirements,'" may mean "essential conditions" or "things made necessary," according to the definition of the word in the Century Dictionary. Graham v. German American Ins. Co., 79 N. E. 932, 933, 75 Ohio St. 374, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055, 9 Ann. Cas. 79.

Where a party agrees to purchase certain goods for his "requirements," he thereby contracts to purchase what he shall need in the regular course of his business, and not merely what he may choose to order. Russell, Burdsall & Ward v. Excelsior Stove & Mfg. Co., 120 Ill. App. 23, 33.

The words "requirements of this section," in Local Improvement Act, § 41 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 24, § 547), requiring the filing, before final hearing of the correctness of assessments for a local improvement, of an affidavit "showing a compliance with the requirements of this section," refer only to the giving of the notices provided for in the section; and an affidavit in the language of the section, made by the proper person, is sufficient, though it does not show a compliance with sections 39 and 40 of the act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, c. 24, §§ 545, 546). Howe v. City of Chicago, 79 N. E. 421, 422, 224 Ill. 95.

The statute of Nebraska (Comp. St. 1909, c. 32, § 3647) providing that every chattel mortgage not accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by continued change of possession "shall be absolutely void as against the creditors of the mortgagor, and as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith," unless it or a copy is filed with the county clerk for registration, is a "requirement of registration," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 60a, 30 Stat. 562, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 13, 32 Stat. 799. Mattley v. Giesler, 187 Fed. 970, 972, 110 C. C. A. 90.

REQUISITE

REQUISITE BOND

The "requisite bond," named in Rev. St. c. 6, § 125, is not such a bond as the assessors may require, but is such as is required by section 128, providing that the assessor shall require the constable or collector to give bond for the faithful discharge of his duty to the residents of the town, with such sureties as the municipal officers approve. Smith v. Randlette, 56 Atl. 199, 200, 98 Me. 88.

REQUISITE MAJORITY

As used in a constitutional provision that, whenever the requisite majority of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals sitting are unable to agree upon a decision, the case shall be reheard by a full bench, the words "requisite majority" means that the assent of at least three of the judges shall be required to determine that any law is or is not repugnant to the Constitution. Funkhouser v. Spahr, 46 S. E. 378, 379, 102 Va. 306.

REQUISITE NOTICE

The term "requisite notice," in a statute authorizing a notary to give requisite notice or notices on protest of notes, means that he should give such notice or notices as are necessary to charge all the parties who are sought to be made liable on the paper and whose liability is dependent upon notice. Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41, 54.

RES

RES ADJUDICATA

See, also, Final Decree or Judgment; Former Adjudication; Law of the Case; Matter in Issue.

"Res judicata" is a thing adjudged. First Nat. Bank of Covington v. City of Covington, 129 Fed. 792, 794.

The rule of "res judicata" is based upon the idea that there should be an end of litigation, as well as upon the maxim that one should not be twice vexed for the same cause. Ludwick v. Penny, 73 S. E. 228, 231, 158 N. C. 104.

The doctrine of "res judicata" is not a mere rule of procedure, but a rule of justice unlimited in operation, which must be enforced whenever its enforcement is necessary for the protection of rights and preservation of the repose of society, based upon the grounds that there should be an end to litigation, and that a person should not be twice vexed for the same cause. In re Walsh's Estate, 74 Atl. 563, 565, 80 N. J. Eq. 565.

The doctrine of "res judicata" is that a question once determined by a judgment on the merits is forever settled so far as the litigants and those in privity with them are concerned. Herpolsheimer v. Acme Harvester Co., 119 N. W. 30, 32, 83 Neb. 53.

The term "res judicata" means that a question which is once decided is, in the absence of fraud, collusion, or review, finally decided as between the parties to the action and their privies. State ex rel. Forgue v.

Superior Court of Lewis County, 127 Pac. 313, 315, 70 Wash. 670.

"The doctrine of 'res adjudicata,' or estoppel by reason of a former judgment, rests upon the principal that a cause of action which has been once determined upon its merits by a competent tribunal, between parties over whom that tribunal had jurisdiction, cannot afterward be litigated by them in another proceeding, either in the same or a different tribunal, and it is immaterial whether such cause of action is of equitable or of legal cognizance, or whether the judgment was given in a common-law court or was rendered by a court of equity. * * * But, if the judgment in either tribunal is rendered for a reason or upon a ground not involving the merits of the controversy, no such effect can result." Shively v. Eureka Tellurium Gold Min. Co., 89 Pac. 1073, 1075, 5 Cal. App. 236 (quoting City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 50 Pac. 277, 118 Cal. 160, and citing Pyle v. Piercy, 55 Pac. 141, 122 Cal. 383; South San Bernardino Land & Improvement Co. v. South San Bernardino Nat. Bank, 59 Pac. 699, 127 Cal. 245; Beronio v. Ventura County Lumber Co., 61 Pac. 958, 129 Cal. 232, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118; Freeman v. Barnum, 63 Pac. 691, 131 Cal. 387, 82 Am. St. Rep. 355; Moore v. Russell, 65 Pac. 624, 133 Cal. 297, 85 Am. St. Rep. 166).

The well-nigh universal rule is that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, whether it be a court of record or not, upon a point litigated between the parties, is conclusive in all subsequent controversies directly involving the same question. It makes no difference whether that adjudication was in a proceeding according to the course of the common law, or summary in its character. It is quite enough that the question in controversy was submitted to a judicial officer, to be determined in a judicial way; that the parties and their proofs were heard, and their rights settled by a judicial determination. State v. Corron, 62 Atl. 1044, 1051, 73 N. H. 434, 6 Ann. Cas. 486 (quoting and adopting definition in Marsteller v. Marsteller, 19 Atl. 344, 132 Pac. 517, 19 Am. St. Rep. 604).

There are two deductions that may be made as to the rule of "res judicata" from the cases: First, that the judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another court; secondly, that the judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction directly upon the point is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose, but neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment. Baumhoff v. St. Louis & K. R. Co., 104 S. W. 5, 10, 205 Mo. 248, 120 Am. St. Rep. 745.

"When a tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties has once decided a question, it is 'res adjudicata' between those parties and cannot be relitigated in an original proceeding before another tribunal." State ex rel. Roberts v. Lawrence, 92 Pac. 1131, 1133, 76 Kan. 940 (quoting and adopting definition in Norton v. Graham, 7 Kan. 166 [syl. 2]).

The term "res adjudicata" signifies that a judgment is final and conclusive between the parties when rendered on a verdict on the merits, not only as to the facts actually litigated and decided, but upon all facts which were necessarily involved in the issue. Nelson Bennet Co. v. Twin Falls Land & Water Co., 92 Pac. 980, 987, 13 Idaho, 767 (citing Cummings v. McGehee, 9 Port. [Ala.] 349).

"The doctrine of 'res adjudicata,' which accords with substantial justice, forbids the bringing of several vexatious lawsuits upon issues which might have been litigated in a single one. * * * The tendency of courts is to require a party who brings a matter into litigation to present his entire case and all of the evidence then available, and also to regard a judgment in the case as conclusive between the same parties upon all things essentially connected with the subject-matter of the litigation, and which the parties might have had decided." A recovery for a part of goods wrongfully taken is a bar to a later action between the same parties to recover for the remainder of the same stock of goods, although taken and sold under another attachment, which had been levied before the first action was brought. Burdge v. Kelchner, 66 Kan. 642, 72 Pac. 232, 233 (citing and adopting Bolen Coal Co. v. Whittaker Brick Co., 35 Pac. 810, 52 Kan. 747; Whitaker v. Hawley, 1 Pac. 508, 30 Kan. 317; Hoisington, Sheriff, v. Brakey, 3 Pac. 353, 31 Kan. 560; Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Beebe, 18 Pac. 502, 39 Kan. 465; Shepard v. Stockham, 25 Pac. 559, 45 Kan. 244; Ellis v. Crowl, 26 Pac. 454, 46 Kan. 100).

If a trial court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties to a suit, its decree, even if erroneous, is binding alike upon all of them. "In the application of the principle of 'res judicata,' there is no difference between courts of law and courts of equity. When an issue of fact or of law has been adjudicated upon the merits in either tribunal it cannot be again litigated in another." The foreclosure of a mortgage for the interest only on the principal debt secured thereby, where the whole debt, both principal and interest, is due and payable at the time of such foreclosure, ordinarily exhausts the lien of the mortgage, and is a bar to a second foreclosure suit. But where the decree in such former suit specifically provides that it is subject to the mortgage lien for the principal debt, and that the sale shall be made subject thereto as a first lien, the parties to the record are estopped to plead the decree as a bar to a second foreclosure to obtain the payment of said principal sum. After a judgment or decree in rem, a party to the record, who is duly served with process, and appears personally therein, is estopped from asserting any claim or defense contrary to the terms of the decree. Nebraska Loan & Trust Co. v. Doman, 93 N. W. 1022, 1024, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 334 (citing and adopting 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 517, 518).

The "right, question, or fact," which when put in issue and determined, to become the subject of the rule of "res judicata," must be a question of fact, as distinguished from an abstract proposition of law; and the determination must be with reference to such question or questions of fact or a mixed question of fact and law or a legal deduction arising from a state of facts common to both actions; as for example, a decision construing, as a matter of law, an agreement is binding between the parties and their privies, where the same instrument is urged as a ground of recovery or defense in a subsequent suit on a different cause of action. State ex rel. Kennedy v. Broatch, 94 N. W. 1016, 1020, 68 Neb. 687, 110 Am. St. Rep. 477.

"A 'judgment' rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, determining the rights of the litigants on a cause of action or defense, is an effectual bar against future litigation over the same right determined by such judgment." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cass County, 101 N. W. 11, 12, 72 Neb. 489, 117 Am. St. Rep. 806 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Kennedy v. Broatch, 94 N. W. 1016, 68 Neb. 687, 110 Am. St. Rep. 477).

As requiring decision on merits

To constitute "res judicata" the adjudication must be on the merits. Armstrong v. County of Manatee, 37 South. 938, 49 Fla. 273; Robb v. New York & C. Gas Coal Co., 65 Atl. 938, 940, 216 Pa. 418.

The doctrine of "res judicata" is that a question once determined by a judgment on the merits is forever settled so far as the litigants and those in privity with them are concerned. Herpolshelmer v. Acme Harvester Co., 119 N. W. 30, 32, 83 Neb. 53.

Where a so-called judgment roll of the Municipal Court contains no testimony taken upon the trial, and the only evidence of any judgment having been entered was a statement: "As the proof stands, and upon the testimony before me, the plaintiff cannot succeed. Judgment for defendant"—the judgment was not shown to be on the merits, so as to be conclusive, since the only way it can be determined whether or not a judgment of the Municipal Court is upon the merits is by an inspection of the minutes of the testimony taken. Mossler Co. v. Cesare, 119 N. Y. Supp. 274, 275, 65 Misc. Rep. 40.

"A general judgment or decree of dismissal, without more, renders all the issues in the case 'res adjudicata' and constitutes a bar to any subsequent suit for the same cause of action. Hence when a court dismisses a suit upon some ground which does not go to the merits of the cause of action, but leaves them open to consideration in another court, or at another time, or in another way, the decree of dismissal must expressly adjudge that it is rendered for the specific reason upon which it is based or must expressly provide that it is made without prejudice." Fowler v. Osgood, 141 Fed. 20, 24, 72 C. O. A. 270, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824 (citing Indian Land & Trust Co. v. Shoenfelt, 135 Fed. 484, 487, 68 C. C. A. 196; United States v. Pine River Logging & Improvement Co., 78 Fed. 319, 325, 24 C. C. A. 101, 107; Speer v. Board of Commissioners, 88 Fed. 749, 752, 32 C. C. A. 101, 105; Mitchell v. Dowell, 105 U. S. 430, 26 L. Ed. 1142; Cecil National Bank v. Thurber, 59 Fed. 913, 914, 8 C. C. A. 365, 367; Russell v. Clark, 7 Cranch, 69, 90, 3 L. Ed. 271; Hooven, Owens & Rentschler Co. v. John Featherstone's Sons, 49 C. C. A. 229, 233, 111 Fed. 81, 85; House v. Mullen, 22 Wall. 42, 46, 22 L. Ed. 838).

Necessary elements

"In order to make a matter 'res judicata' there must be the concurrence of the four conditions following: (1) Identity in the thing sued for; (2) identity of the cause of action; (3) identity of persons and the parties to the action; (4) identity of the quality in the person for or against whom the claim is made." Turner Tp. v. Williams, 97 N. W. 842, 843, 17 S. D. 548 (quoting Bouv. Dict.); State v. Kaemmerling, 111 Pac. 443, 83 Kan. 383; Creegan v. Hyman, 46 South. 952, 954, 93 Miss. 481; Seigfried v. Boyd, 85 Atl. 72, 73, 237 Pa. 55; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Fisher, 50 South. 504, 507, 58 Fla. 377.

To constitute a former judgment a bar or estoppel in a pending action, there must exist in the two cases identity of subject-matter, of cause of action, of persons and parties, and of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made. Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n, 58 Atl. 963, 964, 77 Conn. 281.

A matter is not res adjudicata unless there be identity of the thing sued for, of the cause of action, of the persons and parties, the quality of the persons for and against whom the claim is made, and the judgment in the former action be so in point as to control the issue in the pending one. Hoffmeyer v. Trost, 85 Atl. 221, 222, 83 N. J. Law, 358.

The rule of "res adjudicata" is confined to those cases where the parties to the two suits are the same, the subject-matter the same, the point directly in issue is identical, and the judgment has been rendered in the first suit on that point. Ryan v. Young, 41 South. 954, 957, 147 Ala. 660 (citing McCall v. Jones, 72 Ala. 368; Gilbreath v. Jones, 66 Ala. 129; Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Robertson, 34 South. 933, 136 Ala. 379).

A judgment is not "res adjudicata," unless the identical matter in issue in the subsequent proceeding was determined by the former adjudication. Murphy Chair Co. v. American Radiator Co., 137 N. W. 791, 795, 172 Mich. 14.

To constitute estoppel, the judgment pleaded in bar must be a valid judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction, and these facts must be shown to justify the reception in evidence of such judgment. Page v. Garver, 90 Pac. 481, 482, 5 Cal. App. 383.

The basis upon which an adjudication bars a further action is that the same question was actually and directly in issue, and judicially determined in a former suit between the same parties or their privies. Keane v. Pittsburg Lead Min. Co., 105 Pac. 60, 65, 17 Idaho, 179.

The test of the identity of causes of action to determine the question of res judicata is the identity of the facts essential to the maintenance of the action, and, if there is any uncertainty, the burden of showing the same is on the party claiming the benefit of the former judgment. Prall v. Prall, 50 South. 867, 870, 58 Fla. 496, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577.

"The doctrine of 'res judicata' does not rest upon the fact that a particular proposition has been affirmed and denied in the pleading, but upon the fact that it has been fully and fairly investigated and tried; that the parties have had an adequate opportunity to say and prove all that they can in relation to it; that the minds of the court and jury have been brought to bear on it, and so it has been solemnly and finally adjudicated. These conditions are fully met with when any question, though foreign to the original issue, becomes the decisive question." For these reasons the correct doctrine is that the estoppel covers the point which was actually litigated, and which actually determined the verdict, whether it was technically in issue or not. Gulling v. Washoe County Bank, 89 Pac. 25, 26, 29 Nev. 257.

"The essential conditions upon which the plea of 'res judicata' becomes applicable are the identity of the thing demanded, the identity of the cause of demand, and of the parties in the character in which they are litigants." "It is for the public good that there be an end to litigation; and, if there be any one principal of law settled beyond all question, it is this: That whenever a cause of action, in the language of the law, 'transit in rem judicatum,' and the judgment thereupon remains in full force and unreversed, the original cause of action is merged and gone forever. A plea of 'res judicata' must show either an actual merger, or that the same point has already been decided between the same parties; that the plaintiff had an opportunity of recovering, and but for his own fault might have recovered in the original suit, that which he seeks to recover in the second action." A judgment in favor of a city, in an action by a wife in her own right for personal injuries sustained in consequence of a defective sidewalk, is not res judicata in an action by the husband against the city for damages to him by reason of such injuries. Womach v. City of St. Joseph, 100 S. W. 443, 445, 201 Mo. 467, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140 (quoting and adopting definition in Herm. Estop. §§ 100, 102).

"Res judicata" is the decision of the court upon a contested matter between parties. When a judgment or decree is rendered by consent, or is the result of a compromise, it cannot be admitted as "res judicata." Where a judgment in a suit for maintenance, brought by a wife against her husband in another state, was entered on stipulation, and recited that the stipulation admitted that the separation was without any fault on the part of the wife, and such judgment would not have estopped the husband, in the state where it was rendered, to recontest the question of the wife's desertion in another suit, it could not have such effect in a suit for divorce brought by the husband in California on the ground of desertion. Harding v. Harding, 74 Pac. 284, 286, 140 Cal. 600 (citing Wadhams v. Gay, 73 Ill. 417).

The essence of estoppel by judgment is that some right, question, or fact in dispute between parties has been judicially determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, and, where such judgment is pleaded in bar of a subsequent action, the question for determination is whether such question has been so determined between the same parties and their privies, and not upon what evidence it was determined or the reason therefor. Fitch v. Stanton Tp., 190 Fed. 310, 314, 111 C. C. A. 210.

A judgment in a suit to recover land against the tenant in possession, by a party claiming through the purchaser at a sale under a deed in trust given to secure notes given as part of the purchase price, adjudging the plaintiff entitled to a half interest in the land, and that the other half belonged to the administrator and heirs of the wife of the purchaser who executed the notes and trust deed, she having purchased a half interest in the land prior to her death, was res judicata in an action by the administrator of the wife and her minor son against the plaintiff in the former action to recover a half interest in the land and for partition, since the action was for the same land, between the same parties or their privies, and involved the same facts as in the second case. Whitmire v. Powell, 125 S. W. 889, 890, 103 Tex. 232.

"In order to constitute 'estoppel by judgment,' the same matter must have been in issue in the former suit, and the precise fact determined by the former judgment." A judgment of the probate court, in which it was found that more than six years had intervened between the time the cause of action presented by a claimant arose and the time set for the hearing of said claim, disallowing the claim for that reason, is not a finding that the debt was barred on the date the foreclosure action was begun, and hence is no bar to that action. Hickey v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n, 85 Pac. 838, 36 Colo. 386.

Matters included

"The doctrine of estoppel (that is, the conclusiveness of a former judgment) is restricted to facts directly in issue, and does not extend to facts which rest in evidence and are merely collateral." People v. Albers, 100 N. W. 908, 910, 137 Mich. 678 (quoting Freem. Judgm. § 257).

As a general rule, an "estoppel by judgment" resides in the judgment itself, and not in the reason for rendering it, and when the decree is definite and certain the opinion of the court cannot be used to show what matters were considered or determined. Gentry v. Pacific Live Stock Co., 77 Pac. 115, 117, 45 Or. 233.

As a general rule a judgment in a former action is not conclusive of any matters which only come collaterally in issue, nor of any matters incidentally cognizable, nor of any collateral facts offered in evidence to establish facts in issue. Ahlers v. Smiley, 104 Pac. 997, 998, 11 Cal. App. 343.

The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of law or fact, or of mixed law and fact, once litigated and determined, is, so long as it remains unreversed, conclusive upon the parties and their privies not only as to the particular property involved in the suit, but as to all future litigation between the same parties or their privies, touching the subject-matter, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose, and though the property involved in the subsequent litigation be different from that which was involved in the first, if there be substantial identity in the subject-matter of the two suits. Where the second action is upon a different claim but between the same parties, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted upon the determination of which the findings or verdict was rendered. Where, in an action by legatees against an executrix to set aside her assignments of mortgages and stock, she claimed that testatrix had given her the mortgages in consideration of her furnishing testatrix a home for life, but offered proof only of the transfer of part of the mortgages when she had the right and opportunity to prove her entire plea, and the court held that she had not supported her plea of a transfer to her for a valuable consideration, and on appeal based her contention upon legal grounds not tenable because of her failure to prove her entire plea, the judgment was res judicata against her as to the entire plea on her final accounting, where she claimed the proceeds of such property in consideration of giving testatrix a home, which claim one of the complainants in the former suit and a personal representative of the other contested, under the rule that a judgment is final between the parties as to all defenses which were or could have been set up in the earlier suit, provided the later suit involves substantially the same matters between the same parties. In re Walsh's Estate, 74 Atl. 563, 565, 80 N. J. Eq. 565.

Upon a plea of former adjudication, a matter will be held "res judicata," although not raised as an issue by the pleadings in the former action, if from the record it appears that it formed one of the premises upon which the judgment necessarily rested. "The doctrine of 'res judicata' does not rest upon the fact that a particular proposition has been affirmed and denied in the pleadings, but upon the fact that it has been fully and fairly investigated and tried; that the parties have had an adequate opportunity to say and prove all that they can in relation to it; that the minds of court and jury have been brought to bear upon it, and so it has been solemnly and finally adjudicated. * * * For these reasons, the more correct doctrine is that the estoppel covers the point which was actually litigated, and which actually determined the verdict or finding, whether it was statedly and technically in issue or not." Bleakley v. Barclay, 89 Pac. 906, 910, 75 Kan. 462, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230 (quoting 2 Black, Judg. § 614).

Where a party of the first part to a contract of sale has sued the party of the second part and his guarantor in justice's court for an installment due under the contract, and has recovered judgment on certain defenses set up by them, such defenses are "res judicata" and cannot be urged in another action brought by the same plaintiff for other installments due on the same contract, though, in the second action, the guarantor is not made a defendant with the party of the second part, Jones v. Silver, 70 S. E. 1109, 1112, 97 S. W. 231.

Under the rulings of the United States Supreme Court, a judgment is not "res adjudicata" in a second action on a different cause of action, unless the question was actually litigated in the original action. Kirven v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., 58 S. E. 424, 425, 77 S. C. 493.

Parties

The reason upon which the decisions rest is that there can be no "estoppel" arising out of judgment unless the same parties have had their day in court touching the matter litigated, and unless the judgment is equally available to both parties, and there can be no estoppel under our law or under general principles of jurisprudence, unless it is mutual. One of several joint tort-feasors, sued by the person injured, cannot plead by way of estoppel a judgment in favor of another joint tort-feasor, rendered in an action by the person injured, for one may try his case against every one who has done him a wrong by immediate and direct culpable action. Old Dominion Copper Mining & Smelting Co. v. Bigelow, 89 N. E. 193, 218, 203 Mass. 159, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314 (citing and adopting Sprague v. Oaks [Mass.] 19 Pick. 455).

That a judgment in a former action shall bind parties and privies in a subsequent action, it must have directly decided a point material in the former action which is in litigation in the subsequent action, and where parties defendant in a subsequent action, not identical with the parties defendant in a prior action involving the same question, join in offering in evidence in support of their defense the record and judgment in the prior action, they are all equally bound by the judgment. Richardson v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co., 81 Pac. 781, 783, 784, 15 Okl. 263.

As applying to points which might have been raised

The doctrine of "res judicata" embraces, not only questions determined in the former suits, but also matters which might have been raised and determined therein. Ward v. Field Museum of Natural History, 89 N. E. 731, 736, 241 Ill. 496.

A decision on appeal is "res judicata" between the parties, not only as to all matters pleaded, but as to all the matters necessarily involved, and which might have been pleaded. In re Cook's Estate, 122 N. W. 578, 579, 143 Iowa, 733.

"The plea of 'res judicata' applies, not only to points upon which the court was actually required to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the allegation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time." W. C. Belcher Land Mortg. Co. v. Norris, 78 S. W. 390, 391, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 111.

The principle of "res judicata" embraces not only what was actually determined in the former case, but also extends to any other matter properly involved, and which might have been raised and determined in it. In re Assessment of Property of Northwestern University, 69 N. E. 75, 76, 206 Ill. 64 (citing Rogers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244).

Where a second suit is upon the same cause of action and between the same parties as the first, a final judgment in the first suit on the merits is conclusive in the second suit as to every question presented, or which might have been presented under the pleadings. Where a second suit is on a different cause of action, but between the same parties as the first suit, the judgment is an estoppel in the second suit only as to every point actually litigated in the first suit, and is not conclusive as to other matters that might have been litigated. Prall v. Prall, 50 South. 867, 870, 58 Fla. 496, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 577.

All issues of fact or law which might have been adjudicated in a former suit between the same parties are foreclosed. Ross v. Dowden Mfg. Co., 123 N. W. 182, 183, 147 Iowa, 180.

A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, rendered on the merits, is as between the parties final and conclusive of the matter in controversy, including what might or ought to have been litigated in the suit. Crausby v. Crausby, 51 South. 529, 530, 164 Ala. 471.

The doctrine of estoppel by former judgment rests upon the maxim that there must be an end to litigation. The rule is elementary that, when a matter is in litigation, parties are required to bring forward their whole case; and "the plea of 'res judicata' applies, not only to the points upon which the court was required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time." A judgment against the contestants in a proceeding for the contest of a local option law election is conclusive upon every person in the territory affected, and therefore, in a prosecution for a violation of the law, the defendant is estopped to claim that the election was void by reason of the fact that the petition for the election was not filed in the county court at the term preceding the one at which the election was ordered, though that question may not have been raised in the contest case; the judgment being conclusive as to every question which might have been properly raised. Locke v. Com- monwealth, 69 S. W. 763, 764, 113 Ky. 864 (quoting and adopting definitions in Davis v. McCorkle, 77 Ky. [14 Bush] 746; Williams v. Rogers, 77 Ky. [14 Bush] 776; Hardwicke v. Young, 62 S. W. 10, 110 Ky. 504; Freem. Judgm. § 249).

RES GESTÆ

The "res gestæ" is defined as those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. These incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of time more or less appreciable. They may consist of speeches of any one concerned, whether participant or bystander. They may comprise things left undone as well as things done. Their sole distinguishing feature is that they should be the necessary incidents of the litigated act; necessary in this sense that they are part of the immediate preparations for or emanations of such act, and are not produced by the calculating policy of the actors. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act—a relation not broken by the interposition of voluntary individual wariness seeking to manufacture evidence for itself. Incidents that are thus immediately and unconsciously associated with the act, whether such incidents are doings or declarations, become in this way evidence of the character of the act. Sprinkle v. United States, 141 Fed. 811, 816, 73 C. C. A. 285 (citing St. Clair v. United States, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 154 U. S. 134, 149, 38 L. Ed. 936); State v. Birks, 97 S. W. 578, 582, 199 Mo. 263 (quoting 1 Whart. Ev. § 259); State v. Kane, 72 Atl. 39, 40, 77 N. J. Law, 244. The res gestæ are those circumstances which are the undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. McMahon v. Chicago City R. Co., 88 N. E. 223, 224, 239 Ill. 334; Jones v. United States, 179 Fed. 584, 602, 103 C. C. A. 142 (quoting and adopting the definition in St. Clair v. United States, 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936, which cites Greenleaf & Bishop's Cr. Proc. §§ 1083, 1086, and quotes and adopts the definition of Wharton).

Chamberlayne, in his notes to Taylor's Evidence, 391 (1), says: "Legal liability in any case is predicated upon the existence of some particular transaction or state of affairs, and it is this group of facts or events which make up its res gestæ." Greenleaf on Evidence, § 108, intimates that the phrase "res gestæ" consists of the principal fact and surrounding circumstances consisting of kindred facts materially affecting its character, and essential to be known in order to a right understanding of its nature. And both of these authors and others of repute lay it down as essential to the inclusion of a given fact within the meaning of the term that it should be contemporaneous with the principal fact, and so connected with it as to illustrate its character. And this term "contemporaneous" does not always of necessity refer to any single or ultimate fact, however important to any precise or definite time, for a "transaction" may, and not infrequently does, include a series of occurrences extending over a great length of time, and a relevant fact in any one of them, and, until the close of the matter, may come within this term "contemporaneous," and constitute a part of the "res gestæ." Thus, in a suit to cancel decedent's deed to defendants for fraud and undue influence, evidence of a decision of persons called in by decedent before the conveyance to determine whether the property was worth more than services to be rendered by defendants, and of an announcement of the decision to decedent, was admissible as part of the res gestæ; any fact in the transaction leading to the deed and tending to affect decedent's mind in making the deed being admissible. Fraley v. Fraley, 64 S. E. 381, 383, 150 N. C. 501.

"Res gestæ' are the circumstances, acts, or declarations which grow out of the main fact, are contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character. An indispensable characteristic of declarations is that they must be made at the time of the act done, which they are supposed to characterize; and, further, they must be calculated to unfold the nature and quality of the facts they are intended to explain, and so to harmonize with them as obviously to constitute one transaction. Acts are pertinent if they are done pending the enterprise, and whilst it is in continuous progress to its catastrophe, and are of a nature to promote or obstruct, advance or retard, or to evince essential motive or purpose in reference to it; and declarations are pertinent if they are uttered contemporaneously with pertinent acts, and serve to account for, qualify, or explain them, and are apparently natural and spontaneous." Goodman v. State, 49 S. E. 922, 924, 122 Ga. 111 (citing Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 12 S. E. 18, 85 Ga. 751; Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85).

The "res gestæ" of a transaction is what is done during the progress of it, or so nearly upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with it. No precise point of time can be fixed a priori where the res gestæ ends. Each case turns on its own circumstances, and the inquiry is rather into events, than into the precise time which has elapsed. Carswell v. State, 72 S. E. 602, 604, 10 Ga. App. 30; Lyles v. Same, 60 S. E. 578, 580, 130 Ga. 294 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607, and citing Pen. Code 1895, § 998).

To bring a matter within the rule of "res gestæ," the act or declaration should be contemporaneous with the litigated transaction, must spontaneously spring out of and tend to elucidate it, and must not be in effect a mere narrative of a past occurrence. State v. Gardner, 65 S. E. 630, 631, 83 S. C. 476.

The test whether declarations are "res gestæ" is: Were they the facts talking through the party, or the party talking about the facts? Instinctiveness is the requisite, and when this exists the declarations are admissible. Cromeenes v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 109 Pac. 10, 15, 37 Utah, 475, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 307.

"Res gestæ" is matter incidental to a main fact and explanatory of it, including acts and words so closely connected therewith as to constitute a part of it, and without knowledge of which the main fact may not be properly understood, and declarations which are the natural outgrowth of the act in controversy, though not precisely concurrent in point of time, are admissible as a part of the res gestæ where they are voluntary and spontaneous, and so nearly contemporaneous with the act as to be in the presence of the transaction which they illustrate. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Brumley, 116 Pac. 1051, 1052, 51 Colo. 251.

The "res gestæ" rule authorizes the admission of such circumstances and declarations as are contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration, and so closely connected with it as to illustrate its character. The term "contemporaneous," however, in such sense does not mean coincidence, but requires that the circumstance or declaration be substantially at the same time as the main fact, so that it will appear that the evidence offered has not the ear-marks of a device or afterthought, or a narrative of a transaction which is really and substantially past. Bessierre v. Alabama City, G. & A. Ry. Co. (Ala.) 60 South. 82, 86.

The term "res gestæ" in the law of evidence means a collection of primary facts constituting the necessary and immediate field of a judicial inquiry, within which field all the facts are competent evidence. Royle Mining Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 142 S. W. 438, 443, 161 Mo. App. 185.

The sole distinguishing feature of statements as a part of the "res gestæ" is that they must be the automatic and necessary incidents of the litigated act, necessary in this sense: That they are part of the immediate preparations for, or emanations of, such act, and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. They are the act talking for itself, not what people say when talking about the act. The statement of a person, who was knocked senseless and robbed, that defendant was the man who robbed him, made immediately after recovering his senses, is not admissible, in a prosecution of defendant for the robbery, as a part of the res gestæ. Rogers v. State, 115 S. W. 156, 157, 88 Ark. 451, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 357 (quoting and adopting definition of Mr. Wharton, quoted in Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Nelson, 52 S. W. 7, 66 Ark. 494).

Words uttered during the continuance of the main action, or so soon thereafter as to preclude the hypothesis of concoction or premeditation, whether by the active or passive party, become a part of the transaction itself, and, if they are relevant, may be proved as any other fact, without calling the party who uttered them. Thus, in an action for injuries through falling down an elevator shaft, the door of which was alleged to have been left open, a declaration of a child immediately after the accident that "a man pushed the door open, and walked in," was admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Carr, 108 S. W. 1053, 1055, 85 Ark. 479, 14 Ann. Cas. 48 (quoting and adopting Flynn v. State, 43 Ark. 292, and citing and adopting Clinton v. Estes, 20 Ark. 225; Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 102; Little Rock, M. R. & T. Ry. Co. v. Leverett, 3 S. W. 50, 48 Ark. 333, 3 Am. St. Rep. 230).

A declaration, to be admissible as "res gestæ" "must be an undesigned part or incident of the occurrence in question. It must be, in a general sense, contemporaneous with the main occurrence, although, in case of a sudden accident or attack, the declaration would not be admissible merely because the blow or collision immediately preceded it. It must be the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main occurrence, and must exclude the notion of deliberation or calculation, or the design to manufacture evidence for future purposes; and, if it be a mere narrative of past events, it then is clearly within the category of inadmissible hearsay, and must, beyond doubt, be excluded." Rulofson v. Billings, 74 Pac. 35, 36, 140 Cal. 452 (quoting and adopting definition in Heckle v. Southern Pac. Co., 56 Pac. 56, 123 Cal. 442).

The "res gestæ" are the circumstances, facts, and declarations which are connected with and illustrate a litigated fact. To admit declarations there must be a main and principal fact or transaction, and only such declarations are admissible as grow out of the principal transaction and tend to illustrate its character. In an action for injuries to a passenger resulting from his forcible ejection from a train, a witness testified that, after plaintiff fell off the train, witness went back to plaintiff, reaching him not over three minutes from the time plaintiff fell off, and that a couple of minutes later the conductor came back and stated that plaintiff had stepped off the train backwards, but that plaintiff denied it, and said, "You pushed me off." Held, that there was no reversible error in admitting such testimony. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Halslup, 79 N. E. 1035, 1037, 39 Ind. App. 394 (citing Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Stein, 31 N. E. 180, 133 Ind. 243, 247, 32 N. E. 831, 19 L. R. A. 733; Louisville, N. A. & C.

Ry. Co. v. Buck, 19 N. E. 453, 116 Ind. 566, 576, 2 L. R. A. 520, 9 Am. St. Rep. 883; Bolds v. Woods, 36 N. E. 933, 9 Ind. App. 657, 665; 3 Wigmore, Evidence, § 1750, p. 2257; O'Connor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 6 N. W. 481, 27 Minn. 173, 38 Am. Rep. 288; Sullivan v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., 7 Pac. 508, 12 Or. 392, 53 Am. Rep. 364; Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 12 S. E. 18, 85 Ga. 775; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Stein, 31 N. E. 180, 32 N. E. 831, 133 Ind. 243, 247, 19 L. R. A. 733; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Buck, 19 N. E. 453, 116 Ind. 566, 2 L. R. A. 520, 9 Am. St. Rep. 883; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry, 28 N. E. 714, 2 Ind. App. 427; Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric St. R. Co. v. Stahle, 76 N. E. 551, 77 N. E. 363, 37 Ind. App. 539; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 75 U. S. [8 Wall.] 397, 19 L. Ed. 487).

Coincidence in time

Declarations to be a part of the "res gestæ" need not be precisely coincident in point of time with the principal fact, but, if they spring out of it, shed light upon it, and tend to explain it, are voluntary and spontaneous, and are made at a time so near as to preclude the idea of deliberation and fabrication, they are to be regarded as contemporaneous and are admissible. Price v. State, 98 Pac. 447, 451, 1 Okl. Cr. 358.

A declaration, to be a part of the "res gestæ," need not necessarily be coincident in point of time with the main fact proved. It is enough that the two are so clearly connected that the declaration can be considered to be a spontaneous expression of the fact or condition. Thus a witness, who testifies that he was with plaintiff when the injury occurred, may also testify that, in response to a question which he put to plaintiff as to whether he was hurt, plaintiff replied that he was. City of Lexington v. Fleharty, 104 N. W. 1056, 1057, 74 Neb. 626.

Neither the length of time intervening or the place of a declaration is necessarily controlling in a criminal case in determining whether the declaration is admissible as "res gestæ," the declaration being admissible if, under all the circumstances, it can reasonably be said that it is probably true as the natural and spontaneous reproduction of the picture impressed on the mind and memory of the declarant, who has been in the meantime in no state of mind to reflect and consider a narrative of the past event. Prosecutrix having been criminally assaulted near a highway, while wheeling her child in a baby carriage, and choked into insensibility on regaining consciousness found the child and carriage missing, and within half an hour approached a house about half a mile distant in an exhausted and excited condition. To the person who came to her assistance she made statements that some one had knocked her down and stolen her baby; that some one had killed her baby. "A man tried to kill me and my baby." She repeatedly called on people present to find it. She was bleeding from wounds in the face, and, the child being found and returned to her, she was then taken into the house, after which she made certain other declarations within the space of an hour from the time of the occurrence, tending to identify defendant as the author of the crime. Held, that such declarations as were made by her prior to the time the child was found and brought to her were admissible as "res gestæ," but the subsequent declarations made in defendant's absence after prosecutrix entered the house were inadmissible. State v. Alton, 117 N. W. 617, 619, 105 Minn. 410, 15 Ann. Cas. 806.

In Leahey v. Cass Ave. & F. G. Ry. Co., 10 S. W. 58, 97 Mo. 165, 10 Am. St. Rep. 300, it was said that a declaration, to be a part of the "res gestæ," need not be coincident in point of time with the main fact to be proved. It is enough that the two are so nearly connected that the declaration can, in the ordinary course of affairs, be said to be a spontaneous explanation of the real cause. The declaration is, then, a verbal act, and may well be said to be a part of the main fact or transaction. Again, if the subsequent declaration and the main fact at issue, taken together, form a continuous transaction, then the declaration is admissible. Much, therefore, depends on the nature and character of the transaction in question; for it may be, and often is, of a continuing character. It cannot be said that a mere subsequent declaration will of itself furnish a sufficient connecting circumstance. Gotwald v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 125, 126, 102 Mo. App. 492.

"Res gestæ" means the "circumstances, facts, and declarations" which grow out of the main fact, contemporaneous with it, and serve to illustrate its character." Declarations "made under circumstances to warrant the court in presuming that they grew out of the litigated issue and illustrate the true character of the transaction, and were dependent upon it, were not designedly made or devised, for a self-serving purpose, are evidentiary facts, and not within the rule applicable to hearsay evidence." Declarations of a railroad engineer as to the cause of the accident, made in not less than five minutes after a wreck of his train, and to the first person who reached him while he was lying within a few feet of the wreck, was a part of the "res gestæ" and admissible as against the company. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houchins, 101 S. W. 924, 925, 125 Ky. 483 (quoting and adopting the definition in Hermes v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 50 N. W. 584, 80 Wis. 590, 27 Am. St. Rep. 69; Coffin v. Bradbury, 35 Pac. 715, 3 Idaho [Hasb.] 770, 95 Am. St. Rep. 37).

"Since a minor circumstance cannot be properly said to be part of the 'res gestæ' as to the major matter, unless it is so connected with the latter as to speak for itself, as it is said, indicating the character of the main fact, such minor circumstance, in order to fall within the field of res gestæ, must necessarily be undesigned, and so must have an unbroken causal relation to the main subject of inquiry. At the point where that causal relation is so interrupted by time or other circumstances that what lies further on no longer appreciably illustrates the character of the main fact is the boundary line between what is and what is not res gestæ. There is no controlling rule as to the length of time between the happening of the main fact and that of the minor incident claimed to characterize the former, by means of which the validity of the claim in that regard can even be established prima facie. The time which is sufficient to break the chain under some circumstances would not be under others. Under some the time might be very brief, and under others it might be considerable. When the claimed evidentiary circumstance is so far disassociated with the main fact as not to be appreciably considered an incident of it, it is mere hearsay, not res gestæ." In a prosecution for murder, it appeared that, after the shooting, accused telephoned for a physician for deceased, waited in the room where the shooting occurred for some little time, and then went to his own room, which was in the same building, got his hat, and started for the police station to surrender himself, and where, after walking about one-third of a mile, he boarded a street car to finish his journey, and there told the motorman what had occurred. Held, that his statements to the motorman were not admissible as "res gestæ." Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 58, 129 Wis. 146, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923.

Exclamations made contemporaneously with the main fact under investigation, and which evidently spring therefrom, and are calculated to throw light upon its nature, are always considered a part of the transaction itself, while that which is merely narrative in its nature, occurring after the main transaction is closed, cannot be considered a part of the transaction, but must be considered as simply hearsay; but the line between the two classes is sometimes very shadowy and hard to draw. Defendant was charged to have caused decedent's death by striking her with a lamp, from which she was burned. After the occurrence defendant called his son, and sent him for witness, who resided across the street. Witness appeared at once, and when she arrived deceased was sitting 10 or 12 feet from the door of the kitchen, which was open. The flames had been extinguished, but there was some fire in decedent's clothing, in the kitchen, and a little fire was smoldering in a curtain, which witness extinguished. Defendant was in the kitchen when witness came in, and deceased stated to her: "See what he has done now! Struck me with a lamp." Such statement was admissible as "res gestæ." Bliss v. State, 94 N. W. 325, 327, 117 Wis. 596.

In order to authorize the admission of a declaration by deceased, after he was shot, as "res gestæ," it must be shown, before the evidence is admitted, that it stood in such immediate causal relation to the shooting as to be an emanation thereof. Baker v. State, 107 S. W. 983, 985, 85 Ark. 300.

The "res gestæ" of a transaction is what is done during the progress of it, or so near upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with it. No precise point of time can be fixed where the res gestæ ends. Each case turns on its own circumstances. Walker v. State, 73 S. E. 368, 369, 137 Ga. 398 (quoting and adopting the language of Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 608).

A decedent's statement after an accident, to constitute part of the "res gestæ," must have been made so recently after the accident that there was no room for collusion or premeditated self-serving, but no time can be arbitrarily fixed; the circumstances of each individual case largely governing. Deceased, with certain associates, went to a depot in the early morning, intending to take a certain train. Deceased left his associates, and after the train was gone he was found with both arms so mangled and crushed that amputation was necessary, and he died within 36 hours after the accident. Within an hour after the accident, he made a statement that in attempting to go round the end of the train he fell, struck his head against a railroad tie, which rendered him unconscious, and when the train pulled out he discovered that he had sustained the injuries in question. Held, that such statement was not so remote from the time the injury occurred as to render it inadmissible as "res gestæ." Starr v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 83 Pac. 113, 116, 41 Wash. 199, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636.

Where there is evidence of insured's injured condition other than his declarations, his declarations as to the cause of injury, made immediately after the occurrence, are admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Union Casualty, etc., Co. v. Mondy, 71 Pac. 675, 678, 18 Colo. App. 395.

In a prosecution for robbery, where the evidence showed that the prosecuting witness had been drinking, and had received a blow, and was knocked down in the street, that he was afterwards dragged in an unconscious condition to the sidewalk, statements made within a few minutes afterward, as he was aroused, were "res gestæ." State v. Ripley, 72 Pac. 1036, 1038, 32 Wash. 182.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that, while deceased was lying on the ground where he fell when he was shot, he told witness that defendant shot him, was admissible as "res gestæ." Franklin v. State (Tex.) 88 S. W. 357, 358.

Where plaintiff, in an action for assault, claimed that during the quarrel the defendant ejected her from a house so roughly that she fell and injured her arm, it was not error to admit plaintiff's declaration, made eight or ten seconds after she fell and before she regained her feet, that defendant pushed her down, as "res gestæ." Robinson v. Stahl, 67 Atl. 577, 74 N. H. 310 (citing Murray v. Boston & M. R. R., 54 Atl. 289, 72 N. H. 32, 37, 61 L. R. A. 495, 101 Am. St. Rep. 660).

A statement of a motorman, made seven or eight minutes after a collision between cars at a crossing, as to the cause of the accident, is not a part of the "res gestæ," and is not admissible for or against his employer. Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co., 104 Pac. 986, 991, 156 Cal. 379.

Statements made by prosecutrix the day after an alleged rape are too remote to constitute "res gestæ." In re Kelly, 83 Pac. 223, 224, 28 Neb. 491.

A statement otherwise hearsay is competent as part of the "res gestæ" if it was connected with the accident in question both in relation thereto and in proximity of time. Swanson v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 148 Ill. App. 135, 139; Id., 90 N. E. 210, 242 Ill. 388.

In an action for injury to a passenger by starting the car before plaintiff had time to alight, evidence that the conductor stated at the time that he "thought they were off" is admissible as "res gestæ." Reese v. Detroit United Ry., 124 N. W. 539, 540, 159 Mich. 600.

The statement by an engineer, "I told him to get off the engine, and he dropped down in front of the engine," made three or four minutes after injury to a boy jumping from a train and run over, is admissible as part of the "res gestæ" in an action against the railroad for the injury. Stone v. Campbells Creek R. Co., 66 S. E. 521, 522, 66 W. Va. 417.

Declaration of deceased to his wife immediately after he was shot that defendant shot him, that he saw him, is admissible as part of the "res gestæ." State v. Spivey, 65 S. E. 995, 997, 151 N. C. 676.

Declaration of a person who had been shot within two minutes after the shot, and just prior to his death, which ensued almost instantly, "Oh, Lordy! Turner Williams shot me," is admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Williams v. State, 50 South. 749, 751, 58 Fla. 138.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, statements of defendant after the difficulty were not part of the "res gestæ." State v. Gianfala, 37 South. 30, 31, 113 La. 463.

In a prosecution for theft from the person, the evidence showed that defendant, under pretext of buying prosecutor's watch, snatched it from the latter's hands, and while running away was caught by an officer. Prosecutor was permitted to testify that he told the officer, in defendant's presence, of the taking of the watch, and that defendant was the thief, which testimony was corroborated by the officer. The witnesses were also permitted to state that defendant then said that at the time of the theft he was at a saloon, and did not commit the theft. It appeared that but a few minutes elapsed between the capture of defendant and the time when prosecutor reached him and the officer. Held, that the testimony was "res gestæ" and admissible. Nelson v. State, 88 S. W. 807, 808, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 471.

Evidence of statements made by defendant and his companions within 15 minutes after the shooting of deceased at a point about a half mile distant, was properly excluded when offered as "res gestæ"; there having been sufficient time intervening during which defendant and his companions could have concocted a defense. Deneaner v. State, 127 S. W. 201, 203, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 624.

In a trial for burglary, a statement made by appellant, shortly after he was shot down by a prosecuting witness at the door of the latter's chicken house, that he and his companions had gone into the chicken house, breaking off the lock, that when interrupted they had caught a number of chickens, that accused had followed that business for some time, that when interrupted he started to escape, etc., was admissible as a "res gestæ" statement. A res gestæ statement made by accused was admissible as such, notwithstanding it was inadmissible as a confession or admission, since "res gestæ" is independent of, and cannot be restricted or limited to, the rules relating to admissions or confessions made after arrest. Bronson v. State, 127 S. W. 175, 177, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 17.

In an action for injuries to a passenger, statements made by him, while he lay where he had fallen, to parties who hastened to his assistance, and who reached him not over five minutes after the accident, and made in answer to questions, not calculated to elicit any particular answer, and the answers being as to the manner and means which caused him to be placed where he was, were admissible as "res gestæ." International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hugen, 100 S. W. 1000, 1001, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 326.

A memorandum not being made fairly contemporaneous with the fact of a parol agreement was not admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Luttrell v. Parry (Tex.) 129 S. W. 865, 866.

Declaration of deceased

In a prosecution for homicide, a dying declaration that defendant knocked J. in the head and jerked deceased out of bed, and that she got up and secured J.'s pistol, and turned up the light, and tried to shoot defendant, but the pistol would not fire, whereupon defendant wrenched the pistol out of her hand and hit her over the head with it, and that she begged him to spare her life and let her raise her children, was competent as "res gestæ." Walker v. State, 41 South. 878, 880, 146 Ala. 45.

Where a person was shot from ambush about 175 yards distant, and within a few minutes after the shooting said to his brother, who was present at the shooting, "Do you know who did this?" and the brother in reply said, "One of them was Will Regnier," to which the deceased responded, "Yes, and the other one was John Labrier," such conversation was inadmissible as a part of the "res gestæ," since "the declaration of the deceased was not a declaration indicative of what or who had caused the injury," but "was a question rather which would indicate that the deceased was seeking information rather than giving expression to what naturally and irresistibly arose in his mind by reason of the occurrence." Regnier v. Territory, 82 Pac. 509, 510, 15 Okl. 652 (citing and adopting Gillett, Indirect & Collateral Ev. § 254; Smith v. Territory, 69 Pac. 805, 11 Okl. 669; and citing and distinguishing Puls v. A. O. U. W., 102 N. W. 165, 13 N. D. 559; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Mosley, 75 U. S. 397, 19 L. Ed. 437; State v. Martin, 28 S. W. 12, 124 Mo. 514; Lewis v. State, 15 S. W. 642, 29 Tex. App. 201, 25 Am. St. Rep. 720; Linderberg v. Crescent Mining Co., 33 Pac. 692, 9 Utah, 163; Pelrce v. Van Dusen, 78 Fed. 693, 24 C. C. A. 280, 69 L. R. A. 705).

In mandamus to compel the granting of a pension to the applicant as the widow of a deceased police officer, alleged to have been killed while in the performance of his duties, a witness, who testified that he heard the call of a police whistle and walked a distance of over 300 feet, where he saw the deceased officer supported by two men, could not testify as to what the deceased officer stated as to what was the matter with him; the statement not being a part of the "res gestæ." Murphy v. Board of Police Pension Fund Com'rs, 83 Pac. 577, 2 Cal. App. 468.

As illustrative of main transaction

Declarations to be admissible as part of the "res gestæ" must be so connected as to be a part of the transaction in controversy, and tend to illustrate or explain it, the fact itself also being admissible. Horst v. Lewis, 103 N. W. 460, 464, 71 Neb. 365.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence describing the details of what occurred at the time of the homicide constituting one continuous transaction is admissible as "res gestæ." Williams v. State, 41 South. 992, 997, 147 Ala. 10 (citing Collins v. State, 34 South. 993, 138 Ala. 57; Churchwell v. State, 23 South. 72, 117 Ala. 124; Smith v. State, 7 South. 52, 88 Ala. 73; Seams v. State, 4 South. 521, 84 Ala. 410).

In a prosecution for murder, the "res gestæ" is not limited to the act of killing, but includes, not only the murder itself, but also acts demonstrating the quo animo and motive. Smithson v. State, 137 S. W. 487, 490, 124 Tenn. 218, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 397.

Evidence as to the ages of decedent's children, who were lying on the floor with him at or immediately before the shooting, was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ," describing the situation at the time of the shooting. Johnson v. State, 53 South. 769, 169 Ala. 10.

Where, in an action by a passenger for an assault by the conductor, the evidence showed that the assault followed a wrangle concerning the failure of the passenger and his companions to leave the car at their destination, evidence of what the passenger and his companions said at the time was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ," and to show who was in fault for the failure of the passenger and his companions to alight at their destination. Alabama City, G. & A. Ry. Co. v. Sampley, 53 South. 142, 144, 169 Ala. 372.

In an action on a life policy, defended on the ground of suicide, the facts showing the financial, mental, and physical condition of insured immediately prior to the time of his death are relevant, as a part of the "res gestæ." Goldschmidt v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 119 N. Y. Supp. 233, 236, 134 App. Div. 475.

Where certain transactions between defendant and a railroad agent, as to the shipment of wool sued for, were in themselves admissible, conversations between defendant and the agent explanatory of such transaction, though in plaintiff's absence, were admissible as "res gestæ." Welker v. Appleman, 90 N. E. 35, 40, 44 Ind. App. 699.

Where, in an action to recover for ejection of plaintiff from a street car, there was evidence that passengers had left the car because of the conduct of plaintiff and his companions, and had complained to the conductor or within his hearing as to such conduct, the evidence was competent as "res gestæ" to explain the motive of the conductor, and it was error to instruct the jury to disregard the same unless they should find that what was said by the passengers to the conductor or in his hearing was in the hearing of plaintiff, or that he could have heard it. United Power Co. v. Matheny, 90 N. E. 154, 155, 81 Ohio St. 204, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761.

Where a person is arrested and is in the possession of the property alleged to have been stolen, any statement or declaration made by him at the time of the arrest in reference to the possession thereof is admissible in evidence as explanatory of the character of his possession, and constitutes a part of the "res gestæ"; but any statement or declaration made by the accused in reference to the property stolen, when not in the possession thereof, is not part of the res gestæ. Smith v. Territory, 79 Pac. 214, 14 Okl. 518.

As a part of principal act

Declarations or acts sought to be introduced in evidence as part of the "res gestæ" must be connected with or grow out of the main or principal transaction which is the subject-matter of the litigation, and must tend to elucidate and explain such transaction. Leach v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. (Utah) 81 Pac. 90, 92.

The phrase "res gestæ" implies a substantial coincidence in time; but, if declarations of third persons are not in their nature a part of the fact, they are not admissible in evidence, however closely related in point of time. Burns v. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., 87 N. Y. Supp. 883, 884, 93 App. Div. 566.

The acts and declarations of persons not parties which are receivable as "res gestæ" must have been done or made at the time of the occurrence of the main fact, must have a tendency to elucidate it, and must harmonize with it as obviously to constitute one transaction. It is not essential that they should be precisely in point of time with the main fact, provided they spring out of the transaction and elucidate it. On a prosecution for murder, it was error to admit testimony that, after deceased had received the fatal wound, people near the scene of the crime, who pursued defendant, cried "Murder!" Benjamin v. State, 41 South. 739, 740, 148 Ala. 671 (citing Wesley v. State, 52 Ala. 182; Gordon v. State, 30 South. 30, 129 Ala. 113).

Since "res gestæ" is matter incidental to a main fact and explanatory thereof, made up of acts and words so closely connected with a main fact as to really constitute a part thereof and without knowledge of which the main fact might not be properly understood, proof of a separate rape alleged to have been committed on prosecutrix by defendant's male companion some time after the offense alleged to have been committed by defendant was complete and at a point some distance therefrom, having no connection therewith, was inadmissible as res gestæ. People v. Edwards, 110 Pac. 342, 343, 13 Cal. App. 551.

"Nothing can be said to be included in the 'res gestæ' except those matters which properly speaking enter into the accident, which serve to discover its immediate cause, or explain the particular manner of its happening." The fact that the method of work was changed immediately after the accident did not authorize the admission of evidence of such method as changed, as part of the res gestæ. Fitter v. Iowa Telephone Co., 106 N. W. 7, 8, 129 Iowa, 610.

Declarations, in order to become a part of the "res gestæ," and distinguished from mere hearsay, must be connected with a principal fact or transaction, and only such declarations are admissible as grow out of it, illustrate its character, are contemporaneous with it, and derive some degree of credit from it. State v. Ryder, 68 Atl. 652, 653, 80 Vt. 422.

Where two or more persons are associated together for the same illegal purpose, any act or declaration of one of the parties in reference to the common object forms part of the "res gestæ" and is admissible in evidence. Jones v. United States, 179 Fed. 584, 601, 103 C. C. A. 142.

Statements to induce a person to drink that the liquor was good, and bought from a person named, were not concomitant with the act of obtaining the liquor, nor a part of such act, but simply related to the completed transaction, and were inadmissible in an action for negligence in selling the same. Campbell v. Brown, 106 Pac. 37, 38, 81 Kan. 480, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian from the falling of an awning, evidence that a man was working with the awning at the time of the accident was admissible as "res gestæ." Lewy Art Co. v. Agricola, 53 South. 145, 148, 169 Ala. 60.

In ejectment, it was not error to permit a witness to testify that the person through whom the plaintiff derived title had been trying to sell witness' father the land three years before, where there was evidence that he was in possession, as this was part of the "res gestæ," and it was for the jury whether it applied to the particular parcel of land. Owen v. Moxom, 52 South. 527, 530, 167 Ala. 615.

The rule that declarations of a party in actual possession of property asserting title in himself are admissible in evidence as part of the "res gestæ," explanatory of the possession, does not extend to his declarations as to the history and source of such title. Baker v. Drake, 41 South. 845, 148 Ala. 513 (citing Ray v. Jackson, 90 Ala. 513, 7 South. 747; Vincent v. State, 74 Ala. 275).

In an action for damages for the flooding of land, caused by an excavation being made so near a ditch as to break in its walls, conversations had between plaintiff's agent and the one doing the excavation for defendant, relative to the cutting down of the embankment of the ditch made during the progress of the work, were admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Southern Ry. Co. v. Lewis, 51 South. 746, 750, 165 Ala. 555, 138 Am. St. Rep. 77.

The admission of an agent to bind the principal must be made at the time of doing the act he is authorized to do, and must concern the act either while actually engaged in the transaction or so soon thereafter as to constitute a part of the "res gestæ," which term has reference to and applies to a condition of affairs, a condition of fact rather than a rule of evidence. The statement by the agent of an owner of cattle killed by a train made after the accident and after the train had come to a stop, in response to a question as to why he left the cattle on the track, put by the conductor who had not seen the agent until after the accident, was not a part of the act of the agent in protecting the cattle from the train, and was not a spontaneous declaration, and was not admissible as a part of the res gestæ. Jungworth v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 123 N. W. 695, 696, 24 S. D. 342.

The declarations of an agent, and declarations made in the presence of an agent, at the time of doing an act within the scope of his authority, and relating to the subject-matter of the act, are evidence as part of the "res gestæ." Zart v. Singer Sewing Mach. Co., 127 N. W. 272, 275, 162 Mich. 387.

Declarations of the agent of the seller at the time of sale are admissible as part of the "res gestæ." American Pure Food Co. v. G. W. Elliott & Co., 66 S. E. 451, 452, 151 N. C. 393, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 910.

Where an agent of a carrier, while engaged in tracing and locating a car, stated that it had not yet reached a certain place, the declaration was admissible as part of the "res gestæ" in an action for damages to the shipment contained in the car, as was also a statement made by another agent when he was attempting to adjust plaintiff's claim for damages, and when he and plaintiff were examining the shipment to ascertain the damages. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Watkins, 100 S. W. 162, 163, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 321.

Where a railway employé was injured while assisting laborers to put a hand car on the track, remarks made just after the accident, by the foreman, who did not see it, were not "res gestæ," but purely hearsay. St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Brisco, 100 S. W. 989, 990, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 321.

In trespass for cutting standing timber, statements in the nature of admissions and directions by defendant's foreman while he was on the land, and also while cutting the timber, tending to show that the timber was being cut by defendant and not by another, were admissible as "res gestæ." Kentucky Stave Co. v. Page (Ky.) 125 S. W. 170, 174.

In a suit by a shipper of cattle for damages, an objection to the account of sales of the cattle read in evidence that the evidence showed the same was made up from data furnished by salesmen and weighmasters, the correctness of which was not proven, was not tenable, where witnesses who actually weighed the cattle testified to their weights, and the reports of the weights and prices realized, made to the bookkeeper of the company selling the same, all appeared to have been contemporaneous with the transactions to which they related, and so were a part of the "res gestæ." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Gober (Tex.) 125 S. W. 383, 385.

In an action for the ejection of a passenger, testimony as to the conduct of the conductor towards other passengers shortly after the alleged ejection was not admissible, not being a part of the "res gestæ." Dobbins v. Little Rock Ry. & Electric Co., 95 S. W. 794, 796, 79 Ark. 85, 9 Ann. Cas. 84 (citing Hot Springs St. Ry. Co. v. Hildreth, 82 S. W. 245, 72 Ark. 572, Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. Nelson, 52 S. W. 7, 66 Ark. 501; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 35 S. W. 225, 62 Ark. 259).

Where a carrier claimed that one injured while riding on a train was a trespasser because riding on a pass not issued to her or her mother, who was traveling with her, the conductor may testify as to whether the mother in handing the pass to the conductor indicated for whom she was tendering the pass, as it was part of the "res gestæ." Broyles v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 52 South. 81, 85, 166 Ala. 616, 139 Am. St. Rep. 50.

Where, in a prosecution for murder, defendant was charged with fatally shooting decedent, a policeman, testimony of a witness that immediately prior to the shooting he told decedent that defendant had pulled a gun, that about this time defendant came up and was pointed out to decedent by witness, and that, after saying that no policeman could arrest him, defendant broke and ran, and was followed by decedent, was competent as part of the "res gestæ." Hull v. State, 100 S. W. 403, 405, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 607.

In a prosecution for murder, exclamations by the son of deceased, "Don't shoot Pap!" shown by an eyewitness to the shooting, who stood 200 yards from the place of the shooting, to have been uttered immediately before, and when, the father was shot, are admissible as a part of the "res gestæ." Kennedy v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 100 S. W. 242, 243.

On a prosecution for assault and battery by a parent on a child, evidence that the parent compelled the child to travel barefooted about three or four miles over a hilly and rocky road ahead of a horse on which the parent was riding, the child being urged on to the limit of his speed by occasional lashes of a whip, was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ" of a continuous assault. State v. Koonse, 101 S. W. 139, 142, 123 Mo. App. 655.

On the trial of a physician for prescribing intoxicating liquors with intent to evade the law, statements of a clerk at the drug store where the prescriptions were filled made to prosecuting witness on his application for the purchase of whisky, before obtaining the prescription, that he could only sell on prescription, which could be procured from accused, were a part of the res gestæ, because a part of the transaction culminating in the giving of the prescription, and the sale of whisky thereon; the term "res gestæ" extending to statements establishing liability by showing acts done on distinctly other occasions as part of a consistent plan of operation. State v. Terry, 55 South. 15, 17, 128 La. 680.

A barge and schooner in tow of the same tug, passing down the James river at night, the schooner being behind the barge, came in collision. Shortly before the collision, the captain of the schooner, coming on deck, called to the master of the barge to stop sheering, and he replied that the tug "was going all the way round the river." Held that, on an issue between the tug and barge as to the fault for the collision, such statement was admissible in evidence as part of the "res gestæ." The Theodore Roosevelt, 154 Fed. 155, 157.

Declarations of accused while at the scene of the killing with his pistol in his hand and in the presence of deceased were admissible as "res gestæ," without preliminary proof that they were voluntary. Williams v. State, 41 South. 992, 996, 147 Ala. 10.

In an action for injury to a vessel by collision with a drawbridge, because of the bridge tender's negligence in failing to open it in time, evidence that, the morning after the injury, the bridge tender visited the vessel and inquired whether plaintiff would take a named sum and drop the matter, was inadmissible as part of the "res gestæ." Southern R. Co. v. Reeder, 44 South. 699, 702, 152 Ala. 227, 126 Am. St. Rep. 23.

On a prosecution for murder, testimony that some of the shots from defendant's gun passed through the clothing of witness was admissible as part of the res gestæ." Hammond v. State, 41 South. 761, 764, 147 Ala. 79.

On a prosecution for murder, evidence that, immediately after shooting deceased, defendant shot the brother of deceased, was admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Hammond v. State, 41 South. 761, 764, 147 Ala. 79 (citing Seam v. State, 4 South. 521, 84 Ala. 410; Smith v. State, 7 South. 52, 88 Ala. 73; Plant v. State, 37 South. 150, 140 Ala. 52).

In a prosecution for murder, where accused shot decedent and simultaneously shot a little girl, evidence of the shooting of the latter was a part of the "res gestæ." Nelson v. State, 101 S. W. 1012, 1013, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 349.

Where, in trespass for the removal of plaintiff's furniture, defendant claimed that plaintiff had fully consented to such removal, evidence that she was sitting in one corner of the house crying at the time was admissible as "res gestæ," and as bearing on the question of consent. Terry v. Williams, 41 South. 804, 805, 148 Ala. 468.

In an action against a gas company for injuries from an explosion of gas which escaped from an uncapped pipe, a declaration by an employé of the company, sent to plaintiff's house to install a gas meter and make a test of the piping in the house, made to plumbers at the house, that he would make the test, though the pipes had been tested, was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ." Kenney v. South Shore Natural Gas & Fuel Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 363, 365, 134 App. Div. 859.

In an action for injuries to a boy by a street car, evidence that four or five minutes before the injury, as plaintiff and his companions were passing on their way from school, defendant's conductor asked him to help push the car, is admissible as "res gestæ," not for the purpose of showing negligence by the conductor, but to show that the conductor had notice of the presence of the boys. Swanson v. Chicago City R. Co., 90 N. E. 210, 213, 242 Ill. 388.

In a prosecution for the larceny of a check given to defendant by a person with whom he had agreed to join in the purchase of a piece of property for speculative purposes, there was evidence that the check was given as a part of the contribution which the other person was to make to enable defendant to purchase the property, and that the check was not so used, but was appropriated by defendant to his own use. The check was written by defendant, and the drawer, who could not read, testified that he did not know when he delivered the check that it was made payable to the persons named as payees, but supposed that it was payable to the owner of the land which he and defendant intended purchase. Two days later another check was drawn payable to defendant's order for the remainder of the amount which the drawer was to contribute to the purchase of the land. Held, that this check and the stub, showing that it was payable to defendant, was admissible in evidence as part of the "res gestæ" bearing on the question as to a partnership and the credibility of the testimony of the drawer of the check. People v. Hart, 99 N. Y. Supp. 758, 763, 114 App. Div. 9.

In an action for the value of live stock seized under an execution against plaintiff's father, wherein it was claimed by plaintiff that the stock levied on was his share of stock purchased by his father for plaintiff and his brothers, who with their mother managed the homestead without the assistance of their father, who had turned over the business of carrying on the farm to them, giving them all the proceeds, one of plaintiff's brothers was permitted to answer a question as to what was the agreement between them as to the amount to be paid by each of them on the balance of the mortgage given by the father on the stock. Held proper, witness having testified that there was a division of the stock between the brothers and mother, and that there was a balance unpaid on the purchase price thereof; and hence it was competent to show that, when the stock was divided, provision was made for the balance due on the purchase of the same, as it was a part of the transaction which plaintiff claimed resulted in his becoming sole owner of the stock in controversy, and bore directly on the question of good faith, and was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ." Comeau v. Hurley, 123 N. W. 715, 717, 24 S. D. 275.

Statements of a purchaser to his vendors in the treaty of purchase are part of the "res gestæ" and admissible against him to show a mutual mistake in the description, though made in the absence of the person in whose name the legal title was taken. Moore v. Moore, 66 S. E. 598, 599, 151 N. C. 555.

In order for a statement to be a part of the "res gestæ," it must be so connected with the very transaction or fact under investigation as to constitute a part of it. On a prosecution for the murder of one who was shot while riding in a buggy, testimony that decedent stated to witness after the shooting that a person other than accused had ridden with decedent, and then left decedent before he reached the point where he was shot, was not admissible as "res gestæ," though the statement was made a couple of hours after the shooting, and the witness was the physician who had been called to attend decedent. Richards v. Commonwealth, 59 S. E. 1104, 1108, 107 Va. 881.

"Admissions of a principal, made during the transaction of the business for which the surety is bound, become a part of the 'res gestæ,' and are admissible against the surety." Balley v. McAlpin, 50 S. E. 388, 395, 122 Ga. 616.

Narratives

A declaration which is but a narrative of what occurred, and not an incident of the event, is not admissible as "res gestæ." Salas v. People, 118 Pac. 992, 993, 51 Colo. 461, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 252.

While a narrative of past events cannot be introduced as part of the "res gestæ," continuousness is not always measured by time;

the true inquiry being whether the declaration is a verbal act, illustrating or explaining other parts of the transaction of which itself is a part, or is merely a history or part of a history of a completed past affair. McMahon v. Chicago City R. Co., 88 N. E. 223, 224, 239 Ill. 334.

"The 'res gestæ' may be defined as those circumstances which are the automatic and undisguised incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act, indeed, must be, in contemplation of law, a part of the act itself. Narratives, unconnected with the principal facts, are universally rejected." Thus, where a street car came to a sudden stop, and a passenger was thrown from his seat and injured, and when he regained consciousness, while the conductor was removing him from the car, he inquired of the conductor the cause of the trouble, the statement of the conductor as to what had caused it was not admissible as res gestæ in an action for the injuries. Redmon v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 84 S. W. 26, 29, 185 Mo. 1, 105 Am. St. Rep. 558.

"The 'res gestæ' may be defined as those circumstances which are the undesigned incident of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible when illustrative of such act. These incidents may be separated from the act by a lapse of time more or less appreciable. They may consist of speeches of any one concerned, whether participant or bystander. They may comprise things left undone, as well as things done. Their sole distinguishing feature is that they should be the necessary incidents of the litigated act; necessary, in this sense, that they are part of the immediate preparations for or emanations of such act, and are not produced by the calculated policy of the actors. In other words, they must stand in immediate causal relation to the act—a relation not broken by the interposition of voluntary individual wariness, seeking to manufacture evidence for itself. Incidents that are thus immediately and unconsciously associated with an act, whether such incidents are doings or declarations, become in this way evidence of the character of the act. They are admissible, though hearsay, because in such cases, from the nature of things, it is the act that creates the hearsay, and not the hearsay the act." In a prosecution for homicide, testimony by defendant's sister that accused told her, within from two to five minutes after the killing that he killed decedent in self-defense, etc., was not admissible as "res gestæ," being a self-serving statement, in that it was a narrative of a past event, not sufficiently connected with the fact of the killing to illustrate. State v. McKenzie, 128 S. W. 948, 952, 228 Mo. 385 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Whart. Ev. § 259).

In an action against the owners of a vessel for injuries to sheep pelts, alleged to have been caused by negligent stowage, a letter written to plaintiffs by defendant's agents, through whom plaintiff had made a claim for damages, purporting to state the facts concerning the shipment and the manner in which the pelts were stowed, was a mere narrative of past events, not a part of the "res gestæ." Herman, Waldeck & Co. v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 83 Pac. 158, 159, 2 Cal. App. 167.

To justify the declarations of third parties to be admitted as part of the "res gestæ," they must be so connected with the transaction as to characterize or explain it. They must be more than a mere narrative of a past occurrence. Upon the trial of an indictment against M., an officer of a county, for assisting O. in obtaining from the county money not lawfully and justly due to O., evidence by one C. that O., upon coming to the place where he (C.) was from the bank where he (O.) had received the money, for the aiding in obtaining which M. had been indicted, O. told him that he had just come from the bank and had too much money was hearsay, and no part of the "res gestæ." State v. Mickler, 64 Atl. 148, 149, 73 N. J. Law, 513 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6130).

"It is said that events which speak for themselves through the instructive words and acts of participants are parts of the 'res gestæ,' but that evidence of the acts and words of the participants when narrating the evidence is mere hearsay." In an action for contribution under an alleged agreement of cosuretyship between defendant and plaintiff's testator for the payment of the note of a third party, which note plaintiff claimed was afterwards indorsed by them pursuant to said agreement, and was finally paid by her, declarations of the testator in respect to such agreement, made in his own interest in the absence of defendant, were not admissible as part of the "res gestæ." Chapman v. Pendleton, 59 Atl. 928, 26 R. I. 573.

In an action against a railroad company for killing an animal, the testimony of a witness that the section boss showed him where the animal was when struck, and stated that after it was struck he killed it, was not admissible as "res gestæ." Polindexter & Orr Live Stock Co. v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 88 Pac. 886, 887, 33 Mont. 338.

In an action against a gas company for injuries from an explosion of gas which escaped from an uncapped pipe, a statement by an employé made after the explosion as to his test of the piping in the house was not a part of the "res gestæ." Kenney v. South Shore Natural Gas & Fuel Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 363, 365, 134 App. Div. 859.

Statements of observers

The exclamation of a bystander contemporaneous with an occurrence is a part of the "res gestæ." Where something startling enough to produce nervous excitement occurs, spontaneous utterances of the parties present are admissible as a part of the "res gestæ," and the inquiry is whether they were made at a time and under such circumstances as to induce the belief that they were not the result of reflection or premeditation. And so, where, in an action against a street railroad company for injuries to a boy stealing a ride, the issue was whether the boy fell off the car or was kicked off by the conductor, a statement of a passenger made at the time the boy was observed riding on the step of the car and as the conductor was pulling the bell cord and starting to open the door that the boy was off was admissible as a part of the "res gestæ." Britton v. Washington Water Power Co., 110 Pac. 20, 22, 59 Wash. 440, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 140 Am. St. Rep. 858.

Declarations of bystanders may be so connected with a transaction as to characterize and be a part of it. When this is the case, they are admitted on the same theory as if they had been made by one of the actors. Thus, where a declaration or statement is made by a bystander during an altercation in which one of the parties shoots and kills the other, and which remark gives character to an act of the accused, which act is a proper subject of proof on the trial, such statement may be introduced in evidence as part of the "res gestæ." Baysinger v. Territory, 82 Pac. 728, 731, 15 Okl. 386 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 McClain, Cr. Law, § 412, and Elliott, Ev. § 550).

In an action by a passenger for the misconduct of the conductor, consisting of insulting language, the statement of a fellow passenger, who had heard the conductor's language, made to the passenger after the termination of the dispute, that it was a shame for a man to have to take anything like that, and that the passenger ought to have slapped the conductor, was inadmissible as the opinion of a stranger to the occurrence, and not a part of the "res gestæ." Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Marshall, 122 S. W. 946, 947, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 538.

In an action for death of a railway trackman by being struck by a train, evidence that on the morning in question witness saw the train and "talked about it running fast," not shown to have been contemporaneous with the passing of the train, was not "res gestæ," but was inadmissible as hearsay. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Gesswine, 144 Fed. 56, 60, 75 C. C. A. 214.

Spontaneity

Declarations to be "res gestæ" must be spontaneous, and not statements which are deliberate and prepared for a purpose. Thus, in an action against a city to recover for property alleged to have been destroyed through mob violence, a dispatch by the mayor of the city to the Governor of the state describing conditions and asking for troops, prepared by the legal department of such city, is not a part of the res gestæ, and is not competent against the city. Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. App. 293, 307, 308.

To constitute statements "res gestæ" they must be spontaneous, the transaction voicing itself. The person making the declarations need not have been a competent witness. Thomas v. State, 84 S. W. 823, 824, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 534, 122 Am. St. Rep. 712 (citing Kenney v. State, 79 S. W. 817, 65 L. R. A. 316).

Statements not made in defendant's presence

A declaration by an attorney claiming a half ownership in real estate for his services for successfully prosecuting an action therefor, made long after the making of the alleged contract to pay him a contingent fee of one-half of the property on his successfully prosecuting the action, and wholly disconnected with the transaction constituting the making of the contract, and in the absence of the client, is not a part of the "res gestæ," and is inadmissible. Batcheller v. Whittier, 107 Pac. 141, 143, 12 Cal. App. 262.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA

The acts and declarations either of strangers or of one of the parties to the action in his dealings with strangers are designated "res inter alios acta." Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Schmitz, 71 N. E. 1050, 1054, 211 Ill. 446.

Where a debtor was arrested on the complaint of an attorney for the creditor, and the debtor's release from custody was obtained on habeas corpus, the declarations of the judge in the habeas corpus proceedings were "res inter alios acta," and inadmissible in an action by the debtor against the creditor for false imprisonment. West v. A. F. Mesick Grocery Co., 50 S. E. 565, 566, 138 N. C. 166.

"Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet" means "a transaction between two parties ought not to operate to the disadvantage of a third." It relates only to the law of evidence. Carroll v. Rye Tp., 101 N. W. 894, 897, 13 N. D. 458.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR

The meaning of the maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is that the res, the thing, of itself, is evidence of negligence. Cunningham v. Dady, 83 N. E. 689, 690, 191 N. Y. 152.

In some cases the term "res ipsa loquitur" has been used as synonymous with "prima facie case," and it is sometimes spoken of as evidence raising a presumption.

Overcash v. Charlotte Electric Ry. Light & Power Co., 57 S. E. 377, 379, 144 N. C. 572, 12 Ann. Cas. 1040 (citing Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co., 24 N. C. 138; Womble v. Merchants' Grocery Co., 47 S. E. 493, 135 N. C. 574; State v. Barrett, 50 S. E. 506, 138 N. C. 630, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 626).

The "res ipsa loquitur doctrine" applies only where the circumstances speak for themselves, and, unexplained, point to negligence. Rosenblum v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 137 N. Y. Supp. 1078, 1079, 153 App. Div. 304.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" relates to cases involving negligence, and has no application to an alleged breach of warranty that a rope would be sufficient to lower a safe. Oregon Auto Dispatch v. Portland Cordage Co., 95 Pac. 498, 499, 51 Or. 583.

"Res ipsa loquitur," the thing speaks for itself, symbolizes that the occurrence of the injury raises a presumption of culpability on the part of the owner or manager of an apparatus. Delaware & H. Co. v. Dix, 188 Fed. 901, 905, 110 C. C. A. 535.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant upon an accident are themselves of such character as to justify a jury in inferring negligence as the cause of that accident, and it is applicable to two classes of cases, namely, when the relation of carrier and passenger exists and the accident arises from some abnormal condition in the department of actual transportation; second, where the injury arises from some condition or event that is in its very nature so obviously destructive of the safety of persons or property and is so tortious in its quality as, in the first instance at least, to permit no inference save that of negligence on the part of the person in control of the injurious agency. Strasburger v. Vogel, 63 Atl. 202, 203, 103 Md. 85 (quoting Benedick v. Potts, 40 Atl. 1068, 88 Md. 55, 41 L. R. A. 478). See, also, State, to Use of Charles, v. United Rys. & Electric Co., 60 Atl. 249, 251, 101 Md. 183; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Clark, 106 S. W. 1184, 1186. Thus, where defendant dock company, as incident to its business, operated a short line of railroad, over which it moved cars between defendant's docks and warehouse, it having complete management and control of the cars thereon, and while plaintiff was removing freight in a car on the side track to which he had been taken for that purpose by an employé of defendant, the car was violently moved injuring him, by the rear wheels of the second of two cars which were being moved from a side onto the main track failing to follow the switch track, thereby derailing the car and drawing it against that at which plaintiff was at work, the facts furnished evidence of defendant's negligence which, in the absence of explanation, authorized verdict for plaintiff. Fisher

"Res ipsa loquitur"—the thing speaks for itself—is applicable in the law of negligence to cases where the cause of an accident may be inferred from circumstances, or the law itself raises inferences from proved facts, unless the defendant produces evidence to explain or overcome such facts and show that no such inference is justified; thus, where plaintiff claimed that an unseen blow by which he was injured came from an iron pipe accidentally dislodged from refuse on an upper floor, and falling thence through an opening, rather than from an unseen assailant or an accidental fall, the doctrine was applicable. Huggard v. Glucose Sugar Refining Co., 109 N. W. 475, 480, 132 Iowa, 724.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur," literally translated "The thing itself speaks," means that when, through any instrumentality or agency under the management or control of a defendant or his servants, there is an occurrence, injurious to plaintiff, which in the ordinary course of things would not take place if the person in control were exercising due care, the occurrence itself, in the absence of explanation by defendant, affords prima facie evidence that there was want of due care. Mumma v. Easton & A. R. Co., 65 Atl. 208, 210, 73 N. J. Law, 653 (citing Thompson, Neg. §§ 15, 7635; Smith, Neg. p. 246; Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet, 30 Atl. 553, 57 N. J. Law, 224, 227-229; Sheridan v. Foley, 33 Atl. 484, 58 N. J. Law, 230, 232, 233; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheimer, 37 Atl. 132, 59 N. J. Law, 474, 476; Bergen County Traction Co. v. Demarest, 42 Atl. 729, 62 N. J. Law, 755, 756, 72 Am. St. Rep. 685; Shay v. Camden & S. Ry. Co., 49 Atl. 547, 66 N. J. Law, 334, 335; Paynter v. Bridgeton & M. Traction Co., 52 Atl. 367, 67 N. J. Law, 619, 625; Oglesby v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 76 S. W. 623, 638, 177 Mo. 272 (quoting with approval from Thompson, Neg., in dissenting opinion by Valliant, J.).

The meaning of the term "res ipsa loquitur" is that the thing itself speaks; that the accident itself raises a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, which he must rebut by showing that he took reasonable care to prevent the happening of the accident. The doctrine only applies where the machine, appliance, or other thing from which the injury results is shown to be under the management of defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those in control use proper care. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Swift, 72 N. E. 737, 741, 213 Ill. 307 (citing 1 Add. Torts, § 33; North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Cotton, 29 N. E. 899, 140 Ill. 486; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Barker, 70 N. E. 624, 209 Ill. 321). It does not apply to the case of one run over while walking on a railroad track in the nighttime. Frye v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 98 S. W. 566, 572, 200 Mo. 377, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069.

Where an accident itself, with all its surroundings, speaks in such way and is of such character as to show negligence on the part of defendant, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applies, and plaintiffs are entitled to recover, in the absence of other proof. Wood v. Wilmington City Ry. Co. (Del.) 64 Atl. 246, 247, 5 Pennewill, 369.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applies only in cases where the occurrence would not happen in the ordinary course, except by negligence on the part of defendant. Elliott v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 358, 359, 127 App. Div. 300. And while the doctrine does not permit a recovery without some proof of negligence, yet, if proof of the occurrence shows that the accident could not have happened without negligence according to the ordinary experience of mankind, the doctrine is applicable, though the precise omission or act of negligence is not specified. Levine v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 315, 316, 134 App. Div. 606.

Where the thing causing an injury is under the management of defendant, and the accident would not have ordinarily happened if those who had such management had used proper care, under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," proof of the happening of the event raises a presumption of the defendant's negligence, and casts upon him the burden of showing that ordinary care was exercised; but where the circumstances leave room for a different presumption, the reason of the rule fails, and the doctrine cannot be invoked. McGowan v. Nelson, 92 Pac. 40, 42, 36 Mont. 67.

Where the agency causing an injury is under the management and control of defendant, and the injury is such as in the ordinary course of things does not occur if those having such management and control use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in absence of explanation by defendant, that the injury resulted from negligence, and the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" applies. Bice v. Wheeling Electrical Co., 59 S. E. 626, 628, 62 W. Va. 685.

"Whenever injuries occur in the conducting of operations which common experience has shown can be safely carried on with the exercise of reasonable diligence, judgment, and care, the mere happening of an accident, unexplained, will be regarded as sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence." Defendant had a contract to sell and deliver timber on board cars to a railroad company, and, when the timber was ready for loading, plaintiff, a railroad timber inspector, was directed to inspect the timber, and while performing his duty was injured by the breaking of a rope by which a log was being rolled on skids onto the car, causing the log to roll back, striking other logs on the ground and causing injury. Held, that proof of such facts was sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the timber contractor, under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Jefferys v. Nebraska Bridge Supply & Lumber Co., 157 Fed. 932, 933.

The statement that "res ipsa loquitur" applies where there is no explanation by the defendant means that the rule applies where the defendant does not show the cause of the accident, and the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" means that in the ordinary experience of mankind the accident would not have happened without fault on the part of defendant. Minihan v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 83 N. E. 871, 873, 197 Mass. 367.

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" applies only when the circumstances are such as to afford just ground for a reasonable inference that, according to ordinary experience, the accident would not have occurred, except for want of due care. If causes other than negligence of the defendant might have produced the accident, the plaintiff is bound to exclude the operation of such causes by a fair preponderance of the evidence. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Webb, 102 N. W. 258, 260, 73 Neb. 136, 119 Am. St. Rep. 879.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," the thing speaks for itself, is a principle applied by the law where under the circumstances shown the accident presumably would not have occurred in the use of a machine if due care had been exercised, or, in the case of an elevator, when in its normal operation after due inspection. The doctrine does not dispense with the requirement that the person who alleges negligence must prove the fact, but relates only to the mode of proving it. The fact of the accident furnishes some evidence to go to the jury, requiring the defendant to go forward with his proof. The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of showing negligence, nor does it raise any presumption in his favor. Whether the defendant interposes any evidence or not, the plaintiff will not be entitled to verdict unless he satisfies the jury by a preponderance of the evidence that his injuries were caused by a defect attributable to the defendant's negligence. Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 50 S. E. 562, 564, 138 N. C. 60.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is an exception to the general rule that negligence is not to be inferred, but must be affirmatively proved, except in cases of absolute duty, or an obligation practically amounting to that of an insurer. Johns v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 Atl. 408, 409, 226 Pa. 319, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1081; Sowers v. McManus, 63 Atl. 601, 214 Pa. 244 (citing Zahniser v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 42 Atl. 707, 190 Pa. 350); Dalton v. Towanda Borough, 64 Atl. 547, 548, 215 Pa. 402.

The rationale of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is that, in some cases, the very nature of the accident, of itself and through the presumption it carries, supplies the requisite proof, and it applies when, under the circumstances, the accident presumably would not have happened if due care had been exercised. The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is available in a case wherein the declaration is for specific acts of negligence and no count charges negligence generally; but it is limited to a presumption of the negligence charged, which presumption defendant is called on to rebut by evidence of due care as to the matter complained of. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Groome, 52 South. 703, 704, 97 Miss. 201.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is one of evidence, and the force to be given to the mere happening of an occurrence depends upon all the circumstances surrounding the occurrence, and the application of the maxim depends upon the circumstances of each case. Pascell v. North Jersey St. Ry. Co., 69 Atl. 171, 172, 75 N. J. Law, 836 (citing 21 Enc. Law, p. 513).

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is a simple rule of evidence, and whether, under a given state of facts, the maxim is to be applied, is an inference to be reached by the jury and not by the court. In a case where one, himself in the exercise of due care, sustains an injury which is primarily traceable to the operation of some portion of a building, and the casualty is of a kind which does not ordinarily occur where a building has been properly constructed, a jury may be authorized to infer that the resultant injury was due to original defective construction. Monahan v. National Realty Co., 62 S. E. 127, 130, 4 Ga. App. 680.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is simply a rule of circumstantial evidence, permitting an inference to be drawn from proved facts, and its practical application is authorized by Civ. Code 1895, § 5157, providing that in arriving at a verdict the jury from facts proved, and sometimes from the absence of counter evidence, may infer the existence of other facts reasonably and logically consequent on those proved. Cochrell v. Langley Mfg. Co., 63 S. E. 244, 247, 5 Ga. App. 317.

The "res ipsa loquitur doctrine" is based upon the idea that every apparent injury which may only be explained by facts within the peculiar knowledge of the wrongdoer carries with it proof of its wrongful character requiring the wrongdoer to show a just excuse. Thompson v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co., 148 S. W. 484, 243 Mo. 336. The doctrine is based upon the general consideration that, where the management and control of the instrumentality which occasioned the injury are in the defendant, it is within defendant's power to produce evidence of the actual cause of the accident, which the plaintiff may be unable to produce. Its application presents principally the question of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to establish, or to justify the jury in inferring the existence of the traversable or principal fact in issue, the defendant's negligence. Nebraska Bridge Supply & Lumber Co. v. Jeffery, 169 Fed. 609, 611, 95 C. C. A. 137 (citing Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630). The doctrine simply calls upon the defendant, after proof of the accident, to give such evidence as will exonerate him, if any be, and relieves the plaintiff from the burden of proving the nonexistence of an adequate explanation or excuse. Sullivan v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 982, 983, 117 App. Div. 784 (quoting Clarke v. Nassau Electric R. R. Co., 41 N. Y. Supp. 78, 9 App. Div. 51).

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" is not one of substantive law, but is a rule of evidence only. Proof of an injury alone affords no evidence of negligence; but where the thing is shown to be under the management of defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, that the accident arose from want of care. Unless the circumstances surrounding an injury render it more probable that it resulted from the negligence of defendant than otherwise, the injury itself affords no just inference against defendant, and the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply. St. Louis, S. F. & T. Ry. Co. v. Cason (Tex.) 129 S. W. 394, 397.

The maxim of "res ipsa loquitur" may be termed a rule of evidence to the extent that, when properly applied, it raises a presumption of negligence sufficient to make a prima facie case for plaintiff, and call for an explanation from defendant. If the circumstances do not suggest superior knowledge or opportunity for explanation on defendant's part, or if plaintiff has equal or superior means of information, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply. Lynch v. Ninemire Packing Co., 115 Pac. 838, 840, 63 Wash. 423.

"Res ipsa loquitur" is a rule of evidence, whereby an unusual injury, caused by instrumentalities over which defendant has control, warrants a presumption of negligence; the occurrence being such as does not happen if reasonable care has been used. Sinkovitz v. Peters Land Co., 64 S. E. 93, 95, 98, 5 Ga. App. 788 (citing Benedict v. Potts, 40 Atl. 1067, 88 Md. 52, 41 L. R. A. 478; Palmer Brick Co. v. Chenall, 47 S. E. 329, 119 Ga. 842; 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6137, 6138).

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is that "where the charge of negligence is a general one, and the plaintiff can show that the loss or injury occurred under such circumstances that it may be reasonably inferred from the fact that injury did occur, and that, if ordinary care had been used by the party charged, the injury would not have resulted, he thereby makes out a prima facie case, and casts upon the defendant the burden of showing that he exercised that degree of care which, under the law, it was his duty to exercise in the particular case." Freeman v. Foreman, 125 S. W. 524, 526, 141 Mo. App. 359.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not dispense with the rule that the person alleging negligence must prove it; but it is simply a mode of proving negligence, and does not change the burden of proof. Lyles v. Brannon Carbonating Co., 52 S. E. 233, 234, 140 N. C. 25 (citing Labatt, Mast. & S. § 834; Womble v. Grocery Co., 47 S. E. 493, 135 N. C. 481; Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 50 S. E. 562, 138 N. C. 67). And while the doctrine does not dispense with the necessity of evidence of defendant's negligence, the attendant circumstances of the given case may be sufficient to raise an inference of negligence, without proof of any specific negligent act; but such inference must be directed to defendant as the person guilty of the negligence. Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Roach, 114 S. W. 418, 422, 423, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 95 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6136-6138).

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" negatives the degree of the proof required under certain circumstances, and is properly invoked in behalf of a case where the proof of negligence is furnished by the occurrence itself, and its application presents principally the question of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to justify the jury in inferring defendant's negligence. Eaton v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 88 N. E. 378, 379, 195 N. Y. 267.

The phrase "res ipsa loquitur," as applied to negligence cases, expresses the idea that, when an accident is shown to be of such a character, as in the light of ordinary experience, is inexplicable except as the result of negligence, then negligence is presumed. De Yoe v. Seattle Electric Co., 104 P. 647, 53 Wash. 588. Thus evidence that defendant's steam roller, used on the street in front of plaintiffs' residence, was run over their fence and lawn and against their house, is sufficient to sustain a finding that the injury was occasioned by the negligence of defendant. Harlow v. Standard Imp. Co., 78 Pac. 1045, 145 Cal. 477 (citing Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 40 Pac. 1020, 107 Cal. 549, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146). And so, under the rule of "res ipsa loquitur," a prima facie case of negligence is shown, where a basket from an overhead carrier system, of standard make and in general use, falls on a customer in a store. Anderson v. McCarthy Dry Goods Co., 95 Pac. 325, 49 Wash. 398, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 126 Am. St. Rep. 870 (citing Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 512, 513).

The "res," in the maxim "res ipsa loquitur," is not simply an accident resulting in injury, but the accident and the surrounding circumstances, and the doctrine does not permit a recovery without some proof of negligence, but, if the occurrence could not have happened without negligence according to the ordinary experience of mankind, the doctrine is applied, though the precise omission or act of negligence is not specified. Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, 86 N. E. 805, 806, 194 N. Y. 37, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 586.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" simply calls upon the defendant, after proof of an accident, to give such evidence as will exonerate him, and relieves the plaintiff from the burden of proving the nonexistence of an adequate explanation or excuse, the proof of the occurrence and the surrounding circumstances. The "res" makes a prima facie case; the legal presumption arising from such proof establishing prima facie the defendant's negligence. Moglia v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 70, 71, 127 App. Div. 243 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark v. Nassau E. R. Co., 41 N. Y. Supp. 78, 9 App. Div. 51; Kay v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 57 N. E. 751, 163 N. Y. 447; Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630).

"The meaning of the maxim 'res ipsa loquitur' is that, while negligence is not as a general rule to be presumed, yet the injury itself may afford sufficient prima facie evidence of negligence, and the presumption of negligence may be created by the circumstances under which the injury occurred. * * * Where negligence is thus presumed from the occurrence of the injury, defendant is called upon to rebut the prima facie case by showing that he took reasonable care to prevent the happening of such injury." Chicago City R. Co. v. Barker, 70 N. E. 624, 626, 209 Ill. 321.

The principle of "res ipsa loquitur" renders the question of negligence one for the jury, but does not relieve the plaintiff of the burden of proof. It does not raise any presumption in plaintiff's favor, but simply entitles the jury, in view of all the circumstances and conditions as shown by the plaintiff's evidence, to infer negligence, and to say whether, upon all the evidence, the plaintiff has sustained his allegation. Ross v. Double Shoals Cotton Mills, 52 S. E. 121, 123, 140 N. C. 115, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298 (citing Womble v. Grocery Co., 47 S. E. 493, 135 N. C. 474; Stewart v. Van Deventer Carpet Co., 50 S. E. 562, 138 N. C. 60; Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co., 24 N. C. 138; Aycock v. Raleigh & A. L. R. Co., 89 N. C. 323; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co., 19 S. E. 344, 114 N. C. 208, 26 L. R. A. 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786).

The part of the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" that, where defendant is in a position to clear away all doubts as to its alleged negligence, and fails to do so, it would be presumed that negligence existed, only applies where plaintiff has proved a state of facts which, while not free from question, is yet sufficient in the absence of explanation to justify an inference of negligence on defendant's part, and does not apply where the facts shown are equally consistent with the hypothesis that the injury was caused by the negligence of the injured person, or by that of defendant, or by both combined. Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Kowalski, 125 S. W. 3, 4, 103 Tex. 173. Thus the fact alone that a person who was walking is found dead beneath a railroad engine at a grade crossing raises no presumption that those operating the engine were negligent or in fault for the killing, and the burden rests upon one alleging such negligence to prove the same. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Chapman, 140 Fed. 129, 130, 71 C. C. A. 523. So, where a pedestrian was injured by colliding in the nighttime with a truck belonging to a railroad company, and standing on the sidewalk in front of the depot, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is not applicable. Tiborsky v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 102 N. W. 549, 550, 124 Wis. 243. But where a horse was killed on a railroad track by being struck by a train, the killing was presumably due to the railroad's negligence. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Cash, 96 S. W. 1062, 80 Ark. 284.

Where the injured party complains of a particular act of negligence, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," which is a presumption of negligence arising out of the happening of the accident, has no application. Gulf Pipe Line Co. v. Brymer (Tex.) 124 S. W. 1007, 1009.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applies only where on proof of the occurrence and the injury the existence of negligent default is the more reasonable probability, and it must not be allowed to prevail where, on proof of the occurrence without more, the matter rests only in conjecture. Dall v. Taylor, 66 S. E. 135, 136, 151 N. C. 284, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," that where the thing causing the injury complained of is shown to be under the management of defendant or his servant, and the occurrence is such that in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by defendant, that the occurrence arose from want of care, rests on the assumption that the thing is under the exclusive management of defendant, and the evidence of the true cause of the accident is accessible to him and inaccessible to the person injured, and it has no application where the accident is due to a defective appliance under the management of plaintiff, or to a case involving divided responsibility, where the unexplained accident may have been attributable to one of several causes, for some of which defendant is not responsible. Peters v. Lynchburg Light & Traction Co., 61 S. E. 745, 746, 108 Va. 333, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is uncertain, if not dangerous in practice, and should not be applied except when it not only supports the conclusion contended for, but also reasonably excludes all others. "The maxim 'res ipsa loquitur' is itself the expression of an exception to the general rule that negligence is not to be inferred, but to be affirmatively proved. The ordinary application of the maxim is limited to cases of an absolute duty, or an obligation practically amounting to that of an insurer. Cases not coming under one or both of these heads must be those in which the circumstances are free from dispute, and show, not only that they were under the exclusive control of the defendant, but that in the ordinary course of experience no such result follows as that complained of. It is sometimes said that the mere happening of an accident in this class of cases raises a presumption of negligence, but this is hardly accurate. Negligence is never presumed. If it were, it would be the duty of the court, in the absence of exculpatory evidence by the defendant, to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, whereas in these cases the question is for the jury. The accurate statement of the law is not that negligence is presumed, but that the circumstances amount to evidence from which it may be inferred by the jury." Minneapolis General Electric Co. v. Cronon, 166 Fed. 651, 659, 92 C. C. A. 345, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816 (quoting East End Oil Co. v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 42 Atl. 708, 190 Pa. 353). See, also, Allen v. Kingston Coal Co., 61 Atl. 572, 212 Pa. 54 (citing East End Oil Co. v. Pennsylvania Torpedo Co., 42 Atl. 707, 190 Pa. 350; Alexander v. Pennsylvania Water Co., 50 Atl. 991, 201 Pa. 252).

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" cannot be applied where no negligence on defendant's part is shown by direct evidence, and it is apparent that other causes may have led to the accident. Keenan v. McAdams & Cartwright Elevator Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 343, 344, 346, 129 App. Div. 117 (citing Duhme v. Hamburg-American Packet Co., 77 N. E. 387, 184 N. Y. 409, 112 Am. St. Rep. 615). See, also, Duhme v. Hamburg-American Packet Co., 77 N. E. 386, 387, 184 N. Y. 404, 112 Am. St. Rep. 615.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" has no application "unless the thing causing the accident is under the control of the defendant or his servants, and the accident is of a kind which does not ordinarily occur if due care has been exercised." Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 114 S. W. 658, 659, 662, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 12 (quoting and adopting 6 Thomp. Neg. § 7635). And where the act causing injury cannot be shown, defendant cannot be held liable, in the absence of any proof of negligence, by the application of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Young v. Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 446, 448.

The principle of "res ipsa loquitur" depends for its application on the circumstances and character of the occurrence, and not on the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on the defendant. In an action against the owner of a building, for injuries sustained by plaintiff owing to the fall of the elevator in the building, it was not necessary for plaintiff to prove the specific defect or misconduct, but sufficient to show facts from which the jury might fairly infer that the car was defective or negligently operated. Glassman v. Surpless, 103 N. Y. Supp. 789, 791, 53 Misc. Rep. 586 (quoting and adopting definition in Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 106 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630).

The application of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is not limited to cases involving the failure of some mechanical contrivance or machine in some unusual and unexpected manner to do its work properly, where the default is imputed to the negligence of its owner or the employé who is charged with the duty of keeping it in order. The doctrine is, not that in any case negligence can be assumed from the mere fact of an accident and an injury, but that in many cases the surrounding circumstances, which are necessarily brought into view by showing how the accident occurred, contain without further proof sufficient evidence of the defendant's duty and of his neglect to perform it. Fitzgerald v. Southern Ry. Co., 54 S. E. 391, 394, 395, 141 N. C. 530, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337 (citing Shear. & R. Neg. § 59; Hale, Torts, 482; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 843; Railroad v. Wood [Tex. Civ. App.] 63 S. W. 164).

A prima facie case of negligence is made out, under the rule of "res ipsa loquitur," if defendant is liable for negligence in selecting nurses or for the negligence of nurses selected; they having permitted a patient to be severely burned by hot-water bottles, while still under the influence of an anæsthetic given for the purpose of an operation which had just been performed. Adams v. University Hospital, 99 S. W. 453, 122 Mo. App. 675.

In cases resting on contract, the mere happening of the event will be prima facie evidence of a breach of contract, without further proof, under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur"; but in those cases not resting on contract, it must not only appear that the affair occurred, but the surrounding circumstances must be such as to raise a presumption that it happened on account of the failure of the defendant to perform a duty that it owed to the complaining party. In an action against a carrier for damages by reason of alleged negligence in allowing diseased cattle to escape from its pen, from whence they wandered into plaintiff's pasture, it appearing that the gate of the pen in which the cattle were placed was properly shut, and that it was not defective, and that the cattle could not have escaped unless they worked the gate loose or some one opened it, the evidence was insufficient to warrant a finding of negligence. Reynolds v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) 99 S. W. 569, 571.

Where the door of a car fell on an employé while he was endeavoring to open it to inspect the contents assigned to his employer, the occurrence of the accident was evidence of the faulty condition of the door, within the principle of "res ipsa loquitur," and the burden was on the carrier, to free itself from liability, to show that it had made a proper inspection reasonably calculated to discover the defect. Tateman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70 S. W. 514, 96 Mo. App. 448 (citing Blanton v. Dold, 18 S. W. 1149, 109 Mo. 74; Gallagher v. Edison Illuminating Co., 72 Mo. App. 576; Houston v. Brush, 29 Atl. 380, 66 Vt. 331, 342).

Under a count alleging negligence of defendant, and stating the nature and particulars of the accident, but not stating the particulars of the negligence, plaintiff may rely on the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," if the accident is of a kind to indicate that it would not have happened unless there was negligence. James v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 90 N. E. 513, 514, 204 Mass. 158.

The mere fact that an ornamental bracket fell from a building injuring a person does not raise the presumption of negligence, and the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply. Joyce v. Black, 75 Atl. 602, 603, 226 Pa. 408, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 863.

The mere fact that a part of some lumber which was being unloaded by defendant from a car under his control at the time as consignee fell and injured plaintiff's intestate, who was working near said car, does not raise a presumption of negligence on defendant's part; the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" not being applicable. Laforrest v. O'Driscoll, 59 Atl. 923, 925, 26 R. I. 547.

Injuries incident to use of electricity, gas, or fire

"Res ipsa loquitur" means that the thing speaks for itself; that the very occurrence itself imports negligence. In consideration of the dangerous character of electricity, when it is shown that one on a public street in a proper place is injured without fault on his part by improper insulation or derangement of an electric company's appliances, a presumption of negligence arises, which casts the burden on the company of showing that it exercised due care. Shawnee Light & Power Co. v. Sears, 95 Pac. 449, 455, 456, 21 Okl. 13.

Where a person was killed by an electric current from a telephone on his premises, the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" applies. Delahunt v. United Telephone & Telegraph Co., 64 Atl. 515, 517, 215 Pa. 241, 114 Am. St. Rep. 958.

One of the considerations on which the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" is based is that the person against whom it is applied has exclusive control of the thing which has produced the injury. The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" could not be applied to an action against a subway company for injuries received by plaintiff while passing a subway man-hole, caused by the explosion of gas ignited by a lamp held by some one near the man-hole; it being not shown who that person was, nor how gas came to be in the subway, and it appearing that, though the company owned the subway and "kept the same in repair," a gas company used it to carry pipes not under the care or control of defendant company. Robinson v. Empire City Subway Co., Ltd., 103 N. Y. Supp. 717, 718, 53 Misc. Rep. 593 (citing Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630).

The application of the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" depends on the facts and circumstances of each individual case; but the mere fact of the explosion of a gas regulator, which up to the time of the accident had properly performed its functions, is not a circumstance to which the rule may be applied. Marshall Window Glass Co. v. Cameron Oil & Gas Co., 59 S. E. 959, 961, 63 W. Va. 202.

In an action for injuries to plaintiff's health by an alleged leak of a gas main in a street near her residence, the fact that the leakage occurred did not establish a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the gas company. Hammerschmidt v. Municipal Gas Co., 99 N. Y. Supp. 890, 114 App. Div. 290 (citing Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co., 122 Mass. 219).

The mere proof that one set fire to grass on his land, and that the fire escaped to the land of another, did not raise the presumption of negligence against him, as the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply, but the burden was on the party injured to prove that he was negligent in starting the fire, or that he did not exercise ordinary care to confine the fire on his own land. Pfeiffer v. Aue, 115 S. W. 300, 302, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 98.

Injuries to employé

ligence under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," and the presumption does not arise unless the surrounding circumstances necessarily brought into view by showing how the accident occurred contain, without further proof, evidence of defendant's duty and of his neglect to perform it. The doctrine cannot be invoked between employer and employé, unless it appears from the circumstances attending the accident that except for some negligence of the master, either of omission or commission, the accident would not have happened. Feingold v. Ocean S. S. Co. of Savannah, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1018, 1020, 61 Misc. Rep. 638. So where a brakeman was thrown from the car by the giving way of something connected with the brake appliances, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" was not applicable in aid of his recovery, there being no affirmative proof of defendant's negligence. Hamilton v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 100 S. W. 671, 673, 123 Mo. App. 619. And so, where the crosshead and piston rod of a railway engine are so constructed and fastened that it is not possible, by the exercise of ordinary care, to discover incipient fractures forming in the concealed portions of the rod, without detaching the parts, and an injury is occasioned by the breaking of the piston rod within the crosshead, no presumption of negligence arises with respect to the sufficiency of the rod by reason of the mere occurrence of the accident, and the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply. Cederberg v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 111 N. W. 953, 955, 101 Minn. 100 (citing Labatt, Mast. & S. § 834; Ryder v. Kinsey, 64 N. W. 94, 62 Minn. 85, 34 L. R. A. 557, 54 Am. St. Rep. 623, and Waller v. Ross, 110 N. W. 252, 100 Minn. 7, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 721, 117 Am. St. Rep. 661, 10 Ann. Cas. 715).

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is inapplicable to negligence cases arising between master and servant because the possible causes of accidents during service are many, for some of which the master, and for others of which the servant, is responsible, and the happening of an accident does not indicate to which class its cause belongs. The burden in such cases is always on him who alleges that the master was guilty of causal negligence to establish that fact. A finding that an accident happened and that the servant injured was not at fault does not sustain this burden, because the accident may have been unavoidable, or may have resulted from the negligence of fellow servants, or from other causes for which the master is not liable. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Dixon, 139 Fed. 737, 740, 71 C. O. A. 555. Mere proof of accident or injury to a servant does not raise the presumption of negligence on the part of the master. Visman v. Southern Ry. Co. (Ky.) 89 S. W. 502, 503, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 469; Finn v. Oregon Water Power & Ry. Co., 93 Pac. 690, 691, 51 Or. 66; Redus v. Milner Coal & R. Co., 41 South. 634, 635, 148

Ala. 665; Kremer v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 96 S. W. 720, 727, 120 Mo. App. 247. And so, where the accident did not result from the condition of a pile driver which fell, the injured servant could not recover under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Swift, 72 N. E. 737, 741, 213 Ill. 307.

An employé, injured through a nut on the end of a shaft loosening allowing a pulley to fall on her, does not make out a prima facie case, under the rule of "res ipsa loquitur"; the attendant circumstances not suggesting the employer had failed in any duty owing the employé. Griffin v. Flank, 95 N. Y. Supp. 546, 48 Misc. Rep. 617.

The "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine cannot be applied to injury to an employé caused by the fall of a structure which he was assisting in tearing down. Henahan v. Lyons, 87 N. E. 602, 201 Mass. 269; Ferrick v. Eldlitz, 88 N. E. 33, 34, 35, 195 N. Y. 248, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837 (citing Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630; Henson v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 87 N. E. 85, 194 N. Y. 205, 19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 790). Or to injury received in a stone quarry. Mitchell Lime Co. v. Nickless (Ind.) 85 N. E. 728, 731; Bonin v. Ballard, 82 N. E. 702, 196 Mass. 524.

The application of the maxim "res ipsa loquitur" does not ordinarily depend upon the relation between the parties, except indirectly, so far as that relation defines the measure of duty imposed on the defendant. Under certain circumstances it may apply to a servant's injury caused by an agency of the master. The maxim at most raises a prima facie case of negligence, which is rebuttable. No presumption of negligence necessarily follows the plaintiff through the case, so as to compel the submission of the question of fact to the jury. Jenkins v. St. Paul City R. Co., 117 N. W. 928, 931, 105 Minn. 504, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," applicable to personal injuries to passengers, cannot be applied against a mining company, in an action against it for injuries to a miner, who was crushed by a descending cage. Southwestern Development Co. v. Boyd, 104 S. W. 1174, 1178, 7 Ind. T. 773. And it does not apply in an action by a mining employé for injuries received by the fall of a bucket down the mine shaft. Reino v. Montana Mineral Land Development Co., 99 Pac. 853, 855, 38 Mont. 291.

Mere proof that a freight car was derailed and overturned, and that a brakeman on the car was injured, does not cast on the railroad the burden of giving some adequate explanation of the accident that would free it from the imputation of negligence, since the rule of "res ipsa loquitur" is not applicable. Henson v. Lehigh Val. R. Co., 87 N. E. 85, 86, 194 N. Y. 205, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 790. But where plaintiff was injured in a rear-end collision, while he was riding in the caboose of a freight train in the performance of his duty, the fact of collision is sufficient to create a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the railroad company under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," though plaintiff was a servant, and not a passenger. St. Clair v. St. Louis & San Francisco R. Co., 99 S. W. 775, 778, 122 Mo. App. 519.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" was held not applicable to its full extent to the case of an accident resulting from the use of complicated machinery, wherein it appeared that a rod in a sawmill had parted at one of the places where it was joined, causing the sawyer to lose control of the carriage, which then ran back to and against a bumper at the end of the track, whereby plaintiff was thrown from the carriage and injured, and wherein it was therefore held that the mere fact that the accident happened, the rod being in the exclusive possession and control of the defendant, was not alone sufficient to establish a prima facie case of negligence on the part of defendant. Gomulak v. C. A. Smith Lumber Co., 107 N. W. 542, 543, 98 Minn. 149.

The essential import of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" in any given case is that on the facts proved plaintiff has, without direct proof of negligence, made out a prima facie case; so that, whether or not the doctrine obtains in a case between master and servant, it need not be invoked, where there is specific evidence, positive or circumstantial, bearing on the question of negligence. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co. v. Cunningham, 48 South. 109, 110, 112, 158 Ala. 369; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Rowsey's Adm'r, 62 S. E. 363, 369, 108 Va. 632. And so, where defendant's evidence established the cause of an accident resulting in injury to a servant, his right to recover did not depend on the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Kluska v. Yeomans, 103 Pac. 819, 821, 54 Wash. 465, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1121.

The mere happening of an accident and injury to an employé while stepping off the elevator in a building, does not justify the inference of negligence, and the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply. Foquet v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1105, 1107, 53 Misc. Rep. 121.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply to cases of the class to which a personal injury caused by the falling of a freight elevator belongs, and, when an employé is injured while operating such an elevator, the mere happening of an accident raises no presumption, and cannot serve as proof of the master's negligence. National Biscuit Co. v. Wilson, 82 N. E. 916, 917, 169 Ind. 442 (citing Hill v. Iver-Johnson Sporting Goods Co., 74 N. E. 303, 188 Mass. 75; Moran v. Racine Wagon Co., 26 N. Y. Supp. 852, 74 Hun. 454; Kirby v. Rainer Grand Hotel Co., 69 Pac.

378, 28 Wash. 705; Robinson v. Charles Wright & Co., 53 N. W. 938, 94 Mich. 283; Davidson v. Davidson, 48 N. W. 560, 40 Minn. 117; Haynie v. Hammond Packing Co., 103 S. W. 581, 126 Mo. App. 88; Rush v. Thos. D. Murphy, 112 N. W. 814, 135 Iowa, 376). The fact that a servant was killed by the fall, without any apparent cause, of a freight elevator in which he was riding, does not render the master liable under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Starer v. Stern, 91 N. Y. Supp. 821, 824, 100 App. Div. 393 (citing Moran v. Racine Wagon Co., 26 N. Y. Supp. 852, 74 Hun, 454; Hart v. Naumburg, 25 N. E. 385, 123 N. Y. 641; Ingram v. Fosburgh, 76 N. Y. Supp. 344, 73 App. Div. 129; Biddiscomb v. Cameron, 55 N. Y. Supp. 127, 35 App. Div. 561, affirmed in 57 N. E. 1104, 161 N. Y. 637; Bucher v. Prybil, 45 N. Y. Supp. 972, 19 App. Div. 126; Fink v. Slade, 72 N. Y. Supp. 821, 66 App. Div. 105). And so, where a safety clutch in a freight elevator wholly failed to act when an emergency arose, and the servant in no way contributed to such failure, its failure to act affords evidence of negligence on the part of the master under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." National Biscuit Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 80 N. E. 33, 35. But where deceased got on an elevator, and after the elevator had risen a few feet the bottom of it was torn out, and there was evidence that it was in the habit of shaking, tilting, and jerking, as though the sides of the bottom caught, it was held that the facts were sufficient to justify an inference of defendant's negligence under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Samuels v. McKesson, 99 N. Y. Supp. 294, 113 App. Div. 497.

In an action for injuries to a servant by the sudden starting of a printing press, instructions that, if the press started of its own accord after it had been properly stopped, such fact, unexplained, was some evidence of negligence on defendant's part, and that, if the jury found that the belt shipper was pushed back to the extreme limit in its proper way, then the fact that it started up was in itself some evidence of negligence on the part of defendant or his superintendent in allowing the defect to exist, properly presented the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Byrne v. Boston Woven Hose & Rubber Co., 77 N. E. 696, 697, 191 Mass. 40.

Injuries to passenger

"Res ipsa loquitur," which, literally translated, means that 'the thing speaks for itself,' is merely a short way of saying that the circumstances attendant upon an accident are themselves of such a character as to justify a jury in inferring negligence as the cause of that accident; and the doctrine which it embodies, though correct enough in itself, may be said to be applicable to two classes of cases only, viz.: First, when the relation of carrier and passenger exists, and the accident arises from some abnormal condition in the department of actual transportation; second, where the injury arises from some condition or event that is in its very nature so obviously destructive of the safety of person or property, and is so tortious in its quality, as in the first instance, at least, to permit no inference save that of negligence on the part of the person in control of the injurious agency. But it is obvious that in both instances more than the mere isolated, single, segregated fact that an injury has happened must be known. The injury, without more, does not necessarily speak or indicate the cause of that injury. It is colorless; but the act that produced the injury being made apparent may, in the instances indicated, furnish a ground for a presumption that negligence set that act in motion. The maxim does not go to the extent of implying that you may, from the mere fact of an injury, infer what physical fact produced the injury; but it means that when the physical act has been shown, or is apparent, and is not explained by the defendant, the conclusion that negligence superinduced it may be drawn as a legitimate deduction of fact." Thus the mere fact that a passenger in a street was injured does not of itself raise the presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier. State, to Use of Charles, v. United Rys. & Electric Co., 60 Atl. 249, 251, 101 Md. 183 (quoting and adopting Benedick v. Potts, 40 Atl. 1067, 88 Md. 55, 56, 41 L. R. A. 478). See, also, Wilbur v. Rhode Island Co., 61 Atl. 601, 602, 27 R. I. 205 (quoting Benedick v. Potts, 40 Atl. 1067, 1068, 88 Md. 52, 41 L. R. A. 478).

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" means that the affair speaks for itself. Thus, where plaintiff's intestate was directed by his superior to assist in unloading a box car loaded with cotton bales, and while opening the sliding door of the car as instructed, and before he could get away, a large cotton bale fell out and crushed him, and it appeared that the car was loaded two bales deep, one bale on the end of the other, and the bales opposite the doors were not pinned or tied together, or boarded in, it was held that the circumstances surrounding the accident were sufficient to establish a prima facie case of defendant's negligence under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Chamberlain v. Southern Ry. Co., 48 South. 703, 704, 159 Ala. 171. And so, where, in an action for injury to an employé through the falling of a pile of lumber, there was evidence that the master, through its vice principal, not only had actual charge and control of piling the lumber, but directed the manner in which it should be piled, and that no particular pains should be exercised, and that no cross-strips should be used, and there was evidence that plaintiff was directed to go to the very place where he was injured, and it is self-evident that, if properly piled, the lumber would not have fallen of its own accord, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is applicable, so that a prima facie case of negligence is made out. Hardesty v. Largey Lumber Co., 86 Pac. 29, 30, 31, 34 Mont. 151.

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is defined in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (section 59), where it is said: "It is not that, in any case, negligence can be assumed from the mere fact of an accident and an injury; but in these cases the surrounding circumstances, which are necessarily brought into view by showing how the accident occurred, contain, without further proof, sufficient evidence of the defendant's duty and of his neglect to perform it. The fact of the casualty and the attendant circumstances may themselves furnish all the proof of negligence that the injured person is able to offer, or that it is necessary to offer." And the court says: "The res, therefore, includes the attendant circumstances, and, so defined, the application of the rule presents principally the question of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to establish, or to justify the jury in inferring, the existence of the traversable or principal fact in issue—the defendant's negligence. The maxim is also in part based on the consideration that, where the management and control of the thing which has produced the injury is exclusively vested in the defendant, it is within his power to produce evidence of the actual cause of the accident, which the plaintiff is unable to present." Hence, where there were two actors in the collision, the motorman and the driver of a horse, which became frightened and ran into the side of the car on which plaintiff was a passenger, it was error to charge that the mere happening of the accident created a presumption of negligence on the part of the street railway company. Munzer v. Interurban St. Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 21, 23, 45 Misc. Rep. 568. See, also, Grant v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 202, 204, 99 App. Div. 422.

The scope of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is well illustrated in Shear. & R. Neg. § 59, where it is said: "Where a thing which causes the injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who had the management of it used proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of an explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care. So, also, where it is shown that the accident is such as that its real cause may be the negligence of the defendant, and whether it is so or not is within the knowledge of the defendant, the plaintiff may give the required evidence of negligence, without himself explaining the real cause of the accident, by proving the circumstances, and thus raising a presumption that if the defendant does not choose to give the explanation, the real cause was negligence on the part of the defendant." Thus the sudden starting of a street car with a jerk of sufficient violence to throw to the ground a passenger, who had placed her foot on the running board to alight at the crossing which the car was slowly approaching, justifies an inference of negligence. Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker, 113 S. W. 449, 452, 130 Ky. 360, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185 (quoting and adopting Shear. & R. Neg. § 59: citing Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630; Breen v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 16 N. E. 60, 109 N. Y. 297, 4 Am. St. Rep. 450; Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co., 30 Atl. 908, 80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154, 45 Am. St. Rep. 332; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Thalheimer, 37 Atl. 132, 59 N. J. Law, 474). So the occurrence of a sudden lurch or jerk of a street railway car of a sufficient violence to throw a passenger off the platform, who was then preparing to alight, and awaiting the stoppage of the car for that purpose, justifies the inference of a breach of duty upon the part of those operating the car within the maxim, "res ipsa loquitur." Nirk v. Jersey City, H. & P. St. Ry. Co., 68 Atl. 158, 160, 75 N. J. Law, 642 (citing Scott v. Bergen County Traction Co., 43 Atl. 1060, 63 N. J. Law, 407). See, also, Paul v. Salt Lake City R. Co., 83 Pac. 563, 565, 30 Utah, 41 (citing Nellis, St. R. R. p. 576; 2 Thomps. Com. Neg. § 2830; United Rys. & Electric Co. v. Beidelman, 52 Atl. 913, 95 Md. 480; Lincoln St. Ry. Co. v. McClellan, 74 N. W. 1074, 54 Neb. 672, 60 Am. St. Rep. 736; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Blumenthal, 43 N. E. 809, 160 Ill. 40; Doolittle v. Southern Ry. Co., 40 S. E. 133, 62 S. C. 130; Bosqui v. Sutro R. R. Co., 63 Pac. 682, 131 Cal. 390; and Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Nunn, 98 Fed. 963, 39 C. C. A. 364; Lincoln Traction Co. v. Shepherd, 107 N. W. 764, 765, 74 Neb. 369.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is applied in an action for a casualty to a passenger on a street car, or other vehicle in the control of a defendant, only when the accident is one that, according to ordinary experience, does not happen if the vehicle is operated with proper care. The improbability of the event happening under good management is what gives it probative force as evidence of negligence. Some injuries to passengers in vehicles proclaim negligence on the part of the carrier, or indicate it so strongly as to call on the carrier for an explanation. Collisions of two trains or two street cars, or the overturning of a car, have this effect, because experience has shown them to be due generally to carelessness. But not every casualty to a passenger traveling on a street car or railway train will constitute evidence of negligence and transfer to the railway company the burden of proof. This is so because casualties will happen in using those modes of conveyance under the most careful management, and a common carrier of passengers is not held to be an insurer of their safety. It is true a contractual relation exists in such cases, but the carrier does not agree to carry the passengers safely in every contingency, but only in so far as it can be done by using great care. Trotter v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 99 S. W. 508, 510, 122 Mo. App. 405 (citing Dougherty v. Missouri R. Co., 81 Mo. 325, 330, 51 Am. Rep. 239; Och v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 31 S. W. 962, 130 Mo. 27, 51, 36 L. R. A. 442; Clark v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 29 S. W. 1013, 127 Mo. 197). Mere injury to a passenger while aboard a car or while alighting from it creates no presumption that it was caused by negligence of the carrier operating the car; but it must be first shown the injury came from the movement of the car by those in charge of it, or from something connected therewith, or in control of the carrier, and then it is presumed that the thing causing the injury was due to the carrier's negligence, throwing on it the burden of disproving the prima facie case. Wyatt v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 103 Pac. 892, 893, 156 Cal. 170. Thus, where the injured passenger's dress was caught while she was alighting from the front platform so firmly that some one pulled her towards the car to loosen her dress, it was insufficient as a matter of law, notwithstanding the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," to show negligence on the theory that the platform was defective. Thomas v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 79 N. E. 749, 750, 193 Mass. 438 (citing Faulkner v. Boston & M. R. R., 72 N. E. 976, 187 Mass. 254; Wadsworth v. Boston El. Ry. Co., 66 N. E. 421, 182 Mass. 572; Obertoni v. Boston & M. R. R., 71 N. E. 980, 186 Mass. 481, 67 L. R. A. 422; Hill v. Iver-Johnson Sporting Goods Co., 74 N. E. 303, 188 Mass. 75). And the inference of negligence was not justified where a train started so suddenly that the passenger was obliged to seize hold of the frame of the doorway of the car, the door of which closed, injuring her finger. Goold v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 1106, 1107, 59 Misc. Rep. 36.

Proof of an accident to a passenger, without evidence that it was caused by apparatus wholly under the carrier's control and furnished and applied by it, or by some defect in machinery, cars, or tracks, and that the accident was of such character as would not ordinarily occur if due care was used, will not raise a prima facie presumption of negligence under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," though in certain cases mere proof of the accident does, under that doctrine, raise such presumption. Barnes v. Danville St. Ry., etc., Co., 85 N. E. 921, 923, 235 Ill. 566, 126 Am. St. Rep. 237. So, where a passenger is struck by a missile thrown by a bystander, no presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier arises from the mere fact of the injury. Woas v. St. Louis Transit Co.,

The rationale of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is that in some cases the very nature of the act complained of may, of itself and through the presumption it carries, supply the requisite proof of negligence. The sound rule on the subject, declared in an early case and often approved by the courts, is: "Where the thing is shown to be under the management of defendant or its servants, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. The res ipsa loquitur doctrine applies to injury received by a passenger on a freight train, where cars were coupled so violently that he was thrown from a trunk on which he was sitting in the caboose, through a side door, to the ground, and a water keg in the car was overturned, etc. Mitchell v. Chicago, & A. R. Co., 112 S. W. 291, 294, 132 Mo. App. 143 (citing Dougherty v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 9 Mo. App. 478; Id., 81 Mo. 325, 51 Am. Rep. 239; Trotter v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 99 S. W. 508, 122 Mo. App. 405; St. Clair v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 99 S. W. 775, 122 Mo. App. 519; Labatt, Mast. & S. § 834; 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law [2d Ed.] 512, 513). But where a passenger's injury was caused by the sudden closing of the car door against his hand as it rested on the door frame, any presumption of negligence arising from the accident was overcome by the uncontradicted evidence that the catch provided for the car door was in good repair and that the train was not operated at a dangerous rate of speed. Goss v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 87 Pac. 149, 150, 48 Or. 439.

The maxim "res ipsa loquitur" is merely a rule of evidence applicable in a certain class of cases, and is generally applied in cases of injuries to passengers. The maxim, when applicable to the facts and circumstances of a particular case, is not intended to, and does not, dispense with establishing negligence. In all cases when negligence is the gist of the action, the negligence must be proved; but in case of an injury to a passenger he is only required to prove that the injury was occasioned by a collision, derailing or upsetting of coaches, breaking of machinery or appliances, or things of that character, or through some act or acts of the servants operating machinery or appliances, or in the management of the instrumentalities or the means used in the business over which the carrier has control, and for the conduct and management of which he is responsible. Christensen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 99 Pac. 676, 678, 35 Utah, 137, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255, 18 Ann. Cas. 1150. Where a collision or derailment occurs, or there is an accident to the machinery or appliances used as a means of transportation, evidence of the accident and of the passenger's injuries arising therefrom, without other proof raises the presumption of negligence. The thing speaks for itself. "Res ipsa loquitur." Lincoln Traction Co v. Shepherd, 104 N. W. 882, 883, 74 Neb. 369; Russell v. Seattle R. & S. Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 288, 47 Wash. 500; Goodloe v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 96 S. W. 482, 484, 120 Mo. App. 194; Bamberg v. International Ry. Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301, 53 Misc. Rep. 403; Dearden v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 93 Pac. 271, 273, 33 Utah, 147. The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" is applicable where a manilla rope used in the operation of an inclined railway broke, the safety appliance did not work, the device on the car did not hold it and also broke, and the car fell to the bottom of the incline. Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1104, 64 Misc. Rep. 558 (citing and adopting Hogan v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 43 N. E. 403, 149 N. Y. 23; Axlebrood v. Rosen, 47 N. Y. Supp. 164, 21 Misc. Rep. 352; Flinn v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 22 N. Y. Supp. 473, 67 Hun, 631). The collapse of a trapdoor forming a part of the floor of a street car, under the weight of a passenger who was simply walking thereon, resulting in injury to her, is evidence of negligence under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." Jorden v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co., 99 S. W. 492, 493, 122 Mo. 330.

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" is based on the apparent fact that the particular accident could not have happened without negligence on the part of the carrier, or upon the literal meaning of the expression that the thing itself speaks and shows prima facie that the carrier was negligent. Negligence will not be presumed from the mere fact of accident, which is as consistent with the presumption that it was unavoidable as it is with negligence; and therefore, if it be left in doubt what the cause of the accident was, or if it may as well be attributable to the act of God or unknown causes as to negligence, there is no such presumption. Where an injury to a passenger on a street car was caused by the blowing out of the controller, and the company had control over the equipment and operation of the car, and the passenger was not charged with contributory negligence, the company was prima facie guilty of actionable negligence; it being presumed that the accident was caused by a defect in the controller. Firebaugh v. Seattle Electric Co., 82 Pac. 995, 996, 40 Wash. 658, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 836, 111 Am. St. Rep. 990 (citing and adopting Nellis, Street Railroad Accident Law, pp. 590, 591, and citing and explaining Hawkins v. Front St. Cable Ry. Co., 28 Pac. 1021, 3 Wash. 592, 16 L. R. A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72; Allen v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 77 Pac. 204, 35 Wash. 221, 66 L. R. A. 804; Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co., 80 Pac.

1101, 39 Wash. 77). See, also, Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Newmiller, 74 N. E. 410-411, 215 Ill. 383.

If proof of the occurrence shows that the accident was such as could not have happened without negligence according to the ordinary experience of mankind, the doctrine is applied, even if the precise omission or act of negligence is not specified, and when it does not appear that the accident was owing to some act done or to some act not done. It is applied when the inference of negligence is required by the nature of the occurrence. If the res, or the entire occurrence as proved, could not have happened without negligence of some kind, negligence is presumed, without showing what kind, and the burden of explanation is thrown on the defendant. But where a passenger, approaching an elevated railroad platform in order to gain it, pressed his hand against the glass of a locked door with sufficient force to break it, such facts were insufficient to raise a presumption that the door was improper for the purpose for which it was constructed, or that the breakage arose from any defect in the glass or door, under the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." McCormack v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 117 N. Y. Supp. 532, 534, 132 App. Div. 703 (quoting and adopting definition in Robinson v. Consolidated Gas Co. of New York, 86 N. E. 805, 191 N. Y. 40, 28 L. R. A. [N. S.] 586).

The "res," of the maxim "res ipsa loquitur," is not simply an accident resulting in injury, but the accident and the surrounding circumstances necessarily shown by proving how the accident occurred, or, in other words, the occurrence as it appears by proof of the accident. Thus, where plaintiff, who was riding in defendant's passenger elevator, was struck by a piece of mortar which fell down the shaft, and there was evidence that mortar had been allowed to protrude into the shaft, so as to be liable to be broken off by constant vibration, and defendant undertook to show that the condition of the mortar was not necessarily dangerous, and that it had exercised all reasonable care to inspect and guard against such accidents, the court should have instructed that the verdict must be for defendant, in the absence of evidence that it knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that the mortar was in such condition that a reasonably prudent person would believe that it might fall; and an instruction which, after giving in general terms the rule of "res ipsa loquitur," stated negligence might be found from the mere happening of the accident, unexplained, stated the case too broadly. Frahm v. Siegel Cooper Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 90, 92, 131 App. Div. 747 (quoting and adopting definition in Griffen v. Manice, 59 N. E. 925, 166 N. Y. 188, 52 L. R. A. 922, 82 Am. St. Rep. 630).

The doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" does not apply where the accident might as plausibly have resulted from negligence on the part of the passenger as on the part of the carrier; nor is it applicable to the death of a passenger from circumstances that are personal and peculiar to him, and not by reason of any management of or accident to the train itself. Price v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. Ry. Co., 88 S. W. 575, 578, 75 Ark. 479, 112 Am. St. Rep. 79.

Injuries to traveler on street or highway

Where a street was originally constructed in a proper manner, one injured by a defect therein cannot recover against the municipality on the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," which is the rule that where the thing which causes the injury is under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management or control use proper care, it affords sufficient evidence, in the absence of an explanation by defendant, that it arose from negligence; for the streets are not only under the control of the municipality, but are constantly used by the traveling public. City of Cortin v. Benton, 152 S. W. 241, 242, 151 Ky. 483, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591.

"The doctrine of 'res ipsa loquitur' does not apply to collisions of passers in highways." Stone v. Forest City Exp. Co., 74 Atl. 23, 24, 105 Me. 237. See, also, Luecke v. Graham, 100 S. W. 505, 506, 123 Mo. App. 212; Sauer v. Eagle Brewing Co., 84 Pac. 425, 426, 427, 3 Cal. App. 127. But the doctrine applies to a railroad crossing accident, when the facts indicate that, had deceased done what he was bound to do, the accident would not have happened. Clemons v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 119 N. W. 104, 106, 137 Wis. 387.

Where one lawfully on a public street of a city was injured by the fall of an awning attached to a building, there was a presumption of negligence on the part of the persons maintaining the awning, which, unexplained, was sufficient to support a verdict for the person injured. McHarge v. M. M. Newcomer & Co., 100 S. W. 700, 705, 117 Tenn. 595, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298. See, also, Waller v. Ross, 110 N. W. 252, 253, 100 Minn. 7, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 721, 117 Am. St. Rep. 661, 10 Ann. Cas. 715.

The rule of "res ipsa loquitur" is founded upon the doctrine of probabilities. The presumption arises from the inherent nature and character of the act causing the injury. Presumptions arise from the doctrine of probabilities. The future is measured and weighed by the past, and presumptions are created from the experience of the past. When a thing that causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care. In an action for injuries to plaintiff by being thrown to a sidewalk by the sudden raising of trap elevator doors in the sidewalk over which plaintiff was passing at the time, it having been admitted that the doors were raised by defendant's servants, it was proper for the court to refuse to charge that defendant's negligence could not be presumed from the happening of the accident. Bowley v. Mangrum & Otter, 84 Pac. 990, 998, 3 Cal. App. 229 (citing Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 40 Pac. 1021, 107 Cal. 549, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146; Dixon v. Plums, 33 Pac. 268, 98 Cal. 384, 20 L. R. A. 698, 35 Am. St. Rep. 180; Johnson v. Walsh, 85 N. W. 910, 83 Minn. 74; Shear. & R. Neg. § 60).

Where, after the completion of a subway by defendant contractor, the sidewalk caved in under the weight of a pedestrian, the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" applied, and imposed on defendant the burden of proving that he was not guilty of negligence. Rockwell v. McGovern, 88 N. E. 436, 202 Mass. 6, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1022.

An injury caused by a street car leaving the track and striking a wagon in which plaintiff was riding is within the maxim "res ipsa loquitur," and proof of the injury will justify a recovery, unless defendant shows that it was not at fault. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Giese, 82 N. E. 232, 233, 229 Ill. 260.

Race

Upon the question of race ancestry of a person, the person involved is often the best evidence to produce; it being a case of "res ipsa loquitur." United States v. Hung Chang, 134 Fed. 19, 27, 67 C. C. A. 93.

RES JUDICATA

See Res Adjudicata.

RESALE

A "resale" is one of the well-known remedies in this country of the seller of personal property. If there is such a remedy in the case of real property, it has never been recognized or adopted in this state. Swartz v. City & Suburban Realty Co., 67 Atl. 283, 284, 106 Md. 290.

RESCIND

Under the rule that the effect of a pleading is not necessarily determined by the technical definition of a single word, but that words used in a pleading must be construed with reference to the context, and when it is apparent that a word is not used in its statutory sense it will be interpreted in relation to the pleading as a whole, in an action to recover sums paid under a contract of conditional sale on the retaking of possession by the seller, where the answer alleged that the seller rescinded and canceled the contract on default in payment of the price by the buyer, the words "rescind" and "cancel" are not used to indicate a statutory rescission of the contract. Pfeiffer v. Norman, 133 N. W. 97, 98, 22 N. D. 168, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891.

RESCISSION

The word "rescission" has a well-defined meaning in law, and includes the idea of restoration of both parties to a contract to their status quo, and return by each to the other of the consideration given and received. Relger v. Turley, 131 N. W. 866, 869, 151 Iowa, 491; Pugh v. Stigler, 97 Pac. 566, 567, 21 Okl. 854 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Warv. Vend. § 869, and citing and adopting Lewis v. Boskins, 27 Ark. 61).

"Rescission of a contract" is the act of canceling it by restoring the conditions existing immediately before it was made. Rescission is effected by each party returning to the other what has been received pursuant to the contract, or its equivalent." Raymond v. Edelbrock, 107 N. W. 194, 195, 15 N. D. 231.

"Rescission" of a contract on the ground of fraud is not a mental process, undisclosed and unacted upon. It requires affirmative action immediately upon its discovery, some overt act and outward manifestation of the intention to apprise the other party to the contract of the right asserted. Brown v. Gordon-Tiger Co., 97 Pac. 1042, 1046, 44 Colo. 311 (quoting and adopting definition in Richardson v. Lowe, 149 Fed. 625, 79 C. C. A. 317).

The revocation of a contract of sale by agreement of the parties, or by an attempt of one party to revoke, acceded to by the other, or by a breach by one party which precludes him from any remedy thereon, and for which the other party revokes it, constitutes "rescission." J. K. Armsby Co. v. Grays Harbor Commercial Co., 123 Pac. 32, 34, 62 Or. 173.

A contract is made by the joint will of two parties, and can only be "rescinded" by their joint will; but one party may so wrongfully repudiate it as to authorize the other to renounce it and refuse to be longer bound thereby, as when his acts and conduct evince an intent to no longer be bound. McAllister-Coman Co. v. Mathews, 52 South. 416, 417, 167 Ala. 361, 140 Am. St. Rep. 43.

The fact that meat sold on the open market on the buyer's account was not smoked meat, whereas the meat contracted for was of that class, did not constitute a "rescission" by the seller of the contract of sale, where it was shown that smoking was a process which the meat was subjected to prior to shipment, and the buyer failed to give any shipping directions, and the meat was sold on the seller's home market without shipment. Bonds v. Thos. J. Lipton Co., 37 South. 805, 807, 85 Miss. 209.

Where the vendor was unable to convey good title within a stipulated time, as agreed, and plaintiff, instead of asserting his rights under the contract, acquiesced in defendant's repudiation thereof, and demanded the return of the purchase money paid, there was a "rescission of the contract by consent of the parties" within Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 5, authorizing rescission by consent of the parties. Carter v. Fox, 103 Pac. 910, 912, 11 Cal. App. 67.

RESCUE

An escape is where one who is under arrest gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law, and where an escape from confinement is effected by the prisoner with force, it is called a "prison breaking," and where it is effected by others with force, it is known as a "rescue." State v. Sutton, 84 N. E. 824, 826, 170 Ind. 473.

Penal Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 40) § 1692, providing that a person who by force or fraud "rescues" a prisoner from lawful custody or from an officer or other person having him in lawful custody is guilty of a felony if the prisoner was held on a charge, commitment, arrest, conviction, or sentence of felony, or misdemeanor, is not limited in its application to a case where the prisoner was held by a magistrate or other lawful authority upon a charge, commitment, arrest, conviction, or sentence, but extends to a case where an officer or other person holds one in lawful custody prior to his arraignment. People v. Marks, 135 N. Y. Supp. 523, 524, 75 Misc. Rep. 404.

RESERVATION

See Indian Reservation; Military Reservation.

Subject to reservation, see Subject to.

A "reservation" is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself, issuing out of the thing granted, or out of the general words of description in a grant. Frank v. Meyers, 11 South. 832, 833, 97 Ala. 437; Dee v. King, 77 Vt. 230, 59 Atl. 839, 840, 68 L. R. A. 860; Dyson v. Bux, 114 Pac. 1092, 1093, 84 Kan. 596.

"A 'reservation' is always of a thing not in esse, but newly created or reserved out of the land or tenement demise." "It must be to the grantor, and not to a stranger to the deed." Dawson v. Western Maryland R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 305, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678 (quoting Co. Lit., 47a, and Shep. Touch. p. 80).

A "reservation" is something issuing from or coming out of the thing granted, and must be to the grantor or party executing the conveyance, and not to a stranger. White v. City of Marion, 117 N. W. 254, 139 Iowa, 479.

"A 'reservation' is never any part of the estate itself, but something issuing out of it, as, for instance, rent or some right to be exercised in relation to the estate." Westlake v. Koch, 31 N. E. 321, 322, 134 N. Y. 61 (quoting and adopting definition in Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y. 321).

A "reservation" is something extracted from the whole res covered by the general terms of the grant, lessening the thing granted from what it would otherwise have been. Hough v. Porter, 98 Pac. 1083, 1091, 51 Or. 318.

A "reservation" in a deed "is something taken back out of that which is granted, as, for instance, rent, or some right to be exercised, as the cutting of timber." So, where defendant transferred property subject to a trust deed made by him to secure a loan, reserving for his benefit and as surety for the loan the rents and control of the property during the life of the deed, and his agent rented the premises to plaintiff, defendant was plaintiff's landlord, and the proper party defendant in a suit for injuries due to the defective condition of the premises. Meyers v. Russell, 101 S. W. 606, 608, 124 Mo. App. 317 (quoting in support of the definition Youngerman v. Board of Sup'rs of Polk County, 81 N. W. 166, 110 Iowa, 731; Cutler v. Tufts [Mass.] 3 Pick. 274; Randall v. Randall, 59 Me. 340; Gould v. Howe, 23 N. E. 602, 131 Ill. 490).

A "reservation" has been defined to be an interest retained by a grantor out of the body of the thing granted. Marshall v. Trumbull, 28 Conn. 183, 73 Am. Dec. 667. Another definition is: "A clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself issuing out of the thing granted and not in esse before." 4 Kent's Comm. 468. In Winston v. Johnson, 42 Minn. 398, 45 N. W. 958, the court defined a reservation as "something merely created or reserved out of the thing granted that was not in existence before." In Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y. 315, the court said: "A reservation is always something which is taken back out of that which is clearly granted." In Parataria Canning Co. v. Ott, 37 South. 121, 84 Miss. 737, the court said: "A reservation in a deed must not only be, as hereinbefore pointed out, of something which would otherwise, by operation of the terms of the deed, be conveyed, but it must necessarily be of something which belongs to the grantor at and before the execution of the deed. Property cannot be conveyed by reservation." Stadler v. Missouri River Power Co., 139 Fed. 305, 307, 71 C. C. A. 435.

"A 'reservation' is of a thing not in being, but newly created out of the lands and tenements devised. A 'reservation' is said to vest in the grantor some new right or interest not before in him, operating by way of an implied grant. A reservation does not necessarily mean that 'something not in being and newly derived from the thing granted' must be some right that the grantor did not before possess in connection with the use of the land granted. 'A right of way over land conveyed may be reserved, and yet the grantor had the same right to pass over the land before the conveyance, but it would not have existed as a separate thing; and when the land is granted and the right of way reserved that right becomes in the sense of the law a new thing derived from the land.'" S. E. & H. L. Shepherd Co. v. Shibles, 61 Atl. 700, 701, 100 Me. 314 (quoting Gay v. Walker, 36 Me. 61, 58 Am. Dec. 734; Engel v. Ayer, 27 Atl. 352, 85 Me. 453).

A "reservation" is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before. In case of a "reservation," the fee passes, and the grantor reserves to himself some right, privilege, or easement. A deed conveying a portion of a quarter section of land by metes and bounds, and declaring, "provided, however, that a strip * * * 60 feet wide on the east and a strip * * * 80 feet wide on the south and a strip * * * 100 feet wide on the west of said tract * * * is hereby reserved for street purposes when said quarter section * * * shall be platted," creates a "reservation" in the strips, and the fee passes to the grantee. Edwards v. Brusha, 90 Pac. 727, 728, 18 Okl. 234.

A "reservation" in a deed applies to a thing not in esse at the time of the grant, but newly created, and which is reserved for the benefit of the grantor; as, for example, the reservation of a right of way over the estate conveyed, which, though it may have been previously enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right. Therefore a so-called reservation of an exclusive power of alienation on the part of the wife of a grantor in a deed was void. Blair v. Muse, 2 S. E. 31, 32, 83 Va. 238.

Where A. owns ten acres of land, and conveys it to B., reserving to himself a life estate therein, that is a "reservation." Dozier v. Tolson, 79 S. W. 420-422, 180 Mo. 546, 103 Am. St. Rep. 586.

Exception distinguished

A "reservation" is always of something taken back out of that which is clearly granted, while an "exception" is some part of an estate not granted at all. Bardon v. O'Brien, 120 N. W. 827, 140 Wis. 191, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1066; Williams v. Jones, 111 N. W. 505, 506, 507, 131 Wis. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Rich v. Zeilsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81); Pitcairn v. Harkness, 101 Pac. 809, 810, 10 Cal. App. 295 (quoting Sears v. Ackerman, 72 Pac. 172, 138 Cal. 586).

A "reservation" is of some new thing issuing out of what was granted; an exception is a withdrawal from the operation of the grant of some part of the thing itself. Dyson v. Bux, 114 Pac. 1092, 1093, 84 Kan. 596 (quoting and adopting the definition of Devlin on Deeds, 979; Read v. Loftus, 108 Pac. 850, 852, 82 Kan. 485, 31 L. R. A. [N. S.] 457).

"A 'reservation' is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor doth reserve some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before. This doth differ from an exception, which is ever a part of the thing granted, and a thing in esse at the time. Shep. Touch. 80." Washington Mills Emery Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Fire Ins. Co., 13 Fed. 646, 649 (citing Rich v. Zellsdorff, 22 Wis. 544, 99 Am. Dec. 81).

The distinction between a "reservation" and an "exception" in a deed is that the subject of the former is something which did not exist before but is created by and grows out of the transaction, while an "exception" is of something or some right previously existing. York Haven Paper Co. v. York Haven Water & Power Co., 194 Fed. 255, 267.

A "reservation" is a clause in a deed, whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself issuing out of the thing granted and not in esse before; but an "exception" is always a part of the thing granted, or out of the general words or description of the grant. Hicks v. Phillips, 142 S. W. 394, 395, 146 Ky. 305, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878; Brown v. Anderson, 11 S. W. 607, 608, 88 Ky. 577.

A "reservation" is the creation in behalf of the grantor of a new right issuing out of the thing granted, something which did not exist as an independent right before the grant, and an "exception" is a clause in a deed which withdraws from its operation some part of the thing granted which would otherwise have passed to the grantee under the general description. A "reservation" is never part of the estate itself, but is something taken back out of that already granted, as rent or the right to cut timber, or to do something in relation to the estate, while an "exception" is of some part of the estate not granted at all. Stone v. Stone, 119 N. W. 712, 714, 141 Iowa, 438, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, 18 Ann. Cas. 797.

A "reservation" is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself out of that which he had granted before; that which issues from or is incident to the thing granted, and not a part of it; something newly created out of the granted premises; that part of the deed or other instrument which reserves a thing granted that was not in existence before. It is always of something taken back out of that which is clearly granted, and is never of any part of the estate itself, but something issuing out of it. It is thus distinguished from an exception, the office of which is to take something out of the thing granted that would otherwise pass. Barrett v. Kansas & Texas Coal Co., 79 Pac. 150, 151, 70 Kan. 649 (quoting and adopting 18 Cyc. 672).

The terms "reservation" and "exception" in deeds are often used as synonymous, when the thing to be secured to the grantor is a part of the granted premises, and, when so used, they are to be construed accordingly, though an "exception" in its technical meaning is something withheld from a grant which otherwise would pass as a part of it while a "reservation" is some newly created right which the grantee impliedly conveys to the grantor, but the natural meaning of the word "reservation" is inconsistent with the technical meaning, and means to keep in reserve, to retain, to keep back. Smith's Ex'r v. Jones, 84 Atl. 866, 86 Vt. 258.

By an "exception" the thing excepted is taken wholly out of the grant, and is no parcel of the thing granted, but a "reservation" is never of any part of the estate itself, but of something issuing out of it, as, for instance, rent or a right to cut timber. City Club of Auburn v. McGeer, 92 N. E. 105, 198 N. Y. 609.

A "reservation" is a taking back from a grant a right conveyed by it amounting to a mere incorporeal hereditament. The term "exception" is sometimes used in its strict legal sense of retaining something from the grant and at others in the sense of "reservation." Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Littler, 79 Pac. 114, 115, 70 Kan. 556.

"A 'reservation' is always of something taken back out of that which is clearly granted, while an exception is of some part of the estate not granted at all." "The part excepted is already in existence, and is said to remain in the grantor. The grant has no effect upon it. A reservation is the creation, in behalf of the grantor, of some new right issuing out of the thing granted—something which did not exist, as an independent right, before the grant. * * * A reservation is in the nature of a grant to the grantor, and therefore requires the same words of limitation as in the direct grant to the grantee. But an exception requires no words of limitation." There is an exception, not a "reservation," of the "right of building a dam * * * together with the right of flowage," as well as of an acre of land, so that words expressly showing that a fee, and not a life estate, is retained, are not necessary, where one owning land on both sides of a river conveyed the part on the east side, "reserving" the right of building a dam, together with the right of flowages, and "also reserving" an acre of land at the east end of the dam, though the words are reserving "to myself," while the grant is to one and "his heirs and assigns, forever." Smith v. Furbish, 44 Atl. 398, 406, 408, 68 N. H. 123, 47 L. R. A. 226 (citing Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y. 315, 321; Tied. Real Prop. § 843).

A recital in a deed, "this conveyance reserves to the parties of the first part and their assigns free access or right of way to or from any lots adjoining either line of said Virginia street, to and over any wharf which may at any time be upon said street," in the technical sense of the term, is a "reservation," as distinguished from an "exception," and is therefore in the nature of a grant to the grantor. Aden v. Vallejo, 72 Pac. 905, 906, 139 Cal. 165.

The clause in a deed conveying an entire tract of land that "I, the said grantor, reserve a road through said land," was a mere reservation, giving the grantor a way over the lands granted, but not the fee of the way, as in case of an exception; for a "reservation" creates a new right issuing out of the thing granted, and reserving it to the grantor, while an "exception" merely withdraws from the operation of the grant something which would have otherwise passed. Parker v. Parker, 138 S. W. 462, 463, 99 Ark. 244.

The rule that an "exception" withholds some part of the premises conveyed by the general description, while a "reservation" applies to some right or easement reserved by the grantor, is not arbitrary, and cannot override the real intent of the parties to be gathered from the whole instrument. Zimmerman v. Kirchher, 131 N. W. 756, 757, 151 Iowa, 483.

The difference between a "reservation" in a deed and an "exception" is that its subject is created by and grows out of the transaction, while an exception applies only where the subject already exists. Sheffield Water Co. v. Elk Tanning Co., 74 Atl. 742, 744, 225 Pa. 614.

A "reservation" is distinguished from an "exception," in that the former is some new thing issuing out of what is granted, while the latter is a withdrawal from the operation of the grant of some part of the thing itself, and can apply only where the subject already exists. The technical meaning of the terms "reservation" and "exception" will give way to their evident intent, though the wrong technical term be used, since they are frequently used interchangeably. Riefler & Sons v. Wayne Storage Water Power Co., 81 Atl. 300, 301, 232 Pa. 282.

An "exception" in a deed is a part of the thing granted, and must be in use at the time of the grant. A "reservation" is some new thing created by the terms of the grant, as an easement or right of way. They are often used interchangeably. Carlson v. Minnesota Land & Colonization Co., 129 N. W. 763, 760, 113 Minn. 361.

An exception is of something that is part of the thing granted, existing at the time of the grant, as coal or oil in the land. "The part excepted is already in existence, and is said to remain in the grantor. The grant has no effect upon it. A 'reservation' is the creation, in behalf of the grantor, of some new right issuing out of the thing granted, usually an incorporeal hereditament, something which did not exist as an independent right before the grant. Sometimes the terms 'exception' and 'reservation' are used synonymously." Preston v. White, 50 S. E. 236, 238, 57 W. Va. 278 (citing Tiedman, Real Prop. § 843).

A "reservation" in a deed is something taken back from the thing granted, while an "exception" is some part of the estate not granted at all. The terms are often used indiscriminately, and sometimes in a deed what purports to be a reservation has the force of an exception, when such appears to be the clear intention of the parties. Thus a deed from J. to L. of a tract of land, "excepting and reserving" therefrom a strip two rods wide off a certain side of it, "to be used as a right of way," the grantee, however, to have the privilege of fencing said right of way into his inclosure and being required only to maintain a gate at each end for use of the grantor, his heirs and assigns, excepts the fee of the strip, in view of the facts that on the same day J. deeded to P. said strip, describing it as the premises described as right of way two rods wide reserved by the grantor in his deed to L., excepting and reserving all the timber thereon, with the right to the grantor to go on the land and remove it, and the facts that immediately thereafter J., without objection from L., removed from the strip the valuable timber thereon, and that P. thereafter paid the taxes on the strip. Pritchard v. Lewis, 104 N. W. 989, 991, 125 Wis. 604, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 505, 110 Am. St. Rep. 873.

An "exception" from a conveyance is of a part of the thing granted and of a thing in being at the time of the grant. A "reservation" vests in the grantor some new right or interest that did not exist in him before. It operates by way of an implied grant, and, in the absence of words of inheritance, only an estate for the life of the grantor is created. Whether a clause in a deed creates a "reservation" or an "exception" is not so much a question of words as of intention, to be gathered from all the circumstances of the case. Thus a deed "reserving" to the grantor a right in common with the grantee, "meaning a cart road to and from" the grantor's land, created an exception, and not a "reservation," where the road existed at the time of the deed, and was necessary to the land retained by the grantor, and where the circumstances showed that the provisions were intended for the benefit of the land retained, and not to be merely a personal right.

Hall v. Hall, 76 Atl. 705, 706, 707, 106 Me. 389 (citing Perkins v. Stockwell, 131 Mass. 529; Ring v. Walker, 33 Atl. 174, 87 Me. 550; Bowen v. Conner [Mass.] 6 Cush. 132; White v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 30 N. E. 612, 156 Mass. 181; Hamlin v. New York & N. E. R. Co., 36 N. E. 200, 160 Mass. 459; Chappell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 24 Atl. 997, 62 Conn. 195, 17 L. R. A. 420; Inhabitants of Winthrop v. Fairbanks, 41 Me. 307; Smith v. Ladd, 41 Me. 314; Bangs v. Parker, 71 Me. 458; Wellman v. Churchill, 42 Atl. 352, 92 Me. 193).

There is a diversity between an "exception," which is ever a part of the thing granted, and of a thing in ease for which "exceptis," "salvo," "præter," and the like, are apt words, and a "reservation," which is always of a thing not in esse, but newly created or reserved out of the land or tenement demised. In Sheppard's Touchstone it is said of the reservation, "It must be to the grantor, and not to a stranger to the deed." When a covenant operated by way of reservation, and not by way of exception, words of inheritance were necessary to convey a fee simple title to an easement, if made prior to the statute, which changed the common law. Dawson v. Western Maryland R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 305, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

In determining whether an easement retained by a grantor is superior to the grant or subordinate to it, it makes no difference whether the deed operates by way of exception, or by way of a grant back from the grantee, which is usually spoken of as a "reservation." Walker Ice Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 70 N. E. 937, 944, 185 Mass. 463.

Strictly speaking, "reservation" is something created or reserved out of a thing granted that was not in existence before, while an "exception" must be a part of the thing granted; and while the distinction between the terms is well established, the words are frequently used synonymously. A provision of a deed reserving to the grantors all the rights, etc., secured under an oil and gas lease executed by them, with right to renew or modify the lease * * * same extent as though the conveyance had not been executed, and reciting that it was intended to reserve all oil and gas privileges in the premises, constitutes an exception, and not a reservation. Moore v. Griffin, 83 Pac. 395, 396, 72 Kan. 164, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477.

A grantor conveyed all of a tract of land not included in a tract intended for a reservoir and dam to be built thereon. Subsequently the grantor conveyed to others all of the same tract that might be wanted by the grantee for a reservoir, the dam of which was to be built on the land, the reservoir site to include the quantity of land necessary therefor, together with all the reservations recited in the former deed. The first conveyance left in the grantor no property in the tract save the portion which had been excepted and reserved therein. The land was uninclosed, unused, and was of little value except for a reservoir, and the grantor had been negotiating for the sale of the reservoir site prior to making the first deed. If a reservoir had been established and had not occupied the entire site excepted from the former deed, the fringe of land around it would have been of little value to the grantor, and the reservoir would have been a permanent occupation of the land, and, if an easement therefor only had been granted, the servient estate would be practically worthless. The price paid was over six times the assessed value of the land. For 15 years after the conveyance the grantee held sole possession of the land, and paid taxes thereon, while the grantor exercised no dominion over it. Held, that in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1069, 1636, 1641-1647, prescribing rules for the construction of contracts, the term "reserving" as used in the former deed was not used in its technical sense, and the word "reservations" in the subsequent deed was used in its popular sense to signify everything pertaining to the tract which the grantor had not parted with by the prior deed, and the subsequent deed conveyed a fee-simple estate therein to the grantee. Van Slyke v. Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Co., 102 Pac. 816, 818, 155 Cal. 675.

Technically the words "exception" and "reservation," are different in meaning, but have often been used as synonymous. Chapman v. Mill Creek Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 262, 263, 54 W. Va. 193.

Civ. Code, § 1069, providing that a reservation in any grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor, refers to exceptions made in deeds, as well as reservations; the words "exceptions" and "reservations" being used synonymously in grants. Seligman v. Carr, 97 Pac. 324, 325, 8 Cal. App. 572.

An "exception" is a part excepted from the general terms of that which is granted. The words "exception" and "reservation" are often used interchangeably, and the mere fact that what is excepted is mentioned as being reserved will not defeat its operation as an "exception." Elsea v. Adkins, 74 N. E. 242, 243, 164 Ind. 580, 108 Am. St. Rep. 320 (citing 13 Cyc. p. 674, 675; 3 Washb. Real Prop. *640; Jones Law of Real Prop. § 518).

As disposition of public land

As public land, see Public Land.

The word "reservation," in an Indian treaty allowing certain Indians a reservation of land, is sufficient to pass title to such land. Newman v. Doe ex dem. Harris, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 522, 560.

The term "reservation" in an Indian treaty is equivalent to an absolute grant, and the title passed as effectually as if a grant had been executed. Niles v. Anderson, 6 Miss. (5 How.) 365, 383.

The term "reservation" in an Indian treaty imports something kept back, and not surrendered, and title to lands reserved passed to the Indians under such a treaty. Euche-lah v. Welch, 10 N. C. 155, 165.

The term "reservation" in an Indian treaty reserving land to members of a tribe was equivalent to an absolute grant, and title passed as effectually as if the grant had been executed, though not perfected until the location was made. Godfrey v. Iowa Land & Trust Co., 95 Pac. 792, 797, 21 Okl. 293 (citing Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565, 566).

As used in the treaty with the Cherokees in 1877, granting the right to a "reservation" of land to each head of an Indian family choosing to remain in the state, "the very term 'reservation' seems to imply that the land reserved is taken out of the territory ceded; that is to say, is a portion excepted from the lands of the general cession and kept back when that land was surrendered." Sutton v. Moore, 25 N. C. 66, 72.

Where an act of Legislature granted a land certificate, with the right of location upon any public lands of the state within or without the several reservations theretofore created by law, the term "reservation" was used in the grant in the sense of lands subject to appropriation which have at different times been reserved temporarily from general and subjected to particular locations, and did not include islands. Roberts v. Terrell, 110 S. W. 733, 735, 101 Tex. 577.

"The word 'reservation' is defined in the Standard Dict. as 'that which is reserved; kept back; withheld.'" Land is within a "reservation," within Rev. St. U. S. § 2275, appropriating and granting to and authorizing the state to select other lands where the school sections are within any reservation, provided, however, that the state shall not be prevented from awaiting the extinguishment of the reservation, where it has been withdrawn by the Secretary of the Interior "pending determination as to the advisability of including the same within a forest reservation." Alberger v. Kingsbury, 91 Pac. 674, 675, 6 Cal. App. 93.

The word "reservation," as used in the land law, means any body of land, large or small, which Congress has reserved from sale for any purpose. It may be an Indian reservation, or military reservation, or one for any purpose for which Congress has authority to provide. United States v. Celestine, 30 Sup. Ct. 93, 95, 215 U. S. 278, 54 L. Ed. 195.

As fixing territorial jurisdiction

The following language of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. 71, c. 3): "And the justices of the peace and the probate courts in and for the territory of Oklahoma shall not have jurisdiction of any actions in civil cases against members of the Osage and Kansas Tribes of Indians, residing on their 'reservation' in Oklahoma Territory, and the district court shall have exclusive jurisdiction in such actions, and at least two terms of such court shall be held in each year at Pawhuska, on said reservation, * * *" fixed the territorial jurisdiction of the district court at Pawhuska in civil action in which a member of the Osage and Kansas Tribes of Indians is a party defendant as being coextensive with the territorial limits of the Osage reservation, and such language was not intended to require that the Indian defendant must reside upon lands the Indian title to which had not been extinguished. De Noya v. Hill Inv. Co., 127 Pac. 444, 445, 33 Okl. 663.

RESERVATION OF TITLE

The fact that there was an understanding between the vendor of timber and the vendee thereof that the vendor was to have the purchase money before the staves into which the timber was to be manufactured were sold did not amount to a "reservation of title." Neal v. Cone, 88 S. W. 952, 953, 76 Ark. 278.

RESERVE—RESERVED

See Held in Reserve.

"'Reserve' cometh of the Latin word 'reservo,' that is to provide for store; as when a man departeth with his land, he reserveth or provideth for himself a rent for his own livelihood. And sometimes it hath the force of saving or excepting. So, as sometime, it serveth to reserve a new thing, viz., a rent, and sometime to except part of the thing in esse that is granted." Bowman v. Wathen, 3 Fed. Cas. 1076, 1082; 2 McLean 376-392 (quoting and adopting definition in Co. Litt. 143a).

"A mere reserving of a discount or the including of usurious interest in a renewal note, while it may be the 'reserving or charging' of usury, is not the 'paying' of same." McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank of Rapid City, 121 N. W. 853, 856, 28 S. D. 269, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 437.

Land was not "reserved" from sale at the time the grant of land to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, under Act Cong. July 2, 1864, c. 217, 13 Stat. 365, attached, though a donation claim of W., under Oregon Donation Act of September 25, 1850, embraced it in 1864; such claim having been finally located by survey wholly outside such land before the railroad company selected its land. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. George, 98 Pac. 1126, 1127, 51 Wash. 303.

The words "reserves" and "leases" in the title and body of chapter 244, p. 456,

Laws 1897, providing for the assessment and taxing of mineral reserves, or leases, or separately owned mineral, or mineral rights, to the owner thereof, separately from the land, and providing penalties for its violation, mean at one time reserved or leased mineral, and at another written instruments evidencing mineral rights. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 751, 75 Kan. 335.

As except

"Reserving" and "excepting," though strictly distinguishable, are often used interchangeably or indiscriminately, and the use of either is not conclusive, as to the nature of the provision, as constituting a reservation or exception. Hicks v. Phillips, 142 S. W. 394, 395, 146 Ky. 305, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 878.

The words "reserving" and "excepting" are generally used as synonyms, and whether a provision is a reservation or an exception does not depend upon the use of a particular word, but upon the nature and effect of the provision itself. Smith v. Furbish, 44 Atl. 398, 406, 68 N. H. 123, 47 L. R. A. 226 (citing Stockwell v. Couillard, 129 Mass. 231, 233; Fischer v. Laack, 45 N. W. 104, 76 Wis. 313, 319, 320; Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242, 246; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 12 Spp. Ct. 479, 143 U. S. 596, 599, 613, 614, 36 L. Ed. 277).

No arbitrary rule requires that the technical meaning of the words "reserving" or "excepting" shall be given them in every instance where used in grants, written dedications, and other documents. The two words are frequently used interchangeably, and the technical meaning will be made to yield to a manifest intention. In a written document construed as a dedication, the grantors "dedicate to the perpetual use of the public the streets or highways shown" on a plat, "reserving to ourselves, our heirs, etc., owning lands abutting or adjoining the same, the reversion or reversions thereof whenever discontinued by law, also reserving" a strip of land including in said reservation, all riparian rights, etc. This was held to be an absolute dedication, giving a purchaser of lots according to the plat a right to have the land dedicated as a park kept open as such. Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. Worley, 38 South. 618, 623, 49 Fla. 297.

The words "exception" and "reservation" are used synonymously in grants and have the same effect. The words are often used indiscriminately, and whether a particular provision is an exception or a reservation depends, not upon the use of one or the other of these terms, but upon the nature and effect of the provision itself. Civ. Code, § 1069, providing that a reservation in any grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor, refers to exceptions made in deeds as well as reservations; the words "exceptions" and "reservations" being used synonymously in grants. Seligman v. Carr, 97 Pac. 324, 325, 8 Cal. App. 572 (citing Stockwell v. Couillard, 129 Mass. 231, 233).

The word "reserving" in the clause of a deed, "reserving off the east line of the same two rods in width, running into P. Lake, commencing two rods south of the northwest corner of section 24," will be given the force of "excepting"; the whole clause being significant that an exception was intended, and being immediately followed by a reservation of a right of way over another strip to be used by the parties in common; and the physical situation and surrounding circumstances strongly tending to show that it was the intention of the parties that such land should be excepted from the grant. Jones v. Hoffman, 134 N. W. 1046, 1047, 149 Wis. 30.

The clause in a deed of a small part of a farm, "reserving" the privilege of a pass from the highway past the house to the railroad in my usual place of crossing," the grantor having for many years passed over the granted land in going to and from other parts of the farm, is an exception of an existing way, which became an easement appurtenant to the other land, which, with the other land, would pass by descent or assignment. Dee v. King, 59 Atl. 839, 840, 77 Vt. 230, 68 L. R. A. 860.

An owner sold the timber on his land under a contract which fixed no time for the purchaser to remove it. Subsequently he conveyed the land to a grantee by a deed "reserving" to the purchaser of the timber all of the timber on said premises and until a specified date to cut and remove it. Held, that the word "reserving" was used in the sense of "excepting," in favor or for the use of the purchaser of the timber. Kidder v. Flanders, 61 Atl. 675, 676, 73 N. H. 345 (citing Cochecho Mfg. Co. v. Whittier, 10 N. H. 305, 310; West Point Iron Co. v. Reymert, 45 N. Y. 703).

RESERVE FUND

"The term 'reserve fund,' when applied to a level rate policy, means a sufficient percentage of the annual premium to meet, when invested at a given rate of interest, all present and prospective liability on account of the particular policy. When applied to term insurance, it means the entire mortality premiums collected for the particular year. It has no application to assessment insurance." In Rev. St. 1899, § 1408, declaring that any such fraternal beneficiary associations may create and maintain, disburse and apply a reserve or emergency fund in accordance with its constitution or by-laws, the word "reserve" was not used in a technical meaning, but as a convertible term with "emergency," and the use of such word did not indicate a legislative intention to authorize such association to issue nonforfeitable policies and to do an old-line life insurance business not otherwise authorized. State ex rel. Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Vandiver, 111 S. W. 911, 918, 213 Mo. 187, 15 Ann. Cas. 283 (quoting 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6147).

Laws N. Y. 1892, p. 1969, c. 690, § 88, requiring the application of the reserve, on a policy lapsed after being in force three full years, to the payment for extended insurance, and providing that "reserve" should include "dividend additions," meant that the surplus on a lapsed policy, as well as the reserve thereon, should be applied in purchasing extended insurance in case of lapse after a policy was in force three years, though the words "dividend additions" may have meant in a technical sense, in life insurance, additions on account of surplus to the face of a policy, payable at death while the insurance was in force. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 103 S. W. 335, 336, 126 Ky. 405.

RESERVED FOR PUBLIC USES

Lands reserved by Rev. St. U. S. § 1947, in each township for common schools are public lands of the United States not "reserved for public uses," within section 2477, granting a right of way for the construction of highways over public lands "not reserved for public uses"; and hence a highway which has existed over such lands for over seven years is a public highway, within the express provisions of Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 3846. Peterson v. Baker, 81 Pac. 681, 682, 39 Wash. 275.

RESERVED POWER OF DIVESTITURE

For the express purpose of avoiding the result dependent upon the beneficiary dying before the assured, the practice grew up of reserving a "divestiture"; that is, of providing that, if the primary beneficiary was not living when the assured died, the policy and the money arising out of it should go to a named alternative beneficiary, thus preventing the same from passing to the legal representatives of the primary beneficiary, as it otherwise would do. This is called a "reserved power of divestiture," which means, of course, a divestiture of a previously vested interest, and not merely a divestiture of an expectancy; for, if the interest of the beneficiary be merely an expectancy, dependent upon the beneficiary outliving the assured, then, of course, if the beneficiary did not do so, the expectancy would fail, and there would be no necessity for reserving a power of divestiture. Where a life policy provided that it was to be paid, upon the death of the insured, to his daughter, if surviving, if not, to his legal representatives, the daughter had a vested interest upon the issuance of the policy, liable to be defeated by the happening of a condition subsequent, and the legal representatives had a contingent interest, depending upon the divestiture of the daughter's vested interest, which they were required to prove before they were entitled to the proceeds of the policy. United States Casualty Co. v. Kacer, 69 S. W. 370, 373, 169 Mo. 301, 58 L. R. A. 436, 92 Am. St. Rep. 641.

RESERVOIR

"As ordinarily defined, a 'reservoir' is a place where water collects naturally or is stored for use when wanted, as to supply a fountain, a canal, or a city, or for any other purpose." Where the plan for the construction of an irrigation canal put in operation resulted in the creation of an extensive basin, wherein a large body of water was artificially collected and retained, and witnesses referred to such water as a lake or reservoir, where the water was stored, such basin constituted a "reservoir," within a statute declaring that the owners of reservoirs shall be liable for all damages arising from leakage or overflow of the waters therefrom, or by floods caused by the breaking of the embankments thereof. Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co., 81 Pac. 785, 787, 789, 14 Wyo. 14, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 596.

RESIDE

Come to reside, see Come.

The word "resides," in Gen. Laws 1896, c. 45, § 12, providing that all personal property held in trust by an executor for another person shall be assessed against the executor where such other person resides, means resides for the purpose of taxation, as defined in section 9, directing that personal property shall be taxed to the owner in the town in which the owner shall have his actual place of abode for a larger portion of the year. Clarke v. Addeman, 58 Atl. 623, 26 R. I. 168.

The word "reside," as used in the statute declaring that schools shall be free to children whose parents or guardians "reside" within a district, does not necessarily mean a legal residence, as distinguished from actual inhabitancy. State ex rel. Mickey v. Selleck, 107 N. W. 1022, 1023, 76 Neb. 747.

Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, providing for the sale and lease of public lands, declares that, if any purchaser shall fail to "reside" on and improve the land purchased by him, he shall forfeit the land and all payments made thereon, and the same shall be subject to resale without any action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Held, that where plaintiff purchased four sections of school land under a statute requiring three years' residence thereon, but during the time left the land for eight months, during which she attended school, only returning to the land on one occasion for a period of one or two days, she thereby forfeited the land so purchased, though on her final return from school she again took up her residence on the home section. Andrus v. Davis, 89 S. W. 772, 773, 99 Tex. 303.

Municipal Court Act, Laws 1901, p. 1500, c. 580, § 32, provides for the service of summons on a defendant "residing within the city," on satisfactory proof by affidavit and return of a marshal that diligent effort has been made to serve the summons on defendant and that the place of his sojourn cannot be found, or, if he is within the city, that he avoids service, etc. Held, that such section did not authorize substituted service on affidavits asserting that defendant resided out of the city in Westchester county, but maintained a business office in the city, and that plaintiff was informed and believes that the defendant is in the state and avoids service. Casey v. White, 96 N. Y. Supp. 190, 48 Misc. Rep. 659.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3318, provides that a witness is entitled, if he resides more than 3 miles from the place of attendance, to 8 cents for each mile going to the place of attendance. A witness had a business office in the county and near the courthouse, where he was served with subpoenas, and came daily to his office to attend to business on the very days for which travel fees were sought; but he resided 45 miles from the courthouse in another county. Held, that the word "resides" refers to the place of business in the county, and "going to the place of attendance" has no reference to the distance from the witness' residence to his office, and he was not entitled to mileage from his place of domicile. Smith v. Hutton, 119 N. Y. Supp. 194, 134 App. Div. 445.

Acts 1901, p. 534, c. 231 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3623a), provides that, if a remonstrance against a street improvement "is signed by two-thirds of the property owners, residing upon the lots abutting on such improvement, and representing two-thirds of the number of lineal feet of such improvement, then all further proceedings shall be abandoned." Held, that the persons whose signatures can make the remonstrance peremptory must be two-thirds of those property owners who reside upon lots which abut on the improvement, and who also represent two-thirds of the number of lineal feet of the improvement, the word "residing" and the words "and representing" relating equally to the preceding "two-thirds of the property owners"; and hence, where the remonstrators owned more than two-thirds of the lineal feet abutting on the improvement and were more than two-thirds of the property owners residing on the real estate abutting on the improvement, but the remonstrators who resided on their lots did not own or represent two-thirds of the lineal feet, the remonstrance was insufficient. Malay v. Clark, 70 N. E. 1005, 1006, 33 Ind. App. 149.

As dwell

One "resides" in a place when he lives or dwells there; when it is his settled abode; his habitation; his home. There must be a settled, fixed abode, an intention to remain permanently, at least for a time, for business or other purposes, to constitute a "residence," within the legal meaning of the term. White's Guardian v. Martin, 2 Alaska, 495, 500.

The Standard Dictionary defines the word "reside" as "to make an abode for a considerable time; to live; to dwell; to be in official residence." Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 45, 30 Stat. 55, providing that "trustees may be individuals who are respectively competent and reside or have an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed, or corporations having an office in the judicial district," etc., a trustee in bankruptcy, who at the time of his appointment resided in the district of appointment (in the Eastern district of New York, the borough of Brooklyn), and who then had and still has an office therein, is not subject to removal because he has changed his legal residence to another district (the Southern district of New York, the borough of Manhattan), provided such change does not interfere with the performance of his duties, nor render it difficult for persons interested to communicate with or serve notices upon him. In re Seider, 163 Fed. 188, 189.

The word "resides," in Laws 1901, p. 588, c. 96, providing that any town not maintaining a high school shall pay for the tuition of any child who with parents "resides" in said town, and who attends a high school in another town, means actual habitation, and not a legal "domicile," which is acquired by residence and an intention of making it a home; and, where a father who lived on a farm in a town sold his stock and removed to another town with his family, and there kept house, without any definite intention either to make the latter town his home or of returning to the former town within which he was taxed, and wherein he voted, the former town was not liable to pay to the latter town for the tuition of his child attending high school in the latter town. Lisbon School Dist. No. 1 v. Landaff Town School Dist., 74 Atl. 186, 187, 75 N. H. 324.

In reference to corporation

A foreign corporation does not "reside" in any county of the state within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 101, relating to venue in civil actions. Ivanusch v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 128 N. W. 333, 334, 26 S. D. 158.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 101, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 283, providing that the action shall be tried in the judicial subdivision in which defendant "resides" at the commencement of the action, the venue of an action against a domestic corporation is not any place where it happens to transact business, but in the county of its "principal place of business," the place where its president, secretary, and board of directors meet to transact the governing business of the corporation proper, where its books are kept; that is, where its governing power is exercised and controlled by its board of directors and officers. Mullen v. Northern Accident Ins. Co., 128 N. W. 483, 484, 26 S. D. 402 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5559).

As have permanent abode

The word "reside," in its ordinary sense, carries with it the idea of permanence, as well as continuity. Longwell v. Longwell, 88 S. W. 416, 417, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 612 (quoting and adopting definition in Michael v. Michael, 79 S. W. 74, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 630).

The word "reside," in its ordinary sense, carries with it the idea of permanence, as well as continuity. It does not mean living in one place and claiming a home in another; and, in an action requiring plaintiff to reside in a county in the state before bringing suit for divorce, it does not mean a constructive or imaginary residence in Texas, while actually living in Illinois. It was intended, not only to compel an actual good faith inhabitancy of the state, but an actual residence in the county where the suit for divorce is instituted, on the part of the person seeking the divorce. Michael v. Michael, 79 S. W. 74, 75, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 630.

Under the statute providing for the bringing of an action in the county where the injury was done, or in the county where plaintiff "resided" at the time of the injury, she might bring it in the county where her domicile and permanent place of residence was, though she was temporarily residing in another county. Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Overton (Tex.) 107 S. W. 71, 74.

A person, part of whose family resides in W. county, who owns a home there, votes and claims his home there, "resides" there, within Code 1907, § 6110, requiring actions on contract to be brought in the county in which defendant resides, if he has within the state a permanent residence, although such person is engaged in business and with his wife keeps house in another county, since the word "reside" may signify where one temporarily abides, but in section 6110 means where he has a fixed and permanent home. Taylor v. Chattanooga Medicine Co., 59 South. 707, 708, 5 Ala. App. 419 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, pp. 6151, 6165).

The word "resided," within Gen. St. 1902, § 2469, providing that no inhabitant of any town shall gain a legal settlement in any other town, unless he shall have resided four years continuously in such town, and shall have maintained himself and family there during such period, means a fixed, permanent, and established residence, as distinguished from a residence which is merely transient or temporary. Town of Madison v. Town of Gullford, 81 Atl. 1046, 1048, 85 Conn. 55.

Acts 27th Leg. (Laws 1901, p. 31, c. 27) provide that an action against a railroad company for personal injuries shall be brought either in the county in which the injury occurred or in the county in which plaintiff resided at the time of the injury, provided that, where plaintiff is a nonresident of the state, then the suit might be brought in any county in which the defendant corporation may operate its railroad or may have an agent. Held that, although under that statute a person might have more than one residence, still by the use of the term "resided" it was not meant that an injured person was to be held a resident of the county of his injury merely because of his casual or temporary presence therein, but the term "reside," the past tense of which is used in the statute, means to make an abode for a considerable time, and imports a habitation of some degree of permanency, coupled with the home thought; the intention being for the time being to make it, and no other, a place of residence, and is to be construed as excluding the mere casual presence of a transient. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Monell, 110 S. W. 504, 506, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 287.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 984, providing that actions not specified in the two preceding sections must be tried in the county in which one of the parties resided at the time the action was commenced, the word "resided" means a permanent residence; one's home, as distinguished from a mere stopping place, for the transaction of either business or pleasure. It is nearly or quite synonymous with the word "domiciled," the permanent home and the place to which, whenever absent, one intends to return. Hence, under the statute, where defendant lived with his family at a certain place, where he kept his horses, carriages, and servants, had business interests, and paid taxes, and maintained an office for the transaction of business at another place, where he kept an apartment, which he used while at the latter place transacting business, the former place was his residence. Washington v. Thomas, 92 N. Y. Supp. 994, 996, 103 App. Div. 423.

RESIDE OUT OF THE STATE

See Nonresidence—Nonresident.

"A person residing without the state" within Code Civ. Proc. § 3268, subd. 1, requiring such a person to give security for costs, did not include a person domiciled within the state for a considerable period before action brought, but at that time temporarily sojourning in another state for treatment for injuries; she having left her household effects in New York and having actually returned there to live before the determination of a motion to compel her to give security for costs. Taylor v. Norris, 93 N. Y. Supp. 356, 357, 104 App. Div. 21.

RESIDED CONTINUOUSLY

The provision of Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, par. 4, which requires an applicant for naturalization to prove to the satisfaction of the court that immediately preceding the date of his application he has "resided continuously" within the United States five years at least, does not mean that the applicant must not have been outside of the territory of the United States during the preceding five years, but has reference to changes of domicile only; and the fact that an alien within that time returned temporarily to his native country on a visit, without any intention of remaining or abandoning his residence in this country, did not defeat his right to naturalization, and the length of his absence is material only as evidence on the question of intention. United States v. Cantini, 199 Fed. 857, 860.

In Naturalization Act June 29, 1906, c. 3592, § 4, subd. 4, which requires the court, before admitting an alien to citizenship, to be satisfied that he has "resided continuously" within the United States five years at least, and within the state or territory where the court is held one year at least, before his application, the word "continuously" is not used literally, as requiring the applicant to remain at all times physically within such jurisdictions, but applies to changes of domicile only; and a sailor, by going to sea, does not abandon his residence. In re Schneider, 164 Fed. 335, 336.

RESIDENCE

See Actual Residence—Actual Resident; District of His Residence; Law of His Residence; Legal Residence; Place of Residence; Principal Place of Residence; Private Residence; Usual Residence.

As attribute of possession, see Possession. Change of residence, see Change.

Change of residence as removal, see Remove—Removal.

Every person has in law a "residence," and a residence cannot be lost until another is gained. Huston v. Anderson, 78 Pac. 626, 635, 145 Cal. 320.

One who scattered his belongings among his friends and left the state has not a residence within the state, for he has left no domicile, which is necessary to residence. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275, 276.

That an employé had worked for several weeks in a county, where he was injured while at such work, does not establish his "residence" in such county, under a statute relating to venue in actions for injuries to servants. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Cloyd (Tex.) 78 S. W. 43, 44.

The "residence" of one year, required of plaintiff in divorce to give the court jurisdiction, is such as would subject him to taxation and to the service of process in this state. Hall v. Hall, 25 Wis. 600, 607.

The word "residence" directs attention solely to a use or mode of occupancy to which a building may be put. Whether or not a covenant that not more than one building shall be erected on a single lot is violated by the erection of a structure whose exterior walls, foundation, and roof constitute it one building, but whose interior arrangements and entrances show that it is to constitute two residences, is not so clear that a court of equity will aid in its enforcement. Fortesque v. Carroll, 75 Atl. 923, 76 N. J. Eq. 583, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 79.

For the purpose of determining the venue of his action against a railway company for personal injuries, the place where an employé of such company establishes his headquarters, boards, and sleeps, is his "residence." Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rogers, 82 S. W. 822, 824, 825, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, subd. 17, providing that the place where any person having no family shall generally lodge shall be deemed the place of his residence, a traveling salesman showing that for more than a year a city had been the center of his activity, and that he rented a room therein, and that he had selected the city as the place of his residence, showed his "residence in the state," within section 2924, providing that no person who has not resided within the state for one year shall be entitled to a divorce, etc. Stone v. Stone, 113 S. W. 1157, 1158, 134 Mo. App. 242.

Decedent Estate Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 13) § 22, requires that the witnesses to a will write opposite their names their places of residence, on penalty of $50, recoverable by suit of any person interested in the property disposed by the will. A notary witnessed a will, and after his name stamped upon it a seal and an impression, both containing the words, "Notary Public, New York County"; the county being a narrower political designation than the city. Held, in an action for the penalty, that the word "residence," standing alone in the statute, did not require the addition of a street number, and that, in view of the strictly penal character of the statute, defendant was not liable. Bossie v. Edelson, 134 N. Y. Supp. 615, 617, 76 Misc. Rep. 234.

A married woman who lives with her husband in a town where he last resided three years, supporting himself and family, does not thereby gain a "residence" in the town in her own right, within the meaning of the pauper act, so as to make the town liable to another town in which she lives for support furnished to her, as a pauper, after the death of her husband. Town of Jericho v. Town of Morristown, 60 Atl. 233, 234, 77 Vt. 367.

The "residence" of an unmarried man, within Code, § 1090, declaring that no person shall vote in any precinct but that of his residence, and section 642, providing that each qualified elector may vote at a municipal election who is a resident of the city, etc., and at the time has been ten days a resident of the precinct in which he offers to vote, is the place where he rooms and sleeps, and not the place where he takes his meals. State v. Savre, 105 N. W. 387, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452.

The term "resident" or "residence," as applied to the complainant in bastardy proceedings, is not used in the sense in which it is employed in the Civil Code, but applies as well to the county in which the mother of the child may actually reside, and which is liable to be charged with its support, although she may, in effect, have a home in another county or state. While the proceeding may be brought in the county where the mother has a legal settlement, it may also be brought and prosecuted to judgment in the county of her actual residence. Jessen v. Donahue, 96 N. W. 639, 640, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 838 (citing Clark v. Carey, 60 N. W. 78, 41 Neb. 780).

Under B. & C. Comp. § 1173, requiring that a petition for an order of sale shall contain the residence of the heirs and devisees, it is not sufficient for the petition for an order of sale to give the "address" of non-resident heirs served by publication; service at their address not being equivalent to service at their "residence." Smith v. Whiting, 106 Pac. 791, 794, 55 Or. 808.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, defines "residence" as "the place where the family of any person shall permanently reside in this state, and the place where any person having no family shall generally lodge, shall be deemed the place of residence of such person or persons respectively." In a trial for fraudulent registration in an election precinct, testimony that witness knew defendant lived in a precinct other than where he registered, that he had seen defendant going to and from his place of residence during the day and night, and knew the rest of the family, in the absence of proof to the contrary, was sufficient to show that defendant did not reside in the precinct where he registered. State v. Keating, 100 S. W. 648, 651, 202 Mo. 197. Under this statute where a wife resided with her husband in J. county, having all her property therein, but on becoming insane was removed to an asylum in another county, her "residence" continued to be in J. county, even after her husband's death. State v. Wurdeman, 108 S. W. 144, 148, 129 Mo. App. 263 (citing and adopting Flynn v. Hancock, 80 S. W. 245, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 395; Marheineke v. Grothaus, 72 Mo. 204).

Under Code, § 2297, reciting that the provisions for the support of the insane at public charge shall not release the estates of such persons, nor their relatives, from liability, and the auditors of the several counties, subject to the direction of the board of supervisors, are authorized to collect from the property of such patient, or any person legally bound for their support, any sums paid by the county in their behalf, but if the board of supervisors, in case of any insane patient supported at the expense of the county, shall deem it a hardship to compel the relatives of such patient to bear the burden of his support, they may relieve such relatives or estate from any part of such burden, the right to recover for the maintenance of an insane person is given to a county, and the county cannot maintain an action against the estate of an insane person, where it appears that it has expended nothing in his maintenance in a state asylum and that the claim is in the name of the state; the insane person having been a nonresident when admitted to the Soldiers' Home, and from there having been sent to the asylum, and so not having acquired a "residence" within the purview of Code, § 4009. State v. Cole, 136 N. W. 887, 889, 155 Iowa, 654.

Abode synonymous

The word "residence" means a place of abode. The term is held to include a room in a school dormitory, the felonious entry of which is held to constitute burglary of a private residence. Mays v. State, 97 S. W. 703, 704, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 391 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6151).

The word "abode," as used in Gen. St. 1865, c. 164, § 13, providing that "in suits in * * * divorce * * * if the plaintiff or other person for him shall allege in his petition that part or all of the defendants are nonresidents of the state, or have absconded or absented themselves from their usual place of abode in this state," etc., "the clerk shall make an order or publication," etc., means and is used in the same sense as the word "residence" is used. In an action for divorce, a petition alleged "that defendant is a nonresident of this state, or that he has absconded or absented himself from his usual place of abode in this state, so the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him." Held, that the allegations were sufficient to authorize an order for service of notice by publication. Hinkle v. Lovelace, 102 S. W. 1015, 1017, 204 Mo. 208, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 120 Am. St. Rep. 693, 11 Ann. Cas. 794.

In its relation to the question to whether a summons has been left at the house of usual abode of the defendant, the term "abode" means one's fixed place of residence for the time being, and may be synonymous with "residence." But ordinarily "usual place of abode" is a much more restricted term than "residence," and means the place where the defendant is actually living at the time when service is made. Service at the dwelling house of defendant, which is not described as his usual place of abode, is not sufficient. The purpose of the use of the term in an act relating to the service of process has primary reference to the place where the defendant is usually to be found. Therefore "usual place of abode" means "present place of abode." As defined in this state, the term means the customary or settled place of residence. In the case of a married man, the "house of usual abode" is prima facie the house wherein his wife and family reside. Berryhill v. Sepp, 119 N. W. 404, 405, 106 Minn. 458, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344 (citing Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Norris, 63 N. W. 634, 61 Minn. 256; State v. Toland, 15 S. E. 599, 600, 36 S. C. 515; Du Val v. Johnson, 39 Ark. 182, 192; Walker v. Stevens, 72 N. W. 1038, 52 Neb. 653; Mygatt v. Coe, 44 Atl. 198, 199, 63 N. J. Law, 510; Ser v. Bobst, 8 Mo. 506, 507; Earle v. McVeigh, 91 U. S. 503, 23 L. Ed. 398; Madison County Bank v. Suman's Adm'r, 79 Mo. 527, 530).

As building

The word "residence," as used in an information under Comp. Laws, § 11,551, prohibiting larceny from any building on fire, which charged defendant with the larceny of goods "from the residence of * * *, the same being then and there on fire," means building. People v. Klammer, 100 N. W. 600, 137 Mich. 399.

Citizenship equivalent

"Residence" is not equivalent to "citizenship." Yocum v. Parker, 130 Fed. 770, 771, 66 C. C. A. 80.

"Citizenship" and "residence" are not synonymous terms. A person may reside in one state and be a citizen of another. An allegation, in a petition for removal, that defendant is a citizen of a state other than that in which the suit is pending, is not equivalent to an allegation that he is a nonresident of that state, and does not show his right to a removal. Irving v. Smith, 132 Fed. 207.

"Residence" and "citizenship" are not convertible terms. A party may be a resident of a place, and yet not be domiciled there; for, while he is a resident, still if he does not intend to make that his permanent place of abode, but has an intent to return, his residence in that place does not establish a domicile, while citizenship, is a status or condition and is the result of both act and intent. An adult person cannot become a citizen of a state by simply intending to, nor does any one become such citizen by mere residence. The residence and the intent must coexist and correspond, and, though under ordinary circumstances the former may be sufficient evidence of the latter, it is not conclusive, and the contrary can always be shown, and when the question of citizenship turns on the intention with which a person resides in a particular place, his own testimony under ordinary circumstances is entitled to great weight. Eisele v. Oddie, 128 Fed. 941, 945 (quoting from Chambers v. Prince, 75 Fed. 176; Sharon v. Hill, 28 Fed. 337, 342).

An averment of the "residence" of a plaintiff is not equivalent to one of citizenship, and does not give a circuit court jurisdiction, where it is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Sanbo v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 140 Fed. 713, 714, 72 C. C. A. 24.

The word "residence" may refer either to a fixed and settled abode, or to one merely of some duration. Hence a statement of an applicant for insurance that his residence was in Kansas was not necessarily a declaration that he was a citizen of that state. Kroge v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 105 S. W. 685, 687, 126 Mo. App. 693.

Citizenship carries with it the idea of connection or identification with the state and a participation in its functions, and as such implies much more than "residence." Citizenship, as used in the removal laws, means residence with the intention of permanently remaining in a particular place. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 425.

The terms "residence" and "citizenship" are not equivalents. An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff is a "bona fide resident" of a certain state is not one of his "citizenship" in such state, and is not sufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction on the ground of diversity of citizenship. Koike v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 623, 624 (citing Marks v. Marks, 75 Fed. 321; Wolfe v. Hartford Life & A. Ins. Co., 13 Sup. Ct. 602, 148 U. S. 389, 37 L. Ed. 493; Horne v. George H. Hammond Co., 15 Sup. Ct. 167, 155 U. S. 393, 39 L. Ed. 197; Menard v. Goggan, 7 Sup. Ct. 874, 121 U. S. 253, 30 L. Ed. 914).

A distinction is to be observed between "citizenship" and "residence" for the purpose of suit. The question of suability and jurisdiction is not so much one of citizenship as of finding. If a citizen of one state is found for the purpose of lawful service of judicial process in another, he may ordinarily be sued there. J. B. Pyron & Son v. Ruohs, 48 S. E. 434, 436, 120 Ga. 1060 (quoting Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 10, 26 L. Ed. 643; Williams v. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co., 16 S. E. 303, 90 Ga. 519, 522).

As dwelling

"Residence" signifies a person's permanent home and principal establishment, to which, when he is absent, he has the intention of returning. Miller v. Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World, 122 N. W. 1126, 1128, 140 Wis. 505, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 178, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1095.

The place where a person lives, within Code, § 1313, providing that moneys and credits shall be listed and assessed where the owner lives, is the place of his "residence." Glottelty v. Brown, 126 N. W. 797, 798, 148 Iowa, 124; Cover v. Hatten, 113 N. W. 470 471, 136 Iowa, 63.

The word "residence," as used in Const. art. 2, §§ 1, 2, providing who are qualified electors, was there used as equivalent to "home," and was not intended to be understood in the more restricted sense of actual habitation or abode. State ex rel. Goldsworthy v. Aldrich, 14 R. I. 171, 175.

The word "residence," as employed in the election laws, is synonymous with "home," and means a fixed or permanent abode or habitation, to which one, when absent, intends to return. State v. Savre, 105 N. W. 387, 129 Iowa, 122, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452.

An "inhabitant" is a dweller in a place; a resident; one who dwells or resides permanently in a place; one who has a fixed and permanent abode in a place. "Residence" means a place of abode, and, within the meaning of the Alaska divorce law, it is the place where one resides—his home. Terrill v. Terrill, 2 Alaska, 475, 477.

By "residence," as used in the statutes authorizing attachment, is not meant legal domicile, but actual place of abode, either of a temporary or permanent character, at which due service of process might be lawfully made. Irwin v. Raymond, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1100, 1101, 58 Misc. Rep. 319.

Statement of a witness that he lived at a certain street and number in a specified city was not inconsistent with his "residence" in another county, since a person may "live" in one place, and have a legal residence in another. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 116 Pac. 692, 694, 16 Cal. App. 103.

"Residence" within the statute providing for the place of trial depends on intention as well as fact, and is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere on business, pleasure, or for other temporary purposes, and the place of residence within the statute is the fixed home of a party as understood by himself and his neighbors and friends. Younger v. Spreckels, 106 Pac. 895, 896, 12 Cal. App. 175.

An instruction, on the issue of the residence of plaintiff within the venue laws, that, if at the time of the injury complained of plaintiff had his residence in the county in which the accident occurred, the jury must find for defendant on its plea of privilege to be sued in such county, while, if at the time plaintiff resided in a sister state, the jury must find against the plea, and that the word

"residence" meant a fixed and permanent abode or dwelling place for the time being, correctly stated the law, so that it was not error to refuse requested instructions on the issue. Evidence held to show that a servant suing a railroad company for injuries received in another county in the state was a nonresident of the state within the venue laws; "residence" within the statute requiring a settled and fixed abode and an intention to remain at least for a time for business or for other purposes. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. v. Thompson (Tex.) 140 S. W. 1148, 1153.

"A man's 'residence' is his home or habitation fixed at any place, without a present intention of removing therefrom." A person whose domicile was undetermined, owing to a change of occupation, and who lived apart from his wife and family, and came to the state in order to take out letters of administration on the property of a deceased brother, and declared his intention of becoming a resident, and engaged board and lodging, and opened a bank account, and has since resided in the state, became a resident, and was entitled to letters of administration as such. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499).

A definition of "residence," from which all the elements of home and habitation are excluded as a matter of no consideration, is beyond the ordinary conception; and in a prosecution wherein the state sought to overcome the bar of limitations pursuant to a statute providing that the time during which any defendant is not an inhabitant of or usually resident within the state is not to be counted as a part of the limitations in his favor, instructions, one of which told the jury that they had nothing to do with the question whether the defendant was or was not an inhabitant of the state, and another that the fact that he was not an inhabitant of the state and had a home therein was of no significance in finding whether he was usually resident therein, were erroneous, in that, taken together, they were calculated to confuse and mislead the jury. State v. Snyder, 82 S. W. 12, 26, 182 Mo. 462.

As dwelling house

See Dwelling—Dwelling House.

As including more than dwelling house

The word "residence," like the word "homestead," is not confined merely to the dwelling house, but it may also include everything connected therewith, used to make the home more comfortable and enjoyable. But the words "homestead" and "residence" cannot be intended to include some other and independent family's home and residence. Linn v. Ziegler, 75 Pac. 489, 490, 68 Kan. 528 (citing Ashton v. Ingle, 20 Kan. 670, 681, 27 Am. Rep. 197).

A "dwelling house" does not include a garage and storeroom; and hence the restriction in a deed against the erection of any flat building or tenement house, and against any "residence" or other dwelling house on the premises within a certain distance to the street line, is not violated by the erection of a garage and storeroom beyond such line. Jones v. Williams, 106 Pac. 166, 168, 56 Wash. 588.

The house in which accused and others played cards was in the inclosure of the dwelling house of H., one of the participants, but was an outhouse about 250 yards therefrom, in a field, and various vegetables and implements were stored therein. The outhouse was closed, but not locked, and contained no furniture. No betting was done at the games. Pen. Code 1911, art. 548, makes it an offense to play cards at any outhouse where people resort, or at any other place, except a private residence occupied by a family. Article 550 exempts the state from proving that any money or article of value was bet at such game. Held, that the outhouse was not H's. "residence," within the statutes, and accused was guilty of the offense of gaming. Soape v. State (Tex.) 150 S. W. 612.

Inhabitaney synonymous

"Inhabitaney" and "residence" are synonymous terms. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 423.

In the provision of the judiciary act, relating to jurisdiction of Circuit Courts, the words "residence," "resident" and "inhabitant" are used synonymously. Bogue v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 193 Fed. 728, 733.

As residence of individual

Under Election Law (Acts 29th Leg. 1905, p. 521, c. 11) § 4, making the residence of a single man where he usually sleeps at night, and that of a married man where his wife resides, if he be not permanently separated from her, one's residence must be determined by actual facts, and where the testimony showed that a voter lived with his "family" in a certain town, and that, though he owned a ranch which he considered his home, he had not lived on it since moving to the town, his "residence" was in such town, whether his wife was living or not. Savage v. Umphries (Tex.) 118 S. W. 893, 905.

In attempting to define the term "residence," as used in election laws generally, the courts and text-writers have encountered great difficulty, and it may be said that there is not any definition which has been formulated that applies to the facts of every case. From the decided cases certain rules may be gathered which are intended to aid in applying the facts to a particular case, but it is as easy to understand the meaning of some of the terms used in the rules for determining the meaning of "residence." Every case must stand upon its own facts, and a decli-sion in any event must, of necessity, be the result of a more or less arbitrary application of the rules of law to the facts presented. Rev. Codes Mont. § 481, rule 8, providing that the place where a man's family resides is presumptively his place of residence, is a rule of evidence; and proof that the family of a man who came to Montana from a sister state remained in the other state is prima facie evidence against the man's right to vote in Montana. Carwile v. Jones, 101 Pac. 153, 158, 38 Mont. 590.

As affected by intention

To establish a "residence," act and intent must combine; the act of occupying and living on the claim, and intent to make the place a home, to exclusion of a home elsewhere. Whaley v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 167 Fed. 864, 870.

"Residence" is a matter determined by the intention of a party. However, one already having a fixed residence or place of abode cannot change it by intention alone, but must accompany such intention by an actual removal. Carter v. Sommermeyer, 27 Wis. 665, 666.

"Residence," for the purpose of a settlement of a pauper, includes more than mere presence. There must be a settled intention on the pauper's part of choosing the place as a home. Inhabitants of Hatfield v. Inhabitants of Hatfield, 82 N. E. 48, 49, 196 Mass. 393.

The idea of "residence" is compounded of fact and intention. To effect a change of residence, there must be an actual removal to another habitation, and there must be an intention of remaining there. Whenever it is proposed to establish a change of residence, it is incumbent on the party to establish by proof, first, an actual removal to another habitation, and, second, that he has an intention of remaining there. As bearing on the question of proof, it has been held that to establish a change of residence it must at least be made to appear that the former residence has been abandoned, or that the family has become settled in the new residence and made it the center of the family affairs. Pope v. Williams, 56 Atl. 543, 545, 98 Md. 59, 66 L. R. A. 398, 103 Am. St. Rep. 379 (quoting Thomas v. Warner, 34 Atl. 831, 83 Md. 20).

As having permanent abode

"Residence" as used in tax laws means a permanent abode of the taxpayer as distinguished from a temporary sojourn. Brookover v. Kase, 83 N. E. 524, 525, 41 Ind. App. 102.

An actual bona fide resident within the divorce statute is one who is in the state to reside permanently, and who at least for the time being entertains no idea of seeking a permanent home elsewhere. Andrade v. Andrade, 128 Pac. 813, 815, 14 Ariz. 379.

The statutory term "resident" or "residence," as used in divorce statutes, contemplate, as we think, an actual residence with substantially the same attributes as are intended when the term "domicile" is used. They do not mean the place where the defendant in fact resides for the time being. They mean a residence of a permanent and fixed character; a domicile. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 91 S. W. 405, 115 Mo. App. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Hamill v. Talbott, 81 Mo. App. loc. cit. 215).

A person cannot be a resident of two states at the same time, since residence is the act of residing or dwelling in a place for some continuance of time; the act or state of being seated or settled in a place. The term "residence" is flexible in its meaning, and may be given a restricted or enlarged meaning according to the connection in which it is used. It involves, however, the idea of permanency and fixed intention to remain, so that an allegation of residence in one state implies nonresidence in another. Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421, 425.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4160, establishing "residence" where one's family permanently reside, the element of permanency is essential; but it does not require that residence never be changed, but only that there be no present intent to change. McDowell v. Friedman Bros. Shoe Co., 115 S. W. 1029, 1031, 135 Mo. App. 276.

"Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinguished from temporary occupation, but does not include so much as 'domicile,' which requires an intention continued with residence. 'Residence' has been defined to be a place where a person's habitation is fixed, without any present intention of removing therefrom. It is lost by leaving the place where one had acquired a permanent home and removing to another place animo non revertendi, and is gained, by remaining in such new place animo manendi." Residence within the district, to give the court jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, must be bona fide, and the removal of a person from one district to another, for the express purpose of filing a petition in bankruptcy therein, and with the intent of leaving the district as soon as he obtained a discharge, does not make him a resident, so as to confer jurisdiction on the court. In re Garneau, 127 Fed. 677, 678, 62 C. C. A. 403.

In determining a voter's residence within General Election Law, § 66, providing that a permanent abode is necessary to constitute a "residence," the rules are reasonably well settled that a man must have a residence or domicile somewhere, which when once gained remains until a new one is acquired, and that a man can have but one domicile at a time. Welch v. Shumway, 83 N. E. 549, 558, 559, 232 Ill. 54.

One's "residence," within the proviso to Revisal 1905, § 424, that an action against a railroad shall be tried in one of certain counties, including that in which plaintiff "resided" when the cause of action arose, includes the idea of permanency: so that plaintiff having previously resided in W. county till he went to live in R. county, when employed as a car repairer by defendant under a contract terminable at the will of either party, where he lived two months till injured, and having never intended to change his residence from W. county, he retained his residence in the latter county. Watson v. North Carolina R. Co., 67 S. E. 502, 503, 152 N. C. 215.

As entire house

An assault committed on the gallery of a private "residence" is within the statute making it an aggravated assault when the party making the assault and battery goes into a private "residence," as the word "residence," as used in the statute defining this crime, means the entire house. Herd v. State, 90 S. W. 1119, 1121, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 600.

As legal residence

When "residence" is spoken of in connection with the right of a person to vote, legal residence is meant. Huston v. Anderson, 78 Pac. 626, 635, 145 Cal. 320.

The words "residence" and "usual place of residence," as employed in the statutes, are generally synonymous; hence the residence essential to confer jurisdiction is a legal one, equivalent to the domicile of the defendant. Ruby v. Pierce, 104 N. W. 1142, 74 Neb. 754.

In suits relating to taxation, right of suffrage, divorce, limitations of actions, etc., the term "residence" is used in the sense of "legal" residence; that is, the place of domicile or permanent abode, as distinguished from the place of temporary residence. Downs v. Downs, 23 App. D. C. 381, 388.

Temporary absence

Permanent "residence" is not affected by a temporary sojourn in another place for business purposes. Hislip v. Taaffe, 125 N. Y. Supp. 614, 615, 141 App. Div. 40.

The term "residence," as used in Rev. Code 1899, § 3605, making it a prerequisite to the claiming of homestead rights, is construed not to mean actual and continuous residence on the homestead, and temporary absence and removal therefrom do not defeat the right thereto. Smith v. Spafford, 112 N. W. 965, 967, 16 N. D. 208.

Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, providing for the sale and lease of public lands, declares that, if any purchaser shall fail to reside on and improve the land purchased by him, he shall forfeit the land and all payments made thereon, and the same shall be subject to resale without any action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Held, that, where plaintiff purchased four sections of school land under a statute requiring three years' "residence" thereon, but during the time left the land for eight months, during which she attended school, only returning to the land on one occasion for a period of one or two days, she thereby forfeited the land so purchased, though on her final return from school she again took up her residence on the home section. Andrus v. Davis, 89 S. W. 772, 773, 99 Tex. 303.

Where a person worked a farm; keeping a furnished room in the house thereon, which he occupied when there, and claimed his residence there, but generally and continuously lodged with his parents in another school district because they were old and helpless, and he considered it his duty to stay with them at night, returning to his farm every morning, the district where his farm was situated was the district of his "residence," within Rev. St. 1899, c. 149, providing that all personal property shall be assessed in the county and "district" where the owners reside. State ex rel. Kelly v. Shepperd, 117 S. W. 1169, 1173, 218 Mo. 656, 131 Am. St. Rep. 568.

Temporary presence

Rev. St. Wyo. 1899, § 3514, providing for substituted service of summons on an individual by the leaving of a copy at his usual place of "residence" with some member of the family over 14 years of age, does not contemplate a mere temporary stopping or abiding place, as distinguished from a regular or fixed and permanent residence, and hence does not authorize such substituted service on one who is temporarily within the state for the purpose of carrying out a temporary employment. Honeycutt v. Nyquist, Peterson & Co., 74 Pac. 90, 91, 12 Wyo. 183, 109 Am. St. Rep. 975.

"Residence" is lost by leaving the place where one has acquired a permanent home and removing to another place without a present intention of returning. "A temporary sojourn within a state for pleasure or business, accompanied by an intention to return to the state of one's former habitation, does not constitute 'residence.'" In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 345, 346, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986 (citing Pells v. Snell, 23 N. E. 117, 130 Ill. 379).

Under St. 1898, § 12, providing that, to entitle a person to vote at an election, he must have been an actual resident of the state for a year and of the election district for ten days, and section 69, subsecs. 2, 4, providing that a person's "residence" is his fixed habitation, from which he has no present intention of removing, and to which, when he is absent, he has the intention of returning, and that one shall not gain a residence by coming into an election precinct for temporary purposes only, a person who moves into a ward a short time before an election, to stay only while engaged on a particular job of work, and has no intention of making it his home, is not a qualified voter in the ward. State ex rel. Hallam v. Lally, 114 N. W. 447, 448, 134 Wis. 253, 15 Ann. Cas. 242.

"Residence" does not mean one's permanent place of abode, where he intends to live all of his days, or for an unlimited time; nor does it mean one's residence for a temporary purpose, with an intention of returning to his former residence when the purpose shall have been accomplished, but means, as we understand it, one's actual home, in the sense of having no other home, whether he intends to reside there permanently or for a definite or indefinite length of time. "The term 'residence' is flexible and may be given a restricted or enlarged meaning, considering the connection in which it is used. It involves, however, some idea of permanence and fixed intention to remain." A defendant sued jointly with another in a state court, who testifies that his home is in another state where he had property to which he expected to return, that he is there with his family for temporary purposes of his employment and for an indefinite time, does not become a resident of the state and district of suit so as to prevent his removal of the cause. Willingham v. Swift & Co., 165 Fed. 223, 224 (quoting and adopting definition in Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 20 Atl. 434, 73 Md. 66, and citing and adopting Bicycle Stepladder Co. v. Gordon, 57 Fed. 529).

Residence of board

Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 93, provides for the creation of miners' examining boards in counties where mines are operated, and declares that such boards shall meet monthly and examine under oath all persons residing in the county in which the boards reside who apply for certificates, and that the members of the boards shall be actually engaged in mining coal in the county for which they are appointed. Held, that the "residence" of the board referred to in the statute meant the place for which the members of the board might be appointed, and that the statute should be so construed as to entitle every miner, whether a resident or nonresident of the state or of the county where he makes his application for examination, who has had two years' actual experience in coal mining and desires to engage in mining in the county where he applies for examination, to take the examination and be granted a certificate to engage in coal mining in Illinois, and when so construed, is not unconstitutional as providing for the examination of miners only that reside in the county where the examining board is appointed. People v. Evans, 93 N. E. 388, 393, 247 Ill. 547.

Residence of corporation

Though a corporation cannot, in strict legal language, be said to reside in any particular county, its "residence." for the purpose of venue, may fairly be considered as being where it has its principal office. Starke Advertising Agency v. Adams, 64 Atl. 990, 991, 74 N. J. Law, 143.

For the purpose of determining the venue of an action, a corporation defendant's principal place of business is its place of "residence." Bloom v. Michigan Salmon Min. Co., 104 Pac. 324, 325, 11 Cal. App. 122.

The words "residence" and "home" are not, as ordinarily used, synonymous; but when used, as in this case, with reference to a corporation and its general office, the word "home" is the equivalent of "residence." The affidavit herein for the change of the place of trial was sufficient. The change of the place of trial was not waived. State ex rel. Ballard-Trimble Lumber Co. v. District Court of Clay County, 139 N. W. 135, 137, 120 Minn. 99.

The "residence" of a corporation, under the Tennessee statutes, is the county where its charter is registered in compliance with the statutes providing for its creation, and it is the place where the governing power of the corporation resides and is exercised, and not the place where its ordinary business is conducted. Southern Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 123 S. W. 353, 359, 122 Tenn. 279 (citing 1 Desty, Tax'n, p. 341).

A voluntary corporation's "residence" (so far as it has one) is the town or city where its business is principally executed. The place of a steamboat corporation's residence, within P. S. 1901, c. 56, § 12, and Laws 1905, p. 414, c. 25, § 1, providing for the taxation of vessels, etc., at the owner's place of residence, is the place where its business is principally conducted, and not the place where it merely maintains an office and holds stockholders' meetings, and the situs of the corporation's business is not changed by a declaration in its articles of incorporation that the place of business shall be a place other than where it actually conducts its business. Woodsum Steamboat Co. v. Town of Sunapee, 69 Atl. 577, 74 N. H. 495 (citing Kennett v. Woodworth-Mason Co., 39 Atl. 585, 68 N. H. 432).

In Judiciary Act as amended and corrected, providing that the Circuit Courts of the United States shall have original cognizance of suits in which there shall be a controversy between citizens of different states, but, where jurisdiction is founded only on diversity of citizenship, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant, and declaring (section 2) that any other suit of which the Circuit Courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section may be removed to the Circuit Court for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state, the words "residence" and "inhabitant" are used synonymously, and hence, where railroads incorporated in other states operated a part of their line in Iowa and were served there, they had a "residence" in Iowa, so that, other jurisdictional requisites being present, nonresidents having been injured in Iowa on such railroads could have sued originally in the federal courts sitting in that state, and therefore suits brought by them in the state courts were subject to removal. Bogue v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 193 Fed. 728, 733.

"It is now held by the English courts that a foreign corporation, by establishing an office in England and carrying on business there, is to be considered as a resident of England, and may be sued in its courts. Under the system prevailing in this country, corporations are regarded as citizens of the state in which they are created; but in other states are regarded as foreign corporations, and their right to transact business therein is subject to such conditions and restrictions as the legislatures of those states may prescribe. * * * The 'residence' of a corporation is within the state in which it is created, and, so long as it confines the exercise of its corporate powers within that state, it is beyond the reach of the process of courts of other states." Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 84 Pac. 289, 2 Cal. App. 582.

Under Civ. Code Prac. §§ 203, 732, subd. 32, authorizing an attachment of corporate stock, and defining the words "residence" and "reside" with reference to a corporation as referring to its chief office or place of business, the court in a suit under section 439 by a plaintiff in execution has jurisdiction to subject to the payment of the judgment the debtor's stock in a foreign corporation having its principal office in the state where its books and assets are, and where dividends on the stock are paid, since the stock has a situs in the state. Bowman v. Breyfogle, 140 S. W. 694, 697, 145 Ky. 443.

Under Revisal of 1905, § 424, providing for the trial of certain actions in the county where a party resides, and section 422 making the principal place of business of a domestic corporation its "residence," an action is properly brought by such corporation in the county, where it is required to hold its directors' and stockholders' meetings. A corporation cannot change its residence or its citizenship and can have its legal home only at the place where it is located, under the authority of its charter, though it may transact business anywhere, unless prohibited by its charter or excluded by local laws. The residence or domicile of a corporation is the place where the governing power of the corporation is exercised, and where the persons having control of its affairs meet in council to determine what the corporate policy shall be, and not where the labor, called forth by the measures of such council, is performed. Garrett & Co. v. Bear, 56 S. E. 479, 144 N. C.

23 (citing Welty, Assessments, p. 106; Grundy County v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co., 29 S. W. 116, 94 Tenn. 309).

Comp. Laws 1897, § 3834, makes corporate property taxable where its office is located in its articles of incorporation, provided its business is actually transacted at said office; but, if it shall establish its principal office in any other place than the place named in its articles of incorporation, then the place where it transacts its principal business shall be deemed its "residence" for the purpose of taxation. Held that, where the only business of a navigation company transacted at the place named in the articles of incorporation as its office is the annual meeting of stockholders, the "residence" of the corporation for the purpose of taxation is the place where the principal business is conducted, such as receiving and disbursing the funds of the corporation. Teagan Transp. Co. v. Board of Assessors of City of Detroit, 102 N. W. 273, 274, 139 Mich. 1, 69 L. R. A. 431, 111 Am. St. Rep. 391.

RESIDENCE ADDRESS

There is a distinction between residence address, as used in the local option law, providing that the petition for a local option election shall contain the residence address of each signer and post office address, a post office address being the place one receives his mail, while a residence address is where one resides, and hence a petition cannot be held defective for lack of post office addresses. People ex rel. Arfman v. Newell, 113 Pac. 643, 645, 49 Colo. 349.

RESIDENCE STREET

A street on either side of which were homes, all comfortable and many spacious and elegant, of well to do people, which had been selected for homes by this class of residents because of its quietude and repose, was what is termed "residence street." Holst v. Savannah Electric Co., 131 Fed. 931, 935.

RESIDENT

See Actual Residence—Actual Resident; Bona Fide Resident; Nonresident—Nonresidence.

The word "resident" is ordinarily used to indicate a person with a fixed domicile or legal residence. Bechtel v. Bechtel, 112 N. W. 883, 884, 101 Minn. 511, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100.

One may be a nonresident of the state and also a fugitive from justice or a fugitive from justice and still a "resident" of the state. State v. Miller, 87 S. W. 484, 486, 188 Mo. 370.

An owner residing outside a city, who moves to the city intending to remain there and become a citizen, immediately becomes a "resident" qualified to sign such protest.

Shaw v. Goben, 151 S. W. 209, 210, 167 Mo. App. 125.

Under the express provisions of Code, § 4014, the statutory exemptions provided are only for "residents" of the state, though a debtor claiming an exemption is not required to show residence for any particular time; it being sufficient if he has actually come within the state with the intention of remaining. Union County Inv. Co. v. Messix, 132 N. W. 823, 826, 152 Iowa, 412.

Where two or more court districts are formed out of one county, a clerk residing in the county can perform the duties of clerk of both courts, he being considered a "resident" of both districts within Const. art. 16, § 14, which requires district clerks to reside in their respective bailiwicks and keep their offices therein. Kruegel v. Daniels, 109 S. W. 1108, 1109, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 215.

A wife, who lived in a particular city with her husband during their cohabitation, and who, when abandoned, went to another state solely to make a living, acquiring no domicile there, and regarding such city as her home, was a "resident" of such city within Ky. St. 1909, § 2120, requiring one year's continuous residence next before suit for divorce. Cummings v. Cummings, 117 S. W. 289, 133 Ky. 1.

The term "resident," as used in the law of New York regulating divorce, is synonymous with "domiciled person." Thus, where one purchased a farm in Vermont and lived there with his family for five years, voted and held office there, qualification for which required a year's actual residence, he was a "resident" of Vermont, though he worked in New York and spent a portion of his time there. Hammond v. Hammond, 93 N. Y. Supp. 1, 6, 103 App. Div. 437.

The term "resident" or "residence," as applied to the complainant in bastardy proceedings, is not used in the sense in which it is employed in the Civil Code, but applies as well to the county in which the mother of the child may actually reside, and which is liable to be charged with its support, although she may in effect have a home in another county or state. While the proceedings may be brought in the county where the mother has a legal settlement, it may also be brought and prosecuted to judgment in the county of her actual residence. Jessen v. Donahue, 96 N. W. 639, 640, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 838 (citing Clark v. Carey, 60 N. W. 78, 41 Neb. 780).

Consolidated School Law, Laws 1894, p. 1225, c. 556, tit. 7, § 36, provides that the common schools shall be free to all persons of certain age, "residing in the district." Held that, where an orphan child had been placed by a society in the home of a resident of a school district under an arrangement whereby the society paid for his board and clothing, he was entitled to school privileges as a "resident," though there was no arrangement as to the term of his abode in the district; the well-recognized policy of the state relating to education, as expressed in Const. art. 9, § 1, School Law, tit. 7, §§ 11, 59, 60, and Compulsory Education Law, Laws 1894, pp. 1682, 1687, c. 671, §§ 2, 13, making it obvious that it was not the legislative intent to employ the word "residence," as used in the school law, in the narrow sense of "domicile." People ex rel. Brooklyn Childrens' Aid Soc. v. Hendrickson, 104 N. Y. Supp. 122, 54 Misc. Rep. 337.

The divorce and annulment act of 1907 provides that a decree of nullity may be rendered at the suit of the husband, when he was under 18 at the time of the marriage, unless such marriage be confirmed by him after arriving at such age. The act further provides, "for purposes of annulment of marriage, jurisdiction may be acquired by personal service of process upon the defendant within the state when either party is a bona fide resident of the state, at the time of the commencement of the action." Petitioner and defendant resided with their respective parents, who were domiciled in Philadelphia, Pa., and came to New Jersey and were married, returning at once to the homes of their parents in Philadelphia. When the marriage was disclosed a week later, the petitioner's parents would not permit him to receive defendant as his wife, and on March 9, 1910, sent him into the state to board with relatives; his earnings and some assistance from his father going to pay his board. His petition was filed March 26, 1910. Held, that the term "resident," as used in the act, included not only the factum of residence, but also the animus manendi, the residence required by the statute being equivalent to domicile; and that petitioner was not a "bona fide resident" of this state, and hence that the court had no jurisdiction. Hess v. Kimble, 81 Atl. 363, 364, 79 N. J. Eq. 454.

Absence or removal as affecting

Within Const. art. 10, § 1. granting exemptions only to residents of the state, one who, on being sentenced for one crime and indicted for another, fled the state, presumably with no intention to return, is not such a "resident," though his family continue to reside in the state, and his domicile may be there. Cromer v. Self, 62 S. E. 885, 886, 149 N. C. 164, 128 Am. St. Rep. 658.

Where a debtor sold all his nonexempt property, and started for another state with the intent of establishing a residence and while on his way and within the state, an attachment was levied on his horse, he was still a "resident" of the state within the exemption law, and entitled to claim exemption. Grimestad v. Lofgren, 117 N. W. 515, 517, 105 Minn. 286, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 990, 127 Am. St. Rep. 566.

Shannon's Code, § 4203, provides that a divorce may be granted where the petitioner has resided in the state for two years next preceding the filing of the petition. A man was born in Tennessee, and resided there until he was appointed to a position in a governmental department at Washington, D. C., to which place he moved with his family, and where he kept house for 22 years, only returning to the state of Tennessee on three occasions, when he voted there; and during such period he paid a poll tax in Tennessee for some years. He testified that it had been his intention to return in the event that he should lose his position. His position was under the civil service law, but the tenure of it was such that he might be discharged. Held, that he was not a "resident" of Tennessee, so as to entitle him to maintain a bill for divorce. Sparks v. Sparks, 88 S. W. 173, 174, 114 Tenn. 666.

As citizen

A complaint stating that plaintiff is a "resident" of a specified state is insufficient to show that he is a citizen of that state as affecting the question of jurisdiction of a federal court. Gaugler v. Chicago, M. & P. S. Ry. Co., 197 Fed. 79, 81.

An averment in a complaint that plaintiff is "a resident of the state of Delaware" must be intended to mean as averring that the plaintiff is a citizen of that state. Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Edwards, 24 Sup. Ct. 696, 698, 194 U. S. 377, 48 L. Ed. 1027 (citing Jones v. Andrews, 77 U. S. [10 Wall.] 331, 19 L. Ed. 935; United States Express Co. v. Kountze Bros., 75 U. S. [8 Wall.] 342, 19 L. Ed. 457).

An averment in a pleading that plaintiff is a "resident" of a particular state is not equivalent to one that he is a citizen of that state, and is insufficient to give a federal court jurisdiction, where that is dependent on diversity of citizenship. Board of Trustees of Mohican Tp., Ashland County, Ohio, v. Johnson, 133 Fed. 524, 66 C. C. A. 592.

Under Loc. Acts 1898-99, p. 1444, providing that a resident of the county shall be qualified as a juror, one who resided in the county but who paid his poll tax and voted in another county, was qualified, since the act did not require the juror to be a householder or a freeholder; it not being necessary to become a resident of another locality that the party should change his citizenship or his domicile. Huckabee v. State, 53 South. 251, 252, 168 Ala. 27 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6151).

Under Pol. Code, § 51, defining citizens as persons born in the state and residing within it, and all persons born out of the state who are citizens of the United States and residing within the state, one suing to restrain an illegal payment of county funds, who describes himself as a "resident" of the county, does not show that he is entitled to sue, within Code Civ. Proc. § 526a, authorizing actions to restrain illegal expenditures of public funds; by a "citizen resident" therein; the words "resident" and "citizen" not being synonymous. Thomas v. Joplin, 112 Pac. 729, 730, 14 Cal. App. 662.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident" mean substantially the same thing, and one is an "inhabitant," "resident," or "citizen" of the place where he has his domicile or home. A man's residence is his home or habitation, where that residence is fixed, and at a particular place, and he does not entertain a present intention of removing therefrom. To constitute a domicile but two elements are necessary: The act and the intention. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing State ex rel. Lowe v. Banta, 71 Mo. App. 32; Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Tiller v. Abernathy, 37 Mo. 196).

In reference to corporation

A corporation is a "resident" of the locality where its principal office is situated. People v. Mahens, 116 N. Y. Supp. 189, 192, 62 Misc. Rep. 317.

A domestic corporation, having its principal office and place of business in a county, is a "resident" of the county, within the statutes defining the place of trial. Finch School v. Finch, 129 N. Y. Supp. 1, 144 App. Div. 687.

A corporation is "resident," irrespective of its domicile, when it does business in a state, and its officers reside there, upon whom process may be served at their homes. Conversely a corporation, no matter where incorporated, which does not do business in the state and does not have officers residing there upon whom process may be served, is nonresident. Brand v. Auto Service Co., 67 Atl. 19, 20, 75 N. J. Law, 230.

A foreign corporation, being a nonresident in fact, becomes, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, by fiction of law a "resident" of the city, if it has a place therein for the regular transaction of business. Goldzler v. Central R. Co. of New Jersey, 88 N. Y. Supp. 214, 215, 43 Misc. Rep. 667.

Within the meaning of a statute which makes the improvement of a street depend upon the action of such of the owners of the abutting property as are residents of the city, a railroad corporation is not to be deemed a "resident" of any other city than that in which its chief offices and principal place of business are located. Kimmerle v. City of Topeka, 128 Pac. 367, 368, 88 Kan. 370, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272.

A corporation organized under the laws of a state cannot be a "resident" of another state, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 2, cl. 1, 30 Stat. 545, so as to confer jurisdiction on a court of bankruptcy in the latter state of proceedings against it. In re Mathews Consolidated Slate Co., 144 Fed. 724, 728, 729.

A railway company, though suable in the superior court of a city because its road passes through the city, is not a "resident" in such sense as to preclude it from exercising the right of a change of venue to the district court, given by Code Supp. 1907, § 261, to a defendant who is not a "resident of the city." Wiar v. Wabash R. Co., 130 N. W. 794, 795, 151 Iowa, 121.

Railroad corporations chartered by other states, but owning and operating railroads in this state, have the status of "residents" of this state, although they are not citizens of it, within the meaning of clause 1 of section 2 of article 3 and clause 1 of section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, nor domiciled in this state in the technical sense of that term. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 52 S. E. 465, 472, 58 W. Va. 388, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975 (criticising Railroad Co. v. Rogers, 44 S. E. 300, 52 W. Va. 450, 62 L. R. A. 178).

Within the meaning of the provisions of Judiciary Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, as amended, that "where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant," a railroad or other corporation of a state is a "resident" only of the state by which it is incorporated, and under section 2, which authorizes the removal only of suits "of which the Circuit Courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section," an action brought in a state court by a citizen of another state against a railroad company incorporated in a third state is one of which the federal court in that district is not "given original jurisdiction," and cannot be removed thereto by the defendant on the ground of diversity of citizenship, although it may have a line and places of business within the district and officers or agents on whom valid service may be made under the state law. Stone v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 195 Fed. 832-840.

The term "resident," contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, which defines the jurisdiction of county courts and provides that such jurisdiction extends to an action where the defendant, at the time of its commencement, is a resident of the county, and by Const. art. 6, § 14, which declares that the jurisdiction of county courts shall not be extended to an action in which any person, not a resident of the county, is a defendant, may include a "domestic corporation," within Code Civ. Proc. § 341, which provides that, in determining the jurisdiction of a county court, a domestic corporation is to be deemed a resident of the county in which its principal place of business is located, and under section 431, which provides for personal service of summons on a domestic corporation by delivering a copy thereof, if the action is against the city of New York to the mayor, comptroller, or counsel to the corporation, New York City is such a "domestic corporation" and is therefore a resident of the borough of Manhattan and may not be sued in the county court of another county. Malsch v. City of New York, 111 N. Y. Supp. 645, 647, 127 App. Div. 424; 86 N. E. 458, 193 N. Y. 460.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1026, provides that, if any foreign corporation shall fail to comply with the provisions of the statute, it shall not maintain any action in the state on any demand, provided that the statute does not apply to corporations which are entirely non-resident. A foreign corporation having its principal office in another state, and engaged in manufacturing vehicles, delivered vehicles to defendant under an agreement whereby the corporation retained the title, and defendant was to sell them at retail in his own name, making payment for any vehicle that he sold at a certain price, he having the right to retain any excess, and defendant agreed to insure the vehicles at his expense. Thereafter the corporation decided to transfer the vehicles to another dealer, but defendant retained a few that needed repair, agreeing to repair them at plaintiff's expense and sell under the terms of the prior agreement, and to insure them. Subsequently the vehicles were destroyed by fire, and plaintiff sued to recover the value of the vehicles. Held that, at the time of the contract in controversy, the corporation was conducting a fixed business, and had become a "resident foreign corporation," and, as such, not having complied with the statutes, could not recover on the contract. Wilson-Moline Buggy Co. v. Priebe, 100 S. W. 558, 559, 123 Mo. App. 521.

A corporation organized under the laws of any one of the United States is in contemplation of law a "citizen" and "resident" of the state in which it is incorporated. Act March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, as corrected and amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, 25 Stat. 433, provides for the removal of causes in which there shall be controversy between citizens of the state and foreign states, citizens, or subjects, and section 2 declares that all such suits may be removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being "nonresidents" of that state. Held that, where defendant was an alien insurance corporation, it was a nonresident of California within such act, though it had a branch office within the state for the transaction of business. Baumgarten v. Alliance Assur. Co., 153 Fed. 301, 302, 303, 304 (citing Shaw v. Quincy Mining Co., 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 145 U. S. 444, 36 L. Ed. 768; Miller v. Eastern Oregon Gold Mining Co., 45 Fed. 348; Gilbert v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 49 Fed. 884, 15 L. R. A. 125; Barrow Steamship Co. v. Kane, 18 Sup. Ct. 526, 170 U. S. 100, 42

L. Ed. 964; In re Keasbey & Mattison Co., Petitioner, 16 Sup. Ct. 273, 160 U. S. 229, 40 L. Ed. 402; Howard v. Gold Reefs of Georgia, 102 Fed. 657; Shattuck v. North British & Mercantile Insurance Co., 58 Fed. 609, 7 C. C. A. 386).

As inhabitant

An "inhabitant" and "resident" mean the same thing. Pearson v. West, 77 S. W. 944, 945, 97 Tex. 238.

The word "resident," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2476, relating to the jurisdiction of the subrogate courts, is construed as equivalent to "inhabitant." It is coordinate with and intended to have the same meaning that ordinarily attached to the word "inhabitant." In re Walker's Will, 105 N. Y. Supp. 890, 892, 54 Misc. Rep. 177.

The word "resident," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, relating to the jurisdiction of divorce suits, is synonymous with inhabitant; residence being synonymous with inhabitancy or domicile. Ensign v. Ensign, 105 N. Y. Supp. 917, 921, 54 Misc. Rep. 289.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 240, providing that the word "inhabitant" may be construed to mean a "resident" in any place, an "inhabitant" of a township, town, or city, within section 8421, providing that personal property shall be assessed to the owner in the township, town, or city of which he is an inhabitant, is one whose place of abode is there, and who has no present intention of moving therefrom. Schmoll v. Schenck, 82 N. E. 805, 807, 40 Ind. App. 581.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 3136, which provides that wills may be proven in any county where the testator was an inhabitant, and section 240, which provides that the word "inhabitant" may be construed to mean a resident in any place, a complaint upon objection to the probate of a will alleging that decedent was a "resident" of the county is good against demurrer. Ahearn v. Burk (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1004, 1005.

The words "inhabitant," "citizen," and "resident" mean substantially the same thing, and one is an "inhabitant," "resident," or "citizen" of the place where he has his domicile or home. A man's residence is his home or habitation, where that residence is fixed, and at a particular place, and he does not entertain a present intention of removing therefrom. To constitute a domicile but two elements are necessary: The act and the intention. Stevens v. Larwill, 84 S. W. 113, 118, 110 Mo. App. 140 (citing State ex rel. Lowe v. Banta, 71 Mo. App. 32; Greene v. Beckwith, 38 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Smith, 43 Mo. 499; Tiller v. Abernathy, 37 Mo. 196).

In the law of process and attachment, "residence" and "habitation" are generally regarded as synonymous. A "resident" and an inhabitant mean the same thing. A person "resident" is defined to be one dwelling or having his abode in any place; an "inhabitant" one that resides in a place. Atkinson v. Washington & Jefferson College, 46 S. E. 253, 259, 54 W. Va. 32 (citing Drake, Attachment).

Importing legal residence

As used in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1284, subd. 1, providing that wills shall be proved and letters testamentary or of administration shall be granted in the county in which decedent was a resident or had his place of abode at his death, the word "resident" imports a legal residence. Buchholz v. Buchholz, 115 Pac. 88, 89, 63 Wash. 213, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 395.

As having place of business

The word "office," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 3160, providing that a plaintiff in an action brought in the City Court of New York, who has an office for the regular transaction of business in person within the city of New York, is deemed a "resident" of that city, within the meaning of sections 3268 and 3269, which provide that a defendant may require security for costs where plaintiff is not a resident, means a place where service is rendered or business is done. Brassack v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 121 N. Y. Supp. 215, 216, 66 Misc. Rep. 190.

Permanent residence indicated

The word "resident," as used in Act May 4, 1855, authorizing a decree by the common pleas court of the county where the person desirous of adopting a child may be a resident, includes both permanent and temporary residence in the commonwealth. In re Brown's Adoption, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 259, 262.

The statutory terms "resident" or "residence," as used in divorce statutes, contemplate, as we think, an actual residence with substantially the same attributes as are intended when the term "domicile" is used. They do not mean the place where the defendant in fact resides for the time being. They mean a residence of a permanent and fixed character; a domicile. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 91 S. W. 405, 115 Mo. App. 361 (quoting and adopting definition in Hamill v. Talbott, 81 Mo. App. loc. cit. 215).

"Resident," as used in Rev. St. Me. c. 81, § 17, declaring that, in case of service on residents, the writ shall be delivered to the defendant or left at his dwelling house or place of last and usual abode, means one having a permanent residence within the state, as distinguished from one who is merely temporarily within the state. The term does not include a mere commorancy, or a residence for a temporary or short time, but it means a person residing within the state with the intention of remaining there. Thomas v. Thomas, 52 Atl. 642, 96 Me. 223, 90 Am. St. Rep. 342.

Const. art. 7, § 1, provides that every male person of the age of 21 years or upwards, who is a citizen of the United States or who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen at least 30 days prior to an election, and who has resided in the state six months and in the county, precinct, or ward for the term provided by law, shall be an elector. Held, that where a man whose family resided in a foreign country or in another state came to Nebraska temporarily to work on a railroad, and while so engaged boarded in a box car which was moved from station to station under the directions of the superintendent, and when the work was completed departed from the community, he was not a "resident" so as to entitle him to vote. White v. Slama, 130 N. W. 978, 979, 89 Neb. 65, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 518.

A "resident" is "one who has a residence; in the legal sense a residence is defined as a place where a man's habitation is fixed, without a present purpose of removing therefrom." The word "resident" is the opposite of "transient." "The former describes the person at rest in a town; the latter describes him in his passage through or across it." "A resident is also defined as one who has a seat or settlement in a place; one who dwells, abides, or lives in a place; inhabitant one who resides or dwells in a place for some time." Hence one who has resided in a state for more than a year, under an expressed intention to make his home there, and is engaged in business, having bought a home, joined a chamber of commerce, and paid a poll tax, is a resident, so far as affects the federal court's jurisdiction, though his affidavit resisting the jurisdiction stated that he had not determined to make his home or to become a citizen of the state. Reckling v. McKinstry, 185 Fed. 842, 843 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Cent. Dict. Town of New Haven v. Town of Middlebury, 21 Atl. 608, 63 Vt. 399; Burr. Law Dict.).

RESIDENT FREEHOLDER

The words "resident freeholders" mean those living within the subdivision and holding title to real estate. A person holding an executory contract giving the right to purchase land upon a strict compliance with the terms of the contract in the future is not a resident freeholder. In re Cohn, 121 N. W. 107, 109, 84 Neb. 230.

The term "resident freeholder," as used in Cobbey's Ann. St. § 1175, providing that village authorities may grant a license to sell intoxicating liquors when a petition therefor shall be signed by a designated number of resident freeholders, is used in its ordinary and commonly understood meaning, and a wife, living with her husband on land the title to which is in the latter, and which is occupied by them jointly as family homestead, is not a freeholder; and the same is true as to a husband living with his wife on land occupied by them jointly as a homestead, the legal title to which is in her. Campbell v. Moran, 99 N. W. 498, 499, 71 Neb. 615.

RESIDENT LICENSE

Laws 1905, p. 168, § 54, makes it unlawful for any person to hunt outside the county in which he lives without first obtaining a license so to do. Section 53 provides how one may obtain a license on application to the clerk of the county of the applicant's residence. Section 61 imposes a penalty on any one hunting without a license. Section 57 (page 168) provides that county clerks and the license collector of the city of St. Louis shall issue "resident licenses" to persons complying with the statute; and section 58 (page 169) provides that tenants of farm land and owners thereof may hunt on their lands without a license. In the statute as originally drafted, section 54 merely made it unlawful for any person to hunt in the state. Section 64 (page 170) requires all proceeds of license fees to be paid into a fund for the protection of game. Held that, inasmuch as there is an express exception in relation to farm lands, and as little revenue would be received if persons could hunt without a license in the counties of their residence, and as hunters and county clerks might not have understood the phrase "resident license" to mean a "state license," as was no doubt intended by the Legislature, and might have doubts whether a hunter hunting outside of his own county was required to have a license, which doubt is removed by section 54 (page 168), such section does not, by implication, permit one to hunt without a license in the county of his residence. State v. Kooec (Mo.) 96 S. W. 721, 723.

RESIDENT OWNER

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 9255, a former resident of a city, who, with his family, has moved into the country, where he votes, is assessed, pays his taxes, and sends his children to school, is not a "resident owner," although he states that he intends to return to the city, since, while residence is largely a question of intention, an accomplished act cannot be overturned by the mere assertion of a contrary intention. Shaw v. Goben, 151 S. W. 209, 210, 167 Mo. App. 125.

The words "resident owners," as used in Act April 4, 1900, being an act providing for the improvement of public roads, designate, and include all owners of real estate, residents of the county, owning land lying within one mile of the road to be improved, and all must be counted in determining whether a majority of the resident owners have signed the petition for the improvement. Alexander v. Baker, 78 N. E. 366, 368, 74 Ohio St. 258.

Cobbeys Ann. St. 1907, § 5561, provides that a majority in interest of the resident owners in any contiguous body of swamp lands in the state situated in one or more counties may form a drainage district to reclaim such lands, and for that purpose may sign articles of association. Held, that the words "in the state," following the words "swamp lands," modify "resident owners," and it is not required that resident owners be persons residing on the land included in the drainage district. In re Drainage Dist. No. 1 of Harlan County, 121 N. W. 462, 463, 84 Neb. 487.

The word "resident" in Pub. Acts 1909, No. 283, c. 9, § 7, authorizing any resident owner of timber land wishing a temporary highway to be laid out to apply to the commissioner of highways of the proper township, means a resident of the state; it not being restricted, expressly or by fair inference, to any subdivision thereof. Burdick v. Harbor Springs Lumber Co., 133 N. W. 822, 824, 167 Mich. 673.

RESIDING IN THE COUNTY

See If Residing in the County.

RESIDUARY

A devise of "all the residue of my lands in S. county" is a "residuary devise." Morley v. Brown, 56 S. E. 704, 144 N. C. 154.

A "residuary clause" in a will is a gift of all that is left after the gifts specified or designated have been paid and satisfied. In re Vanuxem's Estate, 61 Atl. 876, 878, 212 Pa. 315, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400 (quoting Wood's Estate, 13 Pa. Dist. R. 195).

A provision in a will may be treated as the "residuary clause," though it does not occur at the end of the will, where the intent to make it the "residuary clause" can be determined from the will as a whole. Prison Association v. Russell's Adm'r, 49 S. E. 966, 968, 103 Va. 563 (citing Schouler, Wills [3d Ed.] § 522).

"The purpose of a 'residuary clause' in a will is to make a complete testamentary disposition of the estate of the testator, so that no part of it may be left to pass under the intestate laws. It is a gift of all that is left after the gifts specified or designated have been paid or satisfied, and it carries with it, and is presumed to have been so intended, not only all personal estate which remains not specifically disposed of at the time the will is executed, but all that for any reason is illy disposed of, or fails as to the legatees originally intended." In re Wood's Estate, 57 Atl. 1103, 1104, 209 Pa. 16.

No particular words are necessary to constitute a "residuary devise." All that is necessary is that the testator's intention is discernible; that the person designated shall take the surplus; and it is immaterial that the clause is not the last of the disposing provisions, though such is the usual position. The residue of testator's estate is that part which is not otherwise disposed of by the will; and hence a general residuary bequest carries with it everything not in terms disposed of, and, with such exceptions as are pointed out in connection with the subject of lapsed and void legacies, everything not effectually or well disposed of, as well as lapsed legacies, unless a contrary intent clearly appears from the will. To constitute a "residuary devise" of personal property, the words "rest," "residue," and "remainder" are not indispensable, and quite informal words have been given effect as a residuary disposition. Jordan's Adm'r v. Richmond Home for Ladies, 56 S. E. 730, 735, 106 Va. 710 (citing Prison Ass'n v. Russell's Adm'r, 49 S. E. 968, 103 Va. 567).

RESIDUARY ESTATE

The term "residuary estate" means what is left when all the debts and particular legacies are discharged. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 395, 149 Wis. 631.

Where a testatrix, by three consecutive clauses, disposed of the rest, residue, and remainder of her estate, in effect disposing of a residue of a residue, and in another clause provided that the principal of a trust fund should form a part of her residuary estate, the words "residuary estate" meant that created by the last residuary clause, which was the only true residuary clause. In re Title Guarantee Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 169, 171, 127 App. Div. 118 (citing United States Trust Co. v. Black, 40 N. E. 403, 146 N. Y. 1).

RESIDUARY LEGATEE

"A 'residuary legatee' is one who takes what remains, or a portion of what remains, after satisfying all other gifts, charges, losses, and expenses." In re Goggin's Estate, 88 N. Y. Supp. 557, 560, 43 Misc. Rep. 233.

An appointment of a "residuary legatee," standing alone in a will, is a gift of the personal estate only, but the term may be used to include one receiving land under a will, and the courts will look to the whole will to discover the meaning of testator, and the fact that the will disposes specifically of real estate is important in determining what property passes to the residuary legatee, especially when, considered in connection with the language in the will indicating an intention to dispose of testator's whole estate, or that the real and personal estate constitute a common fund. Dann v. Canfield, 84 N. E. 117, 118, 197 Mass. 591, 14 Ann. Cas. 794.

Under Code 1904, art. 93, § 33, which declares that in granting administration with the will annexed the residuary legatee or legatees shall be preferred, and directs the orphans' court to proceed in the manner directed by law with respect to executors within the state before administration with the will annexed shall be granted to any other person, the phrase "in the manner directed by law" relates to the provisions of sections 32 and 33, relative to notice; and, where the executor named in the will declined to act, the "residuary legatee" was the person next entitled, and a person who, in addition to a bequest of the residue of the estate after the death of another was given a remainder in a specific part of the estate, is a "residuary legatee," and hence on petitions by such legatee and by a creditor the court could not grant administration to the creditor. McCaughy v. Byrne, 80 Atl. 653, 654, 115 Md. 85.

RESIDUE

See Balance and Residue; Rest and Residue; Rest, Residue, and Remainder.

All the rest, residue, and remainder, see All.

Under a deed granting "all the residue of my property, real and personal, that has not otherwise been signed to her for like services, which may be remaining in my name and ownership at time of my death," the term "residue" does not mean what shall remain at his death, but means what had not theretofore been conveyed to the grantee; or, in other words, it means what property he had at the time of the execution of the deed. The effect, therefore, is the same as though he had said, "All of my present property, real and personal, which may be remaining," etc. Ricker v. Brown, 67 N. E. 353, 183 Mass. 424.

In administration and wills

The term "residue," as used in a will, means that of which no effectual disposition is made other than by the residuary clause. Kent v. Kent, 55 S. E. 564, 566, 106 Va. 199.

The "residue" of testator's estate as the term was used in his will, consisted of the part that remained of the general estate after deducting the debts and the widow's legal share. In re Reynolds' Will (Wis.) 138 N. W. 1019, 1022.

The "residue" of a testate estate is that which is left after payment of the debts, legacies, specific and general, and satisfying other specific gifts. Frelinghuysen v. New York Life Ins. & Trust Co., 77 Atl. 98, 102, 31 R. I. 150, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 237.

Civ. Code, § 1332, provides that a "devise of the residue" of testator's real property passes all the real property which he is entitled to devise at the time of his death, not otherwise effectually bequeathed by his will. Where a testator gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his property to a daughter, this could not be limited by a subsequent clause declaring that all the estate therein devised was the community property of his wife and himself, so as to work intestacy as to property that was not community property. In re Granniss' Estate, 75 Pac. 324, 326, 142 Cal. 1.

The "residue" in the law of wills and administration is what remains after paying the legacies of the will and the debts and expenses of administration and the residue must be distributed in kind to the residuary legatees. McDougald v. Low, 127 Pac. 1027, 1028, 164 Cal. 107.

"Residue" means that which remains, and no particular mode of expression is necessary to constitute a residuary clause. Barker v. Town of Petersburg, 82 N. E. 996, 997, 41 Ind. App. 447.

A general residuary devise is as between it and a specific devise, and specific or even pecuniary legacies, the primary fund for the payment of debts; the "residue" meaning what remains after satisfying all former gifts. Gould v. Winthrop, 5 R. I. 319, 324.

While ordinarily the word "residue," when found in a will, is held to signify the property of the testator, the disposition of which has not otherwise been indicated—what remains after the payment of charges and specific legacies—it cannot well be thought to have been so used where no portion of the estate remained otherwise undisposed of by the will. Woolverton v. Johnson, 77 Pac. 559, 562, 69 Kan. 708.

"Where a testator gives several legacies and then, without creating any express trust for their payment, makes a general residuary disposition of the whole estate, blending the realty and personalty together in one fund, the real estate will be charged with the legacies, for in such cases the 'residue' can only mean what remains after satisfying the previous gifts." Tyler v. Tailman, 68 Atl. 948, 950, 29 R. I. 57 (quoting and adopting definition in Hill, Trustees [4th Am. Ed.] *360).

"The 'residue' is that part of testator's estate not otherwise disposed of; hence a general residuary bequest carries with it everything not in terms disposed of, and, with such exceptions as are pointed out in connection with the subject of lapsed and void legacies, everything not effectually or well disposed of, as well as lapsed legacies, unless a contrary intent clearly appear from the will." Prison Ass'n of Virginia v. Russell's Adm'r, 49 S. E. 966, 968, 103 Va. 563 (quoting and adopting definition in Woerner, Law of Administration [2d Ed.] § 462).

Where a will made a gift to the testator's wife while she lived and remained unmarried, and at her death or remarriage she is given a power to apportion the "residue" to his children, the word "residue" means "remainder." Cook v. Sackett, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1085, 1087, 110 App. Div. 322.

"Residue" is defined by Webster as that which remains after a part is taken, separated, removed, or designated. While the word

"residue," applied to estate or property generally, as in the usual residuary clause of a will, may include all the remaining estate, whether in possession, remainder, or reversion, when applied only to a given parcel of land, its popular meaning is simply the remaining acres of that parcel, and not the remaining estate in the parcel. Thus, where testator, owning a field of 15 acres on the east side of B. road, devised the eastern 5 acres to his wife for life, and then devised to a son the residue of his land lying on the east side of B. road, it was held that the son took only the remaining 10 acres, and that the estate in the 5 acres after the death of the widow was undevise and descended to testator's heirs. Young v. Quimby, 56 Atl. 656, 657, 98 Me. 167.

"Residue" is variously defined as "that which remains after discharging all legal and testamentary claims on the estate." Eyer v. Marsden, 4 Mylne & C. 231, 243. "That which is left after the payment of charges, debts, and particular legacies." Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250, 264. "That which remains after all paramount claims upon the testator's estate are satisfied." Tomlinson v. Bury, 14 N. E. 137, 145 Mass. 346, 1 Am. St. Rep. 464. "All of which no effectual disposition is made by will other than [by] the residuary clause." Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 570; Morton v. Woodbury, 47 N. E. 283, 153 N. Y. 257. "All property subject to be bequeathed by her not otherwise effectually disposed of." Harrington v. Pier, 82 N. W. 345, 105 Wis. 485, 499, 50 L. R. A. 307, 76 Am. St. Rep. 924. While, of course, the word may be used in a different sense, as to describe the remainder of a fund or, indeed, of the whole estate after deducting merely some particular charges or bequests, the presumption is very strong that it is used in the general sense above defined, unless the contrary clearly appears from the context. In re Bradley's Will, 101 N. W. 393, 394, 123 Wis. 186, 3 Ann. Cas. 716.

As used in Rev. St. 1858, c. 99, § 1, subd. 6, providing that the residue of the personal estate after certain allowances to the widow and children should be distributed in the same proportions to the same persons and for the same purposes as prescribed for the descent and disposition of real estate, the word "residue" was broad enough to include all residue remaining undisposed of by a will, and was not narrowed by the amendment contained in Rev. St. 1878, § 3935, providing that the residue of the personal estate of any intestate or of the personal estate of a testator, not disposed of by his will, and not required for the purposes thereinbefore mentioned, shall be distributed as prescribed for the descent and disposition of real estate. The purpose of the amendment was to cover property not disposed of by a will and not required for the purposes mentioned in preceding subdivisions of the statute and to make the statute more clear and explicit. Chapman v. Chapman, 107 N. W. 668, 669, 128 Wis. 413.

RESIDUUM

A testator bequeathed to his wife the income from funds for her life, also a cash legacy and personal property, and devised to her their homestead for life; and a later item of his will declared that it was his intention that the provisions in favor of his wife should have precedence over all other gifts, devises, or legacies. Another clause declared that it was his wish that his executors should have ample time in which to administer and settle his estate, so that no property should be unduly sacrificed by a speedy sale. The testator also bequeathed to trustees, on the death of his wife, a part of the fund of which she was given the income for life for the establishment of a children's hospital, which fund upon the failure of the city to comply with certain conditions, was to pass into and become a part of the residue, and to be distributed to the then living children of the testator's brothers and sisters. The testator gave specific legacies to his nephews and nieces, who were his heirs, and also gave specific legacies to his brothers and sisters, besides giving them the remainders in part of the funds bequeathed to his wife. The residuary clause recited that all the rest and residue of the testator's estate, "after providing for the devises, bequests and legacies" mentioned, and after so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the expense of taxes on his homestead and keeping the same in repair for the benefit of testator's wife, was devised and bequeathed to the then living children of his brothers and sisters. Held that, if the testator intended there should be a number of residuums, to be distributed from time to time, his intention would be carried out, but the idea would give a new meaning to the term "residuum" or "residuary estate," which means that which is left when all the debts and particular legacies are discharged; but, in view of the testator's solicitude for his wife, and the fact that part of the fund of which she was given a life income was directed to be disposed of as part of the residuum, and in view of the use of the word "after," which ordinarily denotes subordination as to time, the will created only one residuum, which was not to be distributed until after the death of the testator's wife; the words "then living" referring to the death of the wife. In re Stark's Will, 134 N. W. 389, 395, 149 Wis. 631.

RESIGN

To "resign" is to give back, to give up in a formal manner, an office. State v. Huff, 87 N. E. 141, 144, 172 Ind. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 355.

RESIGNATION

As disability, see Disability.
Tender of, see Tender.

"Resignation" is the act of giving up; it is the act of an officer by which he declines his office and renounces the further right to use it. Hence, independent of statute and under Comp. Laws, §§ 1814-1816, authorizing any officer to resign by transmitting the resignation to prescribed officers, and declaring that the office shall become vacant on the resignation of the incumbent, an acceptance is not necessary to effect a resignation. State v. Murphy, 97 Pac. 391, 395, 30 Nev. 409, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210 (citing Webst. Dict. and Bouv. Law Dict.).

To constitute a "res'gnation," it must be unconditional, and with intent to operate as such. There must be an intention to relinquish a portion of the term of office accompanied by an act of relinquishment. It is to give back, to give up in a formal manner, an office; any act of an officer by which he declines his office, and renounces the further right to its use. State v. Huff, 87 N. E. 141, 144, 172 Ind. 1, 139 Am. St. Rep. 355.

RESILIENCE

The Century Dictionary defines "resilience" as "the act of recolling (that is, starting back, recolling); leaping or springing back; the act of rebounding"—and defines "resilient" as having resilience; inclined to leap or spring back; leaping or springing back; rebounding. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 496, 503.

RESILIENT CONNECTION

A solid bar of iron or steel screw threaded at each end, and having each end, respectively, inserted in screw-threaded apertures in two frames, and operated by hand to draw the two frames together and force them apart, was not a "resilient connection" between the two frames nor a well-known mechanical equivalent for a "resilient connection." A coil spring connection answers to a "resilient connection," but a rigid iron bar or jackscrew, screw threaded as described and turned by a lever, does not form such a connection. Palmer v. Jordan Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 496, 501, 503.

RESINOUS BODY

To constitute a "resinous body," that body need not necessarily have resin in its composition, or contain resin. It is a resinous body if it has the essential attributes of such body; that is, if it partakes of the properties of resin. It must partake of all the properties of resin, not necessarily those of all resins, but of resins generally, or of some resin. Resins, or a resinous body, should be soluble in water, and melt by the application of heat. They do not volatilize without partial decomposition. Some of them have a crystalline form or structure. Generally, but not always, they are translucent, and generally are of a brown color. Their consistence is variable. When heated, they melt into a thick viscid liquid, and concrete on cooling into a smooth, shining mass. They take fire by contact with an ignited body. Resins dissolve in ether and the volatile oils. When heated, they combine with the unctuous oils. They combine readily with the alkalis and alkaline earths, and form what were once called soaps; but they are not truly saponified. They represent the acid constitution themselves, and, as such, saturate the salifiable bases. They are not conductors of electricity. The solid resins are amber, amine, benzoin, colophony, copal, dammara, dragon's blood, elemi, gualac, lac, resin of julap, ladanum, mastic, sandarach, storax, and takamahoe. Stearine pitch is a resinous body. Standard Paint Co. v. Bird, 175 Fed. 346, 351, 352 (quoting and adopting definition in Ure Dict.).

RESIST

See Unreasonably Resisted.

Under the statute which requires railroad companies to maintain fences sufficient to "resist horses, cattle and live stock," an instruction that a company was required to maintain one sufficient to "turn stock" was not improper; the quoted terms being synonymous. Deal v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 129 S. W. 50, 52, 144 Mo. App. 684.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring a railroad company to construct and maintain fences sufficient to prevent stock getting on the track, an instruction in an action under such section for injuries to stock, which defined a lawful fence as one sufficient "to resist horses, cattle, swine, and like stock," was not erroneous for using the phrase "to resist"; such phrase not being as strong as the phrase "to prevent" in the statute. Hax v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 100 S. W. 693, 695, 123 Mo. App. 172.

RESISTANCE

See Effectual Resistance; Self-Induction and Resistance; Unit of Resistance.

"'Resistance' is opposing force to force (Bouvier), not retreating from force." Brown v. State, 106 N. W. 536, 539, 127 Wis. 193, 7 Ann. Cas. 258.

Where a contract for the purchase of defendant's stock in plaintiff corporation provided that defendant should not concern himself in the manufacture or sale of resistance or steel armature binding wire, sheet, or strip, such manufactures must be understood as some alloy of copper used in the manufacture of electric apparatus which does not conduct electricity as freely as pure copper, which is the best conductor, and hence is called "resistance, wire, sheet, or strip." Driver-Harris Wire Co. v. Driver, 62 Atl. 461, 463, 70 N. J. Eq. 34.

RESOLUTION

See Concurrent Resolution; Joint Resolution.

A "resolution" is somewhat less formal than an ordinance, being generally a mere expression of the opinion of the council as to some matter of administration, and it need not be in any set form. Sawyer v. Lorenzen & Weise, 127 N. W. 1091.

The term "ordinances or resolutions," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 2658, giving the mayor of the city power to sign or veto any ordinance or resolution passed by the council, was intended to include not only ordinances, as such, but also "resolutions" of a legislative character, which therefore are similar to ordinances in this respect. "A 'resolution' prescribing that certain streets and avenues shall be paved in a certain designated manner is of a legislative character and subject to veto by the mayor. State v. Duis, 116 N. W. 751, 753, 17 N. D. 319.

Code, § 2448, par. 2, requires one seeking the right to sell intoxicants among other things to file with the county auditor a certified copy of a resolution regularly adopted by the city council consenting to such sales. Section 659 requires the town clerk to make an accurate record of all proceedings, etc., adopted by the council. The purported council resolution filed by an applicant for leave to sell intoxicants contained his petition to the mayor and town council, and thereafter recited serialim, "sixth month 25th day, 1900. Called vote of council, trustee B. voted yea," followed by a similar statement of the affirmative votes of the other four trustees, which were followed by the word, "Carried," and attested by the signature of the town clerk and signed by the mayor. Held, that the resolution contemplated by the statute was the formal action of the town council and a record of such action preserved, and that the purported resolution was insufficient as not showing what question was voted on; a "resolution" being the formal expression of the opinion or will of an official body or a public assembly, adopted by a vote, nor was the record such as could be certified, as required by the statute, the town clerk not attesting that any action of the town council was made a matter of record. Sawyer v. Collins, 127 N. W. 1015, 148 Iowa, 712.

Ordinance distinguished

The term "ordinances or resolutions," as used in Rev. Codes 1905, § 2658, giving the mayor of the city power to sign or veto any ordinance or resolution passed by the council, was intended to include, not only ordinances as such, but also resolutions of a legislative character, which therefore are similar to ordinances in this respect. A resolution prescribing that certain streets and avenues shall be paved in a certain designated manner is of a legislative character and subject to veto by the mayor. State v. Duis, 116 N. W. 751, 753, 17 N. D. 319.

An "ordinance" is also a "resolution," and the two are equivalent. Hence an ordinance, authorizing a street improvement, passed only 19 days after the resolution of intention had been passed, is premature and void, under Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153), though not signed by the mayor until two days after its enactment. Mulberry v. O'Dea, 88 Pac. 367, 368, 4 Cal. App. 385 (citing City of Los Angeles v. Waldron, 3 Pac. 890, 65 Cal. 285; Hellman v. Shoulters, 44 Pac. 921, 45 Pac. 1057, 114 Cal. 157).

Under a city charter giving the council power to make ordinances, regulations, and by-laws, a grant of a privilege to install a system of pipes through the streets of the city to convey water to the inhabitants may be by "resolution." City of Barre v. Perry & Scribner, 73 Atl. 574, 575, 576, 82 Vt. 301.

There is a plain distinction between the functions of an "ordinance" and a simple "resolution" not adopted as an ordinance. An "ordinance" is a mode of expressing the legislative acts of a municipal corporation, and a resolution is an order of temporary character and of a ministerial nature. Pensacola v. Southern Bell Telephone Co., 37 South. 820, 824, 49 Fla. 161 (citing City of Jacksonville v. Ledwith, 7 South. 885, 26 Fla. 163, 9 La. R. A. 69, 23 Am. St. Rep. 558).

RESOLVE

One of the definitions of "resolve" is to separate a thing into its component parts; to reduce to constituent elements. Miquez v. Delcambre, 51 South. 108, 113, 125 La. 176.

"The word 'resolved' is as potent to declare the legislative will as the word 'enacted.'" A joint resolution enacted by the words "Be it resolved," etc., is a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provision of Const. art. 3, § 16, requiring all laws to be enacted by the words "Be it enacted," etc. Smith v. Jennings, 45 S. E. 821, 823, 825, 67 S. C. 324 (quoting Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268).

RESORT

See Public Resort.

In a trial for keeping a liquor resort, the words "commonly" and "habitually" used in a requested instruction, applied to the resort, were properly omitted as mere tautology, since "resort" means a place of "frequent assembly." State v. Fogg, 77 Atl. 714, 716, 107 Me. 177.

RESORT FOR GAMBLING

Where a person opens a house under his control and permits persons to gather there and gamble without invitation, it becomes a "resort for gambling." Davis v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 313, 314.

RESORT TO

Single visit

Suffering a single private act of illicit intercourse or lascivious behavior or exposure of person in one's house is not keeping a house of illfame, or a building "resorted to" for prostitution or lewdness, within the meaning of Gen. St. Mass. c. 87, §§ 6, 7. To hold that it did would be to leave wholly out of view the meaning of the phrase "resorted to," as used in those sections of the statute. The prohibition is against keeping or maintaining a house which persons are permitted to frequent for the purpose of unlawful sexual indulgence. The mischief which the statute seeks to prevent is the existence of such places of resort, with the temptations which they hold out and the vices which they engender and encourage. To prove the offense charged, there need not necessarily be direct evidence of numerous acts of prostitution or lewdness permitted by the keeper of the house. But the evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, must be sufficient to satisfy the jury that it was kept as a place of "resort" for such purposes. Commonwealth v. Lambert (Mass.) 12 Allen, 177, 179.

RESOURCES

The "resources" of a county include its land, timber, coal, crops, improvements, railways, factories, and everything that goes to make up its wealth or to render it desirable. All these the fiscal court has power to advertise under Act March 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 342, c. 73), amending Ky. St. 1903, § 1840; but under such statute the fiscal court cannot appropriate county funds to secure a political convention to be held in the county; that object not being within the statutory authority to advertise the resources of the county. Jefferson County v. Peter, 105 S. W. 887, 888, 127 Ky. 453.

RESPECT

See In Respect To.

RESPECTABLE

See Not a Respectable Woman.

One who is frequently under the influence of liquor, and who during the preceding year permitted gambling in his place of business, is not a man with "respectable character" within Cobbey's St. 1907, § 7150, and not entitled to a liquor license. Woods v. Garvey, 118 N. W. 1114, 82 Neb. 776.

As applied to witnesses, the words "respectable" and "reputable" have practically the same meaning. Mr. Webster defines the term "respectable" as worthy of respect; fitted to awaken esteem; deserving regard; hence of good repute; not mean; as a respectable citizen—and the term "reputable" as having or worthy of good repute; held in esteem; honorable; praiseworthy; as a reputable man or character. State v. Spivey, 90 S. W. 81, 87, 191 Mo. 87 (citing Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606).

The determination as to how a corpse shall be dressed for burial and the quality of the coffin and the box in which it is to be placed, as well as the depth of the grave, are matters for those who have the burial in charge, so that what is a "decent," "proper," or "respectable" burial will vary with the financial or social standing of the deceased and his relatives, the customs of the community, and the rules of religious, social, and political organizations to which he may have belonged. Seaton v. Commonwealth, 149 S. W. 871, 872, 149 Ky. 498, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211.

RESPECTING TITLE TO LAND

A suit for specific performance is not a suit "respecting titles to land," within Const. art. 6, § 16, par. 2, requiring cases of that nature to be tried in the county where the land lies. Marshall v. Whatley, 72 S. E. 244, 245, 136 Ga. 805, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552.

A suit to recover for trespass to land is not one "respecting titles to land," within the Constitution, conferring on the superior court exclusive jurisdiction of such suits, though title to land may be incidentally involved. Batson v. Higginbotham, 68 S. E. 455, 456, 7 Ga. App. 835.

An action under Civ. Code 1910, § 3666, by a remainderman against a life tenant, to have the estate of the latter declared forfeited and the remainderman put in possession, because of waste committed by the tenant, is a suit "respecting titles to land," and the venue thereof is the county in which the land involved is located. Brown v. Martin, 73 S. E. 495, 498, 137 Ga. 338, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16.

RESPECTIVE

Article 6 of the Treaty of Amity and Commerce of 1783 between the United States and Norway and Sweden as revived by the Treaty of Commerce of Navigation of 1827, art. 17, providing that the subjects of the contracting parties in the respective states may freely dispose of their goods and effects by testament, donation, or otherwise, means that the subject may freely dispose of his property within the country of his citizenship; the word "respective" being defined as "pertaining or relating severally to each of those under consideration; several; particular." In re Stixrud's Estate, 109 Pac.

RESPECTIVELY

While the word "respectively" is not given precisely the same meaning by lexicographers as the word "alternately," it is used in Act 1901 (P. L. 629), allowing challenges to be made by the state and defendant, "respectively," in the same sense as the word "alternately," used in Act 1860 (P. L. 440, § 38), providing that the commonwealth shall challenge one person and the defendant one person, and so "alternately" until all the challenges shall be made. Commonwealth v. Conroy, 56 Atl. 427, 428, 207 Pa. 212.

"The power to call a term was conferred originally upon the justices of the Supreme Court, not acting collectively or together, but severally; that is, upon each individual acting as circuit judge in his respective district, and in reference to the court over which he had authority to preside, and not in respect to the circuit court of some other district of which he was not primarily ex officio the judge. "Severally" has been construed to be equivalent in meaning to "respectively." Hanley v. City of Medford, 108 Pac. 188, 192, 56 Or. 171.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR

The law of "respondeat superior" is that the master is liable for the negligent acts of his servants if done in obedience to the master's orders or within the scope of the servants' employment or line of their duty. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Henefy (Tex.) 99 S. W. 884, 885.

"The maxim of 'respondeat superior' is founded on the principle that he who expects to derive advantage from an act which is done by another for him must answer for any injury which another may sustain from it." A railroad company carrying mails is liable for injuries to a mail clerk caused by the negligence of a railroad employé. Barker v. Chicago & P. & St. L. Ry. Co., 90 N. E. 1057, 1059, 243 Ill. 482, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058, 134 Am. St. Rep. 382.

"The maxim of 'respondeat superior' means that a master is responsible for the acts of its servants if the particular act causing the injury be within the scope of, and be done in the exercise of, the servant's delegated authority. The test of the existence of the relation of master and servant is found in the exercise of authority in appointing the servant, in directing his acts, in receiving the benefits of his acts, and in reserving the power of dismissal." Fetting v. Winch, 104 Pac. 722, 723, 54 Or. 600, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379, 21 Ann. Cas. 352 (quoting and adopting definition in 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6177).

A person can be held liable for negligence of another only under the maxim "respondeat superior," which applies only where the relation of master and servant exists, or where defendant is estopped to deny that it exists. Thomas v. Springer, 119 N. Y. Supp. 460, 463, 134 App. Div. 640; Id., 119 N. Y. Supp. 463, 134 App. Div. 982.

The test of a master's liability, under the rule of "respondeat superior," is, not whether a given act was done during the existence of the servant's employment, but whether such act was done by the servant while engaged in the service of and while acting for the master in the prosecution of the master's business. A master is not liable for the negligent act of a servant or employé if, at the time of the doing of such act, the servant or employé is not then engaged in the service or duties of his employment, although the act be one which, if done by such servant or employé while on duty and at a time when actually engaged in his master's service, would be clearly within the course and scope of the usual and ordinary duties of such servant or employé. Lima Ry. Co. v. Little, 65 N. E. 861, 863, 67 Ohio St. 91 (citing Little Miami R. Co. v. Wetmore, 19 Ohio St. 110, 2 Am. Rep. 373).

The rule of "respondeat superior" is based upon the right which an employer has to select his servants, to discharge them if not competent, and to direct and control them while in his employ. Laws 1871, p. 1478, c. 680, provides for the appointment by the Governor of commissioners to erect a hall for the county of Erie and city of Buffalo, and to assign to the county and city the parts to be occupied by each. Laws 1880, p. 135, c. 31, empowers the superior court of Buffalo to appoint trustees for the hall, and makes it the duty of the trustees to assign to the county and city the parts to be occupied by each, appoint servants, and care for the building. Held, that the county and city are not liable for the death of a person due to the negligent operation of an elevator in such hall; the rule of respondeat superior not applying, as the elevator operator was not appointed by, nor responsible to, the county and city. Moest v. City of Buffalo, 101 N. Y. Supp. 996, 999, 116 App. Div. 657 (citing statement in Maxmillian v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 62 N. Y. 160-163, 20 Am. Rep. 468).

Where a mere volunteer (that is, one who has no interest in the work) undertakes to assist the servants of another, he does so at his own risk. In such a case the maxim of "respondeat superior" does not apply. But where one has an interest in the work, either as a consignee or the servant of a consignee, or in any other capacity, and at the request or with the consent of another's servants undertakes to assist them, he does not do so at his own risk, and, if injured by their

Where a boy about six years of age, a guest at a hotel with his parents, wandered into a room in which a bell boy or porter was engaged in playing a harmonica for his own amusement, and the latter accidentally or willfully shot the boy with a pistol, the bell boy was not acting within the course of the apparent or actual scope of his employment, and the innkeeper was not liable for the injury inflicted, under the rule of "respondeat superior." Clancy v. Barker, 131 Fed. 161, 162, 66 C. C. A. 469, 69 L. R. A. 653.

The doctrine of "respondeat superior" applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged with such neglect or wrong at the time and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose. So, assuming that the relation of master and servant existed between a father and daughter, he is not responsible for her injuries, where it does not appear that, on the occasion in question, she was acting as such servant within the scope of her employment. Doran v. Thomsen, 71 Atl. 296, 298, 76 N. J. Law, 754, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677.

The rule of "respondeat superior," by which a master is liable for the wrongful acts of his servants within the scope of their authority, "is founded upon public policy and convenience. Every person is bound to use due care in the conduct of his business. If the business is committed to an agent or servant, the obligation is not changed. If he employs incompetent or untrustworthy agents, it is his fault, and, whether the injury to third persons is caused by the negligence or positive misfeasance of the agent, the maxim 'respondeat superior' applies, providing only that the agent was acting at the time for the principal and within the scope of the business intrusted to him." Chicago Herald Co. v. Bryan, 92 S. W. 902, 905, 195 Mo. 574 (quoting Higgins v. Watervliet Turnpike & R. Co., 46 N. Y. 24, 7 Am. Rep. 293).

Where a county board, without authority in law, deducted from the taxes, levied by a town, a portion thereof alleged to be invalid, and the county treasurer did not collect the same, the maxim "respondeat superior" did not apply, and the county was not liable to the town for the amount so deducted. Town of Crandon v. Forest County, 64 N. W. 847, 848, 91 Wis. 239.

RESPONSIBLE

See Be Responsible For; Individually Responsible; Personally Responsible.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract by which defendant, the lessee of a coal dock, was to act as bailee and agent in receiving, storing, reshipping, and selling coal produced by plaintiff. The contract provided that plaintiff should remain the owner of the coal until it was sold, and fix the selling price, defendant to receive a commission on the sales and to guaranty the accounts; that plaintiff should insure all coal consigned and deliver the same safely alongside defendant's dock, which should thereupon be "responsible" to plaintiff for all coal after such delivery alongside its dock, and insure the same, and pay taxes thereon, and guarantee weights as per bills of lading, being compensated therefor, and for dock rents by the payment by plaintiff of a stated price per ton for loading and reloading. It is held that the provision that defendant should be "responsible" for the coal after its delivery was not intended to enlarge its common-law liability as bailee by making it an insurer against all possible contingencies, but to mark the time when such liability should commence, and that it was not liable for a loss of coal through a collapse of its dock, occurring without any fault or negligence on its part. Fairmont Coal Co. v. Jones & Adams Co., 134 Fed. 711, 714, 67 C. C. A. 265.

RESPONSIBLE BIDDER

See Lowest Responsible Bidder.

The word "responsible" in the phrase "lowest responsible bidder," as used in Gen. St. 1909, § 1017, providing for competitive bids before awarding contracts for public improvements, implies skill, judgment, and integrity necessary to a faithful performance of the contract, as well as sufficient financial resources and ability. Williams v. City of Topeka, 118 Pac. 864, 866, 85 Kan. 857, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 672, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 497.

The word "responsible," applied to an undertaking to pay money, means "financial ability," but, where a statute relating to contracts for public improvements requires a "responsible bidder," it means one of ability to respond to the requirements of the contract; and a statute requiring a contract for a public improvement to be let to the lowest responsible bidder does not require the letting of the contract to the lowest bidder on ascertaining his financial responsibility only, but the term "responsible" includes the ability to respond by the discharge of contractor's obligations in accordance with the demands of the contract. Acts 1909, c. 442, requiring the commissioners of a drainage district to let the work of construction to the "lowest responsible bidder," confers a discretion, exercise of which is not to be interfered with unless influenced by fraud as to determining whether a bidder is responsible; such term including ability to respond to the requirements of the contract. Sanderlin v. Luken, 68 S. E. 225, 227, 152 N. C. 738 (quoting and adopting definition in People ex rel. Assyrian Asphalt Co. v. Kent, 43 N. E. 760, 160 Ill. 655).

In awarding a contract for the construction of a drainage ditch, the county auditor, in determining who is the lowest responsible bidder, is not limited to an inquiry as to financial responsibility, but may, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him, inquire also as to the fitness and ability of the bidders to do and perform the particular work. Kelling v. Edwards, 134 N. W. 221, 223, 116 Minn. 484, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668.

The statute requiring that contracts for public improvements shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder does not require the letting of contracts to the lowest bidder, on ascertaining his financial responsibility only, but the term "responsible" includes the ability to respond by the discharge of the contractor's obligations in accordance with what may be expected or demanded under the contract, and where the board of local improvements has exercised its discretion in the award of a contract for a public improvement, the presumption arises that its action was legal, and the party asserting the contrary has the burden of overcoming the presumption by proof that the board acted without jurisdiction or fraudulently. Hallet v. City of Elgin, 98 N. E. 530, 532, 254 Ill. 343.

RESPONSIBILITY

See Criminal Responsibility.

The primary meaning of "responsibility" is the state of being answerable for an obligation. A secondary meaning is the ability to pay. Niagara Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Hibbard, 179 Fed. 844, 848, 103 C. C. A. 330.

"Liability" in its broadest and most comprehensive use includes any obligation one is bound in law or justice to perform, and is synonymous with "responsibility"; in a more restricted and perhaps in its popular sense, it means that which one is under obligation to pay to another. State ex rel. City of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 129 N. W. 623, 630, 144 Wis. 386, 1-0 Am. St. Rep. 1025.

Laws 1907, p. 414, c. 194, regulating the sale of nursery stock, provides for the issuance of a certificate and permit by the state board of agriculture, and declares that, as a condition precedent thereto, the board shall require such references and evidences of integrity as may be necessary to establish the responsibility and good faith of the applicant, but provides for no appeal from the decision of the board. Held, that the word "responsibility," as so used, meant ability to answer in payment or to respond in damages for injuries caused by the sale of improper nursery stock, and that such provision, not being within the police power of the state to protect the people from fraud, imposition, and deception, was a violation of Const. art. 6, § 2, as depriving nurserymen of their property without due process of law, in conferring on the board an absolute power to determine who shall and who shall not sell nursery stock within the state. Ex parte Hawley, 115 N. W. 93, 95, 22 S. D. 23, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 138 (citing Webst. International Dict.).

REST

The word "rest," within a will devising the "rest" of testator's estate after specified bequests, means "that which remains after what has previously been given is withdrawn." Paterson General Hospital Ass'n v. Blauvelt, 66 Atl. 1055, 1057, 72 N. J. Eq. 725.

REST AND RESIDUE

A general residuary clause in a will precludes intestacy as to any part of testator's estate, unless the clear intent of the will prevents such a construction; and the words "rest and residue" in such a clause are comprehensive enough to include any interest of testator not previously disposed of. Holmes v. Mackenzie, 84 Atl. 340, 342, 118 Md. 210.

A will devised specific realty to testator's wife, bequeathed all his personalty to her absolutely, and devised the "rest and residue" of his estate to a trustee with directions to give her during her lifetime the income therefrom and the proceeds of any sale made pursuant to her written directions, and at her death to distribute what remained to others. Held, that the words "rest and residue," in absence of language showing a contrary intention, meant the estate remaining after payment of charges, debts, and particular legacies, including statutory allowance fixed by the county court for the temporary maintenance of the widow and received by her for that purpose. Smullin v. Wharton, 125 N. W. 1112, 1115, 86 Neb. 553.

REST, RESIDUE, AND REMAINDER

Under a will giving to various persons shares of stock in a corporation, 36 shares in all, while testator owned at the date of the will only 31 shares, and at his death 25 shares, the residuary gift being "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate," the legacies of stock are general legacies, so that the executor will make up the deficit by purchase. Slade v. Talbot, 65 N. E. 374, 182 Mass. 256, 94 Am. St. Rep. 653 (citing and adopting Johnson v. Goss, 128 Mass. 433; Harvard Unitarian Soc. v. Tufts, 23 N. E. 1006, 151 Mass. 76, 7 L. R. A. 390).

RESTAURANT

A "restaurant" is defined by Webster to be an eating house, and such it has always been construed under the law, and not where intoxicants are dispensed under the guise of running a restaurant. A restaurant keeper, in contemplation of law, is not a saloon keeper. Savage v. State, 88 S. W. 351, 353, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 199 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6181).

"It is clear that as a general rule a restaurant or boarding house, where the meals are wholly cooked and served by the proprietor and members of his family, must be a very small affair, hardly rising to the dignity of a 'restaurant' or 'boarding house.'" Ex parte Lemon, 77 Pac. 455, 456, 143 Cal. 558, 65 L. R. A. 946.

As dramshop or tippling house

Whether or not a "restaurant" is a "dramshop" or "tippling house" depends upon the character of the business that is carried on therein. Denver City Ordinance 1892, No. 102, § 1, providing that no person or corporation within the city shall directly or indirectly sell or give away any intoxicating or malt liquors, to be drunk on the premises where sold or given away, without a license first obtained from the city, was applicable to a person who was a bona fide restaurant keeper, and who sold liquor only to customers to be drunk only in connection with a meal. Scanlon v. City of Denver, 88 Pac. 156, 157, 38 Colo. 401.

Drug store

The sale of soda water and ice cream in a drug store does not bring the proprietor thereof within the statute providing that keepers of "eating houses, restaurants, and saloons" cannot be lawfully granted permits for the sale of liquor. In re Henery, 100 N. W. 43, 44, 124 Iowa, 358.

European hotel

A city ordinance imposed an annual license tax on hotels and also on restaurants, and defined "restaurants" as "every place where food or refreshments are prepared for casual visitors and sold for consumption therein." Held, that a hotel conducted on the "European" plan, with an eating place in connection, could not be charged with a restaurant license, since the furnishing of food to casual visitors is only an incident to the business of a hotel, whether it be run on the "American" or "European" plan. New Galt House Co. v. City of Louisville, 111 S. W. 351, 352, 120 Ky. 341, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 566.

RESTAURANT KEEPER

A "restaurant keeper," in contemplation of law, is not a saloon keeper. Savage v.

State, 88 S. W. 351, 353, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 199 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6181).

RESTAURATEUR

As trader, see Trader—Tradesman.

RESTITUTION

A "writ of restitution" is one which issues to restore a party to the possession of property of which he had been wrongfully deprived by some previous order of the same court or some previous writ issuing from the same court. The chancery court has no power to issue a writ of restitution to supersede a writ or order of the circuit court. Herrin v. Franklin, 1 Tenn. Ch. App. 95, 106.

RESTRAIN

See License, Regulate, and Restrain; Regulate and Restrain.

A person is "restrained of his liberty" as bearing on his right to a writ of habeas corpus whenever he is deprived of the privilege of going when and where he pleases. In re McMonies, 106 N. W. 456, 75 Neb. 702, (quoting with approval from Commonwealth v. Ridgway [Pa.] 2 Ashm. 247).

As giving power to prohibit

The word "restrain," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 388, providing that the city council shall have power to "restrain," prohibit, and suppress tippling shops, etc., is not synonymous with "prohibit" or "suppress," and does not contemplate an absolute destruction of the business, but rather placing it within bounds. Territory v. Robertson, 92 Pac. 144, 145, 19 Okl. 149.

The word "restrain" in Cities and Towns Law 1905, § 53, subsec. 40, empowering common councils of cities "to license, tax, regulate and restrain" places where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale to be used on the premises, does not give power to prohibit, but means to abridge, confine, keep in, hold in, and the like; the state itself not having undertaken to prohibit or suppress the traffic. Ensley v. State, 172 Ind. 198, 88 N. E. 62, 65.

St. Johns City Charter, § 69, subd. 45, authorizing the council to regulate and restrain dealers in liquor, places where it is kept for sale, and the sale and disposal thereof, and providing that no provisions of the law concerning the sale or disposition of liquors in Multnomah county shall apply to the sale or disposition thereof in said city, repeals the local option law as to such city; the word "restrain" being more comprehensive than, and including the power to, "prohibit," and the power to license being included in the word "regulate." State v. Cochran, 104 Pac. 419, 421, 55 Or. 157.

As regulate

See Regulate.

As restrict

See Restrict.

RESTRAINED AND DEPRIVED OF LIBERTY

The essential thing to constitute an imprisonment is constraint of the person, which may be by threats as well as by actual force; and if the words or conduct are such as to induce a reasonable apprehension of force, and the means of coercion are at hand, a person may be as effectually "restrained and deprived of liberty" as by prison bars. Hebrew v. Pullis, 64 Atl. 121, 122, 73 N. J. Law, 621, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 580, 118 Am. St. Rep. 716.

RESTRAINING ORDER

A temporary injunction is in effect a "restraining order." Castleman v. State, 47 South. 647, 649, 94 Miss. 609.

A "restraining order" is an order granted to maintain the subject in controversy in statu quo until the hearing of an application for a temporary injunction, and hence is distinct from a "temporary injunction." Ex parte Grimes, 94 Pac. 668, 670, 1 Okl. Cr. 102.

A "restraining order" is in aid only, and not a part, of the main action, and its office is only to hold matters in statu quo for the time being, and until parties can be heard as to the propriety of issuing a temporary injunction. An order enjoining a defendant from entering upon and interfering with the possession of plaintiff of a certain tract was a temporary order of injunction, and not a mere restraining order, and one which could be continued in force, after dissolution by a supersedeas. State ex rel. Keefe v. Graves, 117 N. W. 717, 718, 82 Neb. 282.

Though the terms "temporary injunction" and "restraining order" are often used synonymously, a "restraining order" is effective only until an application for an injunction shall be heard; a "temporary injunction" is a restraining order effective until the trial of the action in which it is issued. The effect, and not the name by which an order may be called, determines to which of two classes it properly belongs. State v. Johnston, 97 Pac. 790, 791, 78 Kan. 615.

A preliminary injunction runs until the defendant "shall have duly answered the bill of complaint and our said court shall make other order to the contrary," but an ad interim "restraining order" always commands the defendant to show cause why an injunction should not issue, and he is thereby brought in court for the purpose of that motion only. Allman v. United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, 81 Atl. 116, 117, 118, 79 N. J. Eq. 150.

"A 'restraining order' is an order granted to maintain the subject of controversy in statu quo until the hearing of an application for a temporary injunction. It may be issued before notice to defendant in order to prevent irreparable injury pending the hearing. Its purpose is merely to suspend proceedings until there may be an opportunity to inquire whether any injunction should be granted, and it is not intended as an injunction pendente lite; hence its duration should be limited to such a reasonable time as may be necessary to notify the adverse party, especially where defendant is likely to be damaged by delay." Ex parte Sharp, 124 Pac. 532, 534, 87 Kan. 504, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 460 (citing 22 Cyc. p. 745).

An ex parte order, before answer, restraining defendant from doing a particular act, was an "injunction," as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 525, and not a temporary "restraining order," and was therefore subject to dissolution for plaintiff's failure to give the undertaking required by Code Civ. Proc. § 529. Neumann v. Moretti, 79 Pac. 512, 513, 146 Cal. 31.

RESTRAINT

See General Restraint; Lawful Restraint; Partial Restraint.

The words "restraint" and "regulate" are not synonymous with the word "prohibit." A power or right to "regulate" a thing, such as the right of aliens to hold property, does not give an authority to "prohibit" that thing. Madden v. State, 75 Pac. 1023, 1024, 68 Kan. 658.

The French word "brassière," which means simply "brace," as applied to an article of women's wear, but includes the idea of "restraint" and "to be under constraint," is not subject to exclusive appropriation as a trade-mark for a combined corset cover and bust supporter, even by a manufacturer first so using it in the United States. De Bevoise Co. v. H. & W. Co., 60 Atl. 407, 408, 69 N. J. Eq. 114.

While an ordinance regulating the hours in which intoxicating liquors shall be sold in Boise City and for Sunday closing, and providing a penalty for the sale thereof during prohibited hours, does prohibit the conduct of the business therein referred to during certain hours, it is a "regulation" of that business, and not a prohibition of it. "To prohibit, limit, confine, or abridge a thing, the restraint may be permanent or temporary. It may be intended to prohibit, limit, or abridge for all time or for a day only" (quoting and adopting In re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 828). 'Restraint' does not contemplate an absolute destruction of business, but rather places it within certain bounds." State v. Calloway, 84 Pac. 27-33, 11 Idaho, 719, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 109, 114 Am. St. Rep. 285.

RESTRAINT OF COMMERCE

Combination in restraint of commerce, see Combination in Restraint of Trade. See, also, Monopoly; Restraint of Trade.

Under the federal Anti-Trust Act, "restraint of trade" or "commerce" does not mean in unreasonable or partial restraint, but any direct restraint thereof. United States v. Northern Securities Co., 120 Fed. 721, 724.

A combination which places railroads engaged in interstate commerce in such a relation as to create a single dominating control in one corporation whereby natural and existing competition in interstate commerce is unduly restricted or suppressed constitutes a "restraint of interstate commerce" forbidden by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. at L. 209, c. 647, whether accomplished through a holding company or through a direct transfer of a dominating stock interest from one company to the other. United States v. Union Pac. R. Co., 33 S. Ct. 53, 55, 226 U. S. 61, 57 L. Ed. 124.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE

See Combination in Restraint of Trade; Illegal Combination in Restraint of Trade.

See, also, Monopoly; Restraint of Commerce; Trust (Combination); Unlawful Combination.

"Contracts in restraint of trade" are loosely spoken of as 'illegal contracts.' It would be more accurate to style them 'unenforceable contracts.' But a contract prohibiting the seller of a business to re-engage in that business, though possibly against public policy, is not contrary to public morals, and, where separable from contract for the sale of the business, the entire transaction does not fail. Nicholson v. Ellis, 73 Atl. 17, 18, 110 Md. 322, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 942, 132 Am. St. Rep. 445.

"Contracts in restraint of trade" may be either reasonable or unreasonable, and an agreement between retail lumber dealers, whereby one dealer agrees to protect the other by asking a higher price than the other for the same bill of lumber submitted to both for prices, is in violation of Laws 1905, p. 636, c. 162, making such contracts wrongful. State v. Adams Lumber Co., 116 N. W. 302, 310, 81 Neb. 392.

In determining whether an agreement is illegal at common law because in restraint of trade, the question is whether the agreement is injurious to the public interests, and where the natural tendency of the contract is injurious, it is invalid as in "restraint of trade." Knight & Jilison Co. v. Miller, 87 N. E. 823, 828, 172 Ind. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 1146.

The term "restraint of trade," as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1890, §§ 8965, 8966, 8971, 8978, is presumed to have been made by the lawmakers in accordance with the meaning which has always been given to such term in judicial decisions and in the common understanding. State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 1080, 218 Mo. 1 (adopting definition in Dueber Watch-Case Mfg. Co. v. E. Howard Watch & Clock Co., 14 C. C. A. 14, 20, 66 Fed. 637, 643, 645, 652).

Regulation of trade is not restraint of trade, and an indictment charging a combination to regulate interstate trade must go further and aver facts showing that the regulation is in restraint or monopoly of such trade to charge an offense under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. United States v. John Reardon & Sons Co., 191 Fed. 454, 458.

Under the federal Anti-Trust Act. "restraint of trade" or "commerce" does not mean in unreasonable or partial restraint, but any direct restraint thereof. United States v. Northern Securities Co., 120 Fed. 721, 724.

Under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, declaring every contract, combination in form of a trust, or conspiracy in the restraint of trade illegal, while the restraint may be slight, it must be a direct restraint upon commerce, and an agreement with a dealer to refrain from purchasing salt within the state or out, and to discourage any shipment or importations by any other parties, is in restraint of trade. Getz Bros. & Co. v. Federal Salt Co., 81 Pac. 416, 417, 147 Cal. 115, 109 Am. St. Rep. 114.

The words "restraint of trade" in Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, condemning combinations in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or the monopolization or attempts to monopolize any part thereof, should be given a meaning which will not destroy the individual right to contract, and render difficult, if not impossible, any movement of trade in the channels of commerce, the free movement of which it was the purpose of the statute to protect. United States v. American Tobacco Co., 31 Sup. Ct. 632, 634, 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. Ed. 663.

Where the direct and immediate effects of a contract or combination among particular dealers in a commodity is to destroy competition between them and others, so that the parties to the contract or combination may obtain increased prices for themselves, such contract or combination amounts to a restraint of trade in the commodity, even though contracts to buy such commodity at the enhanced price are constantly being made. Total suppression of the trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one in "restraint of trade." Kilgels' Pharmacy v. Sharp & Dohme, 64 Atl. 1029, 1030, 104 Md. 218, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 976, 118 Am. St. Rep. 399, 9 Ann. Cas. 184 (citing Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136).

To constitute a violation of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, §§ 1, 2, 26 Stat. 209, there must be a contract, combination, or conspiracy which in purpose or effect tends to restrain trade or commerce among the states or to monopolize some portion thereof. There must be a meeting of the minds of two or more to accomplish some common purpose directly violative of the act, or a purpose which will, whether intentionally or not, in effect constitute a restraint of trade and commerce among the several states. United States v. Reading Co., 183 Fed. 427, 438.

A promise by a partner to his copartner, purchasing the business of the firm, not to engage in such business in that town so long as the copartner remains in the business in the town is not void as in "restraint of trade," either at common law or under the anti-trust laws of the state, including the anti-trust act of 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 119, c. 94). Crump v. Ligon, 84 S. W. 250, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 172.

Provisions in a contract for the sale of a secret process, restraining its use or its communication to others, are not invalid as in "restraint of trade," because necessary to protect the property right in the subject-matter of the contract, but such considerations do not apply to contracts for the sale of the article produced by such process which are subject to the same rules as contracts for the sale of any other article of manufacture. A system of contracts made by the manufacturer of a proprietary medicine between him and wholesale dealers, to whom alone he sold his medicine, by which they were bound to sell only at a certain price and to retail dealers designated by him, and between him and the retail dealers by which, in consideration of being so designated, they agreed to sell to consumers only at a certain price, is not unlawful as in "restraint of trade," but is a reasonable provision for the protection of the manufacturer's trade, and he is entitled to an injunction to restrain a defendant from inducing other parties to such contracts to violate the same. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 378, 379.

Covenants in "restraint of trade" will be enforced, though the restraint is general throughout an entire state or country, provided it is founded upon a sufficient consideration and is not unreasonable, in view of the nature and extent of the business of the covenantee. A contract whereby, on sale of their business, the sellers agreed not to engage in the manufacture of jackets and aprons, for men engaged in certain trades, for sale in any of the states and territories in which they had been previously sold, was not void as in restraint of trade. Angelica Jacket Co. v. Angelica, 98 S. W. 805, 811, 121 Mo. App. 226.

Where one engaged in any business or occupation sells out his stock in trade and good will, he may make a valid contract with the purchaser binding himself not to engage in the same business in the same place for a time named, and such a contract is not invalid as a "contract in restraint of trade"; but where, by the principal operation of any contract, it encroaches on the rights of the public and transgresses the liberty of free competition, consideration then for the public welfare becomes paramount, and must predominate over any individual right to contract. It is immaterial, in determining the legality of such a contract, whether or not it was entered into with any evil intent; but the material consideration is its injurious tendency and the power thereby given to control prices. To vitiate a contract, it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; but it is sufficient if it really tends to that end. Anderson v. Shawnee Compress Co., 87 Pac. 315, 317, 17 Okl. 231, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 846.

A contract recited that plaintiff, who was the patentee of an invention relating to brake beams, for the consideration of $10,000 to be paid him, had assigned to defendant, which was a corporation engaged in the manufacture of brake beams, a certain patent and a pending application for a second, and provided that plaintiff during the life of the patent should not become connected with any company manufacturing or selling brake beams in the United States either as officer, employé, or shareholder, but reserved to him the right to terminate such part of the contract at any time by refunding the consideration paid him by defendant. Such agreement to remain out of the brake beam business did not render the contract unlawful as one in "restraint of trade" and competition or creating a monopoly, and that plaintiff could maintain an action thereon to recover the stipulated consideration. American Brake Beam Co. v. Pungs, 141 Fed. 923, 928, 73 C. C. A. 157.

RESTRAINTS OF PRINCES OR PRINCES

The refusal of a deputy collector of the port to grant a clearance while freight was on board a vessel, because it was contraband of war, did not constitute a "restraint of princes, rulers, or people," within the meaning of a bill of lading absolving the carrier from liability for damage so caused. Northern P. Ry. Co. v. American Trading Co., 25 Sup. Ct. 84, 93, 195 U. S. 439, 49 L. Ed. 269.

A provision of a charter party mutually exempting "restraints of princes, rulers, and people" covers a detention of a vessel in quarantine, and exempts the charterer from the payment of hire during the time of such detention. Tweedle Trading Co. v. George D. Emery Co., 146 Fed. 618-620.

The provision in a contract for ocean transportation that the carrier will not be liable for delay from "restraints of princes, rulers, and peoples" does not exempt the carrier from liability for negligence in failing to furnish sufficient and suitable food and lodging, which it undertook to furnish, during a quarantine required by the government. Larsen v. Allan Line S. S. Co., 80 Pac. 181, 184, 37 Wash. 555.

The detention of a vessel under a time charter at an intermediate port under a quarantine regulation of the state because she came from a port which was presumptively infected was not caused by a "deficiency of men," within a clause of the charter party relieving the charterer from the payment of hire in case of delay from such deficiency, but was through "restraint of princes or people" within a provision mutually excepting such cause, and the charterer is entitled to no deduction therefor. Clyde Commercial S. S. Co. v. West India S. S. Co., 169 Fed. 275, 278, 94 C. C. A. 551.

RESTRICT

To "restrict" is to restrain within bounds; to limit; to confine. Mumford v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 104 N. W. 1135, 1138, 128 Iowa, 685 (citing Webst. Dict. Unab. tit. "Restrict"); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Beazley, 45 South. 761, 777, 54 Fla. 311 (quoting Mumford v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 104 N. W. 1135, 128 Iowa, 685, which quotes Webst. Dict. Unab.).

RESTRICTED PUBLICATION

A "restricted publication" is one which communicates market quotations to a select few on condition expressly or impliedly precluding their rightful ulterior communication, except in restricted private intercourse. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. Wells, 111 N. W. 157, 159, 100 Minn. 205 (quoting and adopting definition in Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. 180).

RESTRICTION

See Lawful Restrictions.

Subject to restriction, see Subject To.

"Restrictions as to buildings," in the absence of any further description, means according to custom, restrictions of a general character against cheap buildings, offensive trades and irregular location of building lines with reference to the street line, and the term does not include restrictions which do not restrain except at the election of a remote grantor, and a purchaser of land at auction, with notice that the same is subject to building restrictions, may assume, in the absence of information to the contrary, that all purchasers are restrained in the same way and to the same extent, and that no one may vary the restrictions or release them without the consent of all, and, where such is not the case, he may avoid the sale. Solins v. Beavis, 93 N. E. 935, 937, 200 N. Y. 268, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927.

As used in Const. art. 14, § 13, providing that the General Assembly shall provide by general laws for the classification of cities, etc., and declaring that the number of classes shall not exceed four, and the powers of each class shall be defined by general laws, so that all municipal corporations of the same class shall possess the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions, the terms "powers" and "restrictions" manifestly refer to such powers and restrictions as relate to subjects pertaining to local self-government, such as may be designated as purely corporate, municipal subjects, as distinguished from such subjects as involve the relations of the citizens or the cities and towns to the state. Hence such constitutional provision prevents the grant by the Legislature of special charters to cities, and requires the Legislature to provide for a classification of all cities and for a code of laws for the government of all cities of the same class; the powers and restrictions being such powers and restrictions as relate to subjects pertaining to local self-government, as distinguished from such subjects as involve the relations of the citizens or the cities to the state. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 94 Pac. 295, 301, 42 Colo. 238.

As condition

Where a deed clearly shows the intention of the parties that on breach of a restriction the estate should be defeated and return to the grantor, the "restriction" is a condition whether apt words to create a condition are used or not. Ball v. Milliken, 76 Atl. 789, 791, 31 R. I. 36, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 30.

The word "restrictions," when used in connection with the grant of an interest in real property, is the equivalent of "conditions," and either term may be used to denote a limitation upon the full and unqualified enjoyment of the right or estate granted. The word "restrictions," in Pub. St. c. 113, § 7, providing for the location of street railways, subject to such restrictions as required by public interest, is the equivalent of "conditions," and therefore limitations may be imposed on the enjoyment of the right to use the streets granted for such purposes. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 78 N. E. 222, 224, 192 Mass. 106 (citing Skinner v. Shepard, 130 Mass. 180; Ayling v. Kramer, 133 Mass. 12; Clapp v. Wilder, 57 N. E. 692, 176 Mass. 332, 50 L. R. A. 120).

As private property

See Private Property.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT

A covenant in a deed that the grantee will not carry or permit to be carried on the premises conveyed any noxious, offensive, or dangerous trade or business runs with the land and is "restrictive" and constitutes an incumbrance thereon. Dieterlen v. Miller, 99 N. Y. Supp. 690, 701, 114 App. Div. 40 (citing Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 577, 20 Am. Rep. 567; Clement v. Burtis, 24 N. E. 1013, 121 N. Y. 708; Ray v. Adams, 50 N. Y. Supp. 663, 44 App. Div. 173; Wetmore v. Bruce, 23 N. E. 303, 118 N. Y. 319; Forster v. Scott,

RESTRICTIVE TITLE

A "restrictive title" to a statute is one by which a particular part or branch of a subject is carved out and selected as the subject of the legislation. Where a restrictive title is adopted, the body of the act must be confined to the particular portion of it expressed in the limited title, notwithstanding a general title could have been adopted, which would have covered the entire subject and authorized legislation upon the whole of it. Memphis St. R. Co. v. Byrne, 104 S. W. 460, 462, 119 Tenn. 278.

RESULT

See Proximate Result.

The word "result," as used in the rule that an independent contractor is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means by which it is to be accomplished, means a production or product, and not a service. One may contract to produce a house, or ship, or a locomotive, and such house, ship, or locomotive produced is the "result." Such "results" produced are often, and probably generally, by independent contractors, but plowing a field, mowing a lawn, driving a carriage, or a horse car for one trip, or for many trips a day, is not a result in the sense that the word is used in the rule. Such acts do not result in a product; they are simply a service. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons, 109 S. W. 240, 247 (citing Jensen v. Barbour, 39 Pac. 906, 15 Mont. 582).

"Generally speaking, an independent contractor is one who, in rendering service, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means by which it is to be accomplished. The word 'results,' however, is used in this connection in the sense of a production or product of some sort, and not of a service." Smith v. Humphreyville, 104 S. W. 495, 496, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 140 (citing Casement v. Brown, 13 Sup. Ct. 672, 148 U. S. 615, 37 L. Ed. 582, and other cases cited in note).

The words "result of said examination," as used in a charter provision, relating to the removal of city officers, requiring the city clerk to examine the petition for such removal, and attach to the petition his certificate showing the "result of said examination," are sufficiently complied with by a certificate that the clerk had compared the names on the petition with the great register, and found the petition sufficient. Good v. Common Council of City of San Diego, 90 Pac. 44, 47, 5 Cal. App. 265.

RESULTING FROM FIRE

The damage to plate glass from an explosion caused by heat from a fire, both at a distance from the building containing the glass, is not within the provision of a plate glass insurance policy, excepting insurer from liability for damage resulting directly or indirectly from fire, whether on the premises or not; such provision being intended to except only a loss which would be covered by a fire policy, and such a loss not being covered by a fire policy. Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. of New York v. Bergheim, 122 Pac. 812, 814, 21 Colo. App. 527.

RESULTING TRUST

See, also, Involuntary Trust.

Trusts are classified into two general divisions: "Direct or express trusts" (that is, those springing from agreement of the parties), and into 'constructive or implied trusts' (that is, those created by the rules and principles of equity). Under this latter class fall all of those trusts known distinctively as implied or constructive, as well as those called resultant; in short, all those that do not spring from the agreement of the parties.

* * * A constructive trust is one not created by any words, either expressly or impliedly evincing a direct intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice." Newman v. Newman, 55 S. E. 377, 379, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370.

A "resulting trust" is one which arises by implication of law. Crawley v. Crafton, 91 S. W. 1027, 1029, 193 Mo. 421.

"A 'resulting trust' arises by implication, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intent, and cannot arise when an express agreement in writing shows a contrary intent." De Hihns v. Free, 49 S. E. 841, 845, 70 S. C. 344 (citing Perry, Trusts, § 124; Manning v. Screven, 34 S. E. 22, 56 S. C. 83).

A "resulting trust" arises by implication by law when the purchase money is paid by one person out of his money and the land is conveyed to another. Herlihy v. Coney, 59 Atl. 952, 99 Me. 469 (citing Baker v. Vining, 30 Me. 121, 50 Am. Dec. 617; Stevens v. Stevens, 70 Me. 92).

By Civ. Code, § 853, a "resulting trust" arises "when a transfer of real property is made to one person and the consideration thereof is paid by or for another." Los Angeles & Bakersfield Oil & Development Co. of Arizona v. Occidental Oil Co., 78 Pac. 25, 27, 144 Cal. 528.

A "resulting trust" is one which arises where one person buys an estate and pays the purchase money, but takes the deed in the name of another person, in which case a trust results by construction in favor of the person who pays the money. Euler v. Schroeder, 76 Atl. 164, 165, 112 Md. 155.

Where one pays the price of land, title to which is taken by another under a parol agreement that the latter shall hold the title in trust for him, a trust results in favor of the former by operation of law from such payment of the price, notwithstanding the statute of frauds. Crosby v. Henry, 88 S. W. 949, 950, 76 Ark. 615.

Where land is purchased and paid for with the money of one person, and title is taken in the name of another, without any consideration running from the grantee, and without any gift being made to or intended for said grantee, a "resulting trust" in the land is created in favor of the person paying the purchase price. Rothenbusch v. Hebel, 106 Pac. 119, 120, 11 Cal. App. 692.

Where purchasers of real estate obtained money to pay the price from a third person, who paid the vendor and took title under an agreement to hold the same until repayment of the loan, the third person became a trustee for the purchasers, within Civ. Code, § 853, providing that, when a transfer of property is made to one person and the consideration is paid by another, a trust results in favor of the latter. Brown v. Spencer, 126 P. 493, 495, 163 Cal. 589.

Where a wife taking the title to land purchased by the husband, who paid the price, did not agree to hold the property on any trust, she did not hold the land in trust within Real Property Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 50) § 94, providing that no trust results, unless the grantee in violation of some trust purchases property so conveyed with money of another. Welgert v. Schlesinger, 135 N. Y. Supp. 335, 338, 150 App. Div. 765.

Where on purchase of land a deed is taken in the name of another than the one paying the money, a trust "results" by implication of law without any agreement on behalf of the person making the payment, although a bond or mortgage was a consideration for the deed. Casciola v. Donatelli, 67 Atl. 901, 903, 218 Pa. 624 (citing Bisp. Eq. 118-120; Lynch v. Cox, 23 Pa. 265; Edwards v. Edwards, 39 Pa. 369; Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 169 U. S. 398, 42 L. Ed. 793; Galbraith v. Galbraith, 42 Atl. 683, 190 Pa. 225).

"Ordinarily all that is necessary to establish a prima facie 'resulting trust' is to show that the party seeking to enforce the trust paid the purchase money, and the law presumes that he intended to reap the benefits, although the title was taken in the name of another." Foster v. Berrier, 89 Pac. 787, 788, 39 Colo. 398.

When it is clearly shown that one has purchased an estate and paid the purchase money therefor, but has taken a deed in the name of another, a trust results by construction of law in favor of the party who has so paid. Turpin v. Miles, 71 Atl. 440, 441, 108 Md. 678 (quoting Johns v. Carroll, 69 Atl. 36, 107 Md. 436).

A "resulting trust" is one arising upon the naked fact that one furnishes the consideration, while the title is taken by another, a stranger, without an agreement as to the use or trust; and it was held at common law that a trust resulted from the facts without agreement to that effect. Smith v. Smith (Ky.) 121 S. W. 1002, 1004.

"Resulting trusts" do not depend upon an agreement between the parties, but arise by operation of law from their acts; the law implying a trust where honesty and fair dealing require that the property be considered as held in trust, as where the purchase money is paid by one person and title taken in the name of another. Stevens v. Fitzpatrick, 118 S. W. 51, 56, 218 Mo. 708.

A "resulting trust," other than a trust resulting to a donor, is one which arises by operation of law, where the consideration is paid by one party and the title is conveyed to another. Such a trust arises by implication of law and cannot grow out of the contract of a grantee to hold the title for a third person who advances the purchase money. Butts v. Cooper, 44 South. 616, 617, 152 Ala. 375.

An implied trust, known as a "resulting trust," arises by implication of law where the purchase money is paid by one person out of his own money and the land is conveyed to another. It arises because the payor is virtually and equitably the purchaser. The payor must "pay" or "furnish" or "advance" the consideration. The trust rests upon the supposed intention of the person paying a supposition which is rebuttable. Merrill v. Hussey, 64 Atl. 819, 821, 101 Me. 489.

A "resulting trust" arises with reference to an interest in property, where the title is taken in the name of another, only when the intention of the person advancing a portion of the purchase price is shown to have been to acquire a proportionate interest in the property, and not to supply the person acquiring the title, by loan or otherwise, with the means of acquiring the whole title. German v. Heath, 116 N. W. 1051, 1053, 139 Iowa, 52.

"Resulting trusts" arise when the legal estate is disposed of or acquired, not fraudulently, or in violation of any fiduciary duty, but the intent in theory of equity appears or is inferred or assumed from the terms of the disposition or from the accompanying facts and circumstances that the beneficial interest is not to go with the legal title. Fagan v.

A "resulting trust" arises by operation of law in favor of a person who advances the purchase money for land, though the title be taken in the name of another, or in favor of a person for whom it is advanced by way of a loan, the title being taken in the name of the lender; and such trust may be established by parol evidence. Such a trust, being one which results by implication or construction of law, does not fall within the provisions of the statute of frauds, and may be established by parol evidence. Pittock v. Pittock, 98 Pac. 719, 721, 15 Idaho, 426 (citing Stand. Dict.; Bates v. Kelly, 80 Ala. 142; Church v. Sterling, 16 Conn. 388).

Rev. Codes, § 4538, providing that, when a transfer of real property is made to one person and the consideration is paid by or for another, a trust results in favor of the latter, is but declaratory of the common law, and, in order that a trust shall result, the money paid must be the money of the person who claims the benefit of the trust, though it is immaterial whether the payment is made by him personally or for him by another. Eisenberg v. Goldsmith, 113 Pac. 1127, 1129, 42 Mont. 563.

"Resulting trusts," or those created by operation of law, are: First, when an estate is purchased in the name of one person, but the money or consideration is given by another; second, where a trust is declared only as to part and nothing is said as to the rest; and, third, in certain cases of fraud where transactions have been carried on mala fide. Walker v. Bruce, 97 Pac. 250, 252, 44 Colo. 109 (citing 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 256; Washburn, Real Prop. § 1422; Trapnall's Adm'x v. Brown, 19 Ark. 39).

At common law where one person pays the purchase money for lands and the conveyance of same is taken to another, a trust "results" in favor of the person who paid the purchase money. This rule is changed, however, by Rev. St. p. 728, c. 1, tit. 2, §§ 51, 53, providing that, where a grant for a valuable consideration is made to one person and the consideration therefor paid by another, no trust results in favor of the person by whom such payment is made, except where the alienee named in the conveyance takes the same as an absolute conveyance in his own name, without the knowledge of the person paying the consideration, or where such alienee, in violation of some trust, purchases the land so conveyed with moneys belonging to another person. Leary v. Corvin, 73 N. E. 984, 985, 181 N. Y. 222, 106 Am. St. Rep. 542, 2 Ann. Cas. 664.

"Where land is conveyed or caused to be conveyed by a husband to his wife, he paying the entire consideration out of his own funds, there is no 'resulting trust' presumed in his favor. To establish a resulting trust through a verbal agreement, the evidence must be so clear and conclusive as to overcome the evidence of the deed, and such agreement must be made at or before the time of the conveyance." Hence, where land was conveyed to a wife by others than the husband in consideration of the purchase price, which was paid by her out of funds received by her out of the funds from other lands to which she had the title, and she had asserted her right to such funds adversely to her husband, and he had assented to her adverse claim, after protest, there was no resulting trust, notwithstanding that she had at some time verbally agreed to hold it in trust for him. Oliver v. Sample, 84 Pac. 138, 139, 72 Kan. 582.

Where plaintiff, by his own labor and expense, discovered a mine, but before making a location thereon, under the mining laws, disclosed the location to defendant in consideration of and reliance on an agreement or understanding between them that the mine, when located, should be their joint property, and defendant, in pursuance of such understanding and the agreement to locate the mine in the joint names of plaintiff and himself, subsequently located it in his own name and that of another without plaintiff's consent, such facts were sufficient to raise a "resulting trust" in favor of plaintiff with respect to a half interest in the mine. Stewart v. Douglass, 83 Pac. 699, 700, 148 Cal. 511.

Constructive trust distinguished

Implied trusts are of two species: One denominated a "resulting trust," and the other a "constructive trust." In the first class are those trusts which attach to a legal estate acquired by consent of the parties, not in violation of any fiduciary duty or trust relation, for the common benefit of both trustee and cestui que trust. This trust arises out of, and is declared in favor of, the intent of the parties creating it. Its inception is in good faith and in furtherance of fair and honest dealing. The other species of implied trusts, which is called "constructive trusts," is one imposed by a court of equity for the purpose of enforcing an equitable right as against the fraudulent intent of the trustee ex maleficio. This latter class of implied trusts have their origin in the bad faith of the trustee and are imposed by a court of conscience to defeat his wrongful ends. Hanson v. Hanson, 111 N. W. 368, 372, 78 Neb. 584.

"Resulting or presumptive trusts," says Bouvier, "are those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; constructive trusts are such as are raised independently of any such intention, and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and the operation of law." A familiar example of a resulting trust is where A. purchases real estate with the money of B. (A. and B. being strangers) and takes the title in his own name. In such case a resulting trust arises in favor of B.; the trust being "raised by the law from the presumed intention of the parties, and the natural equity that one who furnishes the means for the acquisition of the property should enjoy its benefit." Where a part only of the purchase money is furnished by the beneficiary, the trust is for a proportionate share of the land bought. One relying for title on the raising of a resulting or a constructive trust must establish it by proof so clear, unequivocal, cogent, and impelling as to exclude every reasonable doubt. Bunel v. Nester, 101 S. W. 69, 77, 203 Mo. 429.

Where a husband uses the coercive power he possesses over his wife to procure her to convey to him her real estate without consideration, the trust raised thereby in equity for the protection of the wife is not a "resulting trust," as defined in Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 3396, but a "constructive trust," which will be enforced against him. Huffman v. Huffman, 73 N. E. 1096, 1097, 35 Ind. App. 643.

Express trust distinguished

To constitute an express trust there must be some act on the part of the cestui que trust expressive of intent to create a trust and to designate some one as trustee. A resulting trust arises where, from the condition of facts existing, regardless of any intent on the part of the beneficiary, the law presumes a trust. McCoy v. McCoy, 121 Pac. 176, 180, 30 Okl. 379, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 146.

As founded on presumed intention

A "resulting trust" is one raised by implication of law and presumed always to have been contemplated by the parties, the intention as to which is to be found in the nature of their transaction, but not expressed in the deed or instrument of conveyance. Wright v. Yates, 130 S. W. 1111, 1112, 140 Ky. 283.

As arising at time of purchase

A "resulting trust" is one arising from the facts, and such a trust in lands must arise at the very time the legal title passes. Allen v. Allen (Tex.) 105 S. W. 53, 54.

A "resulting trust" is not the result of contract but arises by implication of law, if at all, at the very moment of the acquisition of the property, because the beneficiary's means have entered in whole or in part into the purchase; and where a wife's separate money pays for land certificates, but the patents are issued to the husband, the land becomes equitably hers under a resulting trust, irrespective of the agreement of the parties that such should be the case, and notwithstanding the husband not only did not make such agreement but really intended to deprive her of all interest in the land. Matador Land & Cattle Co. v. Cooper, 87 S. W. 235, 236, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 99.

It is requisite to the application of the doctrine of "resulting trust" that, upon a conveyance of land to one party, the purchase money or some definite portion of it should be paid at the time of the conveyance in some form of payment by another in whose favor a trust results in the land by implication from the actual or presumed intention of the parties. A resulting trust in land does not arise in favor of one who paid no part of the consideration therefor on its conveyance to another, though it may have been the common understanding that the debt incurred for a part of the purchase price and secured by a mortgage thereon was to be regarded as his debt, and that, on his paying it, title to the land would be made to him. Crawford v. Crawford, 57 S. E. 837, 838, 77 S. C. 205.

To create a "resulting trust" in lands, it is not necessary that the purchase money be paid at the precise date of the delivery of the deeds. If a party, having funds in his hands belonging to another, contracts for the purchase of lands in his own name, with the intention of paying for the same out of such funds, and the deed for any reason is not then executed and delivered, but is at a later date, and when it is executed and delivered he pays the balance of the purchase money out of the funds in his hands of such person, the contract of purchase, payment of purchase money, and execution and delivery of the deed constitute one entire original transaction, and a "resulting trust" would be created in favor of the party to which the funds belonged. If the payments proceeded from an independent contract, or were the result of conduct or an intervention not constituting a part of the original transaction, no "resulting trust" would be created. Pearce v. Dyess, 101 S. W. 549, 551, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 406 (citing 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1037).

"Resulting trusts" are creatures of the law and do not grow out of a contract to hold title to land for a third party who advances all or a part of the purchase price. To constitute a resulting trust, * * * it is necessary to show payment by complainant or an absolute obligation to pay incurred by him as a part of the original transaction of purchase, at or before the time of the conveyance." Watkins v. Carter, 51 South. 318, 320, 164 Ala. 456 (citing 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1037).

RESUME—RESUMPTION

The word "resume," as used in Corporation Act, § 65, providing for a settlement of the affairs of a corporation which becomes insolvent and shall not, within a short time, resume its business, means the taking up again of the suspended function of paying present indebtedness, "so that payment of indebtedness, as well as the operation of the work of the corporation, after temporary, partial, or complete paralysis, may be resumed with safety to the public and advantage to its stockholders." Reinhardt v. Interstate Telephone Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 1097, 1101 (quoting Ft. Wayne Electric Corp. v. Franklin Electric Light Co., 41 Atl. 219, 57 N. J. Eq. pp. 7, 13).

The term "resume possession," in a covenant in a lease, authorizing the landlord to "resume possession" and relet for the tenant's account, and not containing the technical term "re-enter," is a term of no technical meaning, and is not inconsistent with the maintenance of summary proceedings to enforce the right. Landesman v. Hauser, 91 N. Y. Supp. 6, 7, 45 Misc. Rep. 603.

Where a corporation is losing money in the carrying on of its business, and is seriously embarrassed for want of funds to carry out the project for which it was organized, and is without available assets to pay its present indebtedness, notwithstanding there may not have been a complete suspension of its business, it is insolvent, within the meaning of Corporation Act, § 65, providing that when any corporation shall become insolvent, or suspend its ordinary business for want of funds to carry on the same, any creditor may apply to the court for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, and that, if upon the hearing, it shall appear that the corporation has become insolvent and is not about to resume its business, the injunction may issue, and the receiver be appointed, and hence is subject to the issuance of an injunction and the appointment of a receiver. A corporation may be insolvent though it has not suspended its business for want of funds, and it may suspend its business for want of funds and still be able to pay its debts if properly administered. Insolvency is a general inability to meet pecuniary liabilities as they mature by means of available assets or an honest use of credit. The court said: "I agree that the word 'resumption,' as used in the statute, predicates some interruption of the insolvent's business, but I do not understand that it contemplates the entire suspension of its workings. Such has been the practical interpretation the bar and the courts have given, for manufacturing and other corporations with plants in operation have constantly been adjudged to be insolvent and put in the hands of receivers, and in so doing large values have been saved to creditors and stockholders because of the salable condition of a live plant as compared with one that is dead. An insolvency carries with it inability to presently pay indebtedness and suspension of that function, and the word 'resumption,' used in the statute, is, I think, to be taken in the sense of taking up again that suspended function, so that payment of indebtedness, as well as the operation of the work of the corporation, after temporary, partial, or complete paralysis, may be resumed with safety to the public and advantage to its stockholders." Catlin v. Vichachi Min. Co., 67 Atl. 194, 196, 73 N. J. Eq. 286 (citing Reinhardt v. Interstate Telephone Co. [N. J.] 63 Atl. 107; Empire State Trust Co. v. Trustees of William F. Fisher Co., 60 Atl. 940, 67 N. J. Eq. 602, 3 Ann. Cas. 393).

RETAIL

See Sell or Retail.

To "retail" is to sell in small quantities. Commonwealth v. Poulin, 73 N. E. 655, 656, 187 Mass. 568.

"Retail" means the sale of commodities in small quantities or parcels. Katzman v. Commonwealth, 130 S. W. 990, 992, 140 Ky. 124, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, 140 Am. St. Rep. 359.

Selling and delivering oil from a tank wagon to merchants in quantities of not less than 25 gallons for resale to customers is a sale by "retail," within an act requiring retail sellers to first procure a license. Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 970, 971, 119 Ky. 1.

The definition of the word "retail," as applied to sales, is to sell in small quantities, as by the yard, pound, gallon, etc.; to sell directly to the consumer in small quantities, such as are immediately called for by consumers. As a rule, wholesale merchants deal only with persons who buy to sell again, while retail merchants deal with consumers. A manufacturer of beer who sells his product to unlicensed consumers for their use, sells at retail within Laws 1907, c. 82, forbidding sales at retail. In re Metz Bros. Brewing Co., 129 N. W. 443, 444, 88 Neb. 164, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 622.

"As a general rule wholesale merchants deal only with persons who buy to sell again, whilst retail merchants deal with consumers." Hence sales of intoxicating liquor direct to customers are "retail" sales and are forbidden to those holding only a wholesale license. State v. Scampini, 59 Atl. 201, 206, 77 Vt. 92.

In view of the classification of sales of intoxicants in less quantities than one quart as "retail" sales, by the marginal note to Pol. Code 1872, § 3381, which imposed a license tax on such sales, the Legislature is presumed to have intended that the same meaning be given the word "retail" in Act March 20, 1874 (St. 1873-74, c. 345), prohibiting recovery of more than $5 for a sale of intoxicants at retail. Bettencourt v. Sheehy, 109 Pac. 89, 90, 157 Cal. 698.

Where a person assuming to do business as a wholesale liquor dealer in a prohibition parish sells to another who assumes to be doing a retail liquor business in such parish, the transaction is a sale at "retail" and subjects the wholesaler to the penalty for selling at retail without having previously obtained a license; there being no such thing, within the meaning of the law, as a dealer for resale in a parish where the sale of liquor at retail is prohibited. State v. Cunningham, 58 South. 558, 559, 130 La. 749.

The word "wholesale," in Rev. Laws, c. 100, § 1, providing that the statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors shall not apply to sales of cider at wholesale by the original makers thereof, must, as required by Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 4, cl. 3, be understood as having a meaning acquired by a prior judicial construction; and the word, in view of such prior judicial constructions, means sales made in large quantities, as distinguished from those made in small quantities, which are to be regarded as sales at "retail," and the court must charge that, in determining whether sales were at wholesale, sales at retail are sales made in small quantities, such as are adapted to individual purchasers, while sales at wholesale are sales made in large quantities, which are beyond the needs of ordinary consumers. Commonwealth v. Greenwood, 91 N. E. 141, 142, 205 Mass. 124, 18 Ann. Cas. 185.

RETAIL DEALER

Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, 24 Stat. 209, regulating the sale of oleomargarine, authorizes three classes of persons to conduct the business of manufacturing and selling oleomargarine, viz., the manufacturer is authorized to sell his own products in his place of business in his own packages with stamps denoting payment of the tax on the contents, the wholesale dealer is defined to be one permitted to sell in the manufacturer's original packages, and the retail dealer, one who sells in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time; and section 6 declares that retail dealers must sell only from original stamped packages in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds. Held, that the restriction on retail dealers violates no constitutional right, and that persons selling oleomargarine at retail in original packages in quantities greater than 10 pounds at any one time are violators of the law, and do not form a class outside its provisions. Ripper v. United States, 178 Fed. 24, 28, 101 C. C. A. 152.

RETAIL LIQUOR DEALER

One sale of liquor taken from a licensed saloon by an employé of the saloon keeper would not constitute the employé a "retail liquor dealer," under the provisions of Acts 31st Leg. 1st Ex. Sess. c. 17, § 2, defining a retail liquor dealer to be a person or firm permitted by law, being licensed under the provisions of the act, to sell liquors, etc., in quantities of one gallon or less, which may be drunk on the premises. Cassidy v. State, 126 S. W. 600, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 454.

Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5379, as amended by Pub. Acts 1903, p. 83, No. 62, requiring the payment of a tax on the business of selling or keeping for sale at retail intoxicating liquors, and section 5380, providing that retail dealers of spirituous or intoxicating liquors, etc., shall include all persons who sell by the drink to any person or persons, one who sells a single drink is a retail dealer engaged in the business, and liable to prosecution for selling without having paid the tax. People v. Wilcox, 115 N. W. 973, 152 Mich. 39, 15 Detroit Leg. N. 172.

Rev. St. § 3244, defines a "retail liquor dealer" as any person who sells distilled spirits or wines in less quantities than five gallons at the same time, and section 3248 defines distilled spirits as that substance known as "ethyl alcohol," etc., commonly produced by fermentation of grain, starch, molasses, or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures thereof. Held that, where a druggist, without paying the internal revenue tax imposed on retail liquor dealers, sold a medical preparation which was 88 per cent. proof spirits more than sufficient to preserve the medical properties of any herbs, roots, or drugs contained therein, he was a "retail liquor dealer," within such sections. United States v. Morfew, 136 Fed. 491, 493.

The statute provides that every person who sells intoxicating liquor in quantities of three gallons or less, or one dozen quart bottles or less, at one time, is deemed a retail liquor dealer. Comp. Laws 1897, § 5381, provides that the penal provisions of the act shall not apply to druggists, who sell liquor for medical, etc., purposes, and requires such persons to give a druggist's bond. Section 5386 requires retail liquor dealers, before commencing business, to give a bond in the form stated. An information charged accused with selling liquor on a certain date; he being then a person whose business consisted in part in the sale of drugs and medicine, and the liquors not being sold for medical, chemical, or scientific purposes, contrary to the statute, etc. Held, that accused could not be convicted of the offense of unlawfully selling as a "retail liquor dealer"; there being no averment that he had not given the retailer's bond prescribed by section 5386, and could not be convicted of making the sale as a druggist, there being no averment that he had given a druggist's bond as prescribed by section 5386, and hence, the information charged no offense under the law, and was properly quashed. Peters v. Eaton Circuit Judge, 117 N. W. 68, 69, 153 Mich. 467.

RETAIN

To "retain" means to hold or keep that which one already owns, and not to lose, part with, or dismiss it, and more definitely means to "keep back" that which one owns. Featherston v. Merrimon, 61 S. E. 675, 678, 148 N. C. 199 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6196).

As accept

A contract for the sale of certain real property provided for payment of $500 cash on the making of the contract and the balance on a specified date, when the deal was to be closed. It then declared that, if the vendee should make default in paying the balance as provided, the $500 payment should be forfeited to the vendors and "retained" by them as liquidated damages for breach of the contract, and for the failure of the vendee to pay the balance of the consideration. Held, that the word "retained" could not be construed to mean "accepted," and that the $500 payment should be regarded as security only for the performance of the contract by the vendee, and its retention by the vendors on the vendee's refusal to perform did not preclude them from maintaining a suit for specific performance of the vendee's obligation to pay the balance of the price. Donahoe v. Franks, 199 Fed. 262, 269.

RETAINER

"Retainer," as used in an agreement to pay a retainer to an expert witness and a per diem sum for the time he is engaged in the case, means a sum paid to secure the services of the witness, and is due as soon as the witness accepts employment, independent of any future work or its results. Hough v. State, 124 N. Y. Supp. 878, 880, 68 Misc. Rep. 26.

As to attorneys

A retaining fee, or "retainer," is a payment in advance, to cover future services and disbursements until further provision is made. Severance v. Bizallion, 121 N. Y. Supp. 627, 629, 67 Misc. Rep. 103.

The word "retainer" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as signifying: "The act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counselor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting when he is plaintiff, or defending when he is defendant." * * * A retaining fee is a fee given to counsel on being consulted, in order to insure his future services." The principles of law applicable to claims of attorneys for services are not different from those applicable to claims of surveyors, or mechanics, or farmers. The claimants are to receive a reasonable compensation for that which they do or furnish under their contract. No other payment is required or can be enforced. The rule as to retainers, as distinguished from specific services of attorneys at law, is that, upon making an engagement for services, the attorney is to be paid a reasonable compensation for being so bound. Blair v. Columbian Fireproofing Co., 77 N. E. 762, 763, 191 Mass. 333.

As to executors and administrators

The right to have the debt of the legatee or distributee charged to him in the adjustment of the legacy or the distributive share is inaccurately called a right of "set-off" or of "retainer," since the right rests not so much upon any rule of set-off or of retainer as upon the broad principles of equity. Oxshaer v. Nave, 40 S. W. 7, 9, 90 Tex. 568, 37 L. R. A. 98.

RETAKEN

Laws 1897, p. 541, c. 418, § 116, as amended by Laws 1900, p. 1624, c. 762, provides that where articles are sold on condition that the title shall remain in the vendor, and are retaken for default, they shall be retained for 30 days, during which time the vendee may redeem the same. The word "retaken" embraces a case where the retaking was accomplished by an action by the vendor to recover possession in which the vendee suffered judgment by default. Roach v. Curtis, 100 N. Y. Supp. 411, 414, 50 Misc. Rep. 122.

RETIRE

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, a charge that it was defendant's duty to "retire," if possible, to a place of safety, before the person assaulted reached his gun, was not equivalent to a charge that it was his duty to "retreat," and was prejudicial on that ground. Delaney v. State, 81 Pac. 792, 794, 14 Wyo. 1.

In Laws 1899, p. 443, c. 285, providing that the governing board of the pension fund shall "retire" disabled members from police service, the word "retire" implies necessarily that a candidate for retirement, to be eligible therefor, must be so circumstanced, at the time of favorable action upon his application that he can be retired, that he can be taken from the pay roll of the department and put on the pension roll. State ex rel. Weber v. Board of Trustees of Policemen's Pension Fund, 101 N. W. 373, 374, 123 Wis. 245.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICER

As holding an office, see Officer.

RETIRED OFFICERS

The term "retired officer" and "ex-officer" and "ci-devant" officer are synonymous, implying that he is no longer an "officer" in the proper sense of the term. Reed v. Schon, 83 Pac. 77, 79, 2 Cal. App. 53.

RETIREMENT

The words "retirement" and "cancellation," in connection with the capital stock of corporations, wherever used in the franchise act or in the amendment of that act (P. L. 1906, p. 31), mean permanent retirement and actual cancellation by the method and in full compliance with the provisions of the statute. Knickerbocker Importation Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 65 Atl. 913, 915, 74 N. J. Law, 583, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 885.

RETORT

A "retort" in chemistry and the arts is a vessel of glass, earthenware, metal, etc., employed to distill or effect decomposition by the aid of heat. Glass retorts are commonly used to distill liquids, and consist of a flask-shaped vessel to which a long neck is attached. The liquid to be distilled is placed in the flask, and heat is applied. The name is also generally given to almost any apparatus in which solid substances, such as coal, wood, or bones, are submitted to destructive distillation, as retorts to produce coal gas, which vary much in dimensions and in shape. MacKinnon Boiler & Mach. Co. v. Central Michigan Land Co., 120 N. W. 26, 27, 156 Mich. 11.

RETRAXIT

A "retraxit" at common law was a voluntary acknowledgment that plaintiff had no cause of action, and would not proceed further, made by him in person in open court. McPherson v. Swift, 116 N. W. 76, 82, 22 S. D. 165, 133 Am. St. Rep. 907.

Proof that plaintiff was present in open court during proceedings which resulted in the dismissal of a former action was insufficient to establish a "retraxit," which is a voluntary acknowledgment that the plaintiff has no cause of action, and therefore will not proceed further, made in open court by the plaintiff in person. McPherson v. Swift, 130 N. W. 768, 769, 27 S. D. 296.

Withdrawal of a count of a complainant is not a retraxit. A dismissal or discontinuance is not equivalent to a retraxit. To constitute a "retraxit" there must be a formal and final renunciation of plaintiff's right of action, by which it is carried into the judgment. Southern Ry. Co. v. McEntire, 58 South. 158, 160, 169 Ala. 42.

Where parties to an action have settled their dispute and agreed to a dismissal, such dismissal is a "retraxit" and amounts to a decision upon the merits. State Medical Examining Board v. Stewart, 89 Pac. 475, 476, 46 Wash. 79, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 557, 123 Am. St. Rep. 915, 13 Ann. Cas. 653.

"In those jurisdictions where the rule indicated by the word 'retraxit' has been recognized, the substance of the matter seems to be that a dismissal by agreement of the parties is equivalent to and is treated as a public renunciation on the part of the complainant of the claim asserted by him in his pleadings against the defendant, and he is thereafter estopped to bring it forward again." Lindsay v. Allen, 82 S. W. 171, 174, 112 Tenn. 637.

Nonsuit distinguished

"Retraxit" differs from a nonsuit in that, when once entered by a plaintiff on the record, it forever puts an end to the pending suit, as well as the cause of action involved.

Waldron v. Angleman, 58 Atl. 508, 571, 71 N. J. Law, 166.

A "retraxit" is different from a discontinuance or a nonsuit, and by it a plaintiff renounces his right of action irrevocably, and a retraxit must be always in person. Sheffer v. B. B. Perkins & Co., 75 Atl. 6, 7, 83 Vt. 185, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1313.

RETREAT

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, a charge that it was defendant's duty to "retire," if possible, to a place of safety, before the person assaulted reached his gun, was not equivalent to a charge that it was his duty to "retreat," and was prejudicial on that ground. Delaney v. State, 81 Pac. 792, 794, 14 Wyo. 1.

RETREAT TO THE WALL

The application of the doctrine of "retreat to the wall," originating, as it did, before the general introduction of firearms, has due reference to the difference in danger between a hand to hand encounter with fists, clubs, or even knives, and an encounter in an open space, involving the use of repeating rifles by men experienced in handling them. State v. Gardner, 104 N. W. 971, 975, 96 Minn. 318, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

RETRIAL

Code Supp. 1907, § 245a, provides that a transcript of a witness' testimony shall be admissible on "retrial" of the case or proceeding in which it was taken. Held, that a contest of a later will was not a retrial of a contest of a former will which went to final judgment, without retrial, so as to justify the admission of the transcript of a witness' testimony on such former trial in a contest of the later will. Splers v. Hendershott, 120 N. W. 1058, 1061, 142 Iowa, 446.

RETROACTIVE

RETROACTIVE DECISION

A "retroactive decision" is one which makes and applies a new rule of law, and attaches another and unforeseen liability to a contract after its execution, and is as vicious as an ex post facto statute. Clancy v. Barker, 131 Fed. 161, 171, 66 C. C. A. 469, 69 L. R. A. 653.

RETROACTIVE LAW

See Retrospective Law.

RETROSPECTIVE LAW

A statute is "retroactive" which creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past, or destroys or impairs vested rights. Ross v. Lettice, 68 S. E. 734, 735, 134 Ga. 800, 187 Am. St. Rep. 281.

A "retroactive law" is one made to affect prior acts or transactions, or rights already accrued, and which imparts to them characteristics, or ascribes effects, which were not inherent in their nature in the contemplation of the law as it stood at the time of their occurrence. Keith v. Guedry (Tex.) 114 S. W. 302, 390.

A "retrospective law" is one which is retroactive and which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a disability in respect to transactions or considerations already passed. Gray v. City of Toledo, 89 N. E. 12, 13, 80 Ohio St. 445 (quoting and adopting the definition in Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Wheeler, 22 Fed. Cas. 756).

A law is "retrospective" "which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already past." Ducey v. Patterson, 86 Pac. 109, 111, 37 Colo. 216, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066, 119 Am. St. Rep. 284, 11 Ann. Cas. 393 (quoting Perry v. City of Denver, 59 Pac. 747, 748, 27 Colo. 93, 95).

Retroactive or "retrospective laws" are those which take away and impair vested rights acquired under existing laws, or create a new obligation, impose a new duty, or attach a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations already passed. Thus Acts 1903, p. 386, No. 236, by adding to the persons to whom notice of right to redeem from a tax deed shall be given, and providing that the notice shall state that the redemption money may be paid, either to the tax purchaser as theretofore, or to the register in chancery, is retroactive. Hooker, J., dissenting, holding that a retroactive law is one which operates on matters which occurred, and rights and obligations which existed before the time of enactment. Weller v. Wheelock, 118 N. W. 609, 611, 614, 155 Mich. 698.

As a "retrospective law" is one which takes away or impairs vested rights required under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or attaches a new disability to transactions already past, Building Code of New York City, § 97, providing that all dumb-waiter shafts, except such as do not extend more than three stories above the cellar or basement in dwelling houses, shall be inclosed in fire walls, is not retrospective in requiring the owners of existing buildings having dumb-waiters to alter those buildings to comply with the statute, but is a valid exercise of the police power in requiring such shafts to be protected if in the future maintained. City of New York v. Foster, 133 N. Y. Supp. 152, 155, 148 App. Div. 258.

"The term 'retrospective in their operation,' as used in our bill of rights, is one which relates to civil rights and proceedings in civil causes. Ex parte Bethurum, 66 Mo. loc. cit. 549. Hence the well-settled rule deducted from all the authorities is that the 'acts of the Legislature are not to be considered as retrospective unless they impair rights that are vested, because most civil rights are derived from public laws.'" Laws 1897, p. 132, exempting beneficiary associations from the provisions of the general insurance laws, did not, as to the beneficiary in a certificate issued prior to the statute, violate Const. art. 2, § 15, prohibiting the enactment of any law impairing the obligation of contract or retrospective in its operation, as the beneficiary had no vested right in the certificate. Westerman v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 94 S. W. 470, 480, 196 Mo. 670, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114 (quoting and adopting the definition in Gladney v. Sydnor, 72 S. W. 554, 172 Mo. 318, 60 L. R. A. 880, 95 Am. St. Rep. 517; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 321).

Act March 2, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 67, c. 61), amending Pol. Code, § 3443, so as to provide an additional method for contesting the right of one to purchase public land, on the ground that, at the time of application to purchase, the land had been reclaimed and made fit for cultivation (the method being by action by one who had occupied the land for 10 years before the application), though retroactive in applying, where an application to purchase was made and a certificate of purchase was issued prior to adoption of the statute, impairs no obligation of contract, as it merely gives a new remedy. "The cases uniformly hold that, as long as vested rights are not impaired, 'retrospective laws' giving new and additional remedies for existing rights, or giving a remedy at law where one previously existed in equity only or vice versa, are valid." As said in Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304, a party has no right to complain of "these things as violations of the Constitution," so long as the laws leave him a competent court bound to administer justice to him according to the rights the law gave him, when his right of action or defense became invested." Boggs v. Ganear, 84 Pac. 195, 199, 148 Cal. 711.

Laws 1905, p. 193, § 8253a, which provided that lands not originally included in drainage districts might be brought in by petition, is not a "retrospective law" because applying to an object already in existence at the time of its enactment, for a retrospective law is one creating a new obligation, imposing a new duty, or attaching a new disability to transactions already past, and it must give to something already done a different effect from that which it originally had. Squaw Creek Drainage Dist. v. Turney, 138 S. W. 12, 16, 235 Mo. 80.

Rev. St. c. 46, § 2, provided that "all loans * * * for less than two hundred dollars, secured by mortgage or pledge of personal property, shall be dischargeable by the debtor upon payment or tender of the principal sum actually borrowed, and interest at the rate specified therein, which shall not exceed" certain specified rates, and further provides, that "all loans made in violation hereof shall bear interest at the legal rate of interest only." By the provisions of Pub. Laws 1905, p. 92, c. 90, said section 2 of said chapter 46 of the Revised Statutes was amended; the amendment providing, among other things, that: "All payments made in excess of six per cent. interest on loans so made in violation hereof shall be applied to the discharge of the principal, and in case a greater sum has been paid by the borrower than the amount of the principal and interest at six per cent. on loans so made in violation hereof, may be recovered from holder of said security by the borrower, in an action on the case." Held, that the amendment of 1905 is not retroactive, and does not apply to payments voluntarily made before the enactment of the amendatory statute. Carr v. Judkins, 67 Atl. 569, 570, 102 Me. 506 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 529; Rogers v. Inhabitants of Greenbush, 58 Me. 395; Appeal of Lambard, 34 Atl. 530, 88 Me. 587; Murray v. Gibson, 15 How. [56 U. S.] 421, 14 L. Ed. 755; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. [69 U. S.] 328, 17 L. Ed. 871; Chew Heong v. U. S., 5 Sup. Ct. 255, 112 U. S. 536, 28 L. Ed. 770).

Subject to Rev. St. 1889, § 5435, permitting a wife to file a claim of homestead to land occupied by herself and husband, after which he could not alienate without her consent, a husband had, prior to 1895, the right to alienate his homestead, subject only to the wife's dower; and a statute enacted in 1895, making a husband incapable of selling, mortgaging, or alienating the homestead in any manner, so far as it affected a husband's power over an existing homestead, was "retrospective." Gladney v. Sydnor, 72 S. W. 554, 557, 172 Mo. 318, 60 L. R. A. 880, 95 Am. St. Rep. 517.

Curative acts

A proceeding to assess omitted taxes under an ordinance enacted for that purpose is, from the very nature of the proceeding, essentially "retrospective" and retroactive, but the proceeding is not, properly speaking, the initial levying of a tax to act retrospectively. The tax was levied in advance. It was made a charge upon all property subject to taxation within the city. By omission of the taxpayer or the assessing officer, some of the property liable to the tax was not assessed. Statutes enacted to collect the public dues, if deficient, cannot be deemed to have exhausted the power lodged by the people in their government to do all that is necessary to effectuate the end for which it was established. Hence it occasionally becomes necessary, for some cause, to cure what has been attempted under the taxing laws, but which has failed of execution because of former defects. But a law or ordinance providing for the assessment of omitted property is not invalid because the proceedings provided are in a sense retrospective and retroactive. Muir's Adm'rs v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1098, 120 Ky. 739.

Retroactive synonymous

The words "retrospective" and "retroactive," as applied to laws, seem to be synonymous, and, as such, they are used interchangeably by Mr. Sedgwick in his treatise on Constitutional Law. Gray v. Toledo, 89 N. E. 12, 13, 80 Ohio St. 445 (quoting Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207, 210).

RETURN

See Further Return; Sale and Return; Sale or Return; Voluntary Return.

"A 'return' implies the prior existence of some state or condition. Webster defines it to turn back; to go or come again to the same place or condition." In the Standard dictionary it is defined 'to cause to take again a former position; put, carry, or send back, as to a former place or holder.' A technical meaning in the law is thus given in Black's Law Dictionary: 'The act of a sheriff, constable, or other ministerial officer, in delivering back to the court a writ, notice, or other paper.'" Clyatt v. United States, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 431, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. Ed. 726.

In Act of December 17, 1901 (Laws 1901, p. 39, § 1), which directs that protest against the return of processioners shall be filed with the ordinary, and requires the ordinary to return all the papers to the clerk of the superior court, the requirement that the ordinary "return all papers" simply means the physical transmission of the papers by the ordinary to the clerk of the superior court. Norman, Timmons & Co. v. Smith, 61 S. E. 1039, 1040, 131 Ga. 69.

In limitations—Nonresidents

The word "return," in Rev. St. 1898, § 2888, providing that "if when the cause of action accrues against a person, he is out of the state, the action may be commenced within the term herein limited after his return to the state," as applied to absent debtors, includes nonresidents as well as citizens of the state who have gone abroad and returned to the state, the words "return to the state" being equivalent to "come into the state." Lawson v. Tripp, 95 Pac. 520, 521, 34 Utah, 28.

Rev. St. 1887, § 4069, provides that, when the cause of action accrues, against a person who is out of the state, the action may be commenced within the term therein limited after his return to the state. Held, that the words "return to the state" apply to a non-resident debtor who enters into a contract in a foreign state, and thereafter comes into the state, as well as to a citizen who enters into a contract within the state, and subsequently departs therefrom. West v. Thels, 96 Pac. 932, 934, 15 Idaho, 167, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, 128 Am. St. Rep. 58.

Return of bill as presented

Const. art. 5, § 14, provides that every bill shall be presented to the Governor; that if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it originated, which house shall enter the objections at large upon its journals, and proceed to reconsider the bill, and if, after such reconsideration, a majority agree to repass the bill, it shall be sent with the Governor's objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and, if approved by a majority of that house, it shall be a law. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days, Sunday excepted, after presentation to him, it shall be a law without his signature, unless the general adjournment shall prevent its return, in which case it shall be a law unless the Governor within five days after adjournment shall file such bill, with his objections, in the office of the Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the General Assembly at its next session, in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor. Held, that where objections are returned with a bill on the last day of the session, at such an hour that the house can neither reconsider the bill nor examine the objections before the time fixed by the Constitution for adjournment sine die, this does not constitute the return required by the Constitution. State v. Wheeler, 89 N. E. 1, 4, 172 Ind. 578, 19 Ann. Cas. 834.

Return of process

As summons, see Summon.

"Return" is defined as the rendering back or delivery of a writ, precept, or execution to the proper officer or court; the certificate of an officer, stating what he has done in or about the execution of a writ, precept, etc., indorsed on the document, and the sending back of a commission with the certificate of the commissioners. Tate v. Biggs, 130 N. W. 1053, 1054, 89 Neb. 195.

A sheriff's "return" to a writ is an official statement by him of his acts under the writ in obedience to its directions and in conformity with law, and must show compliance with such directions and requirements, or a sufficient reason for any noncompliance in whole or in part. Hooper v. McDade, 82 Pac. 1116, 1117, 1 Cal. App. 733.

"To make a 'return according to law' is not only to return the precept to the authority that issued it, but to return it with a statement by the officer of his doings in executing it, and that statement must contain substantially all of his doings, within the scope of proper execution." Under a statute requiring officers to execute and return writs agreeably to the direction thereof, a return merely stating that the officer served the writ on defendant and read it in his hearing is not sufficient to enable the officer to justify under the writ for making the arrest. Gibson v. Holmes, 62 Atl. 11, 14, 78 Vt. 110, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 451.

Return of tax or delinquent list

The word "returning," as used in Code 1887, c. 30, § 18, providing that the sheriff or collector returning a list of lands, delinquent for taxes, shall make a certain affidavit, means the delivery of the delinquent list to the court. Hornage v. Imboden, 49 S. E. 1036, 57 W. Va. 206.

1 Tenn. St. 1831, pp. 335-362, relating to the levy and collection of taxes, required the property owner to make return of his property for making up the tax lists, and required a justice appointed in each county to receive the list to make return thereof to the county court. Section 3 (1 Tenn. St. 1831, p. 337) provided that the tax shall be a lien on the property of the person returning the same, when it shall become due and payable, on all the taxpayer's taxable property notwithstanding the same may have been divided or alienated or vested in the name of others than those who actually owned the same "at the time of return of such property or sale thereof although the owner may not be known," etc. Acts 1835-36, c. 14, §§ 4, 5, amending the prior act made it the duty of all property owners in a district to attend on the first Friday and succeeding day in June, 1836, and forever thereafter on the third Friday and succeeding day in January each succeeding year, and to return to commissioners the amount of his taxable property which shall be listed for taxation, etc. Held, that the word "return," as so used, in so far as it related to the lien for taxes imposed by the act of 1813, meant not the return of the taxpayer, but the return of the tax list to the county court, since the fact that the taxpayer's return was required to embrace all taxable property owned or possessed by him on January 10th, could not change the character of his return in the sense that it would operate to create a lien, which could arise only by act of the law, and hence where a conveyance of certain real estate to a purchaser was registered before taxes were either assessed or spread for the year 1839, a subsequent assessment of taxes against such land to the grantor as the "reputed owner" was void. Goodlett v. Goodman Coal & Coke Co., 192 Fed. 775, 782, 113 C. C. A. 61.

Return to writ of certiorari

As written instrument, see Written Instrument.

Return to writ of mandamus

Under Comp. Laws 1909, c. 87, art. 32 (section 6226), providing that the defendant, in a mandamus proceeding, immediately upon "receipt of the writ," or at some other specified time, shall obey its mandate, and that he shall then "return the writ" with his certificate of having done as commanded, the original writ should be served, and not a copy, since the defendant could not be in receipt of the writ until it was delivered to him, and could not return the writ unless he had previously received it, and not a mere copy thereof. Ellis v. Outler, 106 Pac. 957, 958, 25 Okl. 469.

Return to writ of prohibition

A "return," in proceedings for a writ of prohibition, is in the nature of an answer. A motion to dismiss the cause is tantamount in law to an abandonment of the return. State ex rel. McEntee v. Bright, 123 S. W. 1057, 1059, 224 Mo. 514, 135 Am. St. Rep. 552, 20 Ann. Cas. 955.

Return to writ of review

The cause on a writ of review is tried on the "return" to the writ, which consists of an authenticated copy of the record of the inferior court, from an examination of which it is to be determined whether in the exercise of judicial functions jurisdiction has been exceeded or such functions have been exercised erroneously. Curran v. State, 99 Pac. 420, 422, 53 Or. 154.

RETURN DAY

The expression, "return day," as used in Acts 1900, p. 53, amending Civ. Code 1895, § 3667, relating to an agreement to pay attorneys' fees in case of an action on a note, means the same as "filing day," or the last day on which suits may be filed so as to be returnable to the next term. Everett & Son v. M. Ferst's Sons & Co., 55 S. E. 916, 126 Ga. 662 (citing Baxley v. Bennett, 33 Ga. 146; Hood v. Powers, 57 Ga. 245).

The "return day" of the term of court is the last day a suit can be filed returnable to that term and, under Acts 1900, p. 53, authorizing the recovery of attorney's fees in action on notes when so provided, unless the debtor fails to pay such debt "before the return day of the court to which suit is brought" the term is used to convey the same meaning. Mt. Vernon Bank v. Gibbs, 58 S. E. 269, 270, 1 Ga. App. 662.

The expression "return day," as used in Civ. Code 1910, § 4252, providing that agreements for attorney's fees in an action on a note are void, unless the debtor fails to pay such debt on or before the return day of the court in which suit is brought, means the same as filing day, or the last day on which suits may be filed so as to be returnable to the next term. Davenport v. Richards, 75 S. E. 648, 649, 138 Ga. 611.

An obligation to pay attorney's fees embodied in a mortgage is collectible in the same manner as if it were contained in a note or other evidence of indebtedness. The "return day," prior to which the debt must be paid, is the "return day" of the court to which the foreclosure of the mortgage is returnable. Sheffield v. Bainbridge Oil Co., 59 S. E. 725, 726, 3 Ga. App. 200.
